The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 225. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 4, 1860. | VOL. X. NO. 18.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

"Stand up for Jesus."

"Stand up for Jesus," ye whom youth is crowning
With the warm impulse of morning life and zeal;
"Stand up for Jesus," though temptation wait you,
Bow to no idol, but at His altar kneel.

"Stand up for Jesus," thou, with manhood resting
On thy browlike glory, crowning it with thoughts;
"Stand up for Jesus," tell to those around thee
The glorious good He for mankind hath wrought.

"Stand up for Jesus," ye who go forth weeping,
Bearing precious seed to lost and ruined men;
"Stand up for Jesus," lay not down your armor,—
Bringing your sheaves, with joy ye'll come again.

"Stand up for Jesus," ye, whose locks are whitening
With the frosts of age, and life's work almost done;
"Stand up for Jesus," firmly bear his armor,—
Bear with the cross until the crown is won.

"Stand up for Jesus;" fast the harvest's rip'ning,
Soon Heavens reapers gather in each sheaf;
"Stand up for Jesus;" to the end be faithful,
Hasting Him to meet with joy and not with grief.

MARY E. SWEETLAND.

Springfield, Mass.

For the Crisis.

"The Beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

BY J. MCCAMMON.

"The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."—Rev. 17: 8.

We are looking forward to that happy period, foretold by ancient seers, and by poets sung in every age,—the Christian's hope,—time long deferred, when earth, disrobed of sin, and clothed in her Eden-like garments, shall again become the home of the blessed. For springs shall burst forth in the desert, and the waste and solitary places be made to blossom as the rose; when the Lord shall stretch his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, who shall be left from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Ethiopia, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. When he shall set an ensign for the people, and gather the outcasts of Israel. Then may be heard that blessed invitation, "Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways; and we will walk in his paths." "Then shall the law go forth from Zion; and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Blessed day! how different from the present; for now war predomininates; the news is wafted on every breeze, of the preparations for battle. How appropriate is the language of the prophet to our times—"Prepare war; wake up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near. Put in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe; come, get ye down, for the press is full; the vats overflow; for their wickedness is great." And how are we admonished to make ready, for we know not the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh. Look up, ye down-trodden; and ye that are afflicted, take courage. Behold, the Lord Messiah shall appear for the redemption of his people. Let the Bride, the Lamb's wife, make herself ready to sit down to the marriage supper.

In looking forward and backward, dark clouds surround us; and we feel ourselves entangled in a wilderness of uncertainty. Truly might we say with the disciples, "Lord, tell us when shall these things be; and what shall be the sign of thy coming?" But here we are left to grope our way, for the blessed Jesus, for wise purposes, has withholden that knowledge from man.

The apostle, in speaking of things future, as well as things past, seemed to grasp them together as one everlasting now. And well he might, for when we look at time as compared with eternity, the longest period dwindles into comparative insignificance. What would the ancient patriarch Abraham think, if some of our latter day theologians, who are continually setting the time for Christ's second appearing, and who are at times, almost ready to give up their hope in him, on account of their many disappointments; should they say to the venerable Father, "What a long time you have waited for your redemption; how long you have lain in the gloomy receptacle of the tomb!" Methinks I see him, his countenance beaming with heavenly radiance, and in sweet accents makes his reply;—I am hardly rested; you have waked me in the first watch of the night." And so it will be with us; whether he comes this year, or a thousand years hence, it may be truly said, Behold, he cometh!

In the consideration of this subject, we shall not argue points which are conceded by commentators of all denominations at the present day, and believed in by christians generally,—that the beast on which the harlot sat, represented Papal Rome, or the Roman Catholic church, both in her rise and in the state of her highest exaltation; when kings and emperors trembled before her, and thrones vanished at her touch; but shall try to give some of the evidences drawn from various sources, that will identify her as such. In doing this we do not expect to present any new matter, for in that we should fail; but, treading in the footsteps of those that have gone before us, and using the keys they have given us, shall try our hand in using them; and if we should be successful in admitting one ray of light to unravel these dark mysteries, our object will be attained; and if we fail, we have but paid the price of our presumption, and would ask our friends to throw the mantle of charity around us, and bury us in the tomb of the Capulets.

Before entering on the dark emblems of the Revelations of John, we will turn a moment to Paul, the great Apostle of the Gentiles. Knowing as he did the great anxiety of the early christians for the speedy coming of Christ to deliver them from the cruel persecutions through which they had to pass, both from Jews and Gentiles, he raised his warning voice, telling them not to be deceived, neither by letter nor by word, as coming from the Apostles; for that day would not come, till there come first the "falling away," and that "wicked one" be revealed, even the "man of sin," the "son of perdition;" who "opposeth and exalteth himself against all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he sitteth as God in the temple of God, declaring himself to be God."*—2 Thess. 2: 4. Read also, 1 Tim. 4: 3. You have accompanied us thus far, be still our companions as we open the gates and try to look within the citadel. For this purpose we invite you to Rev. 12: 1.—

"And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars; and she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman who was ready to be delivered, to devour her child as soon as it was born. And she brought forth a male child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron; and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne."

Says Robert Kemble, in his Key to the Apocalypse: "Throne, or heaven, in these highly figurative emblems, is not to be taken for the throne of God, or the heaven of his habitation; but a high or exalted state of earthly greatness and power." Then when the apostle saw a wonder in heaven, his wonder or astonishment did not so much consist in what he saw, as where he saw it. A woman;—a beautiful representation of the church of Christ.—Clothed with the sun,—clothed with the righteousness of Christ. The moon under her feet,—a beautiful emblem of the Jewish church, which had but a borrowed light; and that light had now departed, or been placed under foot. A crown of twelve stars, representing the twelve apostles, each one of them a star of the first magnitude,—a tiara of jewels worthy to be worn by her for whom Christ died. But then the apostle saw this beautiful sight standing near the throne of the Cæsars, in the very midst of her enemies, in pangs, and longing to be delivered; or longing for one to deliver her from the cruel persecutions of the Pagan-Roman Emperors, with their priests and satellites.

The second wonder that filled the apostle with amazement was, a great red dragon, with seven heads and ten horns, and on every head a crown; and he stood before the woman in order to devour her child as soon as she was delivered. It is generally agreed among those that have written on these subjects, that nations are prefigured, or emblematically set forth, by their flags, or banners. Thus: America, by an eagle crowned with a wreath of stars; England, by the lion. Now heathen or pagan Rome, on her second banners or flags, had painted an imaginary beast, called the dragon. For they used the eagle as their first or national banner. So we have here a nation set forth by the emblem of a great red dragon both in her political and ecclesiastical form.

*Henderson's translation.

Permit me here to quote on this head a paragraph from Dr. Adam Clarke:

"As the dragon is an emblem of the heathen Roman power, its heads must denote heathen forms of government; these were exactly seven, and are enumerated by Tacitus in words to the following effect: 'The city of Rome was originally governed by kings; L. Brutus instituted liberty and the consulate. The dictatorship was only occasionally appointed; neither did the decemviral power last above two years; and the consular power of the military tribunes was not of long continuance. Neither had Cinna nor Sylla a long domination. The power of Pompey and Crassus was also soon absorbed in that of Cæsar; and the arms of Lepidus and Antony yielded to those of Augustus.' From this passage it is evident to every person well acquainted with the Roman history, that the seven forms of government in the heathen Roman world were:—(1) The Regal Power; (2) The Consulate; (3) The Dictatorship; (4) The Decemvirate; (5) The Consular power of the Military Tribunes; (6) Triumvirate; and (7) The Imperial government;" or government under the Roman emperors.

The ten horns, that were upon the heads of the dragon, are the ten kingdoms that grow out of the fragments of the Roman empire; or the ten toe kingdoms of the metallic image, and are thus enumerated according to Bishop Chandler: 1. The kingdom of the Ostrogoths in Maesia. 2. Visgoths in Pannonia. 3. 4. Suevi and Alans, in Spain and part of France. 5. The Vandals in Africa. 6. The Franks in France. 7. The Heruli and Thuringi in Italy. 8. The Saxons in Britain. 9. The Huns in Hungary. 10. The Lombards on the banks of the Danube, and afterwards in Italy.

Sir Isaac Newton differs from Chandler in the original arrangements of the kingdoms, and counts the following: 1. The Vandals and Alans in Africa and Spain. 2. The Suevi in Spain. 3. The Visgoths. 4. The Alans in France. 5. The Burgundians. 6. The Franks. 7. The Britons. 8. The Huns. 9. The Lombards. 10. The Exarchate of Ravenna.

In the eighth century, Bishop Newton arranges them as follows: 1. The Senate of Rome. 2. The Exarchate of Ravenna. 3. The Lombards. 4. The Huns. 5. The Alemans. 6. The Burgundians. 7. The Franks. 8. The Goths. 9. The Britons. 10. The Saxons.

Says the historian: "The revolutions of these times were so quick, and the history so uncertain, it is now perhaps impossible to say with certainty, what were the kingdoms pointed out by the inspired prophets.

In modern times we have the following: 1. The States of Italy. 2. The two Sicilies. 3. France. 4. Spain. 5. Portugal. 6. The Britons. 7. The States of Holland. 8. The Cantons of Switserland. 9. Hungary. 10. Turkey in Europe.

Latterly, I have seen Italy alone so cut up as to make the ten kingdoms; but I thought this was reducing the Roman Empire rather small; and as this does not come immediately under my purview, I will pass it.

(To be continued.)

Lecture on Heathen Testimonies to the Bible.

BY REV. THOMAS MUNNELL.

A certain veneration for whatever is supposed to be old involuntarily arises in every human heart. We revere old men, old countries, old institutions, old books, old inscriptions, old relics. We revere them on account of their long-continued stay among mankind, on account of the many and ancient facts they record, and of the almost divine authority they bear, derived from their hoary years and the accumulated experience of ages they pour into our laps. The past is the teacher of the present. The moderns are but repeating the experience of the ancients, of which, when once made conscious, we bow to the past, and acknowledge it the great prophet of the future. This respect for the former things, however, ought to be under a healthy restraint. We must not tacitly admit that every ancient system of religion is true because it is ancient; that all old men are inevitably wise, and that all manuscripts and books, that are honored with yellow years, are necessarily of some high, or perhaps divine authority.

In discussing the antiquity of the Bible, we would not be understood as urging that its mere antiquity would prove its divinity. Diodorus Siculus found fabulous writings antedating even the Trojan war, from which to compose the first three books of his history. There were also written records of true facts executed in Egypt before the birth of Moses or of Job, the oldest writers of all the sacred authors. A written decree of Thoutmosis II., king of Egypt, who flourished two hundred and fifty years before Moses, is now in the possession of one of the British Museums, expressed in the Coptic or ancient Egyptian letters. The art of writing, at the time of the Exodus, no longer consisted in mere hieroglyphics; else, how could the Jews have received the law of Moses written in good Hebrew? But out of these hieroglyphics an alphabet of twenty-two letters had been already eliminated, and the art of writing well understood in Egypt, where Moses was educated and taught to use the pen, as he afterward did in writing the Pentateuch. Sesostris the Great, king of Egypt, a cotemporary of Moses' later years, it is well known, wrote on pillars the records of his victories in the different countries he had conquered. If we are to credit the authority of our cotemporary, Professor Seyffarth, than whom a more reliable antiquary perhaps may not be found, we must believe that Noah and the antediluvians had an alphabet of twenty-five letters, and that language, even then, was in the syllabic, written form, and not merely verbal and hieroglyphical. To this may be added the opinion of the very learned editor of Josephus, William Whiston, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Cambridge. His words are: "There is no reason to imagine that men were not taught to read and write soon after they were taught to speak." These facts show at once how superficial the researches of some friends of the Bible have been, who endeavor to prove that the early sacred writers were the very first that ever wielded a pen or turned a stylus. Nor is it a matter of any consequence to the Christian, even if scraps of manuscript can be found to antedate the book of Genesis, since the genuineness and the authority of the Bible in no way depends upon our being able to prove it to be the very oldest of all writings.

Although we are by no means anxious to prove the first sentence in the Old Testament to be the very first ever committed to writing, the very great antiquity of the Holy Scriptures is a topic of great interest and import, and claims our special attention—claims attention both as an act of literary justice to the book to which all civilized nations owe their enlightenment—claims attention as a means of silencing those who have always slandered it as an imposition of recent date, and as a source of encouragement to Christians, young and old, who may see, in the numerous collateral evidences of its divinity to be cited hereafter, new reasons to believe it, and to realize that we are not following cunningly-devised fables, when we trust to the "word of His grace." While we freely admit that men could and did write before ever Moses was laid in the ark of bulrushes, and that the decree of Thoutmosis, and a very few fragmentary inscriptions on bricks and the like, still remain that may be referred to a very early date, there is not the slightest evidence that anything like a book can be found in the world that can lay claim to an antiquity equal to that of Job or the Pentateuch. The famous thirty thousand years the Chinese history was once said to embrace, created for a little while a great chuckling among the sceptics, but they all suddenly sobered up when a second look at Chinese literature convinced the world that they often counted a month, and sometimes half a month, or even the different quarters of the moon, for a year—a computation which brought their oldest authors to a respectful distance this side of Moses. Nor have the Chinese authors recorded a single fact that claims to have transpired before the flood. They profess that Noah, or Fohi as they call him, was their first king, and with him their history begins.

Notwithstanding the indisputable claims of the Bible to be the oldest of all books, some have been so little at rest as to rummage all literature, true and fabulous, to find some old manuscript somewhere, that might antedate it. While engaged in this insane pursuit, they have done the Bible great injustice, affirming it to be a work of comparatively recent date, and that it is without any collateral evidence from writers of heathen nations around Judea, from which we might learn even the existence of such a book as the Old Testament in very early times. Some even learned infidels have committed the unpardonable stupidity of affirming that much of the Old Testament, if not all of it, made its appearance first in the dark ages, long since the advent of Jesus Christ—a book, as Bolingbroke said, written nobody knows where nor when. All this logic, however, they might have saved if they had only thought how hard it would have been for Christ and his apostles to quote from the several books of the Old Testament if those books had at that time no existence in the world. The undeniable fact that a majority of all the books of the Bible—twenty-one out of the thirty-nine—are distinctly quoted in the New Testament, and that some of them are cited very fully and frequently—Genesis thirty-three times, Deuteronomy thirty-three times, Isaiah ninety-two times, and the Psalms ninety-four times—has smitten all these opponents with such confusion, that now they are willing to admit that said book was known to the world when the apostles wrote.

The immediate design of the present lecture, however, is to present some of the evidences of the high antiquity and historic truthfulness of the Old Testament Scriptures, that may be drawn from the writings of ancient heathen authors; in presenting which it must be allowed that our limits will permit us to offer nothing more than a mere specimen of what might be said. Nor should any one imagine this to be the only class of collateral proofs in reach of a Christian scholar who might summon to his side all the inscriptions that have been dug up out of old ruined cities of the East and that remarkably corroborate the statements of sacred history; he might cite the incontestable argument so often deduced from the history of the Septuagint, which is a translation of the whole Old Testament from the Hebrew into the Greek language, two hundred and eighty-seven years before Christ, demonstrating indubitaby that no part of it was written after the Christian era commenced: he might also call to his aid the whole series of internal evidences found in the Bible itself, in the writings of all the Rabbis, in brief, the whole encyclopædia of Jewish literature—upon all of these he may rely—not to mention the important aids derived from the science of astronomy, geology, zoology, and general history. But our present purpose is only to show that the Jewish nation, the Jewish religion, and the Jewish Book have always been known to other surrounding nations, and that heathen authors have not failed to record such facts, to quote such Bible authors, and to make such allusions to Jewish history as prove the Bible to be just as old a book as its friends declare it to be.

First of all, then, we shall ask Longinus to say whether he ever heard of the Bible in his day, or whether any ancient history he had read ever named such a book. He was a very celebrated Greek critic and rhetorician, so learned that his cotemporaries called him "A living library and a walking study." He was secretary to queen Xenobia, of Palmyra, and was put to death by the Roman emperor, A. D. 273. In the 3d book and 9th section of his celebrated treatise on the "Sublime," he notices Moses, among others, as a very sublime writer. His words, which we translate rather freely, are as follows: "Likewise also the Lawgiver of the Jews, who was no ordinary man, when he conceived and exhibited the power and majesty of God, wrote in the very beginning of his laws in this way; 'God spoke: what does he say? Let there be light, and there was light: Let there be land; and there was land.'" This verbatim quotation from the third verse of the first chapter of Genesis, by this "living library and walking study," is too evident to be denied. He had no doubt both seen and read that Scripture himself. He says that Moses was the lawgiver of the Jews, that he was no ordinary man, and that he had these words in the beginning of his laws; all of which agrees entirely with the Christian faith.

Our next witness shall be Nicolaus of Damascus, who lived 288 years earlier than Longinus, about the year 6, B. C., and was cotemporary with Herod the Great. He was both a comic and a tragic poet; also an historian. He compiled a universal history in 144 books. As it was a universal history, of course he would touch the Jewish history and people, provided such a people and history were at all known to the world. From the ninety-sixth book of his work, Josephus quotes the following allusion to five very prominent facts recorded in the Bible: "There is a great mountain in Armenia, over Minyas, called Baris, upon which, it is reported, that many who fled at the time of the deluge were saved; and that one, who was carried in an ark, came on shore on the top of it, and that the remains of the timber were a great while preserved. This might be the man about whom Moses, the lawgiver of the Jews, did write." Here are five distinct facts referred to, which are written in our book, viz: That there was a deluge; that there was an ark; that some were saved in it; that Moses was the lawgiver of the Jews; and that he wrote the account of the deluge. The same writer, in another place, observes that "Abraham once lived in the land of the Chaldeans, then removed to Canaan, afterward called Judea, and that his posterity became a great multitude, that his name is still famous (which was more than 2,000 years after) among the Damascenes, and that there was still at his day a village showed that was called 'The habitation of Abraham.'" Such is the testimony of a writer who was neither a Jew nor a Christian, and could have no motive for defending the Old Testament Scriptures any further than his duty as an impartial historian would demand.

As we have just had the mountains of Armenia alluded to by Nicolaus, we will quote a few lines from Josephus concerning the same. In Book first, chapter third and section fifth of his Jewish Antiquities, when speaking of Mount Ararat, he remarks: "The Armenians called this place Apobaterion, which means, the Place of Descent; for the ark being saved in that place, its remains are showed there by the inhabitants unto this day." It is also said by tradition that a town was once on that spot called Seron, which means, "the Place of Dispersion." He also informs us that "all the barbarian historians make mention of this flood and of this ark."

Now it may be rather too credulous to believe that true pieces of the ark were really exhibited as late as the age of Josephus, which was more than 2,400 years after the flood, and it is just as clear that we may wholly discredit that assertion without in the least mutilating the integrity of the argument for the existence of the ark itself; for had there never been an ark at all, there never could have been such historic evidence of it, nor would there ever have been any talk about the timber's being or not being preserved. We may still believe in the existence of Peter, even if we do not believe that the Pope can show a thread out of Peter's coat. Nevertheless, Josephus positively affirms that the "remains of the ark were shown there by the inhabitants unto his day;" and though we may be disposed to doubt the possibility of truth in this case, yet, if we drop back 400 years, to the time of Berosus, we shall hear him mention the same as reported in his day. When describing the circumstances of the flood, he goes on thus: "It is said that there is still some portion of this ship in Armenia, at the mountain of the Cordyæns, and that some people carry off pieces of the bitumen, which they use chiefly as amulets for the averting of mischief."

Let it be remembered that this Berosus was a Chaldean historian, of the fourth century before Christ, a cotemporary of Alexander the Great, a priest of the temple of Belus, and, as our classical American, Charles Anthon, says; "He possessed every advantage which the records of the temple and the learning and tradition of the Chaldeans could afford, and seems to have composed his work with a serious regard to truth." And now, let it be understood, once for all, in regard to Berosus and all other authors quoted in this lecture, that they are not mere copyists of the Bible, did not get their information from it, but from the records furnished from their own history and their own observation of transactions that occurred among themselves. These records were laid up in their temples, which became the depositories of the very earliest annals of the nations, to all of which the historians had the readiest access. And, as all nations sprang from Noah, we may expect the early histories of all to record very many events in the then common history with great similarity: and how comfortable to find their sketches, as far as they go, all contributing their quota to our wonderful history, like little streams putting in to the rolling river.

We will now present the substance of what Berosus has left on record that agrees with the Mosaic account. As he writes, a Chaldean, of course the proper names of the ten patriarchs before the flood will not correspond in their letters and syllables with the names of the same persons recorded in the Bible. He says, "There were ten kings of Chaldea before the flood, viz: Alorus, Alasparus, Amelon, Metalorus, Daorus, Aedorachus, Amphis, Oliartes, and Xisuthrus, (or Noah). That Xisuthrus was warned in a dream that mankind was to be destroyed by a flood on the 15th day of the month Dæsius, and that he should build a sort of ship and go into it with his friends and kindred, and that he should make a provision of meat and drink, and take into his vessel fowls and four-footed beasts; that Xisuthrus acted according to the admonition; built a ship, and put into it all that he was commanded, and went into it with his wife and children and dearest friends. When the flood was come and began to abate, Xisuthrus let out some birds, which, finding no food nor place to rest upon, returned to the ship again; after some days he let out the birds again, but they came back with their legs daubed with mud. Some days after he let them go the third time, but then they came to the ship no more. Xisuthrus understood thereby that the earth appeared above the waters, and taking down some of the boards of the ship, he saw that it rested upon a mountain. Some time after, he and his wife and his pilot went out of the ship to offer sacrifices to the gods." Comment upon this passage is altogether unnecessary. His Xisuthrus was no other than Noah. His ten kings before the flood correspond in number precisely to the ten antediluvian patriarchs mentioned in the Bible. No less accurate is our author in regard to the number of generations from the flood to Abraham, agreeing to a fraction with Moses' account of it; for referring, in another place, to Abraham, he speaks in this manner: "In the tenth generation after the flood, there was among the Chaldeans a man, righteous and great, and skillful in the celestial science." This is strictly true of Abraham; he did live in the tenth generation after the flood; he did at first live in Chaldea; he was both righteous and great, although we have no account, in the Bible, of his attainments in the knowledge of astronomy. Further on in his history, Berosus writes many other things from the Chaldean data that perfectly agree with the Sacred History—such as Nebuchadnezzar's expedition against Judea, his setting the temple on fire, the carrying the Jews into Babylon, and their seventy years' captivity there.

(To be concluded.)

For the Crisis.

"God is not Mocked."

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

In this text Paul gives us the positive assurance, first, that we may be deceived; and second, that God is not mocked. Not only in this text, but throughout the whole of Paul's writings, we find the same positiveness. This seems to have been the characteristic of the man. But we purpose to notice more particularly some of the evidence which Paul had upon this point.

First. In Acts 16: 16, we are informed that as some of the apostles went forth, there was one that followed them and cried, saying, 'These men are the servants of the most High God." Paul at length, being grieved, turned upon her; and in the name of Jesus Christ, commanded the spirit to come out of her. Her master, seeing the hope of their gains was gone, takes Paul and Silas, and brings them before the magistrates, saying, "These men being Jews do exceedingly trouble our city, etc." The multitude being deceived, think to mock God; they rend off their clothes, beat them with many stripes, and cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely. He thrusts them into the inner prison, thinking no doubt that they would trouble the city no more. But God was not mocked. "For while Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises to God, behold, there was an earthquake, which shook the foundations of the prison, opened the doors, unloosed the bands of the prisoners; and the keeper being alarmed, and fearing the prisoners had fled, was about to put an end to his own life." "But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, do thyself no harm: for we are all here."

Second. We pass to notice the case of Herod and Peter, as recorded in the 12th chapter. For while he (Peter) was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with chains, the angel of the Lord came unto him, saying, Arise up quickly! gird thyself; bind on thy sandals; cast thy garments about thee, and follow me! Thus he led him forth unto the iron gate of the city, which opened of its own accord, and they passed through one street, when forthwith the angel departed. Herod was deceived. "He had killed James, the brother of John, with the sword, and seeing it pleased the Jews he proceeded to take Peter also. But it then being the days of unleavened bread he put him in prison; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people." But God would not be thus mocked: hence he (Peter) was delivered as before described, on the same night that Herod would have brought him forth.

At another time, "the high priest rose up, and they that were with him, and were filled with indignation. And laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison." They had witnessed many signs and wonders wrought by the hands of the apostles among the people. "And the people magnified them, insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them." They no doubt thought, (with some of our good christian friends of the present day) that something must be done, and these things must be stopped; hence they cast them into prison. But God had a work for them to perform; he could not be thus mocked. He sends his angel forth again, who opens the doors by night and commands them to go stand in the temple and speak to the people all the words of this life. Not satisfied with this demonstration of the power of God, the captain and the officers bring them again before the council. The high priest asked them, "Did not we straitly command you, that ye should not teach in this name? and behold! ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us!" "Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We ought to obey God rather than man."

We will now leave the New Testament and turn to the Old, where we find many instances of like character, which proved to the mind of Paul, (and proves to the mind of every candid peruser of the divine testimony) that God is not mocked, though we may be deceived. Time would fail us to notice all the instances recorded here which have a direct bearing upon the point, so we will notice but a few, commencing with Daniel in the sixth chapter. We behold him (Daniel), through the deception practiced upon King Darius, by those presidents and princes he had set to rule over the kingdom;—cast into the den of lions. Was God mocked thereby? Nay, verily; for says Daniel to the king's inquiry the next morning, (when "with a lamentable voice" he said, "oh Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?)—"My God has sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me; forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me; and also before thee, oh king, have I done no hurt."

Again: when Nebuchadnezzar had erected his golden image upon the plains of Dura, and the herald had given the command, that at what time they heard the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, etc., they should fall down and worship the image, and whoso fell not down and worshiped, should the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning, fiery furnace. The sound of the music is heard: they all fall down except three;—three noble souls, fired with a love of the one true God, were not careful (we are told) to answer the king in this matter. "If it be so our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning, fiery furnace; and he will deliver us out of thy hand, oh king. But if not, (now don't be deceived) be it known unto thee, oh king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship thy golden image, which thou hast set up." Would to God there were more at the present day like these three, who were not careful to answer those in authority over them, and who manifested that implicit confidence in the power of God to deliver. But to return. We find the king "was full of fury and the form of his visage was changed," and he commanded the "furnace to be heated seven times more than it was wont to be heated." We'll see (no doubt he thought) whether your God will deliver from the furnace, and out of my hand. But, alas, poor, deceived man! His mighty men of the army have bound them, and cast them into the furnace, at the expense of their own lives. But suddenly he arises in haste, and with much astonishment asks his counsellors: "Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire?" "True, oh king." "He answered and said, Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God." Query: How came that old king to know anything about the form of the Son of God?

We will now notice, in the next place, one of the most remarkable evidences of the truth of Paul's position taken in our text, which you will find recorded in the 18th chapter of 1 Kings. Behold one man alone, a servant of the Most High God, in the midst of four hundred of Baal's prophets. He is about to prove to them that his God is the only true God; and that theirs are false. Now, says Elijah, "I, even I only, remain of the prophets of the Lord; but Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men." Let them therefore give us two bullocks; choose one and cut it in pieces, lay it on the wood, and put no fire under; and I will dress the other, and lay it on the wood, and put no fire under; and call ye on the name of your gods, and I will call on the name of the Lord: and the God that answers by fire, let him be God. And all the people said, It is well spoken. Now, says Elijah, choose your bullock and dress it first, for you are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under. And they did so, and called from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, hear us. But there was no voice, nor any that answered, and they leaped upon the altar that was made. But Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry aloud; for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure, he sleepeth and must be awaked. And they cried aloud and cut themselves after their manner, with knives and lancets, even until the time of the evening sacrifice; and there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded. Then said Elijah to the people, Come near to me. And he repaired the altar that was broken down, and he took twelve stones, according to the number of tribes of the sons of Jacob, and with the stones he built an altar, and he made a trench about it. And he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, and said, fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the burnt sacrifice and on the wood. And they did it even the second and the third time, until it filled even the trench that was dug round about the altar. And doubt not they were fully satisfied that the offering was consumed it must be done by something more than human power. There was no deception practiced here, and no opportunity for the people to be deceived. The offering and the altar are fully saturated; yes, and the trench is full also. And now the time of offering of the evening sacrifice draws near. And Elijah said, "Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word. Hear me, oh Lord, hear me; that the people may know that thou art the Lord God." Then the fire fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stone, and licked up the water in the trench. And the people fell on their faces, and said, "The Lord, he is the God; the Lord, he is the God!"

Truly, God is not mocked! No! not by the God of Baal, nor by his four hundred and fifty prophets. Then let us beware, lest we sow to the wind, for if we do we shall most surely reap of the whirlwind. There are multitudes of instances, which we have not time to notice, both in the New and Old Testament scriptures, we might enlarge upon, as also those we have noticed: for each point has suggested to our mind some lesson of faith, patience and perseverance worthy of our careful consideration and imitation. But time will not allow it. We hasten to notice one more instance demonstrative of the truth of Paul's position, and with a few remarks will close; the objects, and incidents connected with which are given at full length in the second and third chapters of Genesis.

Here we find that God, after having created all things else, as the finishing stroke of his creative power, created man. He placed him in a garden, eastward in Eden, and there gave him a commandment; and the penalty attached to that commandment was death. "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." A deceiver appears! "And he said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden"? No; "But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." "Aha!" saith the deceiver, "ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof . . . . ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." We need not stop to ask if God was mocked by this father of deceivers! We only need to point to yonder graveyard (and they are found upon every green hill and fertile vale,) as an abiding testimony of the effects of being deceived and thereby disobeying the commands of God.

Reader, are you deceived? Remember that God is not mocked. Are you among that number who are still reiterating those words of deception, "Ye shall not surely die"? Listen to Paul! "He that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh, reap corruption." Again. Remember it is written, "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." Are you among that number who are well nigh overcome by the number of your adversaries? Go stand by that man of God as he stood alone amidst the four hundred and fifty of Baal's prophets. Behold him, as he repairs the altar that is broken down, and places the sacrifice thereon; and mark well the precaution he uses against deception; and then, as he bows himself before his God, listen, while he pours forth that simple, earnest prayer. Behold the fire as it descends and "consumes the sacrifice, the wood, the stones, the dust, and licked up the water in the trenches;" and let thy fainting heart take courage. Are you among that number who have obtained a "decree" against deception, and are now trying to convict you by it? Remember that it was forasmuch as before God innocency was found in Daniel and also before the king he had done no harm, that God sent his angel and shut the lions' mouths, that they did him no harm. Are you among that number who have been condemned as heretics by the churches of the present day, and forbidden to "speak any more in this name"? Be not deceived: but ask thyself if you ought not to obey God rather than man." Peter was so forbidden to speak; but the angel of the Lord commands him to go stand in the temple, and speak all the words of this life; and it is equally binding upon you who have received light upon the great truths of the gospel, to let it shine. Yes! thank God, we may contend, also, for these great and sublime truths. Says Paul; "Contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints;" and not only contend for this faith, but "reprove and rebuke with all long suffering."

Are you among that number who are cast down with sore trials, and passing through deep waters of affliction? Go! and with Paul and Silas, pray, and sing praises to God; perchance there will be (an earthquake) a visible manifestation of the power of God, to open the doors and unloose the bands wherewith thou art bound, and let thee go free.

Thou mayest be a sinner; if so, is there no warning voice in all these ensamples, that tells thee to escape for thy life? O, methinks there is! Listen to the language of the Savior in reference to that people who thus maltreated Paul, Silas, Peter and the prophets. "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee! how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold! your house is left unto you desolate." Behold, the end of those presidents and princes, who caused Daniel, innocent in the sight of God and the king, to be cast into the den of lions. Behold, in these ensamples, the power of God to deliver those from evil whose trust is in the Lord. Remember, that it was because "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son to die for it; that whosoever believeth on him might not PERISH, but have eternal life." Sinner, flee for thy life, while there is room! Let me beseech of you, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. Amen.

HENRY T. HART.

Buckland, Ct.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 4, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 2.

5. We now come to the fifth apartment of "Doubting Castle," where we find a question posted, that has much show of common sense. It is this:—

If the doctrine of the conscious existence of the human spirit after the death of the body originated in the speculations of some person or persons, why has it not been corrected by the learned of different ages?

When we first read this proposition in "Doubting Castle," we felt a little staggered; and thought surely, why did they not correct it? But when we began to compare the opinions of men with the Bible, we found but very few who were in harmony with its solemn teachings. We inquired, why have they not corrected every error? Instead of correcting errors, we found the learned have usually been the ones that have led the people into them. We find millions upon millions believing and teaching the transmigration of souls, the doctrine of transubstantiation, and that the Pope is Christ's vicegerent upon earth. We saw there was no want of learning among those who taught these doctrines. After the Romish church had given her entire sanction to the conscious state of the spirit after death; aided by the heathen philosophers, the decrees of the Pope, and her learned teachers, for many centuries, embracing among her members many devoted men and women; we might well ask, why did not some of these learned and good men correct this error if it be one? But when we turn to the Bible, we find all these errors are corrected; not by the learned, but by the unlearned; who were moved by the Holy Spirit to write directly opposite to the teaching of these learned men.

Soon as we saw that we had been looking to uninspired men as standards of truth, instead of the Bible, and that a multitude of errors had been advocated by learned and good men, the question under consideration seemed to lose all its force.

6. In the sixth winding of "Doubting Castle," we noticed the inquiry,—

What could have been the data or foundation of this doctrine of the conscious state of the human spirit after death?

This question struck us as an important one. Having already found that the doctrine did not originate among God's people; but that Egyptians first asserted it, and the Greeks afterwards adopted it, we felt a little curious to know how they came to get the first idea of such a doctrine. When we turned back to the history of our first parents, we found the Prince of demons declaring to Adam and Eve,—"Ye shall not surely die." This was said in contradiction to what God had said. Of course, Satan would contrive some way, if possible, to sustain his lie. After repeated efforts, as in the case of the "Rochester knockings," he succeeded in convincing some of the heathen, that an intelligent agent was trying to manifest itself; finally, in establishing the heathen oracles, which were conducted in a manner similar to the modern spiritual manifestations, as is admitted by the spirits communicating in these days. In A. D. 250, Cyprian, a christian writer, taught that "demons were . . . the authors of oracles;" and Justin Martyr, who died A. D. 165, says:—"The gods of the heathen are demons." These demons, or "familiar spirits," then, as now, claimed to be departed human spirits; and succeeded in persuading the heathen to adopt their doctrines, rejecting the true God, and introducing themselves as objects of worship. They always pretended to be the spirits of the dead; thus endeavoring to prove that their great leader told the truth to our first parents, when he said, "Ye shall not surely die." By means of this doctrine of the conscious state of the human spirit after death, they established hero-worship among the heathen, prayers to saints among the Catholics, Swedenborgianism and Spiritualism among the Protestants.

When we looked at this question from this stand-point, all seemed plain as to the origin of the belief in the consciousness of human spirits after death. We saw the reason why it commenced among the heathen instead of God's people; and why the latter were forbidden to have any thing to do with these lying spirits.

7. In the seventh department of "Doubting Castle," we found the following statement and question:—

The ancient nations, as well as others judged of things by their actual appearances. When a human being dies, the entire appearance of the event is in favor of extinction of being. Why is it that all the nations of the world entirely ignore the appearance of this event, and judge directly opposite?

When we first looked at this card in "Doubting Castle," it appeared somewhat plausible, but a careful inspection discovered its falsity. We recollected the point was already established that all nations had not judged contrary to the actual appearance, but in harmony with it, for over three thousand years; not believing in the consciousness of the human spirit after death; and when they came to the opposite conclusion, it was still from actual APPEARANCES made by demons.

In reviewing these seven departments of "Doubting Castle," which are designed to prove to their visitors that the human spirit is conscious after death, because all nations have believed it; we saw that they could be applied for the support of error as well as truth. For instance; the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the body is believed by all heathen nations, except those with whom the children of God mingled. "This belief originated either 1, by divine revelation; or 2, by the intuition of human reason; or 3, by a universal consciousness of the truth; or 4, by the speculation of some persons or persons at random. If it originated by divine revelation, then it must be true. If it originated by the intuition of human reason, then it is in harmony with reason; and whatever is in real harmony with reason must be right. If it originated by universal consciousness of its truth, then it must be true; for God would not plant a law of universal consciousness of truth in our nature to mock and bewilder us. If it originated by the speculations of some person or persons at random, then why have not such random speculations been corrected by the learned of divers ages and nations?" What error is there in the world that did not have its origin from one of these sources?

Now, dear Bro. B., we hope we have succeeded in throwing the light of truth into these several gloomy apartments of "Doubting Castle," sufficient to chase all doubts away. In our next, we will explore further.

Danbury.

Our meetings in Danbury, Ct., have not been in vain. We found a hard soil, that had not been disturbed much since 1843, when Bro. Chittenden lectured there. Bro. Ira B. Andrews and family, and one or two others, were all we found in the place to sympathize with us, when we began our labors. We were allowed the free use of the Town Hall, which Bro. Andrews, a self-sacrificing Bro., had fitted up as well as he could. Though poor in this world's goods, he is rich in faith, and willing to trust the Lord out of sight. His interest for the people had prompted him to make every sacrifice in his power to help them to see the glorious hope he loved so well. We were kindly entertained at his house, as were many others, during the meetings.

The people in Danbury seemed willing to patronize what is popular. As our meetings were at the Town Hall, by no means a popular resort, we had only about a dozen at first; while Concert Hall, formerly a church, was crowded every night to witness dramatic performances. It was said that hundreds went away from this house of amusement, because they could not get in. While as many hundreds assembled there as we had units at our place, it looked somewhat discouraging to those not accustomed to the christian warfare; yet we felt not in the least disheartened, and remarked to Bro. A., we shall have our hall full before we get through, and thus it proved. It was filled too with intelligent men and women, who felt very anxious to hear more. The truth has taken deep root in many minds, which are rejoicing that they now see the harmony of the Scriptures; and that God is not such a cruel tyrant as he had been represented, keeping men, women and children alive eternally in torment.

We find the people have only to hear the simple truths of the gospel, to embrace them; if they are lovers of truth, more than reputation; while those who are seeking honor from the world, and a good name among the King's enemies, seem to be totally blind, with no desire to have their eyes opened.

During our meetings considerable interest was awakened by questions asked by Eld. Brooks, a Disciple preacher. He is an intelligent gentleman, who has been connected with a literary institution in Troy, N. Y., and has the reputation of being a very skillful controversialist. As polishing makes gold shine, so his questions made the truth look more glorious. The points at issue were the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked. Several others also asked questions with the same happy results.

Lord's day, Dec. 25th, we met for a love feast in the morning, and were comforted by the testimonies presented. At noon two were buried with Christ in baptism, and in the evening nineteen sat down to the table of the Lord, to enjoy a heavenly season. A church was formed, and prayer meetings established. The prospect is encouraging for Danbury.

Editorial Notices.

☞ The "Discourse" in last week's paper, on first page, was written by Eld. O. R. Fassett. The signature, through mistake, was omitted.

☞ We have received tracts on various themes, from their publisher, H. S. Bosworth, Cincinnati, Ohio. The article on first page is taken from one of them.

☞ We have now received a supply of Bro. Hudson's Tracts, and are ready to fill orders for them, and other works in our list, with promptitude.

"THE HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE."—This is a new periodical, published for the "Christian Literary and Scientific Association," by H. M. Platt, E. Goodnough & Co., 122 Nassau street, New York, and edited by S. H. Platt, from whose work on "The Gift of Power," we have made several extracts into the columns of the Crisis.

We consider most of the "Monthlies" published at the present day as worse than useless. They exert a positive influence against the cause of Christ. "The Household Magazine" is designed for those who wish a semi-monthly periodical that will not poison the morals of the family. We hope our Bro. Editor will receive the blessings of the Lord upon his labors.

The price of the Magazine is $2.00 a year in advance. Single numbers 10 cts. Clergymen are charged only $1.50 per annum.

"ANTI-TOBACCO JOURNAL."—This is the title of a new Journal published by Geo. Trask, Fitchburg, Mass. It contains twenty-four pages of valuable matter, which every body should read. He will send a dozen copies yearly for one dollar. It is to be issued quarterly till funds are obtained to publish it monthly; hence, while it is published quarterly, he will send three of each number. This first No. is worth the price of the whole,—worth more than a cart load of the "Monthlies" and other light reading of the day, for which people are paying out their money so freely.

Send and get the "Anti-Tobacco Journal," and encourage Bro. Trask in his earnest efforts to save men from the use of that which is continually poisoning the system. Throw away the tobacco box, snuff box, pipe, all; save the money and take the "ANTI-TOBACCO JOURNAL," and you will make a blessed exchange. Do listen to us in this matter, for we speak as a friend. Come, begin now. Will you?

Since the following was published in the Christian Repository, of which Mr. Ballou is editor, we have received a note from him, proposing the following question:—"Do the Scriptures teach that part of mankind will be destroyed after they are raised from natural or physical death?" We accept this proposition, taking the affirmative. We shall settle time, place and manner, i. e., whether oral or written, by private correspondence, and announce the decision as soon as these preliminaries are settled.

Debate with Elder Grant.

In an article in the "Repository," a few weeks since, we took occasion to speak against the dogma of annihilation, and to refer to Elder Grant's preaching this notion in certain towns in this state. We said:

We learn that there is a certain "Elder Grant" who preaches that all will be raised from the dead, but that a part are simply raised up to life for the purpose of being tortured or burned up into a state of entire destruction and eternal unconsciousness! We may safely challenge him to prove the truth of any such idea by the language of the Bible. We do not deny that the Bible says much of destruction, etc., but is it subsequent to the resurrection of the soul to immortality? It makes no difference whether man has within him now an immortal soul or not. The question is, are not all to be raised from the dead to a future existence? Are not all who die in Adam to be made alive in Christ? Now we deny that the Bible furnishes the least evidence of the destruction or annihilation of any after they are made alive in Christ.

Elder Grant copies the above into the "World's Crisis," of Nov. 16th, and replies as follows:—

We would say to our friend Ballou, we accept his challenge, and will endeavor to sustain our position by a Bible argument; providing we can agree upon conditions, such as, time place and the form of question, etc.

We said, "We may safely challenge," etc., but this was not meant as a challenge, de facto; still, we have no particular objection to an oral or a written discussion with Elder Grant. We prefer writing on the account that it would be inconvenient for us to go away from home, to be gone long. If he desires an oral discussion, however, he may name the time and place and we will try to accommodate him. If he does not insist on an oral debate, we will write a discussion with him, all the letters on both sides, to appear in the "World's Crisis"—the paper of which he is Editor, and in the columns of the "Christian Repository."

As the subject of debate, we propose the propositions contained in the extract which appears in the "Crisis," as copied from the "Repository;" or, if he prefers a definite question, we propose the following, "Does the Bible teach the destruction or annihilation of any part of mankind, after they are made alive in Christ?" If this wording of the question does not suit him, let him state a question that will suit him; but it must embrace the point of doctrine mentioned in the extract he copies from us.

If Elder Grant does not hold the idea that some souls will be destroyed after the resurrection, let him say so, definitely. If he does believe and preach this idea, then this is the point we desire to have him attempt to prove. He must march directly up to this position, and look it square in the face, or he can have no controversy with us. We say, frankly, we believe that all men died in Adam, and that, the same all will be made alive in Christ; and we do not believe that any will be tortured by fire, or in any other manner, into a state of destruction or annihilation, after they are raised to a future life. We find no Scripture testimony to support such a notion, and we will debate this point with Elder Grant, either orally or by letters, in our respective papers. If we meet in an oral debate, it must be held in some place that will be convenient, and where it will be likely to do some good. We have no desire for a personal mastery over Elder Grant. We hope he has no such desire with regard to us. If we debate with him, our object will be the promotion of Truth in the minds and hearts of the people, not for strife or mastery. And the question must be, What saith the Scriptures, when understood by the aid of reason and sound rules of interpretation?

We aver it as our deliberate judgment, that he cannot prove by the Bible, that any will be annihilated or struck out of conscious existence, after they have been raised up from natural death to a future life. Let him gird on his armor and attempt to show that the Scriptures teach this notion, and we will endeavor to show that he fails to prove the truth of his favorite dogma.

The Dawning Year.

A happy New Year to all our readers! Do not consider the words a mere compliment, as easily forgotten as spoken,—but as an expression of hearty interest in your joy and welfare, now and ever.

Another year, with all its experiences deeply written upon each individual's heart, hast just closed. Its tale of afflictions, disappointments, despair, strangely commingled with blessings, hopes, and many a joy,—is at last complete. Its swift race has been run—like a watch in the night of time—fit emblem of a human life. As we look back upon its months, and weeks, and days, thoughtfully scanning the paths our feet have traced, and the objects and aims which our hearts have embraced; the hopes the inner man has sanctified, and which have been woven into the daily life; while the manifold bounties of providence and grace have been so lavishly bestowed, and we have been made to see the truthfulness of those gracious promises—"no good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly;" and, "all things shall work together for good to them that love God;" as we retrospect thus, what can be our expression of gratitude, of thanksgiving and praise, but the words which the divine Singer of Israel has given us, embodying the whole?—"My mouth shall show forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day: for I know not the number thereof. I will go in the strength of the Lord God: I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only." "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name forever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory."

Eighteen hundred and fifty-nine has passed—forever. What will be its summing up at the grand Assize before earth and heaven? Solemn consideration! Worthy of no inferior place in the rush of thought and feeling crowding our minds and hearts to-day. Do we give it its legitimate prominence? We need to stop and think,—to meditate, candidly, seriously; to faithfully probe the soul, and aquaint ourselves with our true position, our relations to God, our duties to man. Thus, with a spirit of reflection and earnestness, shall the year,—the threshold of which our eager steps have already passed,—rise upon us more hopefully, finding us serious, dependent on God, self-abased, self-forgetful, quietly doing, if needs be, suffering, all the obligations and crucifixions of daily life and duty.

Yes, there is need of much self-examination. Let us not shrink from the position, but confess to ourselves—how hard a task! and to God, wherein there has been a failure to secure the helps to a true life, and which might have been ours, but for neglect, or selfishness, or any other cause,—and rigidly aim, from the present auspicious season, to grasp those rarer joys, experiences, and results at last, which shall fully qualify us for successful christian influence and activity here, in the midst of so much tinsel and hollow-heartedness, and insure that blessed coming again, joyfully bearing our precious sheaves with us.

New Year! How the heart grows big with many a hope, looking forward through the opening perspective of days and days, yet to fulfill the circling round. From youth to graver age,—all hope. It is inwrought in nature. Sweet privilege! Thus we journey on, through the "night-time of sorrow and care," this blessed evangel—hope—opening the way. But who can tell to what the present year shall introduce us? Would our rash hands rend the mysterious vail which screens our vision? No, no. We are at rest. Our Father will do all things well. Trusting in his infinite love and wisdom,—having proved him faithful in the multiple of past years, we confidently place our hand in his, to be guided over the uneven paths, rugged and thorny, should we meet them; or, made glad by blessing and favor, undeserved as rich,—we will seek his smile, live in the shadow of his glorious love,—and, by the imparting of a true joy and hearty good to others, be continually enriched and advanced.

To promote the cause of truth, and the good of humanity, with the Savior and his precepts in our hearts, should govern the life of each of us. There is need to be more thoroughly indoctrinated into, and imbued with, the spirit of that higher law—"Love thy neighbor as thyself!" Let us begin this year, and advance with it, having this law written in our members—individually, universally, and—ineffaceably. It will meet all demands, all emergencies; conquer doubts, conflicts and dangers,—sustaining the soul in its uprightness, and linking it to heaven.

And thus the years roll on. We haste to the NEW YEAR of Heaven! The Immortal Year! Not so great a question—when will it be ushered in? as—will it be to us a happy one, being made recipients of its gifts and glories? Is the spirit within us in sweet harmony with the scenes its breaking light shall develop? Have we claims which shall be acknowledged by the Father of that Everlasting Age? Is our life hidden with Him? Will his final revelation crown our hopes, perfect our joys, and translate us into a life infinitely transcending every conception of the human heart? Shall we look upon the face of Eternal Love, and recognize our Friend? Shall we in his presence realize the "rest" of home—sweetest home? Shall there then eventuate our perfect union? Then, indeed, may we desire that blessed year to speedily gladden, with its sacred fulness of fruition, the earth long weary with its weight of woe, and the uplifted hearts of trusting saints, long watching for its birth.

The Discussion

Between Mr. Hudson and Mr. Cobb is ready this week. One of the nine Congregational ministers, who hold Life in Christ only, writes to Mr. H. as follows:

'Worthy of a better cause,' as "friend" Cobb would say. And now this renowned editor is mentioned, permit me to ask, how you have been able to save yourself from the natural effect of such mighty logic, tending to draw you into Universalism? I felt curious to see your rejoinder, thinking that for once you might manifest some choler. It was just the thing. So all of us thought. You could not have carried yourself with more dignity, in the presence of such positiveness, palaver, ignorance, and self-conceit."

Pages 478, 12 mo. Price $1.00, mailed, postpaid. Sold at this office; by C. F. Hudson, care of Jewett & Co., 20 Washington St.; H. W. Pray, Providence; G. W. Young, 138 William St., N. Y.; R. E. Ladd, Springfield; S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

For the Crisis.

Meetings in Seneca Falls.

Dear pilgrim brethren and sisters, who are scattered upon the mountains and vales of this old groaning earth, many of whom would be glad to enjoy such a blessed season of listening to the precious truths of God, as we have lately enjoyed from our much loved Bro. M. Grant. Truly such visits may be counted like angel visits, for it is only seldom they can be enjoyed.

Our brother arrived here according to appointment, Nov. 22d, and continued meetings every evening and three times on Lord's days, till Dec. 4th—seventeen discourses in all. And here let me give them in order, as they were given. First, Col. 3: 14. He showed what it is to have charity (love,) which is the great key or binder to all the other christian graces. Second, Eph. 6: 13. He showed scripturally what the armor is, and how it should be worn. Third discourse, 2 Tim. 4: 1–2. The Scriptural rule for masters and servants, husbands and wives, parents and children; and oh, how very few live up to the rule in this corrupt age! Fourth, 2 Pet. 1: 10, 11. Here we learned that our election is made sure by doing what God requires of us, and if we do those things we shall never fall. He then examined Peter's faith; and if we have the same faith, what we should add to this precious faith; and it is to be feared that a great many have been subtracting instead of adding. Fifth, 1 Thess. 5: 21. "Prove all things," etc. Reviewed Eld. Knight on immortality. Sixth, Matt. 5: 48. "Christian perfection,—a most heart searching sermon. Seventh, Heb. 9: 28. The literal and personal coming of Christ, the christian's hope. Eighth, morals and doctrines of Spiritualism. Here Bro. G. produced facts from the Spiritualists themselves, that their doctrine leads to a rejection of God's revelation, and also denies the Father and the Son; and their cardinal doctrine is the immortality of the soul; thus all who believe in the immortality of the soul are with them Spiritualist. Ninth, Hosea 5: 15. The object of afflictions. A most glorious and cheering discourse; "for these light afflictions which are but for a moment.

work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Tenth, 2 Pet. 1: 12. Present truth. Eleventh, Dan. 2: 44. Prophetic history. How cheering it is to have the old land-marks examined, and to KNOW that we are near port! It was an exposition of those visions that brought me to see the glorious harmony of God's word—the Bible. Twelvth, Eccl. 12: 7. What is the spirit in man? Bro. G.'s pamphlet on the Spirit, will show this clearly in its scriptural light. Thirteenth, 2 Cor. 5: 17. Who are christians? I wish all professing christianity could have heard who they were. Fourteenth, Gen. 1: 26, 27. Review of Eld. Knight, (Wesleyan minister) on the Creation of man. The Eld. was present both times. Fifteenth, 2 Pet. 3: 14. Last day scoffers. Sixteenth, John 20: 31. Christ the Son of God. Here a number of witnesses were brought forward to prove that the Christ is the Son of God. Hear them testify. Eunuch—Acts 8: 37. Matt. 27: 54. Mark 1: 1. Paul—Acts 9: 20. Matt. 16: 15. John 1: 34; 11: 27; 1: 49; 6: 69. 1 John 4: 15; 5: 5. 2 John 2: 14. Testimony of Jesus—John 9: 35; 16: 36. Mark 14: 61, 62. Rev. 2: 18. Testimony of God—Matt. 3: 17; John 16: 28. Seventeenth, Rev. 7: 7 to end. Triumph of the saints. This was the last, and it was blessed. After which a good company came around the table to partake of the emblems of our Lord's death, and also his coming again; and one of the company that then sat at the table, is now sleeping in the cold grave, resting for a little season, until the voice of the Son of God will bid the sleepers arise.

Monday evening, Dec. 5th, the discussion between Bro. G. and Eld. Clayton commenced, and continued five evenings—eleven hours in all. It will all be published in a book, and be ready by the first week in January. Eld. C. took a different position than is generally held by other churches. He believes that the spirit, or soul, as he calls it, is in a conscious state, but does not go to heaven, but to hades, that is, the good; and the evil ones go to tartarus. Then God the Father and Jesus Christ must be in hades; and the testimony of Stephen when he saw the heavens open, and Jesus standing on the right hand of the Father, cannot be true; and that the heavens must receive (or retain) him (Jesus) until the times of restitution, must be ignored. Eld. C. says this spirit-man cannot be cut with knives, or sawn with saws, or burnt by fire. Then the wicked may as well be cast into fire as range the fields of Paradise (hades), for the fire cannot harm them. Not a few of the large crowd who paid great attention, saw the absurdity of such teaching; nevertheless, like as it was in the days of the Savior, many believe the truth, but, for fear of scribes and pharisees, they will not confess it, lest they be put out of the synagogue, for they love the praise of men more than the praise of God. Notwithstanding, the foundation of God standeth sure, and he will have a people amidst the perils of these last days, who will confess his truth and walk worthy of the gospel. Oh how I love thy law; it is my meditation day and night! "Blessed is the man who walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of the sinner, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful; but whose delight is in the law of his God." Dearly beloved, let us take heed to this advice.

G. Dillabaugh.

Seneca Falls, Dec. 25th, '59.

P. S. We have no doubt but the discussion will be one of the best works published on that subject. Let all who can get them. G. D.

For the Crisis.

Perplexity.

Needless perplexity is often made to Editors. I noticed the first Monday in Jan., two letters; one brother wanted books sent to Windsor Hill without telling the State. Another wanted his paper sent to Conway, without giving his name. Such perplexing letters serve to make an unhappy New Year to editors. If the brethren will not reform in these blunders, I would not notice them in any way.

Hiram Munger.

For the Crisis.

☞ The Editor of the Advent Herald once wrote to Prof. Bush of New York for the meaning of a certain Hebrew word or expression. The answer was in substance thus:—"You have the Englishman's Hebrew Concordance. that will tell you all that any one can tell you about it." The value of that work and of the Greek Concordance can hardly be over estimated. Any word occurring in the original can be traced wherever it occurs, in the Old and New Testament and thus its meaning be clearly settled. The price of the Hebrew Concordance is $20. That of the Greek $4.

Bro. Grant has given us, in his tracts on Soul and Spirit, all the instances where these words are variously translated in the Old and New Testaments; so that all the advantages of these expensive works, so far as these two words are concerned, can be enjoyed by any one who has Cruden's Concordance and the tracts Spirit and Soul.

H. L. H.

Letter From H. L. Hastings.

Brother Editor:—I am in New York at last,—arrived here the 27th, and have commenced operations—have much to do and must drive as fast as possible. Expect to fill all orders for books and tracts during January, and then away to "Our Home," in Dansville, N. Y., in pursuit of a little more health, if the Lord so permit.

Persons who wish publications will yet have time to order them by writing at once. Those desiring tracts from the western Tract fund, or otherwise, can have them with, or without price, by sending their names and addresses. Price of tracts, 1600 pages for $1.00—or by mail prepaid, 1200 pages for $1.00

The American Health Convention is now in session in the city. Wishing to see the President, Dr. J. C. Jackson, I called in yesterday and found there Dr. Jackson, Dr. Harriet N. Austin, Dr. Hurd, and Dr. Miller, all of the Dansville "Home." They have now some seventy-five patients and have doctors enough left behind to manage the "Home," while they come to New York. I spent an hour or two most pleasantly with them at their lodgings, and then attended the evening session to hear Dr. Austin's address on the subject of female health and dress reform. Miss Austin is a young woman of clear head, and quiet, refined and dignified manner; the editress of "The Laws of Life" published at the Home, and head female physician at "Our Home." She is, I think, in good health, which is more than most can say; and, judging from her appearance, enjoys life. Her lecture was ably written, (for she has not yet learned to talk publicly) and was replete with fact, argument, subdued eloquence and good common sense. It had more religion in it than half the scientific sermons delivered by young graduates from "minister factories," more common sense than most of the other half, (though like them it did not quite declare the truth that death is an "enemy" absolutely, whether premature or not) and it was read in a better manner than two thirds of the sermons that I have heard read. I have listened to several of the celebrated lecturers of the day, and I confess I have heard few better lectures, and I have heard a number of poorer sermons; some of which I suspect I preached myself.

She commenced by quoting from some writer the statement that nine-tenths of Doctor's calls were upon women. Women are beautiful, delicate and ephemeral. All our women are feeble, sick, or half sick. There can hardly be found a vigorous and healthy woman. Men are not so feeble, nervous, sickly, and worthless. Why is it? God made no such difference. A man unable to labor and an invalid, chafes and frets against his chain; a woman, sick for months and years, takes it as a matter of course, and if she objects, gets a lecture on "patience and meekness." The results are useless lives, children sickly, scrawny, scrofulous, nervous, lean, and looking, to use Dr. Jackson's illustration, like "self-sharpners"—with misery, suffering, premature decay and death.

This state of universal infirmity and disease among women was needless. The European peasant women worked beside their husbands in the field, and were well. The Dutch women of Pennsylvania carried large bags of corn on their heads to mill. The Mormon women have walked three thousand miles over the western prairies and deserts, and have grown strong and well in so doing. The feebleness of women in this country was needless; it was a "great calamity, a great sin, a great shame!"

The great remedy was to be found in culture and exercise; physical and mental. Farmers were healthiest because they worked out of doors. Woman needed sunshine, and air and exercise. But this she cannot have with her present mode of living and dressing.

She then alluded to woman's dress. A bonnet, which is of no possible use but to look pretty, stuck on the back of her head. Then holes punched in her ears or nose, and feathers, glass beads or little bits of gold, stuck through,—compression about the waist, which is such that few women, who profess to dress loosely, ever draw a full breath;—a shawl to bend the shoulders forward and fetter the arms, and finally skirts that give to woman the appearance of an huge umbrella; skirts which effectually prevent her from out of door exercise to any desirable extent—skirts that a deer could not run in, that a horse could not travel in, that a man could not live in; which fatigue a person more in walking half a mile than a natural dress would to walk two miles. Man with all his strength would not live in such a dress at that. He wears nothing more like skirts than a frock-coat, and lays that off when going to work.

She claimed that, give women a dress to walk and work in, and she would improve beyond all calculation. She described such a dress, and spoke of numbers, in various parts of the country, who had tried the experiment, and gone at out-door work and gained robust health. She mentioned one woman in this state (N. Y.) whose daughters had taken up farming as a temporary employment, and the mother wrote that her two or three daughters had plowed one hundred acres the past season for winter crops, and were not thereby rendered masculine, or in any way damaged. This statement like many others brought a round of hearty applause.

The topic was ably discussed and the lecture was listened to with deep and unflagging interest. The smooth, solid, and earnest tones of the speaker, and her quiet and ladylike manner, appeared to command general respect and awaken constant increasing interest. I cannot undertake to give even a sketch of her remarks at length.

She was, consistently with her theory, dressed in what she called "the American costume," which would of course be called indecent, or improper, or outlandish, or something else, by fashionable dunces whose "holy Bible" on this subject is the latest fashion plate, gotten up probably, by some conspiracy of dress makers and dry goods manufacturers and harlots in that holy city Paris, the most corrupt and licentious in all Europe, and where in the year of grace 1858, of the THIRTY-SEVEN THOUSAND, FOUR HUNDRED AND FIFTY-ONE children born in it, ELEVEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SEVEN were BASTARDS. Of course, all persons taking their cue from such an immaculate place, will consider the American reform dress as "perfectly awful." Persons who would not wear the dress in a city's streets that they flaunted in ten years ago, or that their mothers delighted in twenty years gone by, or that their grandmothers displayed fifty years since, for fifty dollars a day, will of course object to wearing this; but my word for it, if they stay in this world ten years longer, nine tenths of them would rather wear it then than the same fashions which they follow like fools in January of the year 1860.

Of course, I don't know much about the subject, but I thought, having recently seen the fashion plates for most of the first half of this century; that Dr. Austin's well fitting dress with skirts reaching just below the knee, her snug pants, warm shoes or boots, warm Talma or cloak, and a neat flat hat on top of her head instead of being stuck on the back side, were not less becoming or decent than many other fashions which have been commended by these most moral and immaculate Parisian milliners and harlots whose edicts are the law of the beau monde. The skirts did not seem to be nearly as narrow as some I have seen cut with gores from the arms to the bottom, a few years since; nor did they seem as odd as would the old short-gown and petticoat which was our grandmother's pride. They were perhaps a trifle shorter than the usual and comely apparel of the Tyrolese and Swiss peasant women, who, I think, wear no pants. The whole was about or nearly the length of numerous fashionable dresses which I have seen of late years, only those instead of being drawn up around the neck for a covering, were let down into the mud, that they might sweep and mop the streets with silks and satins. The dress was somewhat like the short-dress and pantaletts worn by all good girls in their school days, and which seem to be very decent from the age of three years to that of thirteen, and is not at all immodest, but immediately after that it becomes immodest, ridiculous, disgraceful and scandalous; and must be forthwith exchanged for half a balloon for a skirt, and a bag of cotton on the back, which caused the old Indian chief at the west to remark concerning Gen. ——'s daughters, "nice white squaws,—nice pretty squaws,—pity um backs broke."

Dr. Austin's hat would compare favorably with the old fashioned "sugar scoop" bonnets which our grandmothers gloried in; or even the antique "chaise topped" calashes which were their delight; not to mention the "stove-pipe" contrivances with which men pay penance for addled brains, or the "dear little" cockle-shelled, posy-pots which blessed little women pin on to the back end of their blessed little heads. Her pants looked quite as well as any of the ten thousand muddy pairs of stockings, which are exhibited in the face and eyes of all creation every time they walk the streets in a rainy day. And her shoes or boots were, I presume, as comely as those cowhide samples our mothers wore, though not quite so elegantly thin as some of the paper souled apologies in which a few of the fools that are dead walked into their graves, and in which some other fools who are not dead are following in their steps.

Finally, I presume that the dress will be called unbecoming by decent dunces in general, including both men, women and ragamuffins; as would any dress that they have seen or worn when it was ten years out of fashion that has been continued for many years in succession combines the essentials of this one, viz, the short dress and pantalettes of the little girls in which they get a little health and strength with which to begin the life-battle of kicking at long skirts.

To any who desire to see the dress and learn its working, I would observe they can be gratified to any reasonable extent if they should attend worship with "the Church of Christ," junction of Broad and High Sts., Providence, by Sr. Brown, the junior Pastor's wife, and by several other ladies who are members of the church.

But I must stop. It is past daylight, and I have something else to do. I have exceeded my own intentions and must omit all notice of Dr. Jackson's interesting address delivered at the conclusion of that by Miss Austin. I only wish that every poor, feeble, sick, consumptive, scrofulous, groaning, grunting woman, who reads this, could have the privilege of spending a few weeks or months under the care of Dr. J. C. Jackson, and Dr. Austin, at "Our Home," in Dansville, N. Y. (forty miles south of Rochester), and there not only live but learn how to live, not only get well, but learn how to keep well and be something in the world besides mere suffering, groaning, patient, good-for-nothing, non-entities. Men will do well to go too. What say you, D. T. T., will you go on when I do?

Now, Mr. Editor, as I have flung the first club into a "hornets' nest," I propose, if time, health, cares, and the Editor permit, to follow it up with a few briefer articles, in which I will ventilate some thoughts that have long been burning within me concerning the outrageous and ungodly modes of living, breathing, dressing, eating, drinking, working and preaching, that are practiced at the present day. "Wish you a happy New Year!"

Till I write again, adieu. My address for January, 1860 is, care of G. W. Young, Box 3124, New York City. Very truly yours in Christ. H. L. Hastings.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Newtown, Ct., Dec. 25th, David Briscoe, aged seventy years.

He was formerly associated with the Methodists, but for the last two or three years has been satisfied that we can obtain the future life only through Christ. Although the weather was cold, a large number assembled at the funeral, which was attended by the writer. We endeavored to show the people that, according to the Bible, if there is no resurrection of the dead, "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" but that the proof is clear and abundant, that God has promised that the dead shall live again, consequently we do not sorrow as "others which have no hope." May the lonely widow, the fatherless children, and others afflicted by this bereavement, meet at last in the everlasting kingdom of God.—Ed.

Died, in Collinsville, Ct., on the morning of Dec. 26th, Mrs. Elizabeth R. Davis, wife of Geo. W. H. Davis, aged thirty-six years.

Our sister's health has been in a feeble condition for the last two years; and for eight months was unable to leave her room; during which she suffered much at intervals, but with a calm resignation to the afflictive providence of an all-wise and merciful Creator. Never did she murmur or complain. On the morning of the 24th, she called her three children to the bed-side, and feeling conscious that the hour of separation would soon arrive, with that tenderness which a fond mother's heart alone can know, she delivered unto them the warm gushing feelings of a dying mother's heart. Our sister died in the faith that the grave would be her resting place, until the voice of the archangel and the trump of God should awake her, with all the saints, to immortality and eternal life, then to be for ever with the Lord.

Thus again have the fondest ties been riven by the fell destroyer—consumption; and thus it will continue to be until Jesus the conqueror returns, and destroys the monster and him that has the power of death, which is the devil. And let every saint of the living God pray, Come, Lord Jesus! O, come quickly! Even so let it be. Amen. A discourse on the occasion was delivered from Rev. 14: 13.

Saint after saint on earth has lived, and loved, and died;
And as they left us one by one, we laid them side by side.
We laid them down to rest, but not in hope forlorn;
We laid them but to sweetly sleep, until the resurrection morn.
Come, then, Lord Jesus, come! Amen.

S. S. Brewer.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per steamship Arago. Advices of the 14th instant.

An imperial decree in the Bulletin des Lois opens an extraordinary credit of 140,000 francs for the expenses of repairing the old residence of Longwood and the tomb of Napoleon I. at St. Helena, and the improvement of other parts of the domain of the Vale Napoleon.

Paris, Dec. 12. All the powers united in Congress have now sent in their adhesion.

The Paris Correspondent of the Morning Post says:

"A letter from Malaga speaks of the departure from that port on the 5th of a third Spanish army corps, in thirty steamers. These troops are chiefly infantry, and are supposed to be intended to assist in the storming of Tetuan."

FRANCE.

The Times correspondent at Aden states that the port of Adool, in the Red Sea, had been ceded to France, and that a French vessel of war was shortly expected there to take possession.

The Porte had given permission to build a Roman Catholic church on the Island of Massowah, to be under the especial protection of France.

A Swiss paper says Napoleon refused permission for Marshal Mc Mahon to accept the sword which was being got up for him in Ireland.

A holy war had been proclaimed throughout the Empire of Morocco, which would bring thousands of Moors to the seaboard towns to defend their country.

Cardinal Wiseman had arrived at Rome, and was cordially received by the members of the Sacred College. He had an interview with the Pope.

A dispatch from Turin of Dec. 16, says: "Count Cavour has been definitely appointed first Plenipotentiary of Sardinia at the Congress."

Copenhagen, Dec. 17. The royal palace of Frederichborgh was last night completely destroyed by fire.

Paris, Dec. 17. The Patrie of this evening states positively that Cardinal Antonelli will assist at the Congress, and will appear in Paris on the 4th of January.

TURKEY.

Advices from Constantinople say the Porte was deliberating whether it would be expedient to bring the Suez Canal question before the Great Powers.

It is stated that the demand of the French Ambassador for a firman favorable to the Suez Canal project had been supported by the Ministers of Austria, Prussia, Russia and Sardinia. Fuad Pacha confessed he had formally engaged himself to refuse an authorization to the project. The Turkish Cabinet, after a stormy discussion of the matter, agreed to request the Powers which had made the above demand, to come to an understanding with England in the matter.

A letter in the Times, dated Pesth, Dec. 12, says:

"The die is cast. Government has resolved to adopt a vigorous policy towards Hungary, instead of redressing manifold grievances. One hundred and eighty Protestant noblemen and gentlemen have, within the last few days, been cast into prison or cited before the magistrates, for having taken part in the Assemblies which protested against the Imperial patent of December. The Austrian army in Hungary will soon be nearly 50,000 strong."

The Vienna correspondent of the Times, writing on Dec. 14th, says the danger of a conflict between the Imperial authorities and the Hungarian Protestants daily increases, and in Hungary political and religious agitation go hand in hand.

THE CONGRESS.

It is stated that the late belligerent Powers only would be repesented by their ministers of Foreign Affairs: the remaining Powers send Plenipotentiaries.

It is understood that Congress will not meet on the 5th of January, but probably about the middle of that month.

The renewed efforts at Constantinople in behalf of the Suez canal, attracted the general attention of the London Journals All disclaim opposition to it on political grounds, but continue to ridicule its feasibility as a commercial undertaking.

Married.

Oct. 12th, by Eld. C. B. Turner, Mr. BRADLEY J. BUSHNELL and Miss MARY L. SWAN, both of Lakeport, Madison Co., N. Y.

Dec. 22d, by Eld. C. B Turner, Mr. ABRAHAM PETRIE and Miss ADELAIDE SOPER, both of Sullivan, Madison Co., N Y.

Dec. 25th, by Eld. C. B. Turner, Eld. FRANKLIN DOUGLASS and Miss JANE C. STEVENS, both of Syracuse, N. Y.

Notices, &c.

Notice.

We should feel obliged if all who are indebted to this office for books, would remit the money at once, as we wish to square up to the close of the old year which has just departed. There are some of the brethren who have hardly been as prompt as they promised; but it will be all right, if they send in the amount due at a very early date. We have a great antipathy to "dunning," but really we have left us no choice, as we are compelled to urge the immediate payment of outstanding debts. We hope our friends will not suffer us to be put into a "tight place," when a prompt payment of our dues will obviate every such difficulty.

Post Office Address.

Till Jan. 25th, 1860, as beneath. Send in orders for Books and Tracts with the cash, or for Tracts free, if you are unable to pay for them. A new book ready in a few days. "Reasons for my Hope," by H. L. Hastings. 12 mo. 128 pp. Price, bound, 40 cts. Paper covers 25 cts. Five copies for $1.00 Postage 3 cts. I am at 138 William Street daily. Address H. L. Hastings, care of G. W. Young, Box 3124 New York City P. O.

A Request.

I would like to have J. S. White give through the Crisis, an exposition of the pre-existence of Christ. R. R. Perry.

☞ I will hold a conference in Elizabeth, Joe Davis Co., Ill., Wednesday, Jan. 18th, and continue over Lord's day following. The brethren must write me if they wish the above named meeting, and name where (what depot) they will meet me. Direct Muscatine, Iowa, care of J. Covell.

Walter Pratt.

Notice.

There will be a Quarterly Conference in Springville, Bad Axe Co., Wis., Thursday evening, Jan. 26th, 1860; and continuing over the Lord's day following. We hope that all the churches in western Wisconsin will be represented by delegates or letters, at this Conference. We expect a number of our preaching brethren present to preach the Word. Y. Higgins.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. D. T. Taylor will preach in
Boston, Chapman Hall..........Sunday, Jan. 8th

At the earnest solicitation of the church in Danville, Canada East, Eld. Miles Grant will commence a series of meetings in this place, on the last Lord's day in Jan., and continue every evening during the following week, and over the first Lord's day in February. J. PORTER.

Bro. D. Churchill will preach, the Lord permitting, at the Knowlton School-House in Danbury, N. H., Jan. 8th. S. F. LEAVITT.

I will preach as follows:—
Lawrence, Mass..........Jan. 1st
Westford, Mass..........Jan. 4th
Groton Junction, Mass..........Jan. 5th
Clinton, Mass..........Jan. 6th
Worcester, Mass..........Jan. 8th
Blackstone, Mass..........Jan. 11th
Providence, R. I..........Jan. 12th
River Point, R. I..........Jan. 13th
Warwick Plain, R. I..........Jan. 15th

Providence permitting, I will be in Worcester, Sabbath..........Jan. 15th
H. PRATT.

The Lord willing, Brn. Ira Morgan and Wm. A. Fenn will commence a series of meetings in Wallingford, Ct., Jan. 8th, and continue till the 15th.

The Lord willing, I will preach as follows:—
New Britain, Friday eve..........Jan. 20th
Waterbury, Sunday..........Jan. 22d
Harwinton, (Bro. Elliott's)..........Jan. 23d
Northfield, (Bro. Humphreyville please arrange,) Jan. 24th
Plymouth Hollow..........Jan. 25th
Litchfield Station..........Jan. 26th
Pleasant Valley..........Jan. 27th
Winsted, Sunday..........Jan. 29th
Feb. 5th where Bro. Albert Fox may appoint.

If the above conflict with any previous arrangements, please write me at West Meriden, Ct.

WM. A. FENN.

Eld. Thomas Smith appoints to preach in
Holden, Me., (near Bro. Clewley's)..........Jan. 8th
Lincolnville, Me., (Young's School-House) Jan. 15th
Round Pound, Me..........Jan. 22d
Carmel, Me..........Jan. 29th
Surrey, Me..........Feb. 5th

I will preach as follows:—
Pine Swamp..........Jan. 8th
Pawling, N. Y..........Jan. 15th
Hazel Plains, Ct..........Jan. 22d
The intermediate time subject to the order of brethren in the same or adjacent places.
T. S. CANFIELD.

By request, I appoint to preach as follows:—
Plymouth Hollow..........Jan. 8th
Northfield, (where Bro. Humphreyville may appoint)..........Jan. 9th
Harwinton, (Bro. Elliott's)..........Jan. 10th
Waterbury, (Bro. Denny's)..........Jan. 11th
Bristol, (Bro. Hough's)..........Jan. 12th
New Britain..........Jan. 13th
Wallingford..........Jan. 15th
L. S. LUDINGTON.

The Lord willing, Bro. J. W. Crabtree will preach in New Britain, Lord's day..........Jan. 8th

Bro. Champlin appoints to preach in Bristol, Ct..........Jan. 8th
Bro. Jones,..........Jan. 22d
JOHN H. SUTLIFF.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd appoints to preach in
Springfield, Mass..........Jan. 4th, 5th, 6th and 8th
Hartford, Conn..........Feb. 8th and 15th
New Britain..........Feb. 17th

Eld. C. F. Sweet appoints to preach in Conesus..........Jan. 10th to the 15th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

☞ Will the Sister who sent us a communication from Goshen, Mass., send us her name?

G. W. Gillespie.—You have only paid to No. 229.

B. C. Bancroft.—Orders for tracts from the Tract Fund, should be sent to H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

Eld. John Howell's P. O. address is Poultney, Vt.

Cash Receipts.

F. Coverse 223, $1.31; R Wendell 276, $2.04, W S Olmsted 234, 21 cts; W S Wiley 275, $3.25; J C. Libby 215, 15 cts; T Gordon 229, 25 cts, Mrs. S Taylor 234, 50 cts; Al. Porter 221, 50 cts.

L Bates 244, W H Shackford 250, W S Knight 244, J Hall 241, E S Hyde 225, O D Eastman 234, N Willard 248, M J Bean 280, D Minor 249, L Dunn 275, J Douglas 248, I McCandis 247, W L Wheeler 248, J Brooks 244, W B Fox 249, J S Arnold 268, J A Brazee 208, B C Bancroft 247, E Baker 258, B Woodside 234, F L Smith 249,—$1.00 each.

I Andrews 274, Jas. Harrington 238,—$2.00 each.

For Books and Tracts.—J F Baker $5.42, E Phelps $4.00, W H Shackford $1.00, F Converse 66 cts, A Warner 24 cts, E S Hyde $1.18, J Crowley $2.00, I Forsbee 11 cts, R Wendell 21 cts, J P M Albert 15 cts, Al. Waterman $5.40, J Baker $1.00, H Bailey $7.00, J Wentworth 69 cts, F H Whitaker 15 cts, W S. Olmsted 79 cts, R B Perry $1.00, B T Woodford 69 cts, Bro. Sweet $1.00, H Wilcutt $3.00, M Stetson $5.29, J C Libby $5 60, G Hale 10 cts, C B Turner $5.40, E H Beach $7.20, B N Stetson 12 cts, B C Bancroft 80 cts.

I will commence a four days meeting at Exeter, Jan. 10th. At liberty from Saturday, 14th, to go where a door opens. My address is at the Crisis office until the 9th. H. MUNGER.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen. 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 6 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

The Soul—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuke as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

The Spirit—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruah and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.50 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York; Truman and Spafford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $1.50.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $5.00.

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns, designed for public and private worship, [illegible] by J. V. Himes. Price 60 cts.; postage 9 cts. 1-4 off per dozen. [illegible]

Words of Warning. 3 cts. single postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 60 cts. —postage 18 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed: or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Henry A. Seymour. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $3.00 per hundred,—5 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, Providence R. I.

1.–The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.–The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.–Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 8 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—post. 8 cts.

4.–The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.–Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.–Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.–Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 54, 15 cts. single, $10 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

8.–The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Lanfert. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. —6†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks, separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them: Orders with the CASH are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that FEEL poor also.

Address H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos. which can be separated for distribution. The sett contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by A. Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, by M. Henry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, by Baxter.

† The Olive Leaves are three neat four page tracts that can be separated for distribution. No. one, Little Children, Love one Another; two, The One Resting Place; three, My Friend; four, [illegible] Love; five, Abundant Grace; six, Go in Peace; by Hastings. Just the thing to distribute among all classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price [illegible] 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms: or, the Kingdom of God the Father, the Kingdom of Satan, the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of the world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $3.00 per hundred, [illegible] 15 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. S. Baccus, No. 8 Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. White, Warwick, R. I.—

The Harp, by Elder Himes; 200 Stories for Children; Satanic Delusion; Bible Hell; Great Controversy.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Awake, Ye Saints!

Air.—"Old Cabin Home."

BY S. S. BREWER.

Awake, ye saints, and sing Hosanna to our King!
For the bright beams of light that now are shining.
The bridegroom now is near, and shortly will appear,
To take the good and faithful home.

CHORUS.

And drink from the fountain of pleasure,
Where the saints, clothed in white,
Shining beauteous and bright,
Shall inherit the kingdom forever.

My Savior soon will come; then he will take me home,
There to feast 'mid the noontide of glory;
Where the flowers ever bloom, and shed a rich perfume,
In Eden, the saints' happy home.

I shall range fair Eden's bowers, amid immortal flowers,
Where their sweet fragrant odors are emitting;
Where all are clad in white, and forever dwell in light,
With Jesus forever at home.

In the city of my King, with the saints I soon shall sing
To Emmanuel crowned in his beauty;
Our joy will be complete, as we walk the golden street
Of Salem, our own happy home.

'Tis time we all awake! the day begins to break!
The Bridegroom is coming in glory;
None but the pure in heart will ever share a part
In Canaan, the saints' peaceful home.

South Glastenbury, Ct.

For the Crisis.

"Prove all Things."

In this age of fables and romance, there is one cherished doctrine upon which Pagans, Mohammedans, Papists and Protestants can all unite. All with one consent declare that man is immortal, and manifest the greatest degree of nervousness if the truth of this declaration is called in question. But inasmuch as believing a doctrine does not make it true, it becomes all to give heed to the Scripture injunction—"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." This exhortation is certainly as worthy of attention now, as when those words were uttered. Truth seeks the light and fears nothing from investigation, but gathers new strength, and emerges from every conflict clothed with beauty and excellence unseen before: while error hides its deformed head in darkness, and endeavors to sustain itself by calling to its aid ignorance and superstition.

But whether God, who has endowed man with reason, will approbate him in substituting zeal for knowledge, is a question of no small moment. We cannot fail, however, to understand that our Father in heaven has never required man, in any age of the world, to believe any truth without giving him evidence upon which he could rely, as tangible proof of the correctness of his position.

As an example, Jehovah has required man to believe that he exists. He has therefore surrounded us with his majestic works in the earth, and spread out over our heads heaven's blue curtain, bestudded with a thousand bright lights, moving with such order and shining with such brilliancy, that we are compelled to acknowledge the hand of an all-wise and all-powerful Architect in their creation.

So also the words of the prophets come to us with authority, because their predictions, uttered thousands of years since, have, in their fulfillment, compelled us to believe that they were inspired by Jehovah.

If, therefore, man is an immortal being, we have a right with all earnestness to inquire, is there proof? Let us not imagine that certain portions of truth are essential to man's intellectual and moral development, and to his final and lasting peace, others being of no consequence; but rather let us learn that God's works are harmonious and truthful, which, together with his written word, are designed to elevate man, and fit him to occupy that position in the universe for which God intended him.

Scripture testimony concerning the nature of man is full, and should be satisfactory. We need not search from Genesis to Revelations to ascertain man's nature, if we will believe God; and if our minds are so befogged with the foggy doctrines of a foggy age that we cannot see, proof is useless. If man is immortal, he cannot die; but God declares, that the final condition in which man shall be left, in consequence of transgression, is, that he shall return again to dust. Gen. 3.—"Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Reason concurs with this declaration of the Lord, in declaring that life and death are great realities, that man must be either alive or dead, and that he cannot be in both these conditions at the same time. Man, in order that he may live, must possess a material organization; and this organization, acted upon by that life-giving principle which God infused through Adam's whole being, when he breathed breath into his nostrils,—a principle contained in the breath, (sometimes called spirit,) signifying in its prime meaning an unseen influence,—rises into life; and when the conditions necessary to produce life are wanting, man dies. Reason declares that a life without material organization is not worth possessing: it can be thought possible only to those who have been spoiled by heathen philosophy, or by kindred theological doctrines of the present day.

If man, by transgression, has proved himself unworthy to live where his Father intended he should live, and has unfitted himself to accomplish the work which God intended by his hand to accomplish; what does justice require of an all-wise and merciful Creator? Say, shall he live forever in misery? It was not of his own will that he lived at all. Shall he wear out a weary existence of thousands of years, and then look forward into a dreary and endless future of intense woe? Or, shall not rather the word of Jehovah be true, and forgetfulness, decay and oblivion consign him to the dust from which he was taken. As the Psalmist declares,—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

With my whole soul I praise thee, O God, that thy mercy endureth forever, and thou wilt cause all those who have unfitted themselves for the enjoyment of thy kingdom by sinning against thee, to "sleep a perpetual sleep and not wake." I rejoice in the prospect of a real existence here on the earth; and I expect this life, through the mediation of the second Adam, the Lord Jesus Christ. Although God knew from the beginning that the first man, in his weakness, would be overcome by the temptations of the adversary, yet he had purposed to bring into the world the second man, or second Adam; and in his faithfulness, and through his obedience, he was to restore all things. In keeping with the predictions of the prophet, nearly four thousand years after the fall and rejection of the first Adam, a messenger is sent by the high and holy One, to announce to Mary the fact that she should conceive a son, and when born, his name should be called Jesus. The manner of this conception is described in Luke 1: 35.—"The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee." As Adam was caused to live by the power of God, so the second Adam, by the same power, was brought into the world.

These facts are in keeping with the Scriptures; for God declares in Gen. 2: 14, 15, that the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. Again, in Gal. 4: 4, 5, we learn that Jesus "was made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law." I might add that he was made subject to death and not possessed of an angelic nature.—Heb. 2: 9. That he was subject to all the temptations that afflict us.—Heb. 2: 18. But Jesus, the second Adam, in consequence of obedience, is exalted above all created beings; and God has given him a name above every name. In proof, read Isa. 53: 12; Phil. 2: 8–11. Yes, by obedience, Jesus may justly claim his Father's protection. More especially is this meek submission manifested when, in view of the sufferings of Calvary, he sweat "great drops of blood falling down to the ground"—although one breath of prayer would have moved all heaven, and brought to his aid legions of the heavenly host. Yet he can say, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt;"—he gives his life a ransom for many, to be testified of in due time." God raised him from the dead—"the first-fruits of them that slept"—"the first-born from the dead."

Thus, in the regeneration, when he shall come in all his glory, he is before all, the patriarch of the coming age; to him shall the first dominion come, and on his brow shall rest a kingly crown; and he shall receive the willing homage of all the earth. To live in that day, is the desire of every christian heart. My heart says, come and reign, Jesus, thou Anointed One; for "thou alone art worthy!"

D. HUTCHINSON.

South Reading, Mass.

For the Crisis.

Testimony of Paul.

If wicked men are immortal, we shall expect to find that doctrine, also the doctrine of endless misery, in the writings of the Apostle Paul. Now if it should appear that Paul never gave countenance to such a doctrine, it must be evident he did not believe in it. Our object in this is, to examine some of Paul's teachings on this question, and see what he does say about it. Acts 13: 41.—"Behold, ye despisers, and wonder" and—sink to endless misery? No. What then? "Perish." This word does not mean to preserve, but to decay, to die, to be destroyed. In Rom. 1: 28–31, Paul gives a description of the wickedness of the wicked. He says—"And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient; being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful." Can a blacker catalogue of sins be furnished than this? Surely if any men deserve unending being in endless misery, these do. Let us hear what Paul further says of them: "Who, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of"—endless torments in hell-fire—is that what they are worthy of, Paul? No; I did not say so. I said they "are worthy of death." Is that all, Paul? These who profess to be your regular successors, teach us such wicked men are immortal and cannot die; but must live eternally in misery. However, we believe you, and believe those who profess to be your successors are in the wrong, who follow the traditions of men rather than the law of God.

We next look at Rom. sixth chapter.—"What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? For the end of those things is"—endless torments. Have we read Paul aright? Let us look again. "For the end of those things is death." Truly! Is that all? Modern divines say it is endless misery. Paul says it is death. Which shall we believe? "For the wages of sin is"—everlasting life in indescribable and unutterable torment. Is that right? Yes, if modern theology be true. Let us take off the old sectarian spectacles and look at this text again. What did you say, Paul? I said, "The wages of sin is death." We thought so; but your words have been so often tortured to make them speak endless misery, we did not know but we might be mistaken, and that death meant life. "No," cries the Apostle, "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Death to the sinner—life to the saint. One dies, and his death is everlasting; the other lives, and the life is eternal. Again the Apostle says, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die. But if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." How perfectly plain. See Rom. 9,—"What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction?" Again, "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy."—1 Cor. 3: 17. "And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?"—1 Cor. 8: 11. "If the dead rise not, . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15: 16–18.

Truly, Paul, you only prophesy evil of immortal-soulists; for you not only teach the wicked are to be destroyed, but that the saints who die are perished, if there be no resurrection; and if so, they cannot be conscious now. But, Paul, we are not satisfied yet; so please come with us to another place, and let us see if we cannot make out these destructionists heretics. Turn to 2 Cor. 2: "For we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved; and in them that"—are preserved in endless misery. Have we read you aright, Paul? No; I did not say any such thing. What did you say? "In them that perish." But don't that mean preserve? No; "To the one we are the savor of death unto death; and to the other the savor of life unto life." Alas for immortal-soulists! Take Paul to what place they will, he gives no countenance to their Pagan fables. Once more. Phil. 3: 19,—"Whose end is destruction." And 1 Thess. 5: 3,—"Sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape." Shall not escape what? Destruction. 2 Thess. 1: 9,—"Who shall be punished with everlasting"—"preservation in indescribable agonies, where the presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery; for God is present, himself, in hell, to see to the punishment of these rebels; his indignation kindles, and his incensed fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintains their being, rendering all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep." But stop, one moment; we have made a mistake. We began with Paul, but the rail track has got so badly worn by much travel, that we run off, and took Dr. Benson's track in his Sermons on Future Misery. So we will start again.—"Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power." After all, Paul differs from Benson and all immortal-soulists.

Well did Bishop Newton say—"It is impossible for any creature to live in endless torments." And again he said, "God is love, and he would rather not have given life, than render that life a torment and curse to all eternity." Whatever Bishop Newton might think or say, a greater has said, even the Eternal Jehovah:—"The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. 18: 4, 20. The Spirit of the Lord by the Psalmist says—"But the wicked shall perish." In Matt. 3: 12, they are compared to chaff. Some, as thorns and briars, shall be burned up with unquenchable fire.

Yes, we are mortal, and dependent upon the Lord Jesus Christ for eternal life. Without him, we must die the death that knows no resurrection morning.

J. E. CLARK.

IMPORTUNITY OF PRAYER.—A man may pray ten times and be denied; and yet, by praying ten times more, obtain the blessing. Had the Syro-Phoenician woman ceased, after making three applications to Christ, she would have gone away empty; but by applying once more, she obtained all she asked.—Payson.

Selections.

New Year's Counsels.

On the morning of New Year's day, in accordance with a time-honored custom, the Sabbath-School children and teachers of Montreal meet for New Year's addresses and counsels. Some denominations prefer to meet separately, but the schools of five denominations met unitedly, as heretofore, in the American Presbyterian church.

Rev. Dr. Fraser, having been appointed to address the scholars, commenced by wishing them a good new year. In old times, he said, when a king died, proclamation was made, 'The king is dead, God save the king,' and in like manner we might say, The old year is dead, God bless the new year. Some children had never looked at the face of a dead person, but they would not be afraid to look at a dead year, which, however, would rise again, and bear witness at the day of judgment for or against every one present. In beginning the new year he would earnestly counsel them to improve its opportunities. Life was made up of opportunities, many of which, if missed, never return. Life was not like a stream flowing evenly, but rather like a series of waves. In connection with this idea, he had read an account of a shipwreck, which was very instructive. A vessel had been thrown upon a rocky coast, and the captain and his wife found themselves on a ledge, scarcely raised above the waves which dashed around them. They were not far from shore, but rugged rocks and boiling surges intervened. Ropes were thrown to them by the people on shore, but unless they took the opportunity of a wave going in which would carry them over the rocks, they were sure to be dashed in pieces. The captain, of course, wished his wife saved first, and put the rope securely round her, the people on shore standing ready to draw her out. He anxiously watched the waves till he saw a great one rushing in, and he called out to his wife—jump! But she hesitated. It was only a moment, but that moment was fatal. She jumped, but it was to meet the returning wave, which dashed her against the sharp rocks, and she was drawn out a corpse. He would again say to all, do not miss your opportunity, and youth was the best opportunity for embracing religion. They would find many studies difficult, but religion was not difficult if received into the young heart. It was like seed, easily sown and soon growing up. The case was very different with grown-up persons. To plant religion in a heart which had long been shut against it, was like splitting rocks to get down to the roots of a tree.

To illustrate the nature of faith, the speaker said:

A mother had a son concerning whom she was very anxious, and for whom she prayed earnestly. This son, who had been long careless, came down one morning with a troubled countenance, and on being asked what was the matter, said he had had an extraordinary dream. He dreamed he was in the bottom of a deep pit, in which were some frightful beings, half demons, half men, forging instruments of torture, and looking maliciously from time to time at him; he was much terrified, but he felt something touch his cheek, and perceived the end of a silk thread hanging down. On looking up he saw One who he knew was the Lord Jesus holding the thread, and heard him say, "Take hold." "Not of that slender thread," objected the young man; but the Lord only repeated a second time, "TAKE HOLD." "Oh Lord," cried the young man, "send down a rope; that thread will never draw me up." "TAKE HOLD!" cried the voice the third time, and the young man obeyed, and was safely out of the pit; and in the process he noticed that the thread grew bigger and bigger, till it became a strong rope. This thread was faith. The young man was converted through that dream, which doubtless was sent by the Lord.—Witness.

Voice of the Flowers.

There is a lesson in each flower,
A story in each stream and bower;
In every herb on which you tread
Are written words, which, rightly read,
Will lead you from earth's fragrant sod,
To hope, and holiness, and God.

—Allan Cunningham.

Slow to Anger.

The wise man will strive always to possess his soul in patience. This acquirement is within the reach of every one. Even the most passionate need not despair.

An old gentleman, well known as Father K——, had been noted in youth and middle life as a man of most violent temper. It was the great burden of his own life, and a source of unceasing annoyance and deep sorrow to those around him. At last he determined to be its slave no longer. The tyrant who had so long ruled him with his iron rod should be subdued. "I observed," he said, "that an angry person always raised his voice to a loud, high key. I determined, therefore, whenever I felt the old spirit rising up, to soften my voice down to the gentlest possible tone, and speak deliberately. I think it was that which, under the blessing of God, enabled me to conquer the evil habit. For fifteen years I have not been conscious of a single ruffle of my temper." And a glance at the old man's peaceful face would well substantiate the statement. A sunny, gentle expression rested always in the dim, kind eyes and on the snow-crowned forehead, which now is lying low beneath the mold of our quiet village church-yard.

How one loves a character that may thus be relied on in every emergency of life—one who can look perplexing cares cheeringly in the face, and bravely smile away vexations! How cheerful a sunny temper makes a home appear, however lowly its roof and humble its arrangements! And the heart itself enjoys a rest and peace of which a sullen, peevish temper forever robs its possessor. "How pleasant it is," said Matthew Henry, "to have the bird in one's bosom, ever singing sweetly!"

PROMISES.—Satan promises the best, but pays with the worst; he promises honor, and pays with disgrace; he promises pleasure, and pays with pain; he promises profit, and pays with loss; he promises life, but pays with death. But God pays as he promises, and all his payments are made in pure gold.—Brooks.

The Deliverer.

Arise! the kingdom is at hand,
The King is drawing nigh;
Arise with joy, thou faithful band,
To meet the Lord most high!
Ye christians, hasten forth,
With holy ardors greet your King,
And glad hosannahs to him sing;
Naught else your love is worth.

Look up, ye drooping hearts, to-day!
The King is very near.
Oh! cast your griefs and fears away,
For, lo! your help is here;
And comfort rich and sweet
In many a place for us is stored,
Where, in his sacraments and word,
Our Savior we can meet.

Look up, ye souls weighed down with care;
The Sovereign is not far.
Look up, faint hearts, from your despair;
Behold the Morning Star!
The Lord is with us now,
Who shall the sinking spirit feed
With strength and comfort at its need,
To whom e'en Death shall bow.

Hope! oh ye broken hearts, at last!
The King comes on in might;
He loved us in the ages past,
When we sat wrapped in night;
Now are our sorrows o'er,
And fear and wrath to joy give place,
Since God hath made us, in his grace,
His children evermore.

Oh! rich the gifts thou bringest us,
Thyself made poor and weak;
Oh love beyond compare, that thus
Can foes and sinners seek!
For this to thee alone
We raise on high a gladsome voice,
And evermore with thanks rejoice
Before thy glorious throne.

—R st, 1651.

Married Politeness.

"Love is not a flower of instant growth;
But from an unsuspected germ,
That lay within the hearts of both,
Assumes its everlasting form."

Married politeness should not subside with the honeymoon, but the sweet courtesies of life should increase, more and more, and the conjugal ties strengthen and brighten, as years roll on. Though words seem but little things, and light attentions almost valueless, yet depend upon it, they keep the flame bright, especially if they are natural, trustful, heavenly.

"So love doth spring, so love doth grow,
If it be such as never dies.
The bud just opens here below,
The flower blooms on in Paradise!"

—Golden Rule.

Vinegar.

Keep it out of your religion. Don't spoil good, sweet gospel with such sour stuff. "Like it?" "No, I do not. It isn't healthy. Folks who like it have bad taste. Be plain, faithful, honest. Do not flatter, nor lie, nor deceive; but be kind. Love me and say what you like. I can bear the reproof of love. But this bitter, harsh, rough way is all wrong. If you must cut off right hands, have a sharp knife. Don't made ragged edges. How often these vinegar-faced growlers do hurt. The prayer-meeting goes well till one of them gets up; then, whew! rasps, graters, hand-saws and corn-cobs come down upon your sensitive soul until you are forced to shrug and roll yourself up like a porcupine to keep from being scarred all over. What fetches out the buds and blossoms from the trees? Hail-storms and snow-squalls? No. The gentle breath of Spring, and the balmy dews and warm sunshine—these kiss the dear little blossoms from their buds, and make the fruit to grow. Be gentle then, loving, kind, faithful, and remember ☞ you can catch more flies with a spoonful of molasses than with a barrel of vinegar.

H. L. H.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

"A TREATISE on the Causes of the Premature Decay of American Youth."—By Dr. A. Stone.

The following extracts are from a valuable work, to which we have referred in our editorial notices. As many of our readers will not take the trouble to send for the work, we feel it our duty to call their attention to the subject by some quotations from its pages. Many people have become so fastidious in these days of corruption, it seems as though they had rather their friends would go to destruction, than to tell them of their danger, lest they should be thought immodest. One thing we have noticed, those who find fault when we speak against certain sins, are the ones who are themselves among the guilty; or in other words, the licentious and lustful are the very ones who affect such extreme modesty, that they cannot hear a minister say a word about sins that are leading thousands to imbecility of mind, ruining their physical constitutions, fitting them for the mad-house, and, finally, "everlasting destruction." These lecherous and filthy objects, who, like the Sodomites, are full of evil imaginations, endeavor to cover their filthiness, by pretending to be so much more pure than the Holy Spirit, that they will take offence at those portions of the Bible which speak of their beastly habits. We shall not cater to suit the taste of "these filthy dreamers." But to the extracts. The first will contain some preliminary remarks of the writer. In his preface, he says:—

"A class of diseases and physical ills prevail to a fearful extent in society, which flow in a hidden current; their causes are silent to the outward observer; they have their origin in the vices and fashions of modern life, and spring from ungoverned passions. They invade alike the health and lives of childhood, adolescence, youth, and in many instances, maturer years, with ruin and premature decay. It is a fire that smoulders in silence and as insidiously consumes, while parents and guardians are ignorant of the cause.

The annual mortality in the United States, from this cause alone, is estimated to be thirty thousand, and what is still more appalling, it is rapidly on the increase. It is the design of this little work, to bring to the notice of parents the effects of this vice, and some of the more prominent symptoms, that they may seek timely aid from a reliable source. For, humiliating as may be the confession, it is nevertheless true, that the large mass of physicians are entirely ignorant of the means of treating them successfully; while pretended physicians, on the other hand, deceive the afflicted, and ruin them by the unwise use of powerful drugs, or rob them of large sums of money without returning any sort of equivalent, or suggestion for the abatement of these enormous evils."

Dr. Stone now goes on to say, under the following heading:—

"The Causes of the Early Decay of American Youth."

"It certainly would evince much wisdom, for every one to stop, if but for a moment, for a little calm reflection, a little judicious deliberation, upon their own physical condition. I give the advice as a personal application; for when we consider the very few that are excepted from the general mass, the number is comparatively small that is not, in some way, directly interested in the nature of this subject which engages our attention.

Kind reader, take a calm survey around you, abroad, at home, and in yourself! a moment's calm reflection,—of keen observation,—will at once convince you that our race, the Americans, are sadly degenerating in physical and vital stamina. In a word, a generation is circumscribed within the bounds of a very few years, our true manhood is at a low ebb, and in a sad and melancholy condition.

Ponder well this assertion! it is true, you cannot controvert it; you cannot gainsay it; it deeply concerns you, however much you may strive to keep it out of mind, or out of thought; the fact is there, and will sooner or later knock at the door of your reason or apprehension.

A reckless disregard of life and health in permitting an effervescence of passion, cannot obstruct the great facts and truths of nature in their course of operation. They sprang from that absolute necessity, whose fiat spoke worlds into being, and gave to them the undeviating law of His will, the strict obedience to which you are made subject, or suffer the penalty of infraction.

How many, buoyed with the first gush of spirits and pleasure, that flows from the fountain of health in youth, have looked forward to a long life in keen anticipation, expecting to realize a continued increase of the stream into a boundless ocean; but, alas! for want of good advice, a judicious helmsman, have in a few years, painfully realized in their own persons, from the abuse of their own passions, the degraded being so strikingly portrayed by the pencil of CORREGGIO, in which three female figures are represented ministering to a man, who sits fast bound to a root of a tree. Sensuality is soothing him; Evil Habit is nailing him to a branch; and Repugnance, at the same instant of time, is applying a snake to his side. In his face is feeble delight, the recollection of past, rather than perception of present pleasures, languid enjoyment of evil, with utter imbecility to good, a sybaritic effeminacy, a submission to bondage, the springs of the will gone down like a broken clock, the sin and suffering co-instantaneous, or the latter forerunning the former, remorse preceding action—this represented in one point of time.

Many a young man, on seeing this picture, has been compelled to exclaim, Behold me then at this period when I should possess robustness of health, reduced to imbecility and decay.

Consider then, that you were created by Omnipotent wisdom, possessing in some degree, the elements of His sublime nature; embodying faculties and passions of the most mysterious character, which lie dormant within us, which we ourselves know not of, and cannot fathom, only as circumstances or education call them forth and develop them into activity and being. So hidden in early life are many of these mysterious faculties and elements of our nature, that the keenest reason, united with the wisdom of experience, in the wise and the good of those that have gone before us, is needed to guide our every step, and every opening scene in the great panorama of life; or else we should soon founder our little bark on the rocks and quicksands that lie concealed.

Innumerable passions are embodied in our nature, capable of producing either the keenest anguish or exalted enjoyment, according to the soil on which we are placed, or the culture we receive.

Within the last half century, within thirty years even, many medical men of experience, possessing keen powers of observation and discrimination, have observed a rapid development of many new forms of disease, assuming the most complicated and mysterious features, and generally terminating in spite of medical treatment or advice, lamentably fatal in rapid decline, consumption, dementia, insanity, idiocy, and in varied vague and undefinable ways, which tax the ingenuity of the most learned physicians and pathologists to devise appropriate names.

The learned Dr. Marshall Hall, of London, wrote quite a volume on these modern maladies of youth, which he has christened with the name of Mimoses, or the imitators. The late Dr. James Johnson, of London, physician to King William IV., a man of great learning, and possessing a wide experience of human nature, calls them the protean, or many headed maladies.

Dr. Woodward, a physician of great discernment and quickness of judgment, Superintendent of a Lunatic Asylum in Massachusetts, seeing so many insane among the young, was first led to study the cause and make it known, by publishing a number of articles on the subject of masturbation in the young, in the Boston Medical Journal, about twenty-five years ago. In a report afterwards made to the Legislature of the State, he remarked, that over two-thirds of the inmates brought to the Asylum for the Insane, were from this cause alone. In a letter he says: 'For the last four years it has fallen to my lot to witness, examine, and mark the progress, from ten to twenty-five cases daily, who have been the victims of this debasing habit: and I aver that no cause whatever, which operates on the human system, prostrates all its energies—mental, moral, and physical—to an equal extent. I have seen more cases of idiocy from this cause alone, than from all the other causes of insanity. If insanity and idiocy do not result, other diseases, irremediable and hopeless, follow in its train, or such a degree of imbecility marks its ravages upon body and mind, as to destroy the happiness of life, and make existence itself wretched and miserable in the extreme.'

Since the above period the attention of many medical men, throughout the Union, has been excited to its importance; but the prevalence of the habit and its baleful consequences, are a thousand times greater than either the faculty or the community even think or conceive of.

If the question be asked, why have not physicians, being aware of this great evil, that is so undermining society, used their influence to impart this knowledge to parents? This very important question can be very readily and conclusively answered. In nearly all cases, where he is consulted to prescribe for the disasters already manifested in the victim, and he has every reason to suspect the true cause, if he charges the patient with the vice, he is confronted not only with a positive denial of it by the patient, but is often heaped with abuse and calumny for daring to suspect such an immoral thing. By the female, he is directly charged of imputing wrong, of trespassing upon her reserved rights, and rudely trampling on the drapery of delicacy. In many instances, when we have been called upon to prescribe, knowing well, as we did, the cause for all the ills and suffering, we have judiciously and cautiously advised our opinion, and what might be expected as the ultimate consequence, if this practice was not abandoned; we have almost invariably provoked great abuse and censure. Indeed, a physician can hardly offend parents more, than in a conscientious manner acquaint them with what he has every reason to suspect is the cause of decline in a beloved son or daughter. We confess that we have suffered much, personally, in our pecuniary interests, from malicious influence, for endeavoring to perform our duty in imparting that information, which, had it been received with humility of heart, and heeded, would have been the means of saving many a fond child from an untimely grave, and murmurings and heart-choking regrets of the parents at the seeming cruel and mysterious ways of Providence.

These are some of the reasons why physicians are generally silent regarding the ravages of this wide-spread vice. Not one physician in one hundred, if he understands even the true causes of the disorders for which he is called upon to prescribe, will command the moral courage and independence to faithfully execute his duty, when, by doing so, it will destroy his chance for a livelihood, in an honest way at least."

Beards.

I have seen it stated somewhere that there is an intimate connection between the nerves and muscles of the face and eyes, and allowing the beard to grow strengthens the eye. It is said that surgeons in the French army have proved, by experiments in Africa, that soldiers wearing the beard are much less liable to diseases of the eye, and it is generally conceded that it is a protection from the diseases of the throat and lungs. It is asserted that in countries where it is the custom to wear the beard, the eye retains its lustre and brilliancy much longer. It may be argued that females do not suffer more than males from diseases of the eye, etc., but it must be admitted that they are less exposed to the elements. What did the Creator give the lords of creation a beard for? Certainly not to support the barbers. There is just as much sense in shaving the head as the chin.

How to go to Bed.

Hall's Journal of Health, in speaking on this subject, says: "In freezing winter time, do it in a hurry, if there is no fire in the room, and there ought not to be unless you are quite an invalid. But if a person is not in good health, it is best to undress by a good fire, warm and dry the feet well, draw on the stockings again, run into a room without a fire, jump into bed, bundle up, with head and ears under cover for a minute or more, until you feel a little warmth; then uncover your head, next draw off your stockings, straighten out, turn over on your right side, and go to sleep. If a sense of chilliness comes over you on getting into bed, it will always do you an injury; and its repetition increases the ill effects without having any tendency to 'harden' you. Nature ever abhors violence. We are never shocked into good health. Hard usage makes no garment last longer."

☞ Dr. Twitchell believed that sudden deaths and tobacco among men, were usually found together, and he sustained this opinion by an array of facts really conclusive.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..........$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..........1.00
For a single copy 3 months..........50
Five copies to one address for 6 months....4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months....8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months...15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months..22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to pre-pay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2 26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 226. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1860. VOL. X. NO. 19.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Lines.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem,
Thy heaven built walls I long to see,
To sit beside thy crystal stream,
And taste the fruit from life's fair tree.
To see the curse of sin removed,
And care and strife forever cease,
To dwell in you bright mansions, where
Messiah reigns, the Prince of peace.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem,
Who can portray thee as thou art?
Wrought by a Savior's hand divine,
Awaiting now the pure in heart.
Descend, and let thy glories shine,
Thy weary children long for thee,
To rise triumphant o'er the tomb, –
Enrobed in immortality.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem,
Thou city of my God and King,
When shall I see thy pearly gates,
And hear the blood-washed millions sing?
Thy precious Zion waits for thee,
And cry, "O Lord, how long, how long
Ere thou shalt make thy glories known,
And usher in the gladsome morn?"

S. Lizzie Baker.

For the Crisis.

"The Beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

BY J. MCCAMMON.

"The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."—Rev. 17: 8.

(Continued.)

Turn again to the woman before whom the dragon stood. She brought forth a male child who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron. All nations here would simply imply the Roman Empire; for it was a common expression, both in sacred writ and by the Romans themselves, to express the Roman empire by the whole world, all the earth, etc., signifying that their empire was an universal empire. The apostle then goes on to state that the woman brought forth a male child, and that he was caught up to God and his throne.

As we have previously shown, heaven in the common acceptation of the word would not apply here; but as all thrones exist by God's permission, we believe this to be no other than the throne of the Cæsars, and for reasons subsequently shown. Historians tell us that towards the close of the third century, Constantius Clorus, the father of Constantine the Great, renounced the Pagan superstition showing great favors to the Christians. Now the Roman Pagan priesthood, as they began to see their power decline and Christians were advanced to posts of honor and preferment, and knowing that Constantine would succeed his father, various measures were tried, with the hope of having him destroyed. For this purpose dangerous expeditions were undertaken, of which he was chosen leader; but by his skill and management he always came off victorious. Seeing themselves defeated in their nefarious designs, they prevailed on Diocletian to commence another general persecution of the Christians, which lasted ten years; and for blood and cruelty surpassed all that preceded it. For it would seem that men and devils had united in order to blot christianity out of existence. How striking then are the figures of the apostle! Says Adam Clarke, "This child that the woman brought forth was Constantine the Great, and in emblematical language may be said to be a son of the church, a deliverer, one that was destined of God to deliver his people from the cruel pagan persecutions. Hence the figure—he was caught up to God and his throne. And it may be said that this figure had its literal fulfillment when Constantine was raised to the throne, and by his public announcement of his belief in the truths of christianity; which announcement was made in 312 of the Christian era. The story of his conversion, although well known to readers of history, may not be known to all. It is related on this wise: As he passed at the head of his army, he saw in the air a vison of a cross, and inscribed on it was this motto—BY THIS CONQUER. As to the truth or falsehood of this story, we are not able to decide; but certain it is, whether real or pretended, the superstitious veneration for the cross was greatly augmented; particularly as he made it an emblem on his banners to be carried in front of his armies. The rise of Constantine, at this time, to the Imperial dignity, put an end to this last and general persecution of the Christians under Diocletian. And by his making Christianity the established religion of the empire, he put an end to any further persecution; but at the same time paved the way for that monstrous inundation of error and superstition, which immediately began to take place. This was but a new impetus to that tide of iniquity that the apostle said had already commenced even in his day; and as we are brought to believe, received one of its strongest impulses in the third century, by adopting into the Christian system a mixture of Platonic philosophy; and by their abstract speculations concerning the incomprehensible ways of God. They adopted Plato's maxim, that the Divine nature was diffused through all human souls (commonly known by the immortality of the soul), and has ever since been the foundation principle upon which infidelity has built its mightiest fabrics, in the form of Universalism, Spiritualism, and every other ism by which the world has been cursed, or Satan been enabled to build up his kingdom.

Now might be seen the fulfillment of the sixth verse—the woman fleeing into the wilderness, to her place; for how could the bride of Christ remain amidst such a tide of corruption? Our limits will not permit more than a passing remark as to her place, or the wilderness to which she fled. It is a well attested fact, that, through all the dark ages, a little church existed bearing the marks of Christ—that all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Not only in the Welsh mountains and the valleys of Piedmont; but even on the snow-capped Alps; where we must leave her and take up the next figure, for there was war in heaven, Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not, neither was there any place found for them in heaven.

Scarcely had Christianity attained the zenith of her worldly prosperity, than the hydra-headed monster again stood forth in the form of Julian the Apostate. Having apostatized from Christ, he undertook to give the lie to what Christ had said, by rebuilding Jerusalem, and again establishing the heathen Pagan form of worship. Thus beautifully is the figure of the apostle brought out—a war in heaven. Constantine the Great with his armies, personating Michael and his angels; Julian the Apostate on the other hand; the dragon, the old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, fully represented in the person of Julian and his deadly hatred of Christ. But his every plan was frustrated, he himself slain in battle; and it is said as he fell, catching some of the blood from his wounds, he cast it towards heaven saying, "Galilean, thou hast conquered!" Thus the dragon and his angels were cast out of heaven to the earth; representing the priesthood of the Roman empire; or, as is said in the fourth verse, his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven and threw them to the earth. Now as the tail is the lattermost part of any animal, and the part presented to an enemy as they turn to flee; so the fulfillment of this figure may be clearly seen in the downfall of Julian the Apostate; for as he fell there fell with him the ministers or priests of Pagan Rome, represented by one third of the stars of heaven. As the Jews were one part, the Christians another, the heathens are very properly denominated a third part. But it is said he drew them with his tail, they having connected their fortunes with him, as their only hope of sustaining themselves in the heaven of their former greatness; so as he the dragon fell, they fell with him; for as the last act of his life was to bid defiance to the God of heaven, so the infamy that must forever blast him will rest on them also.

How simple then must it appear to all minds of any discernment, the taking of this highly figurative language and using it in a literal sense to prove that the Devil was once an angel in heaven; doing this by connecting with it another passage, the angels that kept not their first estate. Now if there were any angels that kept not their first estate, it is a self-evident fact that at some time they must have been in a state of probation. How then does it appear to the intelligent mind? If there was ever war in heaven, there may be again; and if there was ever a time that the archangel Michael had to grapple with the prince of darkness he may again. If Michael hurled him from the battlements of heaven, then he should with one stroke of his mighty tail rend one third part of the stars of the firmament from their orbits, and send them whirling to the earth. When quite a little boy, I often wondered whether the stars were as big as people said, and how it was that our earth was not knocked to pieces, or what became of them all. These questions I must leave for learned doctors and those theologians who take these figures literally to prove a dogma, and then explain away the most simple part of God's word to sustain their theories.

The increased length of my subject admonishes me to bring this part of it to a close, which I shall do with an extract or two from history This great and persecuting power, which had been the scourge of nations and had made the sword drunk with their blood, was now about to receive the reward of its iniquity and at the hand of its enemies double for its sins. This was brought about in a measure by the hordes of barbarians that invaded the empire and settled themselves in various parts of it. Besides these, multitudes of wanderers, who did not appear to have any design of settling, infested the still remaining parts in the most dreadful manner. Of these, the Huns were the most barbarous and destructive. Their progress, and that of other barbarians, is thus elegantly described by an historian, who treats of these times. "Great bodies of armed men," says he, with their wives, and children, and slaves, and flocks, issued forth like regular colonies in quest of new settlements. New adventurers followed them. The lands which they deserted, were occupied by more remote tribes of barbarians. These in their turn pushed forward into more fertile countries, and like a torrent continually increasing, rolled on, and swept everything before them. Wherever the barbarians marched, their route was marked with blood. They ravagad or destroyed all around them. They made no distinction between what was sacred and what was profane. They respected no age, sex, or rank." The contemporary authors who beheld those scenes of desolation, are at a loss for words to describe the horror of it. The scourge of God, the destroyer of nations, are the epithets by which they distinguish the most noted of the barbarian leaders. How true in the decline of this mighty Empire are the words of the Savior verified—"They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Thus in 566, the Roman consuls, senate and ancient magistrates of that city, were entirely abolished, and the proud metropolis reduced to a level with other cities of Italy. Thus the very name of an Empire, once so mighty and powerful, failed in the West, and ten kingdoms sprung up from the fragments, which have been previously enumerated.

We think now we have pointed out the beast that was; and that the head that was wounded to death with the sword was the seventh or last head, denominated the Empire. And now if we have been able to point out the beast that was, we may with propriety say, and is not.

We will now proceed to chapter 13, where the Apostle is represented as standing on "the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. (marg. names.) And the beast which I saw was like a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast. And they worshiped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshiped the beast, saying, who is like the beast? who is able to make war with him? And there was given to him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. . . . . And it was given to him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them; and power was given him over kindreds, and tongues and nations."

Compare this blasphemous character of the beast, here given, with the character of the "little horn" in Daniel 7: 25,—"And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall oppress the saints of the Most High, ... and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time." Now mark the similitude. To the beast was given to continue forty and two months; to the little horn, time, times and the dividing of time. Now as all commentators agree that in prophetical numbers one month is thirty days, so forty and two months is twelve hundred and sixty days. By the same rule of interpretation, time is given to represent one year; times, two years, and the dividing of time half a year, or six months. As one year is twelve months, and two years is twenty-four months, these added together give us thirty-six months; the other six, making forty-two, which, when multiplied by thirty, gives 1260. The same number of days given to the one is given to the other; and so far as character for blasphemy and cruelty to the saints of God is concerned, they may emphatically be said to be one.

We shall now proceed to consider the beast in his separate capacity; and in doing this we will let the Scriptures be their own interpreters. Daniel was exceedingly anxious to know the meaning of the fourth beast, that was so terrible and exceedingly strong, and had great iron teeth; so that it devoured and broke in pieces, and stamped the residue with its feet. And it was different from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns. "I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things."—Dan. 7: 7, 8.

Daniel further says, "I came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things. . . . . The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon the earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break in pieces." What a perfect description we have here set forth in the figure of this beast of Pagan Rome, (the iron legs of the metallic image, see Dan. 2), as set forth in its dragonic form. But the angel continues: "And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings (kingdoms) that shall arise: and another shall arise after them; and he shall be different from the first, and he shall subdue three kings;" or, as it is said in verse 8, before which, or before this king or kingdom, three other kings, or kingdoms, were plucked up by the roots,—utterly exterminated, blotted out. We have been thus particular in setting forth this figure in the book of Daniel, in order to keep before the mind's eye of the reader, the perfect similitude there exists between this king represented by the little horn, and the beast we are about to consider; and, as we think, in our subsequent remarks to stamp them with indelible certainty as one and the same kingdom.

(To be concluded.)

Lecture on Heathen Testimonies to the Bible.

BY REV. THOMAS MUNNELL.

(Concluded.)

We shall dismiss Berosus, and call another witness, with this single thought: how could the Bible history be false when the same facts come down to us from sources so different? Did this writer make record of such things simply to please the hated Jews? Or were they not learned from the literature of his own nation in whose territory so many of them occurred? Or was he employed by the Jews to lift their history into respectability among the Gentiles? "Apelles Judæus credat, non ego." The only reasonable explanation of this remarkable agreement is, that these facts were noted down as they occurred, not only by the Jews, but by other nations who witnessed them, and were laid up in the temple archives for after generations to peruse.

Let us now hear what may be learned from Phenician history. As Phenicia is a country lying adjacent to the scenes of so many events recorded in the Bible, we would not expect her historians to fail of giving us some account of facts found also in the sacred annals. I will quote from section seventeenth of the first book of Josephus "Against Apion." He says: "There are records among the Tyrians (that is, Phenicians) that take in the history of many years, and these are public writings, and are kept with great exactness, and include accounts of the facts done among them, and such also as concern their transactions with other nations. Therein it was recorded that the temple was built by king Solomon, at Jerusalem, one hundred and forty-three years and eight months before the Tyrians built Carthage, and in their annals the building of our temple is related." Further on he says: "In order that these things may not depend upon his bare word, he will produce Dius, a Phenician, as a witness; one who is believed to have written the Phenician history after an accurate manner." Dius relates that "King Solomon sent problems to Hiram, king of Tyre, to be solved by him, and proposed that Hiram also should send back problems to him, and that whoever should fail to solve the other's problem should pay him money, and that when Hiram could not solve Solomon's problems, he had to pay some penalty for the failure."

Plain as this testimony to the facts—that Solomon was king in Jerusalem, that he built the temple there, and that he was cotemporary and intimate with Hiram, king of Tyre,—may be, the very erudite Josephus strengthens it by the evidence of Menander the Ephesian, who agrees substantially with Dius—making Hiram and Solomon cotemporaries, mentions their mutual exchange of problems, and likewise dates the building of Solomon's temple one hundred and forty-three years before the founding of Carthage by Dido and her company.

We will now introduce the brief evidence of the oldest writer, next to Moses, from whose history anything has descended to us, Sanchoniathon the Phenician, a native of the city of Tyre. His era is not easily determined, but it is rather certain that he flourished between the time of the Trojan War, 1184 years before Christ, and the reign of Gideon the Israelitish Judge, who lived 1250 years before Christ; so that we may perhaps put him down at about 1200 years ante Christum. He agrees with Moses, that the first of mortals were a pair; makes eleven generations from Adam to Mizraim, while Moses makes only one more. Mr. Horne says he "preserved a memorial of Gideon's transactions," and may have been Gideon's cotemporary. This is attested by Porphyry, of the fourth century, a most inveterate enemy of the whole Bible, who says that "Sanchoniathon derived many of the facts related in his history from the memoirs of Gideon."

Such is the voice from the land of old Tyre and Sidon. The sound indeed is faint, but the direction is unmistakable. And although her tones, if sounding alone down along the ages past, and unstrengthened by the voice of God, would fall but feebly upon our ears, still it is gratifying to hear them join in with the universal song that attests the veracity of God. These testimonies were taken, observe, from the national records of Phenicia, were kept with great care, and embrace a period of many years. True, the entire works from which these things were learned have not come down to us, for we know that vast numbers of ancient histories of the earliest authors were lost in the burning of the 700,000 volumes in the Alexandrian library by the Saracens in the year of our Lord six hundred and forty-two. Still, fragments of those works are preserved to us by Josephus, Philo, the Jew, Eusebius, and many other scribes the most credible, from which we are glad to learn that all the great nations around Palestine not only knew the Jewish people and history in general, but were acquainted with their kings and their religion, and often referred to, and sometimes quoted the very words of, the Bible.

Of Greek authors we will quote two or three whose testimonny is no less direct than those already cited.

Agatharchides, a native of Cnidus, Asia Minor, lived about 200 years before Christ, a cotemporary of Ptolemy the 6th. He says, "There are a people called Jews who dwell in a city, the strongest of all other cities, which the inhabitants call Jerusalem; they are accustomed to rest on every seventh day, on which times they make no use of their arms, nor meddle with their husbandry, nor take care of any affairs of life, but spread out their hands in their holy places and pray until evening." Agatharchides could have had no religious motives in view in making these statements—that the Jews kept the Sabbath, abstained from work and prayed in the temple—for he was not a Jew, nor is there any evidence that he believed a word of their religion, and therefore it comes to us as a simple matter of truthful record.

Again; Diodorus Siculus, another Greek historian, was a native of Sicily, but spent most of his life in Rome during the reigns of Julius Cæsar and Augustus Cæsar. He brought down the history of the world from the very earliest ages, exploring as well as he could the fabulous, hazy period before the age of Hector and Achilles. "He mentions the departure of Israel from Egypt, their advancing into Palestine and seizing upon a number of cities, particularly Jerusalem. He speaks of their worship, their tribes, their code of laws by which they were kept separate from other people; of the priesthood appointed in one family; of judges instead of kings being appointed to decide all controversies among them; of the superior authority being invested in the chief priests; and that Moses concluded the volume of his laws by claiming for them divine inspiration."

I might also quote Lucian, a Greek of the second century of the Christian era, and Hecateus, who was cotemporary with Daniel the prophet 580 years B. C., but their testimony would but repeat the substance of what has already been cited. Lucian's account of the deluge is nearly the same as that given by Berosus, making the Greeks and Chaldeans agree in their record of that interesting event.

And now we ask if the narrative of the Old Testament be not true, but all a forgery, how are we to account for the strange conduct of other historians? Had they entered into league with the Bible authors to crowd a lie, a most palpable lie, yea, a thousand lies upon the world for which they could expect no fee on earth, nor reward in heaven? The man that can believe such an enormous impossibility, has, oh! how much more to believe in his professed infidelity, than the Christian, who unhesitatingly receives the well-attested record of the Holy Spirit.

We shall have room only for another class of witnesses, the Egyptian writers; one of whom, Manetho, a cotemporary of Ptolemy Philadelphus, who flourished about 400 years before Christ, promised to "interpret the history of Egypt out of their sacred writings," and of course had access, like the Chaldean and Phenician historians, to the temple records, which gave him every opportunity to learn whatever might be known of Egyptian antiquities. And surely, Egypt, the land where Jacob died, where Moses was born, where Joseph laid down his bones to rest awhile, the land of Israelitish bondage for 215 years, ought to know something of the early history of that marvelous people. Manetho informs us in the most explicit language, that the Jews "had come into Egypt" and that they "went out of that country afterward, and settled in that country which is now called Judea, and there built Jerusalem and its temple." He further states that their leader was a priest, whose name at first was Osarsiph, "but when he was gone over to these people his name was changed and he was called Moses;" and that this Moses made laws for his people which were "mainly opposite to the customs of the Egyptians."

Even Apion, the Egyptian grammarian, who lived in the first century, Anno Domini, and who wrote on the antiquities of the Jews, against whose calumnies Josephus launched the weight of his very learned two books "Against Apion," even this man can not forbear to say that "Moses went up into a mountain that lay between Egypt and Arabia, which was called Sinai, and was concealed there forty days, and that when he came down from thence he gave laws to the Jews."

This catalogue of the names of heathen authors shall now be concluded, after that we shall have cited a single passage from one Lysimmachus, whom Josephus quotes, in which he describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt to Jerusalem. When speaking of their exodus from Egypt, he remarks, "There was one Moses who advised them that they should venture on a journey, and go along one way till they should come to a place fit for habitation," that the rest "commended what he had said with one consent, and did what they resolved on and so traveled over the desert. But that the difficulties of the journey being over, they came into the land which is called Judea, and there they built a city and dwelt therein, and called it Hierosolyma," which is the Latin name for Jerusalem.

If it were thought necessary, many other names might be cited in addition to those already quoted, testifying to these and other facts of Bible history; such, for instance, as the account of Lot's wife being turned into a pillar of salt. Josephus said that he had seen that singular monument. His words are: "For I have seen it, and it remains to this day." That it was standing at that time is also declared by Clement of Rome, a cotemporary of Josephus; and even Irenæus of the second century, offered a supposition as to how it came to last so long with its members all entire. It is true, these three writers were not heathen; Josephus was a Jew, and the other two were Christian bishops—Clement of Rome, and Irenæus of Lyons—but no man in his right mind would affirm such a thing, mid thousands of argus-eyed enemies, if he knew at the time the assertion to be untenable.

We must not omit to mention an inscription found upon a column in Phenicia which Procopius, an oriental historian of the sixth century after Christ, of great learning and reliability, has translated into Greek. It is briefly expressed in these words: "We are they who flee from Joshua the robber, the son of Nave," or Nun. A similar translation of the same was made by Suidas, a writer of the tenth century. It runs thus—"We are the Canaanites whom Joshua the robber expelled." This column is still to be seen, and has been recently visited and retranslated by Dr. Barclay, missionary to Jerusalem. I may not be too credulous to suppose this inscription to have been engraved on the column soon after Joshua entered Judea and drove out its inhabitants.

It were a long task to put down all that has been said outside the Bible concerning the Jewish religion and people. Even to give a list of the names of such writers as bear us witness in this matter would savor much more of pedantry than of learning, were it not not that Josephus himself is responsible for so many of them. Beside all that have been named he adds the following whose writings at this time were well known to the learned world; viz: Hesiod, Hellanicus, Acusilous, [illegible], [illegible], Theophilus, Theodotus, [illegible], Aristophanes, Hermogenes, [illegible], Eupolemus, Demetrius, Phalerus, and many others. And could we quote them all, it would but repeat our assurances of the truth of Sacred History. We confess that while our faith does not primarily depend upon such authorities, we are glad to see the mouth of opposition stopped by their foreign records of many Bible truths. If the Bible were entirely lost to the world, all the leading facts it contains might be gathered from profane historians; such as the creation of the world, Paradise, the first pair, the fall of man, the serpent, the observance of the Sabbath, the longevity of the Antediluvians; the number of generations between Adam and Noah, and from Noah to Abraham, the flood, the ark, the few saved, Mt. Ararat, the dispersion, the destruction of Sodom, Lot's wife, Abraham's history, his numerous posterity, their descent into Egypt, their departure therefrom, that Moses was their leader, his forty days in the mount, his flight into Arabia, his subsequent marriage, the journeyings through the wilderness, their wars with the nations, the conquest of Judea, the building of Jerusalem, the Judges of Israel, that Solomon was cotemporary with Hiram, that he built the temple, that he was a very wise man, that Nebuchadnezzar subdued Jerusalem, that he burned down the temple, carried the Jews into Babylon, that they endured seventy years' captivity, and so on. Who then would hazard his reputation as a scholar in denying that the Bible has the concurrent testimony of all the nations adjacent to Judea? To discredit the Bible history would destroy all ancient literature, history and science, all of which speak out from their profoundest depths for God and for this Book. The tongues of men and of angels, of heaven and earth, of friends and foes unite to speak it all divine. This Sacred Volume bids the lost traveler to come and walk by its light. It points the weary soul to Him who has promised everlasting rest. It pours in the light of Eternity upon the darkened eyeballs of the blind, while music sweeter and richer than angel ever sang rolls along the ears of sinners dead, and bids them hope in heaven. It comes to preach deliverance to the captives, to bind up the broken heart, to quench our griefs and to cause the sobbing child of earth to dry up its tears in the bosom of its God. It calms the otherwise tumultuous breast of the dying, it supports the tearful, mourning orphan bereft of its best and only earthly friend, and inspires the hope that soon they'll meet again. It commends us all to God and to the Word of his grace, which is able to build us up and give us an inheritance among the sanctified. "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass; the grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away, but the Word of the Lord endureth forever."

"O may these heavenly pages be
Our ever dear delight,
And still new beauties may we see,
And still increasing light."

For the Crisis.

Theological Difficulties Contrasted.

The doctrines of the sleep of the dead till the resurrection, and the destruction of the wicked after the judgment of the great day, have, I think, been fully and clearly proved to the satisfaction of every unprejudiced mind, that has carefully and prayerfully examined the subject.

Great stress is laid by those who advocate the popular side of this controversy, on the evil tendency of the reception of the doctrines they oppose so perseveringly. I am not solicitous about consequences, leaving them in the hands of Him who ordereth all things right; it is enough for me to believe, love, and obey the truth. Nevertheless, I feel perfectly willing to weigh the consequences on both sides, and let the people judge on which side the greatest danger lies to the cause of true and vital religion. I wish to state both sides as fairly as I can without argument, and let each one judge for themselves on which side the greatest danger lies.

Those who advocate the popular theology, object to these views because, 1st. They split up and divide the churches, and create hard feelings amongst professing christians and are so far, injurious to the cause of true religion. 2d. They multiply sects and parties, and cause infidelity to triumph, when the house of God is divided against itself. 3d. They break up old established usages, that have been cherished for many ages, and engender a love of novelty and a desire to remove ancient landmarks. 4th. They create a prejudice against great and good men of former times, who have been burning and shining lights in their day and generation. [illegible]

They render it more difficult to convince the ungodly of the necessity of repentance and faith in Christ, by removing the terrors of endless torment, that are supposed necessary to drive the sinner to religion, as the [illegible] 6th. They make the thought of death painful and revolting even to the christian; making death an enemy, instead of a friend; the king of terrors, instead of a messenger of peace.

I believe I have mentioned all the principal objections that are usually made against the doctrines in question; and although I think most of them have no real weight, I am willing to give them all the influence they are justly entitled to.

I come now to notice the objections to the popular side of the subject; namely, the conscious state of the dead, and the endless torment of the wicked.

1st. These doctrines are contrary to the express and oft repeated declarations of God's word, in its literal and grammatical sense; such as the soul that sinneth, it shall die; and the dead know not anything, etc.

2d. They make it necessary to resort to a spiritual and mystical interpretation of Scripture, and thus render it difficult for common people to understand; and open a wide door for the grossest errors, and the flights of the wildest imagination.

3d. The doctrine of the immortality of the soul, though nowhere found in the Bible, is the foundation stone of nearly all the systems of false religion, ever propagated in the world, Paganism, Mohammedanism, Popery, Universalism, Spiritualism, and all the Chinese, Indian, and Egyptian systems of idolatry. If man is mortal, and dependent on a resurrection from the dead, as the only hope of a future life, as the Bible plainly declares, all these false systems fall to the ground, to rise no more.

4th. If men are rewarded and punished at death, the reality of a judgment to come, and a resurrection from the dead, are things of little importance; although in the Scriptures they are made of vital interest in all the preaching of Christ and the apostles.

5th. The endless torment of the wicked is so revolting to the best and holiest feelings of humanity, that thousands have embraced Universalism, and Infidelity, as a miserable refuge from the horrible dogma of heathen superstition and Popish cruelty.

6th. This doctrine degrades the character of God, and represents him as the most cruel being in the universe, keeping multitudes of the creatures he has made in endless torment, and endless sin, when he could, by the word of his power, at any moment put an end to their sin and misery, by blotting them out of existence, as unworthy of a place in his wide domain.

7th. If sin and woe are eternal, then the time can never come when all things shall be restored to the beauty and glory of the first creation; and sin, death, pain, and sorrow shall be known no more.

8th. If death is the gate of endless life to the christian, then Christ is robbed of his crown, and we are no longer indebted to him as the author and giver of eternal life. Satan spoke the truth, when he told our first parents, ye shall not surely die. Is not this a fearful dilemma? Let God be true, if every man, and every devil, is proved a liar.

9th. The popular idea of the believer going to heaven at death, is calculated to draw away the mind from the promised kingdom of Christ, and his speedy coming in power and glory to reign on the earth—and thus make the world and the church utterly unprepared for that great and terrible day of the Lord, so that it will overtake them as a thief, and they shall not escape.

These are only a few of the difficulties in the way of the popular theology of the day. I leave them for the consideration of every candid mind. Let us weigh the whole matter in the scales of truth and justice; prove all things, and hold fast that which is good. J. Parry.

Features of the Revival.

At Glasgow, Rev. Mr. Simpson of Portrush stated some of the general features of the revival. Some of the most abandoned drunkards had been reclaimed; and several of the yearly festivals, instead of being accompanied by the usual rioting and drunkenness, had been celebrated by religious exercises. He stated that the largest distillery in the north of Ireland, which produced 1,200,000 gallons a year, is now to be sold; the proprietors say that if is not sold the concern will be broken up. The reduction of crime is very evident. In July last, the magistrate for the Portrush district, who had been for seventeen years on the bench, declared, for the first time during that period, that he had no criminal cases before him. For three successive months, the justices on the bench at Ballymena, with a population of 10,000 or 12,000, had not a single case of crime before them. There is a better observance of the Sabbath; and, in a district where the people were formerly in the habit of spending the Sabbath in gossiping and frolic, they have now reverence for the day of rest, and there is not a house in the district in which the worship of God is not regularly performed. The attendance on divine ordinances is much better than formerly. Mr. Simpson's own church, capable of holding 800 persons, requires to be made twice the size, chiefly for the accommodation of farm servants—a class of people who before never thought of attending the church. As to Bible circulation, at the end of the first week of the awakening at Coleraine, there was but one Bible left at the depository.

The World's Crisis.
BOSTON, JANUARY 11, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 3.

We have been around with our dear Brother B. and examined carefully every nook and corner of the seven apartments of Division No. I. of "Doubting Castle," and found no real cause for doubts. The position of our Bro. reminds us of our boyhood days; when we feared to retire at night lest some one might be in a closet or under the bed to harm us. When we had looked all about, and became satisfied no one was there, and that our fears were groundless, then we could lie down and quietly rest. Our prayer is, that Bro. B. may become as well satisfied that there is nothing in "Doubting Castle" to prove the consciousness of the human spirit after death.

We now come to Division No. II., Sec. 8. We let our Bro. Burnham describe the appearance of things as presented to him in this Division. He says:—

"The chosen and instructed people of God, the Jews, with the single exception of the sect of the Sadducees, as a nation, held the doctrine of the conscious being of the human spirit after death. This fact is abundantly declared to Josephus, Philo, the Jewish writers generally, and the Bible. (8.) Either that nation held this doctrine before they went into Chaldean captivity, or they learned it in or subsequent to their captivity. If they held it before, why did they hold it? If they learned it in Egypt, where they remained so long, why did not their leader correct their notions, if wrong, when they departed from Egypt, or at some subsequent period? If they obtained the doctrine in their Chaldean captivity, why, if it was a false notion, did not their prophets and the Son of God, when preaching among them, set them right?"

We will now begin to inspect carefully the apartments of Div. II. We found, after our delivery from "Doubting Castle," that there was one striking peculiarity connected with the posters exhibited upon its walls; to wit, that many of them were only assertions. That is the case with the first one that meets our eye in the second division. It asserts that the Jews, as a nation, with the exception of the Sadducees, believed in the doctrine of the conscious existence of the spirit after death. It is further asserted that Josephus, Philo, the Jewish writers generally, and the Bible declare this fact.

If it had stated that Josephus and Philo who rejected the teachings of Christ, and other Jewish writers who in connection with their brethren had departed from the Lord, and embraced the doctrines of heathen philosophers, who taught that the spirit is conscious, facts would have sustained the assertion. It should be observed, however, that Josephus, when speaking of hades, does not say one word about the spirit, but the soul. And we would here remark for the benefit of all who may be so unfortunate as to be in "Doubting Castle" concerning the conscious state of the spirit, that the Hebrew and Greek words rendered soul and spirit, are never used interchangeably. The importance of this fact will be more apparent hereafter.

We return to the assertion again, and notice the closing statement, which is that the Bible teaches the same that Josephus and Philo taught concerning consciousness between death and the resurrection. When we read this, we were set all aback, for if this were true, the whole matter was forever settled; because we know there was no appeal from the Bible. Since our escape from "Doubting Castle," we can see how easily we might have let the glorious light of truth in upon that dark closet, sufficient to have made the falsity of that part of the assertion as apparent as that the Bible is true. This would have been accomplished if we had only used the light we obtained while examining the first seven apartments; but we now see it was the device of him who has the charge of those in "Doubting Castle," to keep them, if possible, from using any light they may have possessed, for the examination of any new statement, lest they detect its fallacy at once. It is now clear to us, that the arch Deceiver spared no efforts to make us look through glasses of his preparation, and view the object from his stand-point, and no other. Every pains was taken to absorb our attention in the one assertion under examination, each time, without any comparison with established facts. This seemed especially true in relation to the bold assertion that Josephus, Philo and the Bible were harmonious in teaching the conscious state of the spirit. But as soon as we began to compare the Bible with the writings of these men, it was perfectly clear that they were as directly opposed to each other as are truth and error. Josephus and Philo adopted the heathen philosophy, and taught that souls were conscious in sheol—hades—or the state of the dead; while the Bible declares there is no "device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom," in sheol. When we looked back to this clear light used to illuminate apartment No. 2, we saw that the point was forever settled, though a thousand Josephuses and Philos should declare the opposite; hence all the found posted in the eighth section of "Doubting Castle," was like the "baseless fabric of a vision," and proved nothing in favor of the conscious state of the spirit between death and the resurrection.

9. We will pass to the ninth section. Here we find it stated, the Jews either held this doctrine before they went into Chaldean captivity, or they learned it in or subsequent to that captivity. If they learned it before, in Egypt, while there captives, why did not their leader correct them, if wrong, when they departed from Egypt, or at some subsequent day?

When this attracted our eye, we said surely, why did not Moses correct them, if wrong? But when we came to call for the proof that a single Jew believed in the conscious state of the spirit between death and the resurrection, at the time they left Egyptian bondage, we found all the managers of "Doubting Castle" were unable to give the first scrap of evidence showing such a belief among the Jews. Hence, Moses had no occasion for any correction. And even supposing, contrary to all evidence, that the Egyptians, who, as Herodotus says, "were the first who asserted the doctrine that the soul is immortal," had begun to believe it at the time of the Hebrew captivity in Egypt, there was nothing in Moses' writings or Job's to favor any such belief. Gibbon, in Vol. I, pp. 530–531, truly says:—"The doctrine of the immortality of the soul is omitted in the law of Moses." We asked ourselves, why omitted, if true? When we looked at the fact that over two thousand and five hundred years had passed when the law was given to Moses on Mount Sinai; we inquired with an earnestness that made the "Doubting Castle" managers almost blush, "Why do you assert this doctrine in opposition to the Bible? Instead of giving an answer, they immediately conducted us to section nine, where we were shown a proposition well calculated to throw us into doubt again. This we shall consider in our next.

At this point of our journey, we became convinced that no effort would be spared on the part of those interested in sustaining "Doubting Castle," to keep us in it as long as possible; presenting to our minds every doubt of any weight, in the most plausible manner; but as we were fully satisfied that the Lord of glory would give us true light, if we adhered alone to his word, that would illumine all the dark, philosophical, metaphysical, exegetical, and theological windings of "Doubting Castle," we felt just like ransacking this vatican of error till every nook and corner was exposed. Pray for us, Bro. Edwin, that in the name of the Lord, we may have glorious success.

Prophetic Omens.

The moral, social, and political aspect of the world is rapidly changing, and omens are abundant to show more important revolutions are just at hand. Those must be truly asleep, who cannot discern from the signs of the times unmistakable evidence that the dispensation is near its end, and the everlasting kingdom of God about to be set up, and "stand forever." The chief reason, we think, why many good men and women do not see the bright tokens which show that the Coming One—the King of kings—is near, is because they neglect the study of prophecy. Peter says: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise." As the prophecy gives the light relative to coming events, he who neglects it, must as a necessary consequence walk in darkness, as a man would in a "dark place" who should take no light with him. He would not be able to see what was about him; all he could do would be to grope his way along utterly ignorant of surrounding objects. So it is with the man who neglects prophecy. While some see clearly, because they "take heed" unto the "sure word of prophecy;" others, by neglecting, or rejecting the same, are led to say, "all things continue as they were." While we are about entering upon the opening of some of the most sublime scenes foretold by the prophets, the anticipation of which is enough to arouse all the latent energies of those who see them rapidly advancing, almost ready to burst upon the world, like vivid lightning to the man wandering in Egyptian darkness; it is a sad sight that we behold around us. The masses are as careless as the Antediluvians the day before the commencement of the deluge; or the Sodomites when warned by Lot; and the Savior has said, "Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." If people were not indifferent to their dangerous position, and perfectly heedless of the approaching judgment, we should not have so strong reasons for believing that "the end of all things is at hand."

It is enough to make one's blood run chill, when we look over the world in its present state, so full of pride, hypocrisy, covetousness, dishonesty, oppression, licentiousness, murder, and every other species of wickedness, that evil men and demons can invent. This state of things is most clearly pointed out by the prophets. Says Joel, when speaking of the harvest, which Jesus assures us is at "the end of the world," "Put ye in the sickle; for the harvest is ripe; come, get you down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great." This statement is in harmony with the whole teaching of the Scriptures; hence, he who looks for better times before the coming of Jesus, might as well look for the rising sun in the west, or the Niagara to reverse its course.

The Discussion.

Our discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton at Seneca Falls, during five evenings, on the subject of the state of the dead and destruction of the wicked, we shall expect from the printer this week. We hope those who can will send cash with their orders. As the expense of reporting was very much less than that of the Boston discussion with Dr. Litch, the publisher will be able to retail them at 25 cts. single, $2.25 by the dozen. Postage 3 cts. Bound, 40 cents; $4.25 per dozen. For sale at this office, or by T. G. Newman, Seneca Falls, N. Y. Let the truth be scattered. Read and circulate.

The New Hymn Book.

This choice collection of music, got up with so much care and judgment, is now fairly before the public. We have much pleasure in stating that the labor attending its publication is appreciated, inasmuch as we cannot get the book fast enough out of the hands of the binders to supply the demand. We would also direct the attention of our friends to the gilded copies which are gems in excellence, and in beautiful finish. They make a handsome addition to any musical library, and are particularly adapted for birth-day and other presents. They come at one dollar each; but when a number is ordered, we would make a proportionate reduction.

Reviews.

Notwithstanding we have spoken plainly several times in relation to personal reviews, i. e., direct reviews of the writings of others, with pointed remarks calculated to wound the feelings of the one reviewed; stating that the regulations by which we are governed forbid the insertion of such articles in the Crisis; yet, now and then, we receive such for our columns. We suppose they have forgotten our rules. We ever feel sorry when such are received, because we like to accommodate all as far as we can; and again, we are sorry to have any spend their time to no avail.

All can see if we admit one controversial article, we let down the bars for all, and then our paper is diverted from its object. Others have a perfect right to admit any amount of controversy into their papers they may think best; but we are fully satisfied that it is not calculated to advance the highest interests of the church of Christ. We have watched the effect closely, and find the result uniform. If all would write kindly, the case would frequently be different.

We are satisfied that the most successful way to meet an opponent, is to show him something better. Hence we desire every one to present their own views in a plain manner, as they would if no one thought otherwise, and they were teaching on the given subject for the first time. And yet, while doing this, every point of an opponent may be successfully met, without wounding his feelings by any direct allusion to what he may have said or written. When this course is adopted, there is no occasion for reply, and all passes off pleasantly, and the truth is much more likely to be received.

If one brings me a new machine, to accomplish the same work as one already in my possession, wishing me to purchase his and lay mine aside, would it be wise in him to commence running down mine in every possible way? We should most certainly reject his, and him too. But on the contrary, should he say nothing directly against ours, but show the excellent qualities of his in all its improvements, would he not be much more likely to make a sale?

So in presenting truth. If we wish to have people embrace the "blessed hope," present it in all its beauty, harmony and simplicity, in the kindest possible manner, at the same time obeying it ourselves, and we shall see the greatest amount of good accomplished.

Developments.

We are entering stirring times. Dark forebodings are coming over many minds, while demons are laying plans to turn them from the true state of things, and the real coming events. Like counterfeiters, they endeavor to make error resemble truth as nearly as possible; and it is only when we apply the counterfeit detector—the Bible—that we discover the spurious. As the multitudes seldom look into the Bible, they are in a fit situation to be deluded by "the wiles of the Devil."

A few days since we were reading an editorial in the Spiritual Age, on "The church of the Future;" in which the editor remarks:—

"There is a wide-spread and universal belief among all classes and all religious sects, at the present day, that some wonderful developments are soon to be manifested to the world, which shall materially revolutionize the existing phases of Church, Society and State. The self-styled evangelical world is ever prying into the mysterious pages of the Apocalypse, seeking to discover the day and hour when the promised New Jerusalem shall descend out of Heaven, and abide among men. As to the manner of its descent, and the nature of the instrumentalities it will employ to draw within its glorious walls every son and daughter of God, they are profoundly and confessedly ignorant. They have no consistent theory or philosophy about it."

He goes on to say:—

"In a grosser and more material sense, the Second Adventists are looking for a similar manifestation. Yet, to our view, their ideas are far more reasonable, humanly speaking, than those of their evangelical brethren.

Spiritualists alone, as a whole, approximate in their views to the true significance of these universal and wide-spread opinions and beliefs among all intelligent searchers after spiritual enlightenment. But even they are groping about in the yet dim twilight which precedes the glorious sunrise which shall bathe the walls, the towers, the domes and palaces of the New Jerusalem in a flood of celestial and ineffable light. They see but the first faint streaks of that resplendent "morning red" which the first months of the coming year will display in the Eastern horizon."

After speaking of the "COMING MAN," who is to be their leader, and who will very soon manifest himself as such, the editor says:—

"Through him, we believe, is to be begun the great work of reconciling the world to God, in the true spiritual sense of that expression. Through him, as we believe, the Divine Wisdom intends to inaugurate the Great Harmonia, the true theory and practice of Religious, political and Social Life, ordained from the foundations of the world!"

We think he may well say, "This is strong language." But he further remarks, speaking of these sentiments:—

"We hesitate not to put them forth at this time, fully assured that every word we have here said will soon be verified."

He then says to his brethren in Spiritualism:—

"We tell you, Spiritualists, that upon the base of the doctrines there put forth, you shall yet see reared the grandest political structures the world ever saw."

This last paragraph shows the great object of the demons and their familiars, or dupes, is to establish a grand POLITICAL structure. We hope our readers will be careful to watch this feature of Spiritualism, in its forth-coming developments.

The writer further says:—

"The hour is not yet fully come when the writer of these lines deems it expedient or proper to reveal his name or that of him whom he believes to be the 'Coming Man,' to the world at large. That time is not, however, far distant. It may be reckoned by weeks instead of months or years. He knows that the full fruition of his hopes and sacrifices for years past is even now at hand. Only one link in the mighty chain of evidence is wanting—and that link is now at a white heat in the furnace of events. Every hour we are listening to hear the strokes of the ponderous hammer of Fate, forging and welding it into its eternal connection."

We trust the reader will not overlook the expression "THE COMING MAN," who is to do such wonders. More anon.

Editorial Notice.

A New Tract.—We have just received a new tract by S. W. Bishop, entitled The Time Appointed. It contains twenty-four closely printed pages, on the interesting subject of the Lord's speedy coming. His arguments are to show that the Lord of glory will come this year. Were we certain of this, no news could be more joyful to the faithful saint. The subject is treated in a candid manner.

Price for a single tract, 5 cts., and $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent. For sale at this office, and by C. W. Sargent, Concord, N. H., and Wm. F. Collier, Worcester, Mass.

The Great Controversy.

From Rev. Edward Winthrop, A. M., late Rector of St. Paul's Church, Norwalk, Ohio. Author of "The premium Essay on the characteristics and laws of Prophetic Symbols;" "Letters on Prophecy;" "Lectures on the Second Advent of Messiah," etc.

Maumee City, Ohio, June 29th, 1858.

Dear Sir:—Your letter and also your work on "The great Controversy between God and Man," which, through your kindness, were sent for me to Norwalk, have been forwarded to Maumee city where I now reside. . . . . I have read your work with much interest. It is written with great ability, and in a very vigorous and forcible style. On pp. 47–52 you have powerfully answered some of the old infidel cavils. I shall be glad if this work of yours has an extensive circulation: and if my humble name can, in any way, help to give it currency, you are quite welcome to use my recommendation. Many thanks to you for the Book and the letter that accompanied it. . . . .

Accept my thanks for your kindness, and believe me yours very truly in Christ Jesus, Edward Winthrop.

To H. L. Hastings.

Price of the book, post paid, 60 cts. For sale at this office, and by the publisher, H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

For the Crisis.

Bro. Grant:—There is, by some means, a mistake in the chorus of the Hymn published Jan. 4th—"Awake, ye saints." There should be five lines. It should read thus:—

Soon shall I rest at home,
And drink from the fountain of pleasure, etc.

S. A. W.

☞ "A contented mind is a continual feast." "All trouble to such a man," says Leighton, "is only like the rattling hailstones on the roof of the house to him who sits at a sumptuous feast within."

Our Tract Column.

Tract Fund for the West.

For the Crisis.

Bro. Hastings:—Enclosed you will find five dollars for the "Western Tract Fund." "May the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus that great Shepherd of the sheep through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight through Jesus Christ."

I would not require you to answer "needless questions," but would like to inquire if you have time and strength to preach "this gospel of the kingdom" to a community who have never heard it? Please say yes or no through the "Crisis" and oblige yours in Christian fellowship."

May be I can come by and by. Am very busy now. Pray about it, and write me your name, address, and the route you live on. I may pass that way. H. L. H.

Dec. 17, 1859.

Bro. Hastings:—I have just returned from Minnesota, after two years' travel among the people in that wild country. I have not shunned to try to show the people the shortness of time and the speedy coming of Christ to judge the world in righteousness. I have exhausted my store of living in showing kindness to the wild Indians of those vast prairies, who never heard of a God, a heaven, or any Savior; who roam like wild beasts. In the fear and love of God I tried to open my mouth in righteousness; and God blessed the words of truth to many a soul. I suffered much with hunger, thirst, heat and cold, often sleeping on the ground for a month at a time; sometimes tying myself into a tree lest the wolves should eat me up when asleep. I had the last of my clothes on my back when I came to Southville, where I now stop. I found a brother at home embracing infidelity. On taking up one of your papers, I saw that the poor could have the truth; and now I wish to have you send me the "Fate of Infidelity." I am in my fifty-third year, but, blessed be God, I am not tired of sounding the gospel trump of God.

I think if your Conference would send some of your preachers out to Minn., who would not fear death nor suffering, but be continually filled with the Holy Ghost, in a short time believers would outnumber any church in the wild western world. I volunteered to go out there. I took my meeting-house in the timber at Pineland. The people flocked around like hungry sheep to hear the word of life from what they termed the "old crazy man." King Jesus being my captain, they soon found my ship carried too many guns for theirs. The dry bones shook; the stout hearts melted; gainsayers trembled, and the profane were silent and left in a troubled mind. If you can send out your ministers into that country, think of what a harvest there is to gather and how few the laborers. Respectfully yours in the Lord.

For the Crisis.

Sailors' Tract.

[Letter from Bro. W. Stone.]

Bro. Cotton:—I have watched with anxiousness the success of your appeal in behalf of that class of men, "Out on the ocean all bounded they roam." I have wished I could at once see by generous contributions, your tracts in stereotype with reams of paper wet down, that in quantity would supply every seaman going out of all our ports, and also to leave at his home for perusal while absent, of the message of life, and particularly, as so many leave home never to see friends again in this life nor in any other. Oh! if they could but see the force of this great truth, would they not hasten with blind Bartimeus to Jesus the son of David, for light and life only through him! They were not forgotten when first we saw the light of a returning Savior to earth; many were the faithful friends of Jesus that had a package of books and tracts on board of every vessel bound out, the years '42 and '43 bear witness. The truth sounded out into the uttermost parts of the globe. Often is it that death, that grim monster, stares them in the face even in perfect health; "overboard" is the cry, and a large number are never aboard again, but sink to rise no more. Oh! the doctrine of Life, how sweet a morsel at that moment, could they but have the arm of Jesus to lean upon for future life, then if they lost it they would find it again at the resurrection morning. "The sea gave up the dead which were in it." Often in my mind's eye I see a host from the sea, as also from the land, coming to the marriage of the Lamb, all gloriously arrayed in that day, ushered in with music from Gabriel's trumpet, with the splendid habiliments of Him who is to be crowned with a glorious crown. Shall we be there? I must not miss of it. Come, friends of Jesus, you that have more than you need, just lend to the Lord for Bro. Cotton's use, in timely effort for the class above named.

Boston, Jan. 2, 1860.

☞ Cold prayers are as arrows without heads, as swords without edges, as birds without wings; they pierce not, they cut not, they fly not, up to heaven. Cold prayers always freeze before they reach heaven.

For the Crisis.

How Christian got out of "Doubting Castle."

In my last article I traced the way of Christian from his departure from the city of Destruction unto his incarceration in the stronghold of Giant Despair. Now I have a word to say before I go on further in this history, which I mean to be "a kind of a sort of a salve" to any one who feeling raw upon certain spots may apply the "healing unction" of an entire denial of anything hostile to any individual who may have been surprised by the giant. I did not compose the Allegory; and when one says that he is in the "Castle," thereby making use of the simile, he ought not to find fault with any person who, to warn others of a like fate, endeavors to point out the land marks which bound the paths which lead to the Eternal City.

If I make use of a metaphor to illustrate my position, it should be done advisedly, so that any one may follow it up without giving me pain, other than that which that position brings. John Bunyan wrote the Pilgrim's Progress, not I; and if I said that I was in "Doubting Castle," what blame could I justly attach to one who chose to tell the "why and wherefore" I was there? Even into "Doubting Castle" there was a legitimate way; if a legitimate way can lead into an unlawful place; and had Christian been pursuing his way, he never should have been caught napping upon the monster's grounds.

Again, I do not think that in this case Christian was altogether a backslider. His face and purpose were towards heaven. He had no desire to turn back upon the road; but rather, having had a few days "easy time" vouchsafed him, after so much of an untoward way, he shrank from the rugged steep, and fell, but NOT ——"like Lucifer

Never to hope again."

Having said thus much, I shall go on to tell how the poor fellows made their escape.

Their captor mercilessly drove them before him, and locked them up in a dark and loathsome dungeon, whose stench contrasted sadly with the wholesome air which they had breathed in every portion of their way. And to add to their sufferings, they were permitted to remain four days in the cell without food, drink or light; and beside, Christian had a double share of sorrow when he reflected that it was "through his unadvised counsel that they were brought into this distress." But this was not the worst; for "Despair," incited by his wife "Diffidence," fell upon them, and gave them such a cudgelling that they almost wished they had never been born. Dreadful indeed were their feelings, while lying upon the damp floor of their cell; they writhed under the cruel beating of their jailor. Gladly would they now have taken the worst part of the narrow way, so that they might have been at liberty. But the black, dark, dripping walls surrounded them, and their moaning sounded hollowly among the tomb-like vaults of their doleful prison.

Christian would perhaps have given himself up to the evil counsels of the Giant, who tauntingly recommended self-destruction as a remedy for their distress, had not Hopeful combatted the evil, by saying, 'The Lord of the country to which we are bound hath said, 'Thou shalt do no murder—for no murderer has eternal life.'" "Besides," continued Hopeful, "others, as far as I can understand, have been taken by him (Despair) as well as we, and yet have escaped out of his hands. Who knows but that God who made the world may cause that Giant Despair may die; or that some time or another may forget to lock us in, or take a fit, so that we may make a run for it? Let us be patient, Bro. Christian, and endure awhile; but let us not be our own murderers." This encouraged Christian to fortitude, even when a second beating caused him to swoon away.

Thus they continued till Saturday night, which was passed in prayer. Just as Sunday morning began to break, Christian suddenly exclaimed—"What a fool am I, thus to lie in a noisome dungeon when I may as well walk at liberty! Here is a key called Promise, lying hid in my bosom, which will unlock every door in this dreadful castle!" And sure enough, obedient to its touch, the heavy bolts flew back, and the triple lines of barriers the pilgrims passed, and soon were again upon the King's highway and singing as they went,

"Out of the way we went, and then we found
What 'twas to tread upon forbidden ground;
And let them that come after have a care,
Lest heedlessness makes them as we to fare;
Lest they for trespassing his prisoners are,
Whose Castle's Doubting, and whose name's Despair."

At the Eighth stage, the eyes of the Pilgrims were gladdened by a sight of the Delectable Mountains, crowned to the top with the vine and the olive, the fruit of which they partook, and drank from,—bathed themselves in the water which babbled from a thousand springs; and they talked to the shepherds who fed the flocks upon the mountain side, which were so dear unto the Lord of the Hill that he "gave his life for the sheep."

Ninth stage. Down from the mountain go the pilgrims; and in their way they meet Ignorance and other hindrances, including "Turn-away" from the town of Apostasy; and many others who beset the way of the heaven-bound pilgrim. Gladly would I dwell upon every trial and temptation which Christian and Hopeful overcame, for they were strong now, and my heart goes with them even unto the deep, dark river of inevitable death.

Tenth and last stage. And now I must diverge from the track which I have followed so far; and permit the heavy surge of the flood to close for a time over the buried form of the dead Christian, who must in unconsciousness remain, till the sea shall give up her dead. Rest, weary one, rest; for no life shalt thou have till the Great Vivifier stoops breathing over the sacred graves of the buried saints, and calls them into undying life, and seals his chosen ones with the seal of immortality.

JNO. F. COTTON.

For the Crisis.

Our Statistical Report.

PREPARED BY DANIEL T. TAYLOR.

No. 1.

My work. I. For some years past I have been desirous of knowing something definite in relation to the statistics of what is called Adventism in America: what the number of ministers, the number of laymembers in the sect, their relative distribution in the several States, the religious organs and their circulation, the various shades of millenarian belief, the prevalent literature, the proportion that the believers in the view of a literal second death bore to the entire body, etc., together with all other statistics bearing on the condition and prosperity of the whole denomination. But how should information be gained and the desire be accomplished? There was no preceding census ever made; no data affording any reliable basis. No attention has ever been paid to our statistics; nobody knew whether we had two hundred preachers or a thousand. Whether there were ten thousand believers or half a million. And nobody seemed to care about knowing. And I should meet with opposition, for though we were a sect of the age of a quarter of a century, yet statistics among us (except it be of some local churches, etc.,) was a novelty, and some were conscientiously scrupulous, and did not believe in "numbering Israel." Nevertheless, believing that there is a moral power in statistics, and seeing no valid reason why we should not know how many clergymen there are among us, as well as the Methodist know how many there are among them, and having no sinister or mean motive in view—as some have supposed—but God's glory instead, about one year ago I began my work. And the work of collecting is done, though very imperfectly, for reasons I shall name, and I now beg leave to (not write a book but to simply) present my report.

II. The labor involved. This was by no means inconsiderable. It has occasioned much writing and arranging. First, I sent out about fifty letters of inquiry to all the Northern, Middle, and Western States, with Canada, the principal object being to ascertain the names and place of residence of the ministers. This being done as far as possible to begin with, some printed circulars were obtained, to the number of three hundred; and these, asking the needful information in regard to names, numbers and views, were despatched to every part of the country, with the request that each person who received them or read them, should return the same, briefly and clearly answered to the best of his ability. Cards of notice were published in the Advent Herald—the Expositor, the World's Crisis and Advent Review. And the twelve questions desiring answers were also printed in several of the foregoing papers. There is little room to doubt the undertaking was fairly and fully, as need be, got before the ministry, as also the churches. To these I added twenty more letters, making in all some seventy letters, and three hundred circulars sent out by myself, a few more being sent from the Crisis Office at Boston. Making allowance for the non-reception of some, the change of post-office of others, and the preferred silence of a third party, it seemed these were sufficient to ascertain the number of preachers in the land who passed as so-called Adventists. So we hoped. And in my mountain retreat at Wardsboro, Vt., I for four months awaited replies. But it was soon apparent—as I had about concluded before—from the tardiness with which replies came in, and the tenor of some letters sent, that I had undertaken a no small task, and was literally "in pursuit of knowledge under difficulties." In no captious spirit, but as a faithful historian and reporter of the numerical strength of the general body at large, I shall frankly state those difficulties, and the various hindrances to my task.

III. The hindrances. These, so far as completing my work was concerned, were varying, [illegible], and various. Our elders were obviously not used to the thing. Some would require me to write twice, or even thrice, when once was sufficient. Some delayed long from carelessness; others from groundless scruples, cherished without good reason. Some said they did not believe in numbering Israel, and hinted that some curse would follow. Such overlook the fact that the first infant church this side the cross was numbered, and as their [illegible] and one [illegible] persons were thus numbered by Luke, it looks fairly like an enrollment, Acts 1: 15. And besides, these same brethren organize and enroll local churches,—just as it should be. Israel knew they had seventy elders: Christ knew he had twelve apostles. Why not you and I know how many Advent ministers there are in America? Proceeding, some suspected my motives, and either looked askance at me—with their pen—or declared they could see no good in the enterprise. Others—a few—boldly expressed their convictions that I was up to some secret mischief, and was only a clandestine agent for some clique or party, whose object was to do great injury to truth and the general body; several letters being required to disabuse their minds, and so obtain the information sought for. But what was still worse, many refused to reply at all but maintained "a masterly inactivity." Some said they had no time (!) to reply. One circular fell into the hands of a poor sinner in Kingston, C. W., and I paid ten cents postage for a batch of scurrility and blackguardism which he sent me. A North Carolinian M. D. very "respectfully" and with a "dear sir" to soften the deed, returned my little sheet with blanks for answers. Such are some of the perils of census-taking! Gentle reader, do not wonder that I halted midway in my task. But a goodly number returned the circulars with a word of encouragement and a faithful reply, giving me what information I am able to present in these articles. These have my thanks—the others my prayers that they will prove better aids to the census-taker who shall be my successor. Not a few of the brethren seemed to imagine that I of course knew every preacher in the state, and so it was no use to be particular and tell me. How should I know?

Our people too little know and understand each other. One editor refused to give the number of his subscribers for fear of some evil to his cause; another refused to answer when asked; why, we know not. In reply to my twelfth question, one wrote in capital letters "No." Twelve letters were never answered, though I have good reason to think they were received. And of the three hundred circulars sent out to eighteen different states, besides Canada and Nova Scotia, only one hundred and eighty-four were returned or answered, leaving over one hundred never again heard from. These things very naturally led to discouragement, and my project was abandoned while necessarily incomplete. But why state these things of the elders? I answer; as an apology for my want of success. Besides, some one may come after me wishing to complete my work, and furnish a system of reliable statistics in this direction. He will here be able to perceive some of the hindrances in the way, and attempt, perhaps more skillfully than I, to obviate them. And the elders will learn what is necessary to success in such a work, and do better at another time. A prompt reply, with a proper interest in the matter, would, if fully presented in every case, have furnished all needful material to accomplish the wished for result. Perhaps I did not sufficiently explain.

I am conscious of not asking enough questions. I should have added six more to the twelve. Of course I could not reply to all letters which seemed to be suspicious of my intentions. I had enough to do in receiving and answering, on the average, twenty-five letters per month—my regular average for five years past—of other business and friendship character, besides writing two or three books, and trying to keep body and spirit together, clothed and fed, while preaching but eight Sundays in a year, and paying the doctor meanwhile $60. And this is my apology for not replying to other good brethren who wrote me kindly in aid and for counsel.

Correspondence.

From Bro. C. F. Sweet.

[Copied by his request, from the Expositor.]

BRO. MARSH:—As ever I am still in pursuit of life eternal, by a patient continuance in well doing. Our second quarterly meeting passed off at Springwater last month in a very desirable manner; considering the stormy and inclement weather, there was a good attendance, as many as could well be seated nearly all the time during the meeting. Eight ministers were in attendance; two of them were elders of the Christian denomination; they took part in the services, and seemed well pleased with the meeting.

Bro. Ambrose Eggleston was ordained to the eldership on Sunday, at the close of the morning services, and the following order was observed. Elder G. A. Hendrick preached on the occasion, a discourse from the words of Paul to Timothy (2 Tim. 4: 2,) "preach the word." Elder C. Newell made the ordination prayer; Elder Welton gave the right hand of fellowship, the writer gave the charge, and Elder Guthrie the benediction.

On the whole it was a good time. Quite a large number partook of the sacred elements in memory of their dying Lord, and rejoiced, that soon the last sacrament will be celebrated at the marriage supper of the Lamb. O my dear brethren and sisters, let us all so live in the Spirit, and walk in the Spirit, that we may be there to participate in the glory of the blessed scene that shall then gladden every heart permitted to enjoy the same.

After leaving Springwater, I spent a Sunday at Honeoye, and had a very good hearing. To God be all the praise and glory forever. After leaving Honeoye, I directed my steps to Albion, and found my family well. I found also three letters from Seneca Falls, requesting me to come there to assist Eld. M. Grant of Boston in the ordination of Bro. T. G. Newman to the eldership. So I went accordingly, and found Elder Grant doing battle on something of a large scale, so much so that a certain Demetrius said to his fellow-craftsmen, "Gentlemen, ye see and hear that not alone at S—— but in all the land, this Grant & Co. hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that there are no souls or conscious entities, which are simple, immaterial, uncompounded, disembodied spirits, so that not only our craft is in danger to be set at naught, but the tradition of our fathers will be greatly despised. When they heard this, they said, Great are the sacred relics of those mighty philosophers of Greece and Rome, of the enduring nature of the human soul, and so the inquiry arose among them, who is sufficient for this crisis?"

The guiding star or leading spirit of the assembly seemed to say, "Send to the city of A—— there you will find one mighty in very deed, a champion in the defense of the ancient man-honoring sentiment, 'Thou shalt not surely die.'" This counsel being approved, the iron horse drove speedily on, with its precious freight, of our leading star, and a bundle of Grant & Co.'s tracts soon arrived at the city of A——. The champion being found, the tracts were delivered to him, and arrangements were made for the fall of Grant & Co., in which they doubtless felt sanguine of succeeding, as they had all his arguments in advance, and he had not the slightest thought whom he was to meet.

Well, the parties came together, the question was agreed upon, the debate progressed for three evenings, and now we will let the disinterested editor of the American Reveille declare how the battle appeared to the looker on. He says in his paper for Dec. 10, 1859;

"A discussion of a theological character commenced on Monday evening last at Union Hall in this village, and has continued during the week. The disputants are Elder Miles Grant of Boston, and Elder W. W. Clayton of Auburn; the former a believer in the Second Advent faith—and the latter a Campbellite or Disciple. Both are gentlemen of acknowledged ability, and an unusual interest is manifested in the discussion. We were present on Wednesday evening, when the following resolution was the subject at issue:

"'Resolved, When man dies his spirit remains in a conscious state separate from the body until the resurrection.'"

"Elder Clayton maintained the affirmative, and Elder Grant the negative: both gentlemen quoted largely from Scripture and the ancient writers to sustain their respective positions. It was evident, if the discussion on Wednesday evening is a criterion to judge by, that Elder Grant is by far the ablest of the two in argument, and altogether the best Biblical scholar; we do not say this by way of prejudice to Elder Clayton, because our feelings, sympathy and education teach us to believe his position was the nearest right in the discussion of Wednesday evening.

"The reverend gentlemen are both able speakers, and no doubt conscientious in their opinions, yet we apprehend but little good will result from a discussion of this kind."

Well, the whole discussion was reported, and will be printed in a few days, and all can buy and decide for themselves as to where the truth is, and on which side the unfailing word preponderates. It will be ready for sale about the first of January, 1860. Any one wishing a supply may send to T. G. Newman, Seneca Falls, N. Y., enclosing 25 cents for a single copy, and a liberal discount for twelve or more.

May the Lord bless his truth!

On Sunday, Dec. 4th, Bro. T. G. Newman was ordained, and solemnly set apart to the work of the ministry, and we received him to the confidence of his brethren scattered abroad, and may God's blessings be upon him, and the truth in his hands. Amen.

C. F. SWEET, Evangelist.

Albion, N. Y., Dec. 10, 1859.

From Eld. B. S. Batchelor.

BRO. GRANT:—The report of the doings of the churches and pastors of that goodly town of "Unity" has been deeply interesting to some of your readers. We admire the position taken and so nobly maintained by "Bro. Christian," also the willingness of his ministering brethren of the various denominations to acknowledge the truth relative to the scriptural basis of christian union, when once they had it fairly set before them. It is to be wished that many towns now properly termed "Sectarian" might be transformed into "Unity" by the prevalence of more liberal views among the lovers of Jesus.

But I took pen in hand to say that a quarterly meeting of the Rhode Island and Mass. Christian conference is appointed to be held with the Christian church in Mattapoisett commencing on Tuesday, January 10th, at 9 o'clock, A. M. to continue until Friday eve, if the Lord will.

The meeting is designed purely for religious services, preaching, singing, exhortation and prayer, and is free for christians of every name, to come and worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, provided their consciences do not interfere with the liberty of others.

The Crisis being read in our vicinity, I take the liberty to send you this notice, and to invite all Christians who wish to enjoy this season with us, to come in the name of the Lord of Hosts, and we bid them a hearty welcome. Yours for the unity of the Spirit.

New Bedford, Mass.

[The above was crowded out last week.—ED.]

From Eld. M. Chandler.

BRO. GRANT:—I would state for the information of the friends of Jesus, as some may inquire, Where is Bro. Chandler? why does he not write for the Crisis? he is in the field and preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God at hand, trying to be instant in season and out of season to rebuke, reprove, exhort; with all long suffering and doctrine. The Lord blesses his word and good is the result. The fruit will soon be seen. The Judge is at the door. As ever in hope.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Prospect, Ct., Dec. 30th, 1859, JULIA, wife of Lafayette P. Anthony, aged thirty years.

Sister Anthony has been a believer for some years, and died in expectation of soon seeing Jesus, and of being made like him. Sr. A. usually enjoyed good health, but has fallen a victim to typhoid fever, from which Bro. A. has just recovered, and with which one child is now very sick. The new year has dawned upon Bro. A. and his five little children in sorrow and deep affliction, only to be alleviated by the sustaining power of the grace of God.

T. S. CANFIELD.

Died, at Worcester, Mass., Jan. 4th, 1860, Sister SARAH S. FLAGG, wife of H. K. Flagg, aged forty-five years nine months.

Her illness was violent and decease sudden, a lung fever terminating in congestion, with almost constant derangement of mind. The blow was severe upon her companion and two surviving daughters, and their grief is very bitter. But there is hope for her, she having embraced Christ some twenty-five years ago, and has lived a life of faith and prayer; has always been connected with the Adventists, attended their meetings, and loved their prosperity. Bro. F——, who is widely known as a public man and lecturer, has again set his heart and hand to the work of God, and is determined to go into the kingdom. May the Lord assist him to keep his vows, and bless the family in their affliction.

The writer, in company with Elder Ross, attended the funeral at Thomas St., speaking from 1 Thess. 4: 13–18. Much sympathy was manifested on the occasion, and we hope life will come out of this death.

D. T. T.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per steamship Bohemian, from Liverpool the 21st ult.

ITALY.

Letters from Naples state that during the night between the 12th and 13th, numerous arrests, including several eminent persons, were made. The persons arrested are accused of the clandestine printing of journals, and of having supported the subscription in behalf of Garibaldi, several documents concerning which had been seized. The Sardinian Consul had been momentarily arrested, but was speedily set at liberty.

AUSTRIA.

A Vienna telegram of the 18th says the report of the intended abdication of the Emperor is entirely unfounded.

Advices from Hungary represent the danger of a conflict between the Imperial authorities and the Hungarian Protestants as daily increasing. The Austrian army in Hungary will soon be 50,000 strong.

SWEDEN.

At Stockholm, enthusiastic demonstrations in favor of the Italian people had taken place, and the Diet unanimously resolved to present an address to the King, requesting his Majesty to defend, at the Congress, the right of the Italian people to decide their own affairs.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

In Hungary, the political and religious agitation seems to be increasing. At Comorn, and other places, arrests have been made. A great Protestant meeting held at Pesth, to petition the Emperor to suspend the Imperial patent, was summoned to disperse, and, after singing the anthem "God is a tower of strength," complied without remonstrance. The people outside were, however, greatly agitated, and it was some time before they could be dispersed. The 5th corps of the Austrian army, now in Italy, has received orders to march for Hungary immediately.

During the last few days there have been indications of an approaching schism between the Magyar and Slavonic Protestants in Hungary, and it is averred by the former that the seeds of discord have been sown by the agents of Government.

CENTRAL ITALY.

The Bologna correspondent of the London Daily News gives the following gratifying information with respect to the progress of defensive preparations:

"I have carefully inspected the plans which have been drawn up by Col. Mezzacapo, and according to what I saw, the fortifications of this city are very nearly equal in importance to those of Alexandria and Verona. This work will be carried out with the greatest activity; and, judging by the plan which is going to be adopted, within the space of three months Bologna will be turned into a strong entrenched camp, able to give shelter to an army of 30,000 men. The hills which surround the town, and its central position, will enable such an army to keep in check an invading force of three times its own number which may attack the Legations from the north.

The foundry just established at Parma is busily engaged casting rifled cannon for the defense of this important stronghold of Central Italy, whose detached fortifications, from the Montagnola to San Salvatore, will mount not less than 200 heavy guns. In the worst case, if the Austrians should be charged with the mission of putting into execution the final decision of the Congress, they could not do so without bringing into the field an army of 180,000 men. One half of this army would have to operate against Bologna, the other half to keep on the look-out, for it could be attacked by the national forces gathered within and behind the entrenched camp of Bologna. This camp could not be attacked with an army much less than 90,000 men, for the radius of fortification being at the same time so large and strong would enable Gen. Fanti to repulse them all.

Without, therefore, reckoning upon the revolutionary element of the country, which would be at once roused by Garibaldi, Central Italy, with its army of 60,000 men, protected as it will be by the fortifications of Bologna, could make a most determined and protracted resistance to an invading foreign army. When one thinks that only six months ago Central Italy was in a defenceless state, and that it has now an army of 48,000 men; when one thinks that before the month of March is over, this army will be increased by at least 18,000 men, and in possession of a formidable stronghold, one cannot help admiring the almost incredible exertions which have been made.

FRANCE.

A pamphlet entitled "The Pope and the Congress," signed by M. de Langeroniere, had been published and attracted great attention both in France and England, as it was believed to express the sentiments of the Emperor. The pamphlet is written in a spirit of conciliation and compromise, and although it does not propose to take away the temporal power of the Pope, it advocates a curtailment of them, and urges that the Romagna should not be restored to the Papal dominion.

☞ There are some 900,000 persons living in London who have never entered a place of worship. If such a state of things was reported of an island in the South Seas, we should speedily send missionaries to preach the gospel to them.

Married.

In W. Springfield, Dec. 15th, JUDSON BRADLEY and LUCINDA M. BROWN.

In Springfield, Dec. 29th, WILLARD HALL and HARRIET M. RICHARDSON—both by R. E. Ladd.

Notices, &c.

☞ I will hold a conference in Elizabeth, Joe Davis Co., Ill., Wednesday, Jan. 18th, and continue over Lord's day following. The brethren must write me if they wish the above named meeting, and name where (what depot) they will meet me. Direct Muscatine, Iowa, care of J. Covell.

WALTER PRATT.

Notice.

There will be a Quarterly Conference in Springville, Bad Axe Co., Wis., Thursday evening, Jan. 26th, 1860; and continuing over the Lord's day following. We hope that all the churches in western Wisconsin will be represented by delegates or letters, at this Conference. We expect a number of our preaching brethren present to preach the Word.

Y. HIGGINS.

A New Book.

REASONS FOR MY HOPE, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Price 50 cts. bound in cloth, post paid. Paper covers 30 cts. Four copies in paper sent by mail for $1.00. Address H. L. Hastings, Box 3124 New York city P. O., till Jan. 25th. Then Providence, R. I.

New Hampshire State Conference.

Yesterday, Jan. 2d, I received a line from a brother at Loudon Ridge, stating that the brethren at that place would like the next session of N. H. S. C. holden with them, commencing as early as notice could be given. It now being so late that it is quite doubtful whether the notice can appear in both papers this week, I think it not prudent to call the meeting till week after next. We therefore fix the time for the conference to convene at the Meeting-House at Loudon Ridge, on Friday, Jan. 20th, at one o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

T. M. PREBLE, Clerk of Conference.

Concord, N. H., Jan. 3d, 1860.

Notice.

It is the wish of the Church at Rocky Brook that all brethren having business with the above Church, or preachers wishing to come among us to labor in word and doctrine, would make known their business or wishes, by writing to the corresponding Secretary. By order of the Church at Rocky Brook.

CHARLES F. DIXON, Cor. Secretary.

Herald, please copy.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Providence permitting, I will commence a series of meetings in Castleton, Vt., at the Town Hall, Jan. 17th, and continue every evening through the week, and over the following Lord's day and evening.

P. S.—There is some probability that we shall begin our meetings Lord's day, 15th; but we cannot say positively, at the time our paper goes to press, for want of a letter from Castleton; but the friends in the vicinity will be instructed by handbills.

MILES GRANT.

Bro. Wm. Ingraham will preach in Worcester....................Sunday, Jan. 15th

Bro. C. Goodrich Sunday, Jan. 29th and Feb. 5th

T. W. Piper appoints to preach in

Tuftonborough....................Jan. 15th
West Ossipee....................Jan. 22d
Sandwich....................Jan. 29th
Danbury....................Feb. 5th
Merideth Centre....................Feb. 7th
Lake Village....................Feb. 8th
Loudon Ridge....................Feb. 9th
Pittsfield....................Feb. 10th
Clarke Town....................Feb. 12th
Wolfborough, (Pine Hill)....................Feb. 19th

Bro. Geo. Champlin will preach to the church in Springfield, in Music Hall Block, Sunday, Jan. 22d, and two or three evenings of the following week.

R. E. LADD.

Bro. Lewis Gunn will preach in Pleasant Valley, Ct., [illegible]

At the earnest solicitation [illegible] [illegible] East, [illegible] series of meetings [illegible] in Ja[illegible]

Providence permitting, I will be in [illegible] the 15th, instead of Worcester.

H. PRATT.

Providence permitting, I will be in Worcester, Sabbath....................Jan. 15th

H. PRATT.

The Lord willing, I will preach as follows:—

New Britain, Friday eve....................Jan. 20th
Waterbury, Sunday....................Jan. 22d
Harwinton, (Bro. Elliott's)....................Jan. 23d
Northfield, (Bro. Humphreyville please arrange,) Jan. 24th
Plymouth Hollow....................Jan. 25th
Litchfield Station....................Jan. 26th
Pleasant Valley....................Jan. 27th
Winsted, Sunday....................Jan. 29th
Feb. 5th where Bro. Albert Fox may appoint.

If the above conflict with any previous arrangements, please write me at West Meriden, Ct.

WM. A. FENN.

Eld. Thomas Smith appoints to preach in

Lincolnville, Me., (Young's School-House) Jan. 15th
Round Pound, Me....................Jan. 22d
Carmel, Me....................Jan. 29th
Surrey, Me....................Feb. 5th

I will preach as follows:—

Pawlings, N. Y....................Jan. 15th
Hazel Plains, Ct....................Jan. 22d

The intermediate time subject to the order of brethren in the same or adjacent places.

T. S. CANFIELD.

By request, I appoint to preach as follows:—

New Britain....................Jan. 13th
Wallingford....................Jan. 15th

L. S. LUDINGTON.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd appoints to preach in

Hartford, Conn....................Feb. 8th and 16th
New Britain....................Feb. 17th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

Eld. John Howell's P. O. address is Poultney, Vt.

Mary A. Dagle.—We prefer not to publish the verses. They would interest but one or two, and our space is precious.

Cash Receipts.

Mrs. Dunning 245, $1.75; Peter Axe, 3 copies, $5 58; J Kelsey, Jr., 10 copies, $8.85; O T Clisby 242, $1.31.

S Morse 237, I H Reynolds 237, W P Smith 237,—50 cents each.

Ed. Brown 250, A Packard 190, J C Pease 208, S Brown 250, J C Atkins 252, L Von Eschen 235, H W Spicer 250, L Tuttle 234, L Storrs 234, Mrs. J Hartwell 194, D Miner, H Rand 250, Al. Jenney 234, P Parlow 234, W A Chase 249, R Willis 234, P Curtis 250, E S Emerson 250, C Stark 226, T Apthorpe 250, M B Lyons 250, D S Lyons 250, Em. Teft 251, V P Simmons 244, W Payne 246, L C Glazier 250, Jas. Morrison 251, L W Pierce 234, A B Price 250, W Brown 234, C Swift 196, J W Everson 252, E G Emmons 260, O F Stewart 234, Jos. Pine 250, R Pine 250, C Bellinger 250, S Rhyner 250, E Braley 234, Mrs. Edgerson 250,—$1.00 each.

Jon. Phillips 260, C M Lawton 275, J H Sutliff 241, W Smith 265, Mrs. N Follett 276, Miss Clapp 276,—$2.00 each.

Capt. I West 234, Benj. Ray 275,—$3.00 each.

Books and Tracts.—J C Atkins $1.00, L Tuttle 6 cts., G W Sprague $9.00, A C Green $11.00, F A Baker $4.00, Mrs. Dunning 25 cts., T Apthorpe 25 cts., H Drake $5.00, J Kelsey, Jr., 15 cts, J S Tenny 12 cts., N Lazell $5.40, O T Clisby 69 cts, Dr. Chase 6 cts, Mrs. N Follett 50 cts, C N Fox 9 cts, E G Emmons 12 cts.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 6 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 6 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 6 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wom[illegible] nal? By C. F. [illegible] copies fo[illegible] hundre[illegible] New Yo[illegible] & C. O[illegible]

The [illegible] designed for public and private worship. Published by J. V. Himes. Price 40 cts.; postage 8 cts.—1-3 off per dozen. Pocket edition, gilt, $1.

Words of Warning, [illegible] cts. single postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them [illegible] lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 50 cts.—postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By MRS. MARY A. SEYMOUR. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $3.00 per hundred,—5 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Geneseo, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, Providence R. I.

1.–The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.–The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.–Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 5 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—post. 8 cts.

4.–The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post paid.

5.–Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by E. B. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.–Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.–Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

8.–The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 18 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 15 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 226 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths, by Hastings. 6—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Landlock. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State, by Sheldon. —6†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmark, separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them: Orders with the CASH are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free, by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that FEEL poor also.

Address H. L. HASTINGS, Providence, R. I.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York.

* The Landmarks are issued in [illegible] which can be separated for distri[illegible] contains, The Coming and Kingd[illegible] 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of t[illegible] Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Ch[illegible] ry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning [illegible] Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, [illegible]

† The Olive Leaves are three neat [illegible] that can be separated for distri[illegible] Little Children, Love one Another[illegible] Resting Place; three, My Frie[illegible] Love; five, Abundant Grace[illegible] Hastings. Just the t[illegible] classes of sain[illegible]

Gl[illegible]

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Thy Will be Done.

When tempests darkly howl [illegible]
And shroud the earth from shore to shore—
When lightnings gleam and thunders roll,
And fill with fear the quaking soul—
Then may we look to Thee alone,
And pray, oh Lord, thy will be done!

When war and tumult rages rife,
And man but seeks another's life,
When dark and bitter blasphemy
In all its horror waxes high;
We'll cry, come quickly, claim thine own!
But still, oh Lord, thy will be done!

Though bitterness, contempt and scorn
[illegible] trembling hearts have sorely torn,
And grief and sorrow dim the eye,
Because of worldly mockery,
With patience still the race we'll run,
And pray, oh Lord, thy will be done!

The friends we love so fond and true,
Though death should take them from our view,
Sustaining grace that strength imparts,
Which still upholds our drooping hearts;
And through the merits of thy Son
We cry, oh Lord, thy will be done!

Oh! soon that welcome day shall dawn,
Our tears be dried, our sorrows gone;
The Lord in triumph then shall own
His dear anointed round his throne;
And Heaven the vict'ry shall have won,
And great Jehovah's will be done!

M. E. K.

For the Crisis.

The Voice of God in History.

BY LIZZIE ARMSTRONG.

Oh! why is it that in every age, in every clime, puny, finite man will lift his frail arm in defiance of the God of Ages? Memory unfurls her wings and soars backward to other views and other ages; at the touch of her magic wand, the shroud of the mighty past is thrown aside, and like the river of Time flowing between the boundless heights of eternity, as represented in the vision of Mirza, the great historic channel rolls before us with all its dark freight of crime and retribution.

Amid the rosy bowers of Eden, man first rebelled, and continued to "heap up wrath against the day of wrath," until forth from the eternal throne rolled the unchangeable fiat—"The end of all flesh is come before me, for the earth is filled with violence through them;" and when the faithful few were sheltered in the Ark of Safety, "the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened." Oh did not the antediluvians quail in that fearful scene, when the vivid lightning brought out its fiery forces from the vast arsenal of heaven, and the deep-toned thunder rolled its heavy echoes across the dark abyss of waters—the dread artillery of the skies in the hand of an insulted God? Still downward rolled the resistless flood, and the same terrific element boiled up from the depths of old ocean's bosom, until the last guilty offender had long since sunk beneath the surging whirlpool of wrath. And the created waves rose up to make a compact with the black clouds, the howling winds, and the thunder bolts, and they swept on in the awful joy of their dread alliance to do the bidding of Him "who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with a span." And when the waters were thrown back, the earth was revealed in all her primeval beauty, purified beneath the sacred seal of the baptismal wave; and then faithful Noah saw the pure, rich rainbow—that beautiful signet ring of Jehovah, placed in the azure sky to seal his covenant with the children of men.

But oh how mortals waver from the standard of faith! Far away on the plains of Jordan smile the cities of the plain—Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Bela or Zoar. Beautiful as a dream of Eden they rest in the midst of that fair landscape, beneath the rays of the morning sun. But beware, oh thou whited sepulchre, for the finger of the avenger is already pointed at thy fair proportions!

Faithful Lot and his family are hurried out of the city, and clouds of jetty blackness gather in the air, and from their dark depths rolls the sulphurous flame—the dread messenger of His wrath—and in horrid grandeur the vivid lightnings flash across each other, while peal after peal of thunder sounds the dread funeral dirge of the devoted cities. Is it a wonder if the guilty victims imagine that the "Prince of the power of the air," with all his infernal legions, has marched against them under the banner of his own breath? At last a [illegible]quake opens beneath them a [illegible], and down, down, amid the [illegible] despair sink the cities of the [illegible] God, forbid that we should [illegible] cry equal to the long, despairing [illegible] anguish that must have arisen [illegible] lips! The dark waters [illegible] over them with al[illegible] creature in [illegible] shores [illegible]

Ages have rolled over ages, generation after generation have sunk into slumber, and yet there is the pillar, lone and lofty amid the ruins of guilt, "like a charnel lamp, burning, unspent, in the tomb of ages."

The tide rolls on, and lo! on the plains of Shinar, we see a vast multitude assembled to "build a tower, the top of which shall reach into heaven." Day by day upward looms this vast monument of man's blasphemy, until at midnight an angel of the Lord descends and writes in their foreheads with an iron pen the decree of confusion. Midnight! It was the same dread hour in which the destroying angel flapped his raven wing over the Assyrian camp, and the dead lay by thousands beneath its heavy folds. It was at midnight the same commissioned angel passed over the Egyptian thresholds and darkened the souls of thousands, by laying the finger of the "King of Terrors" upon those loved ones, dearer to them than their own hearts' blood. The same hand descended with fearful weight upon the heads of the impious builders, and although they fled to the four corners of the earth, mankind did not profit by that withering rebuke, for far away beneath the sunny skies of Asia arises, not Babel, but Babylon.

Ah, Babylon! thou golden head of matchless beauty—fitly chosen emblem of thy luxurious splendor. And those lofty domes, those magnificent temples, for years reflected the beams of a torrid sun. And through the long-drawn aisles, the lofty arches, and through the fluted colonnades, rolled the rich notes of matchless melody. Their altars were lit up with surpassing splendor, and richly robed priests ministered to their idols. But in all those dazzling temples there arose no incense of prayer to the throne of Omnipotence. Yet in that peerlessly beautiful Sodom there were a few, only a few, faithful hearts—a few living altars on which there burned a vivid love, and they were captives from the land of Palestine—that gloriously beautiful spot where the Day-Star of redemption first shone and the Sun of Righteousness arose with healing in his wings.

Their monarch erected a golden image on the summit of the temple of Belus, and commanded every subject of his realm, on pain of a terrible death, to fall down and worship it. The vast tide of worshipers swept onward and prostrated themselves before it; only three rebelled, and the royal edict was promptly acted upon. That glowing furnace was heated seven times hotter than usual, and the faithful three securely bound, the executioners advance to commit them to the flames, and quick as thought the fiery waves sweep around them, and they totter and fall, with life extinct; and the same raging flames swept around the three holy Israelites, but it only burnt their cords, and triumphantly they walked through the flames, and there appeared the form of the fourth, even He who six centuries afterward severed the dark bands, wherewith the "King of Terrors" had bound the widow's son. Tremble, thou haughty monarch! for a greater than thou is there. But still he dared rebel, and again came the hand of justice, and amid the columns of the imperial mind "the great central pillar, Reason, was shaken down, and around it in broken masses lay the scattered fragments of thought—not dark and silent as the ruins of an outward temple, over which the ivy silently creeps, wrapping them in nature's funeral shroud; but like the fragments of a polished mirror, each piece flashing with its own peculiar rays, so bright, yet oh! so cold and wild;" and when the seven times were past, the mental column was restored, and the humbled monarch returned to his palace praising the Infinite mind.

But, alas! that over every threshold cometh the silent feet of the unbidden guest, and the wing of the death-angel darkened the palace door, for she brought the message that called the great ruler to sleep beside his fathers in the vaulted tombs of royalty. Then came the cold pageantry, the unmeaning pomp, the mournful splendor of an imperial funeral, and thousands offered their final homage to Nebuchadnezzar; but was there a single heart that ached with unutterable woe beneath the cruel pressure of that cold mockery? Another heir ascended the throne, and after him another—the impious Belshazzar.

One hundred and sixty years before an enemy had entered Babylon, the decree of the Lord of Hosts came through the eloquent imagery of the prophet, with the command—"Sit thou silent and get thee into the darkness, oh! daughter of the Chaldeans, for thou shalt no more be called the lady of kingdoms;" and over against the city is drawn the formidable array of the Medo-Persian host; but the Babylonians, strong in their fancied security, pay but little attention to the waving plumes and glittering steel of Cyrus' splendid arm[illegible] with the foe before him, "Bel-[illegible] feast to a [illegible] they are [illegible] and the [illegible] saloons. There are clusters of diamond-threaded water-spouts illuminated by [illegible] lamps, and every fiction of art with every grace of nature, is here brought together to celebrate this grand feast; and as the merry hours sweep by, the banquet rooms are thrown open and the crowd passes in under the pictured standard—the royal lion of the Babylonians. The hall is hung with tapestries of wine color, richly wrought with festoons of silver work, and grouped with flower clusters of glittering whiteness; delicious strains of music are floating from the far distant galleries, and the tables, robed in finest linen, are dazzling with gold and crystal vases. There are cups whose rims are embossed with rubies and emeralds, and goblets in which the sweetest juices of the long southern summers have been wrung; and there are viands, fruits and liquids, from every zone. The scene is reflected in mirrors that flash back with it the wave of plumes, the sheen of satin, a glimmer of the loveliest faces in all the kingdom, soft violet shades and the sparkle of jewels.

But oh! those vessels of priceless value were borne from the temple of the living God by the impious command of the reckless monarch, and they were desecrated at that unhallowed banquet. Archangels veil their faces before his throne; seraphs lie prostrate at his feet; all the legions of heaven's celestial band wait to do him honor, and man, only man, the earth-worm of his footstool, will dare to desecrate the vessels of the Lord! "And in the same hour came forth the fingers of a man's hand" and wrote in an unknown tongue, "mene, mene, tekel, upharsin." Ah! the sound of revelry was hushed; then "pale horror seized on all," and like an electric shock from heart to heart flew that cold, undefinable fear.

Those shadowy, sepulchral fingers there in the dazzling blaze of revelry, induced the king to call his astrologers, his soothsayers and magicians, to see if they could not, among the stars or with the magic wand of their enchantments, frame a solution of that mystic sentence. Well mayest thou tremble, oh guilty king, for before thee is thy doom, and the doom of thy kingdom, pencilled upon that wall by the same hand that weighed thee in the balances and found thee wanting! The prophet of the Lord is summoned, and he alone can interpret the words. "And this is the writing that was written; mene, mene, tekel, upharsin. This is the interpretation of the thing: Mene; God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it. Tekel; thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting, Peres; (the root of Upharsin) thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians." "Make bright the arrows, gather the shields, the Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes; for his device is against Babylon; because it is the vengeance of the Lord—the vengeance of his temple." Even now the quick notes of alarm are rung through the palace halls; but too late,—too late! for it is already filled with the Medes and Persians. In the silent watches of the night they have turned aside the dark waves of the Euphrates and entered the city through its channel. The surprised inmates start up to don their armor, but they are quickly overpowered, "and in that night Darius the Median took the kingdom." "A sound of battle is in the land and of great destruction. How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken! how is Babylon become a desolation without an inhabitant." Even the wandering Arab—that scourge of the desert—flees from it with an undefinable dread. "It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation, neither shall the Arabian pitch his tent there, but wild beasts of the forests shall lie there, and their houses shall be filled with doleful creatures; and the owls shall dwell there, and the satyrs shall dance there."

Time, the unweary traveler, presses onward; never but once have his chariot wheels been stayed, when the sun stood still over the plains of Gideon; and in his onward march how clearly has the eloquent prediction of Isaiah been fulfilled! Ah! look through her ruined battlements, over which the lone eagle wheels his flight, and the soaring lion of the desert hath made his lair beneath her crumbling columns. "The noble Euphrates still wends his way through the desert, like some lone pilgrim monarch" mourning over the ruins of his devastated realm; and on his hoary banks are a few gray willows, which are successors to those on which the captives of Israel hung their harps. The sublime imagery of her past glory is painted in the landscape of the imagination, but "Babylon is fallen—is fallen!" her wreck may form a picture, her fame may point a moral; but the pomp of triumph ceases to dazzle. Her music is hushed; for the cords of her harp are broken, and the song of festivity is heard no longer. Faded is the beautiful, withered is the strong, humbled is the haughty, crushed is the mighty. "Because of the wrath of the Lord it shall not be inhabited, but it [illegible] be wholly desolate; every one that [illegible] Babylon shall be astonished. . . . [illegible] opened his armory and hath [illegible] weapons of his indigna[illegible] the Lord God [illegible]

For the Crisis.

The Common Interest System.

No. I.

BRO. GRANT:—By your permission I will say a few things upon this subject, (for I think it needed,) which has distracted the minds of some good, sincere christians, and given a little prominence to others who make an easy living out of it. Brethren and sisters frequently ask, "How can we love our neighbor as ourselves, unless we have all things common?" "Did not the Apostolic church sell all, and have all things common?" "Was it not the fruits of the Spirit exhibiting themselves, by the disciples selling their possessions in Jerusalem?" To these and other questions on this subject, I answer:

Jesus is asked by one—"And who is my neighbor?" He relates the case of the man who fell among thieves; speaks of the good Samaritan as finding him, and ministering to his necessities; and says, "Go thou and do likewise." He does not teach us that this Samaritan sold his house and divided the price, nor that he went home and sold his farm—stock in trade—chest of tools, or other possessions which he might have, and came back and divided with the wounded man; nor has he any where told his followers so to do. He has told us to love God with all the heart and our neighbor as ourselves. He told a miser to sell his possessions, "and give to the poor," for his heart was on them, and he would not follow Christ until his heart was separated from his idol. If any are now worshiping their substance, they had better sell and "give it to the poor," not to the indolent, nor spendthrift.

Christ says again, in Luke 12,—"Sell that ye have (not all ye have) and give alms." This is the Christian's duty. But I will now suppose we all sell our entire stock of property, give it into the hands of a few men, (I will suppose them to be men who have made a good use of money;) and all the uses and interests of it, and of our future earnings, are at their disposal. Can we "give alms?" Can we "minister to the necessities" of others? Though we "work with our hands," how can we "give to him that hath need?" The modern apostles may, or may not, but surely we cannot. Yet we are so commanded by Christ, and by his apostles. Let us look at this item: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him."—1 Cor. 14: 1-2. "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly, or of necessity."—2 Cor. 9: 7.

Can these commands be obeyed on the modern theory of "common interest" principles? Remember these commands are to individuals, not to collective bodies. But for what were these donations commanded to be made? Answer. To sustain the poor saints at Jerusalem, who had, immediately after the descent of the Holy Spirit, "sold their possessions and laid the price at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made as every man had need." Why did they do this? They thought that the prophecy of Daniel and the denunciations of Christ on the Jewish nation and city, were soon to be fulfilled, and if they owned land, houses, stores, shops, or other merchandise, when the invading army came, and they must obey Christ's instructions to flee, it would all be lost. So they put it into a family purse,—in the hands of inspired apostles,—to spread the gospel of Christ, and to aid them when they must flee to the wilderness, among strangers. But it was some twenty-five years from that to the overthrow of Jerusalem. They had put themselves in a disadvantageous position to live—dependent on working out by the day for a living, and for sustaining gospel missions, and among the enemies of Christ, whom they confessed. Thus they became poor and dependent on others, and Paul begs and pleads for them, after he is converted and goes abroad to preach. So they are helped. They loved Christ, and one another, and they felt an interest for the conversion of others. By Paul's allusion to their works of grace and spiritual benefits bestowed on others, it seems that their missionary labor built up society, united believers in christian fellowship, making them fellow-workers, and converted sinners.

These examples of the Jerusalem church are worthy of imitation. But we are told by some modern teachers, that the Jerusalem church was "a model church," relating to selling and giving the funds into the apostles' hands, and they are seeking to follow that part, while the devotional, and uniting, and converting principle is wholly wanting as fruits of their labors. I suggest that they follow that part of the practice of the church at Jerusalem which was manifestly approved of God, and which resulted in the health and union of the body of Christ, and the conversion of sinners, and shun the errors into which they fell, and the things which circumstances surrounding them, might admit them to do, but which the gospel shows we should not do. I shall notice some of these [illegible]

I. C. WELLCOME.

☞ Running accounts will run away with a person's credit more rapidly, than [illegible]

Selections.

Extracts from Beecher.

"And as thy days, so shall thy strength be."—Deut. 33: 25.

"Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." "For I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee. Fear not, thou worm of Jacob, and ye men of Israel, I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel."

Now this which you hear in those numbers, and in that grand prophetic strain, you shall hear again in a sweeter descant, in a calmer utterance, from the lips of the Lord Jesus Christ himself:

"Take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, what shall we drink? or, wherewithal shall we be clothed? for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added to you. Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

And let us see how the Apostle interpreted these words of Christ, after he had finished the magnificent utterance of the book of Hebrews, in the last chapter of which he speaks on this wise:

"Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have; for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."

Gather up these golden sentences—and as many more as you will—and fashion them into a chain to wear about your neck; and for a brooch, take on the one side, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be;" and for the other half, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee;" and it shall indeed be not only an ornament about thy neck, but a charm against fear and trouble. God's grace will be administered to us as we need it in the exigences of life. Although we know the general truth that God will not leave us, the special way in which he is going to help us we do not know. But we may trust the Divine Providence and leave the methods to Divine Wisdom. Is it release, deliverance, defense, instruction? Is it the social or the religious element? Whatever it is, as thy need comes, thy God shall come.

* * * * * *

I think that human life is much like a road life. You stand on a hill, and look down and across the valley, and another prodigious hill lifts itself up on the other side. The day is hot, your horse is weary, and you are tired; and it seems to you that you cannot climb that long hill. But you had better trot down the hill you are on, and not trouble yourself about the other one. You find the valley pleasant and inspiriting. When you get across it, you meet only a slight ascent, and begin to wonder where the steep hill is which you saw. You drive along briskly, and when you reach the highest point, you find that there has not been an inch of the hill over which you have not trotted. You see it was illusory. The slight ascent looked almost like a perpendicular steep; but when you come to pass over it, step by step, you find it to be a good traveling road.

So it is with your troubles. Just in that way your anticipations of mischiefs hang before you; and when you come to where they are, you find them to be all smooth turnpikes. Men ought to be ashamed, after they have done that two or three times, not to take the hint, and profit by it; yet they will not. They will suffer from anticipated troubles, just as much as though they had no such experience. They have not wit enough to make use of the lesson which their life is continually teaching them; namely, that a large majority of the troubles which they worry themselves about beforehand, either never come, or are easily borne. They form a habit of fretting about future troubles. It was not the old monks alone that wore sackcloth and hair shirts: you wear them as much as they did; only you wear them inside, while they wore them outside—you wear them in your heart, they wore them on their skin. They were wiser than you are! * * * *

Men fall into the great mistake, on this subject, of supposing that to look forward must mean to look anxiously forward. It is just as easy to look forward with hope, as with sadness. And God's Word does not teach us that we are not to plan and forelook, but that we are not to plan and forelook with a spirit of anxious, mischievous, annoying fear. That is forbidden. It is not using the future: it is abusing it, rather. * * * *

There are a great many persons who trouble themselves exceedingly in regard to expected events in their life. There are a great many christians who look forward and wonder how they shall be able to meet certain exigencies in their experience; how they shall be able to resist certain temptations; how they shall be able to perform certain onerous duties. They turn these things over in their minds with a wondering fear, and seem to be utterly unconscious of the fact that God has never given it to any man to see how he shall get along at any period in the future, but says, "I will roll the wheel of time, and evolve your circumstances; and when you come to the point where it is necessary for you to stand up for a principle, or perform a christian duty, I will see that you have the grace you need."

* * * * *

If we take the experience of men in respect to wealth, wisdom, honor, how much more ought we to take the experience of men in respect to God's grace. And if there is one thing upon which all christians agree, it is this: that so far as their experience is concerned, God has fulfilled every letter of the promises in his Word; and in nothing more than in preparing them for every trouble, and burden, and sorrow, and emergency of the past, as he will prepare them for the last part—which is the best part—of their earthly existence. And as we are prepared for every stage which we pass through here, so when we go into Zion and before God, that same love, that same wise care, will appear for us there; and in the very entrance into heaven it shall be Christ's hand that [illegible] administer that entrance, and Christ that shall crown us, as it shall be Christ's heart that shall bless us for ever and for ever!

"I Know that my Redeemer Liveth."

I know to whom I trust,
And that my Savior lives;
His voice awakes me from the dust,
And life eternal gives.

I know to whom I cleave,
When elsewhere is dismay;
He doth my trembling heart relieve,
His saving arm display.

In Him I do confide;
And when I reach His light,
I shall be more than satisfied
To know my King by sight.

He wipes all tears away,
So tender and so mild;
My deepest longings doth allay,
And soothes me like a child.

I know when He shall come,
I shall be glorified;
He'll take me to His heavenly home,
And I shall there abide.

—Independent.

Reading the Bible.

Many are already in the habit of reading the Bible through at least once a year. Many more could do it, if they had a plan for doing it, and with firm resolution would persevere in the undertaking. But it is of the first importance to read it as the Word of God, with deliberation, reflection, and prayer, and not as a task. The following plan, which is an improvement on Rev. Joseph Emerson's, has the advantage over others, and over reading wholly in course, that a portion of the Psalms and New Testament is read daily, together with the other parts of the Old Testament. The table for every week of the year helps to keep the place, in case of interruption in the daily reading. By pasting it on the inside of the Bible cover, it will be easy of reference; and better still would it be, also, to mark each chapter named in the table with a pen and thick ink, and also the corresponding date at the bottom of the page.

TO READ THE BIBLE THROUGH IN A YEAR.

(By Rev. E. W. Robinson.)

Read 3 chapters daily, and 5 on the Sabbath; that is, 2 chapters in the Old Testament, and 1 daily,—3 on the Sabbath,—in Psalms, Prov., Eccl. Sol. Song, and the New Testament.

The Old Testament, without these 4 books, contains 2 chapters a day for the year; and the New Testament, with the 4 books, has 1 chapter a day, and 3 for Sabbath days, minus 8 chapters.

Read Ps. 119 as 11 chapters of two divisions each, and connect the short Psalms 117 and 131 with the next, and 133 and 134 together, thus adding 8 chapters to complete the year.

Five chapters a week will go through the New Testament in a year.

Jan.	1	Gen.	1.	Ps.	1.
	8	"	16.	"	10.
	15	"	29.	"	19.
	22	"	43.	"	28.
	29	Ex.	7.	"	37.
Feb.	5	"	21.	"	46.
	12	"	35.	"	55.
	19	Lev.	9.	"	64.
	26	"	23.	"	73.
Mar.	5	Num.	10.	"	82.
	12	"	24.	"	91.
	19	Deut.	2.	"	100.
	26	"	16.	"	109.
Apl.	2	"	30.	"	119.
	9	Josh.	10.	"	119v145.
	16	"	24.	"	127.
	23	Judg.	14.	"	138.
	30	1 Sam.	3.	"	147.
May	7	"	17.	Prov.	6.
	14	"	31.	"	15.
	21	2 "	14.	"	24.
	28	1 Kgs.	4.	Eccl.	2.
June	4	"	18.	"	11.
	11	2 "	10.	Sol. Song	8.
	18	"	24.	Matt.	9.
	25	1 Chr.	18.	"	18.
July	2	1 "	27.	"	27.
	9	2 "	12.	Mk.	8.
	16	"	26.	Lk.	1.
	23	Ezra	4.	"	10.
	30	Neh.	8.	"	19.
Aug.	6	Esth.	9.	John	4.
	13	Job	13.	"	13.
	20	"	27.	Acts	1.
	27	"	41.	"	10.
Sept.	3	Isaiah	13.	"	19.
	10	"	27.	"	28.
	17	"	41.	Rom.	9.
	24	"	55.	1 Cor.	2.
Oct.	1	Jer.	3.	"	11.
	8	"	17.	2 "	4.
	15	"	31.	"	13.
	22	"	45.	Eph.	3.
	29	Ezek.	2.	Col.	2.
Nov.	5	"	16.	2 Thess.	2.
	12	"	30.	2 Tim.	2.
	19	"	44.	Heb.	8.
	26	Dan.	10.	"	12.
Dec.	3	Hos.	12.	1 Pet.	2.
	10	Am.	9.	1 John	4.
	17	Nah.	2.	Rev.	6.
	24	Zech.	5.	"	14.

WILL YOU BEGIN NOW AND PERSEVERE?

—Independent.

Reading for Youth.

The Two Rules, and how they Worked.

"Here are two rules for you, Fred," said Giles Warner, looking up from the paper he was reading, and addressing a younger brother, who was sitting by the stove, playing with a favorite dog.

"Well, what are they? let's have them," said Fred, suspending his sport with the dog.

"The first is, 'Never get vexed with any thing you can help.' The second is, 'Never get vexed with anything you can't help.'"

"Are not these rules as applicable to you as to me?" inquired Fred, archly.

"No doubt of that," replied Giles good-humoredly; "but then it is so much easier to hand over a piece of good advice to another than to keep it for one's own personal use. It is a kind of generosity that don't require any self-denial." Fred laughed.

"But what say you," continued Giles, "to these rules? How would it work if we should adopt them?"

"I think they take a pretty wide and pretty clean sweep," said Fred. "They don't leave a fellow any chance at all to get vexed."

"That might be an objection to them," said Giles, "if any one was wiser, better or happier, for getting vexed. I think they are sensible rules. It is foolish to vex ourselves about anything that can be helped, and it is useless to vex ourselves about what can't be helped. Let us assist each other to remember and obey these two simple rules. What say you?"

"I'll agree to it," said Fred, who was [illegible] brother proposed good-humoredly.

"That's too bad!" exclaimed Fred the next morning, while making his preparations for school.

"What is the matter?" inquired Giles.

"I have broken my shoestring, and it is vexatious. I am in such a hurry."

"It is vexatious, no doubt," replied Giles, "but you must not get vexed; for this is one of the things that can be helped. You can find a string in the left corner of the upper drawer of mother's bureau."

"But we shall be late at school," said Fred.

"No we shan't," said Giles. "We shall only have to walk a little faster. Besides, if you keep cool, you will find the string and put it in much sooner than you can if you become vexed and worried."

"That's true," said Fred, as he started for the string, quite restored to good humor.

Several opportunities occurred during the day for putting in practice the newly adopted rules. The last was this:—

In the evening, Giles broke the blade of his knife, while whittling a hard piece of wood.

"It can't be helped," said Fred, "so you must not get vexed about it."

"It might have been helped," said Giles, "but I can do better than to fret about it. I can learn a lesson of care for the future, which may some day save a knife more valuable than this. These rules work well. Let's try them to-morrow."

The next morning Fred devoted an hour before school to writing a composition. After he had written half a dozen lines, his mother called him off to do something for her. During his absence, his sister Lucy made use of his pen and ink to write her name in a school-book. In doing this, she carelessly let fall a drop of ink on the page he was writing. Fred returned while she was busily employed in doing what she could to repair the mischief.

"You have made a great blot on my composition," he exclaimed, looking over her shoulder.

"I am very sorry. I did not mean to do it," said Lucy.

Fred was so vexed that he would have answered his sister very roughly if Giles had not interposed.

"Take care, Fred; you know the thing is done, and can't be helped."

Fred tried hard to suppress his vexation. "I know it was an accident," he said pleasantly, after a brief struggle with himself.

Lucy left the room, and Fred sat down again to his composition. After a moment, he looked up. "No great harm has been done, after all," he said. "Two or three alterations are much needed, and, if I write them over again, I can make them."

"So much for a cool head, and not getting vexed," said Giles, laughing. "Our rules work well."

At night, Fred tore his pants while climbing over a fence.

"That's too bad," said he.

"It can be helped," said Giles; "they can be mended."

"The way to help it is what troubles me," said Fred. "I don't like to ask mother, she has so much to do."

Giles proposed that Fred should get over this difficulty by asking Lucy to do the job for him, as her mother had learned her to mend very neatly. Fred was at first not disposed to adopt this measure. He knew that Lucy disliked mending very much, and was afraid she would be cross, if asked to do it; but he at last decided to run the risk of that. They found Lucy busily employed with a piece of embroidery, and quite absorbed with her work. Fred looked significantly at Giles when he saw how his sister was occupied; but he concluded he had gone too far to retreat, and must make a bold push.

"I wish to ask a great favor of you, Lucy," said Fred; "but I fear I have come in the wrong time."

"What do you want?" said Lucy.

"I'm almost afraid to tell you. It's too bad to ask you to leave that bewitching work to do what I know you dislike."

"You are a great while getting to what is wanted," said Lucy, laughing. "Come, out with it."

Fred thus encouraged, held up his foot and displayed the rent.

"Well, take them off, and I will do my best," said Lucy, cheerfully.

"You are a dear, good sister," said Fred. "When I saw what you were about, I thought that you would not be willing to do it."

"My uncommon amiability quite puzzles you, does it?" said Lucy, laughing. "I shall have to let you into the secret. To tell the truth, I have been thinking all day what I could do for you in return for your not getting vexed with me for blotting your composition. So now you have it."

"So much for our rules," exclaimed Giles, triumphantly. "They work to a charm."

"What rules?" inquired Lucy.

"We must tell Lucy all about it," said Giles.

They did tell her all about it, and the result was, that she agreed to join them in trying the new rules.—Merry's Museum.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year.....$2.00
For a single copy 6 months.....1.00
For a single copy, 3 months.....50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months...8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months...15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months...22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address, so that in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county, and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year in any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS [illegible] to prepay the postage [illegible] the above: i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 227. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1860. VOL. X. NO. 20.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY F. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Selected for the Crisis by E. P. B.

Treasures of Thought.

If thou hast thrown a glorious thought
Upon life's common ways,
Should other men the gain have caught,
Fret not to lose the praise.

Great thinker, often thou shalt find,
While folly plunders fame,
To thy rich store the crowd is blind,
Nor knows thy very name.

What matter that, if thou uncoil
The soul that God has given,
Not in the world's mean eye to toil,
But in the sight of Heaven?

If thou art true, yet in thee lurks
For fame a human sigh;
To nature go, and see how works
The handmaid of the sky.

Her own deep bounty she forgets
Is full of germs and seeds,
Nor glorifies herself, nor sets
Her flowers above her weeds.

She hides the modest leaves between,
She loves untrodden roads;
Her richest treasures are not seen
By any eye but God's.

Accept the lesson. Look not for
Reward; far out thee chase
All selfish ends, and ask no more
Than to fulfill thy place.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

"The Beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

BY J. MCCAMMON.

"The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."—Rev. 17: 8.

(Continued.)

Now following the order of interpretation here given, that wherever the figure of a beast is set forth, a king or kingdom is the true interpretation, we shall proceed to consider the beast that John saw come up from or out of the sea. And here we would remark that this beast differed from the dragon in this one respect; that, whereas the dragon had the crowns upon his heads, the beast has them upon his horns, and upon his heads the name blasphemy. And he was like a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion. Here, then, we have represented by this figure an animal combining within itself all the wildness and untameableness of the leopard, the power and the strength of the lion, united with all that is cruel and ferocious in the bear. And upon his heads the name BLASPHEMY. Now using the name or attributes of Deity and applying them to men, or applying the word holy or holiness to anything short of Deity, may be considered blasphemous; we think it will not be hard to find a contemporary on which these marks can be clearly seen. By referring to the 17th chapter and to the double interpretation of the angel, the seven heads are seven mountains, and they are also seven kings, or seven great and high elevations, which have for their support the power and authority of kings. These, says Adam Clarke, are the seven electorates of the German Empire; for on them are indelibly stamped the name blasphemy. But I shall give it in his own language: "Because the Electors are styled, Sacri, Imperii, Principes, Electores, Princes Electors of the holy empire; sacri Romani Imperii, Electores, Electors of the Holy Roman empire." And here the apostle saw the great harlot sitting as on a beast with seven heads and ten horns, and covered with the names of blasphemy.

Having, as we think, placed upon her one legible mark, and in the summing up of the whole we shall have to refer to this chapter again, we will pass to the consideration of the next clause; "And the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and his great authority (the authority he possessed as Emperor); and I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast. And they worshiped the dragon which gave power to the beast; and they worshiped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast?" [illegible]

The literal fulfillment of this part of the prophetic emblem took place when Pepin gave his throne and his armies and a great part of Italy, as Peter's patrimony, to the Pope; but as to the time they were given, and as to what took place just before it, we would invite the particular attention of the reader; as on the proper understanding of this point the hinge turns, and the key is given by which we are enabled to point with some tolerable degree of certainty to the time the 1260 days or years begin. But before we give the historical argument on this subject, a few other points must be considered.

"And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed." The head here spoken of was the seventh head in the dragonic form, and that it was wounded to death with the sword was clearly shown in the former part of our subject, when the western Roman empire was overrun by hordes of barbarians, and the last vestige of that great empire was blotted out.

And his deadly wound was healed. This was effected, says a certain writer, by Charlemagne, who with his successors, assumed all the marks of the ancient Emperors of the west, with the titles of semper Augustus, sacred Majesty, first Prince of the sacred world, temporal Chief of the Christian people, and Rector or temporal Chief of the Faithful in Germany. They not only assumed a blasphemous title, sacred Majesty, but all the power of this mighty conquor, Charlemagne, and those that succeeded him, was given in support of the Latin empire, which supported the Latin or Roman Catholic Church; and by their conversion to the Roman Catholic faith, the Roman Empire of Germany gave its great power to extending this form of religion over the various states and monarchies of Europe. Now here are two, Pepin and Charlemagne, whose strength have been given in restoring the dragon power though in a new dress and under a new name, but still the same tyrannical monster. Now may it be truly said that the head that was wounded to death with the sword was healed. Then was it said, "And all the world wondered after the beast;" and they worshiped the dragon and the beast. Wondered, here, would represent the great astonishment with which they were filled when they saw this great empire, whose very existence had been blotted out, now rise as though by magic a mighty Imperial Hierarchy, seated on the throne of the Cæsars; the great city of Rome again become the seat of empire, and the Vatican (the Pope's palace) the place from which his bulls and anathemas were hurled forth that made princes and potentates tremble. And the people worshiped the dragon, and they worshiped the beast, for in their astonishment they knew not which to worship. For in those times the worship of God and the Lamb was not known. But now might be seen that man of sin, that mystery of iniquity, who had long since commenced his work, whom the Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth and destroy with the brightness of his coming.

We will now introduce to the reader the second figure in this chapter.

"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by the sword and did live. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed."

We have previously shown that beasts in every place represent kingdoms, and in all places where the word kingdom is used, several things are implied; first, royalty; second, dominion; third, power. The first beast rose out of the sea, and as seen in Chap. 17, the sea here represents people, nations, tongues and languages. But the second rose out of the earth, which might well be said, out of the dominion of the Latin empire; and that he assumed both royalty and power will be hereafter shown. And he had two horns like a lamb. This would represent meekness,—as Christ is represented by a lamb—"the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." But Christ is also represented by a lion, the Lion of the tribe of Judah. Now as lions represent royalty, here are two particulars by which this beast might be said to represent the kingdom of Christ. But the kingdom of Christ is nowhere represented by a beast, but by a rock, a chief foundation stone, the stone cut out without hands, that became a great mountain and filled the whole earth. Therefore while they have the appearance of lambs, if you will but look to the feet, they have the claws of the lion. But we have already said that he rose out of the dominion of the Latin empire; then he must partake of the nature of that empire; yet, as his imperial power is represented by the horns of a lamb, then it must be an ecclesiastical power here represented.

But he spoke as a dragon. This might be easily shown to mean the Latin language, as it was in this language that the dragon's voice was heard, and the same in which the beast uttered his thunders; which now might be said to be echoed by this second beast, whose further development can be found in the two great arms of the Roman Catholic Church, the clergy or ministers, both regular and secular. The first of these including all the various orders of the monastic life, both monks and friars; the second would include the whole body of the parochial clergy, from the cardinals down, including bishops, archbishops and priests. We are informed that this monastic order was divided by Gregory X. in a general council which he assembled at Lyons, in 1272, into the four following societies: the Dominicans, Franciscans, Carmelites, and Hermits of St. Augustine. These orders were permitted by the pontiffs to travel everywhere as instructors of the people, teachers of youth, and in their lamb-like simplicity they became feet to the lame, eyes to the blind, and to a superstitious nation, a kind of demi-gods before whom they bowed with becoming reverence. Here is a kingdom of Priests, whose power and great authority are everywhere acknowledged; and this power was exercised both as the power of the first beast and in his presence, causing all the earth and those who dwell therein to pay homage to the first beast whose deadly wound was healed. This is easily seen by a glance at the great power these armies of priests, which covered the land like locusts for numbers, held over the minds and consciences of the people, saying to those that dwelt on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, that had a wound by a sword and was healed. Here the figure changes; first they are made to do homage to that imperial power that sustained the Latin church; and now they are called upon to make an image to the beast. This image was something made; it neither rose from the sea, nor yet did it spring out of the earth; it must then be manufactured out of something already in existence. Now in this great and complicated hierarchy there is a college of Cardinals, who with their respective head would answer to the Sanhedrim of the Jews; and following the Jewish figure, they choose one from among themselves, by casting lots. He is only a man. When thus chosen they place him upon a throne, and then with great dignity put the crown upon his head, and with all reverence bow the knee and kiss his feet. He is the representative head of all the power of these two beasts; we call him Pope.

(To be continued.)

For the Crisis.

To those Seeking for the Baptism of the Spirit.

"I feel that there is something wanting." Thus writes one who was first an Orthodox, then a Methodist, then an Adventist, and lastly a Seventh-day Adventist; but still, she says, "there is something wanting." The articles on "Christian Experience" have led her to realize, perhaps, more deeply her lack, and she writes me her feelings. She is longing for this certain something, that will fill the void within far more than creeds, but finds herself beset with clouds and fears. As others have written me similarly, and the sister did not give me the name of the State where she resides, I thought I would write a "general epistle," especially for the benefit of those who with her are conscious "that there is something wanting."

You have long felt that you needed something more in your heart than you possessed. You have been conscious of a lack within, a lack of power—power to exercise appropriating faith—power to resist temptation—power to testify effectually for God—power to labor efficiently for perishing souls. For this power, you have long tarried at the throne of grace. Again and again, you have besought God with earnestness and tears, to bestow upon you the gifts of power—the baptism of the Holy Ghost. You have dedicated, and re-dedicated yourself, your all to God, and entreated him to accept the offering and send down the consuming fire. You have looked upward to see the fire descend, but beholding it not, you have struggled, agonized, and wrestled on for the blessing. But it comes not. What is the matter? Have you not consecrated yourself to God? Is it not your will to be His, wholly His? O, yes, the trouble is not here. Have you not prayed often, and fervently, and agonizingly for the blessing? Yes, oh, yes, therefore the trouble is not here. Have you not waited, and expected the overwhelming baptism—the glorious manifestation—the tongue of flame? "O, yes," say you, "I have expected this, and so long has it delayed, I really fear that it is not for me, that there is something I have not given up, that I do not see, and I don't know what to do. It really seems to me as though I had done all I could, and yet the blessing comes not." One question, earnest seeker. Hast thou, in the midst of thy consecrations, thy pleadings, thy wrestlings, thy tears, come yet to this one point, "I believe that I receive the blessing that I desire?" If not, all thy prayers, all thy agony of soul, all thy tears have lacked one essential, saving qualification.

Hark! Jesus speaks. He is addressing a woman. "Thy faith hath saved thee." Not her importunity, not her tears, but her faith. Now for all thou hast so long sought, so earnestly sought, and done all thou couldst do, as it seemed to thee, thou never hast as yet complied with this one gospel rule:—All things whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." You have been desiring, more than anything else, to receive the baptism of the Spirit—the establishing grace, that all your soul might be filled with the fulness of God. Now whenever you comply with the condition, "believe that ye receive," not shall receive, not have received, but that ye receive, just now while you are asking, the thing for which you have been panting, asking. It don't say "believe that ye receive them and ye shall receive something else, but it says, "ye shall receive them," the very blessing believed for. "O, but," says one, "I have no evidence that I receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost. When the disciples received it, it came like a rushing wind. There was a sound in it, and there were visible tongues of fire; now when I hear the sound, and see the fire, I will believe." No, you will not believe when you see all this. There is no room for faith after such visible manifestations. When you know that you have anything, you no longer believe that you have.

Let me illustrate this by supposing a case. You are very needy of money to meet a certain demand against you. You have heard of an individual who possessed immense wealth, and with it a disposition to help all the needy who would apply to him for assistance; none ever sought unto him in vain. He extends a cordial invitation to all who are destitute, irrespective of merit, to apply to him for assistance. Being acquainted with these facts, you go to him for aid. You state your request. He hands to you a sealed envelope, and tells you to present that to your creditor, and he will release you from your obligation. Now you do not see anything but a plain envelope. You press it with your hands, it seems to be empty—you can feel nothing. What is the result? The result will be just in accordance with your faith. If you say, "Why, I expected that he would give me the shining gold, that I could carry to my creditor, and thereby pay my debt, but here is nothing but a plain envelope, I do not believe that he will accept this, certainly." Then you will go home sad and burdened in heart.

But if you have implicit faith in the word of him whom you address, although you see no gold, nor feel ought except the light envelope, which is apparently empty, yet as he assures you that what you have desired is there, and if you present it to your creditor, he will release you, you believe that you receive just what you asked, and with thanks to your benefactor, you hasten to the door of him who has a demand against you. Unhesitatingly you present the envelope—no fears that you have been deceived, and that the man will turn you away indignantly, no, no, the word of your benefactor is not to be doubted for a moment. The envelope is opened, and a bank-note taken therefrom equal to the sum you owe, and he gives you up your note fully endorsed, releasing you from further obligations. Do you now believe? O, no, the faith was previous to the sight of the bank-note, and the reception of your own, for then you exchanged the believe so, for the know so.

Just so in regard to the blessing. The belief—the faith that claims the promise, that relies, and walks out on God's word, is prior to the consciousness, the internal witness of possession. Had not the man believed, he would not have had his note, establishing unquestionably his release from debt. "The promise of the Father" is the plain envelope, in which is sealed the baptism of the Holy Ghost. [illegible] it at heaven's bank; faith is [illegible] receive it up to God, and [illegible] will receive the feeling consciousness of actual possession, even the inward witness of the Spirit. But it is "he that believeth hath the witness in himself." When this is received, then you will no longer feel this void within—this lack of power; no longer exclaim, "there is something wanting."

M. D. W.

For the Crisis.

An Old Pilgrim.

Coming up the mountains a few days since, I overtook an old man with two canes making his way along with no inconsiderable effort. Passing him but a few rods, I was much impressed to stop and take him in. He readily accepted an invitation, and soon was seated by my side.

"Well," says I to the stranger, "you are almost through with this life.

"Yes," says he, "I am ninety-six years old, but, thank God, I gave my heart to the Lord eighty-four years ago."

"Have you been serving the Lord faithfully for eighty-four years?"

"No; for the first three years after I gave my heart to God, I thought Jesus was soon to come (this was soon after the darkening of the sun in 1780); but in studying my Bible more I thought it might be some years in the future. So I bought a farm, joined the Presbyterian church, and got out of the path, and so lived on formality."

"Well, you found it pretty dry food, I conclude?"

"Yes, indeed; but fifty-one years ago the Lord called after me and put me in the path again, and so I was baptized, and they dropped my name from the church book; and since then I have not been connected with any church."

By this time I began to feel pretty well satisfied with my passenger. Out from sectarianism—name off the church book, and still in the path, blessed be God!

"And you have been holding on fifty-one years?"

"Yes; though sometimes I get almost disheartened; but when I go to my Bible and see how strong and plump the promises are, I cannot give it up."

"You remember the dark day?"

"Yes, and the 'dark night' too; and how the people gathered together to talk about it, and Jesus' coming."

"Well, you may yet live to see that day."

"I know that some people called Adventists tell me so, and I do not know but you are one of them. But if I go down into the grave, I know I shall not sleep there but a little while before He will wake me up!"

"You expect to live again in the flesh then?"

"O yes, for Job says, 'Though worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God.'"

"That's it; you have got hold of the root of the matter." But here I had to leave him. Said the old pilgrim in conclusion:

"I am thankful to that Providence that has given me such good company this morning." And with a heart full of thanksgiving to God, and blessings for the old pilgrim, I went on my way rejoicing. Oh how glad I am that God has ever called me to his kingdom and glory!

H. PRATT.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts on the New Year.

BELOVED BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—It is pleasant to remember that every revolving year is wafting us onward to the glorious future. As he who fights for a corruptible crown urges the battle with increasing ardor as the hour of victory appears near; so should it be with the christian. So the holy Word exhorts us. "And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." —Rom. 13: 11, 12.

The period of our salvation, to which the apostle refers, is not the hour of death, for that consigns us to a state of entire unconsciousness; Eccl. 9: 5; 6: 10; Ps. 115: 17; etc; and to eternal annihilation, if there is no resurrection of the dead. 1 Cor. 15: 18. Human tradition and God's eternal truth are at variance on this point. The latter connects our salvation with the coming of the Lord from heaven. "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin (or sin offering, see verse 26) unto SALVATION." [illegible] 28; Col. 3: 4.

Dearly beloved, this [illegible] day draws near, wh[illegible] dren have some affecting sense of the precious, revealed truths of his Word, and of the tremendous scenes which are soon to open upon an astonished and sinful world! Some apprehension of the duties of our calling. But when these scenes actually unfold to our view, will it not seem to us that even in our most zealous seasons of devotion to the service of God, we have been but half awake to the duties of our high calling, and to the obligations of redeeming love?

God grant, in infinite mercy, that the time past may suffice us, for our lukewarmness, our backslidings, our inordinate attachment to the things of the present world, and the neglect of private devotion, and other christian duties. In the solemn consciousness that the divine record concerning us may be, "This year thou shalt die," let us, in divine strength, resolve that the fleeting moments of remaining time shall find us more holy. More like Him who said, "I delight to do thy will, O my God." More like our blessed Exemplar "who went about doing good." More like Him who said, "The cup which my Father hath given me shall I not drink it?"

Too often do we forget the command given by the Master to every disciple, "Go work in my vineyard." Too unmindful are we of the high reward which, through infinite grace, awaits the faithful laborer. Too insensible are we of the wretched condition of sinners around us hastening to eternal destruction, who may be saved by divine favor through our instrumentality. Dear Father in heaven, "so teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

H. C.

Philadelphia, Jan. 9th, 1860.

For the Crisis.

Our Statistical Report.

PREPARED BY DANIEL T. TAYLOR.

No. 2.

I. The object and design. At first I proposed a publication of all the names of the ministers in the columns of the Advent papers, provided all were willing. But this idea was soon abandoned. And as to publishing their names with indices of their peculiar views attached, I think there are many objections to such a plan. Still it might be desirable for all to know each other's name and views as I do generally. One excellent Elder said himself and colleague did not wish to have their views published, "for," said he, "we may change our minds some day or other." Our answer to such is, then let all men know it. We should believe no doctrine of which we are ashamed. I have the names all on my list with views in the main, but shall only deal in generalities and mention no names. Quite a number have supposed it was my design to form a book out of my gathered material, but this idea was not for a moment ever entertained. Thus thinking, some replied lengthily and elaborately in spite of expressed wishes for brevity in reply. Many have written me a whole page or more, giving "a reason for the hope within them," in a style of disputation—all of which was gratuitous. I wanted little more than monosyllables for answers. Yet one good brother sent me twenty-two closely crowded foolscap pages in reply to my twelve questions, and wound up with saying, "I have endeavored to answer your call as briefly as I could and make myself understood." He clearly misunderstood my call. My object was in part stated in No. I. of this series. It was to exhibit our real numbers in the ministry; to know how that ministry stood on the three great questions that are agitated among them, viz., the Sabbath, the Millennium, and the nature and destiny of sinners; to ascertain the residence of each and all; to find out their apportionment among the different states and provinces; to inquire for the sick and aged, and know if their wants were supplied; to know the relative proportion of pastors and evangelists, the former class of which our churches greatly stand in need; to search out who were idle from choice, having retired from the field, and if possible to stir them once more into action; to gather and use the moral force of religious statistics as all other churches do; and finally, to work for the good of all and the union and harmony of the general body of believers in this country who are looking for the return of [illegible] to gather his elect and establ[illegible] [illegible]ing kingdom [illegible] a source of satisfaction [illegible] to receive so many letters from the brethren, and to witness their sacrificing spirit in their field of toil and labor, and their steadfast devotion to God and truth. I have been pleased to know that hundreds were proclaiming the near coming of our Lord, of whose very existence I had previously known nothing. And it was also pleasing to read from the pen of one, "My heart leaped for joy when I saw your call to ministers, and your circular in the Herald of June 10th. It seems to me that the Lord has moved you to take hold of this work, etc." Another and a stranger,—"I cannot think you have designed evil in this movement." Another—"I see you are engaged in a landable work, and one of interest to many." Another—"Go on, Bro. T——." Another—"I wish you success." Another—"I am interested in your inquiries." Another—"I am glad that you have undertaken this work." And still another, "Go on, my brother, with the work, and may God bless the undertaking,"—and the like. Others showed their good will by sending all the information possible; one forwarding forty-two names, another fifty, another sixty, another sixty-two, and still another one hundred and thirty-three. In some instances names of clergymen who belong to other denominations have been sent, but these, so far as known, have been erased from the list, as they were not intended to be included in the census.

III. The number. The result of this matter is, I have collected the names and residences of nearly six hundred individuals scattered throughout nineteen states with Canada and Nova Scotia, who in the true sense of the word may be called Adventists, and who, though differing in their views of scripture doctrines, agree in believing and proclaiming the speedy advent of Christ to reign in person on earth. The following table will show their locality:

Maine	[illegible]
New Hampshire	[illegible]
Vermont	[illegible]
Massachusetts	[illegible]
Connecticut	[illegible]
Rhode Island	[illegible]
New York	[illegible]
New Jersey	[illegible]
Pennsylvania	[illegible]
Ohio	[illegible]
Indiana	[illegible]
Illinois	[illegible]
Michigan	[illegible]
Wisconsin	[illegible]
Iowa	[illegible]
Minnesota	[illegible]
Missouri	[illegible]
Kentucky	[illegible]
Arkansas	[illegible]
Canada West	[illegible]
Canada East	[illegible]
Nova Scotia	[illegible]
Unsettled and Unknown	[illegible]
Total	[illegible]

The foregoing does not include those who pass as exhorters only, nor some half dozen ministers whose names I have lately seen but omitted to write them down. And I have reason to suppose there may be some whose names have never reached me. These added to the above sum would cause the whole amount to exceed six hundred. It is at least safe to state this number, roundly, as the sum total. Five females are included in the list, also four colored ministers and two Indians. Not all the number are now fully devoted to the ministry, but all have preached; and the great majority do now more or less; some are sick, while others—and they are too many—are retired temporarily or more permanently from the field of ministerial labor.

The reader will please bear in mind that my list embraces a wide range. It takes in all who at the East assume to maintain the views in general of William Miller. It includes all who at the West hold the English Literalist view of prophecy as presented in the doctrines of the Age to Come. It includes all who make more prominent than the Second Advent, the annihilation of sinful beings at the judgment. It takes in all who, with the Seventh Day Baptists, regard only the Saturday instead of Sunday as being truly Sabbatical. It embraces all who whether they be [illegible] millenarian or Premillennial see the coming of the Lord to be at hand. In fine, all who may be represented by the doctrines of the leading Adventual papers, whether printed at Battle Creek, Rochester, [illegible] Haven, New York, or Boston [illegible] ject to the name Advent[illegible] dividually, or in [illegible] Christians [illegible] holding [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Man in Death is Unconscious.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. I.

[illegible] these articles on the above theme, my only object is, the glory of God, in attempting to secure which, I hope that some of the numerous readers of the "Crisis" may be led to more highly appreciate "the salvation [illegible] Jesus with eternal glory."—2 Tim. 2: 10. In order to present the thoughts which I wish to suggest [illegible] possible, I will adopt [illegible] Gen. 2: 7, which will be divided in the following manner, exhibiting [illegible] history:

Prop. I. And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground," "Haadamah."

Prop. II. And the Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life.

Prop. III. And man became a living soul.

The event defined in the first proposition, is the creation of man, and therefore invites our attention to the question:—What is man?—Ps. 8: 4. What is his origin, and what elements are so arranged as to make him a man? We will permit the word of God to answer our inquiries. And the Lord God formed MAN of the DUST of the ground. In the sweat of thy (the man's) face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for OUT OF IT WAST THOU taken; for DUST THOU art, and unto DUST shalt THOU return. For he knoweth OUR frame; he remembereth that WE are DUST. The first MAN is of the earth, EARTHY. . . . As is the earthy such are THEY also that are earthy. He that is of the EARTH is earthly and speaketh of the earth. And he (Jesus) said unto them, Ye are from BENEATH; I am FROM ABOVE: ye are of this world; (Gr. Kosmou.) I am NOT of THIS world. (Gr. Kosmou.)—Gen. 2: 17; Gen. 3: 19; Ps. 103: 14; 1 Cor. 15: 47, 48; John 3: 31; John 8: 23.

What language could more clearly affirm what man is,—what elements he is composed of, and his origin, than the above Scripture record? "Man is of the dust"—"of the earth"—"is earthy"—"is earthly"—"speaketh of the earth"—(a theme of contemplation like himself,)—was taken "out of the ground," and he is "from BENEATH." How very plain and simple are these facts.

In all the word of God, we cannot find one word that will deny the positive fact that the first MAN and his POSTERITY, which he begat in his OWN likeness and image, (Gen. 5: 3) are made of DUST and came out of the GROUND, and therefore "of the earth, earthy." In Dr. Kitto's Biblical Literature, Vol. 1, P. 59, Art. Adam, Gen. 2: 7 is rendered thus:—"And Jehovah God formed the man, (Heb. the Adam) dust of the ground (haadamah) and blew into HIS nostrils the breath of life; and the man became a living animal." "ADAM," then, was the natural name of the first "man." The element [illegible] the first man was composed, and by which he was constituted a "man," evidently gave origin to the name, "Adam." It is certainly no arbitrary term employed to designate a being, but it is the word which only affirms in its definition the positive fact, of man's earthy nature and composition. Compare Gen. 2: 19 with Gen. 2: 7, observing the marginal reading. "Adam, the man," is "dust of the ground." "The Lord God formed MAN (Margin dust of the ground,) of the dust of the ground." This formation "of the dust of the ground" is first named "ADAM," in Gen. 2: 19, in our present translation, which name signifies, "dust of the ground," as quoted from Dr. Kitto's Biblical Literature. This then is perfectly natural and easy. A name derived from man's origin and composition. This organic mechanism is that which is always and indeed ONLY named.

In generations after Adam, and indeed the first, second, and third sons of Adam, were designated by terms that expressed some fact relating to their circumstances of birth or history. "Cain" denotes "gotten or acquired:" "Seth," "appointed or put." It is not the spirit or soul that is called man, and these spirits distinguished by the names Cain, Abel and Seth. We have not [illegible] of this in the Bible, therefore [illegible] the same time, designated a [illegible] his future history: "Father of a [illegible] multitude, and also the name by [illegible] a certain formation of dust was [illegible] and distinguished from another certain formation of dust called Isaac, and [illegible] called Jacob, and yet another [illegible] of David. "For David [illegible] to the heavens. Acts 2: [illegible] the time [illegible] of the [illegible] DAVID, [illegible]

[illegible] to be "strengthened with might by" the [illegible] Spirit, that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith."—Eph. 3: 16, 17. Then there is an "old man," and a "new man."—Eph. 4: 20—24; Col. 3: 9—11. And finally there is a "hidden man."—1 Pet. 3: 4. Now if these all denote living men, how many have we? Well, we have an "outward man"—an "inward man"—an "inner man"—an "old man"—a "new man"—and a "hidden man." In all six men beside ourselves. At any rate there are seven of us in all. We certainly ought not to be lonesome. But there appears to be one of the six whose society is not very agreeable to the remaining five, and that one is, "The OLD man, with his deeds." He is on the outside, being on and not in, and the parties will never agree, he must be "put off." O what jargon would be made of our Bibles, if we were to attempt to carry out strictly the theory of man's conscious existence between death and the resurrection, and modern immortal soulism, the bone and sinew of modern theology.

But I forbear. Who are these men? Well, "the inward and inner man," in Rom. 7: 22; 2 Cor. 4: 16; Eph. 3: 16, 17, is Christ in your hearts by faith, not personally, for he is at the right hand of God having ascended into the heavens, but in the testimony of the word of God, which if believed and obeyed will make us like Christ. The same is true of "the new man" in Eph. 4: 20—24, and Col. 3: 9—11. It is "the new man" which takes the place of that "old man;" which "new man" "is created in righteousness and true holiness." Therefore the old man has to be "put off," that the new man may be "put on." See Rom. 13: 14. "But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof." Obey this, and then "the hidden man of the heart" will be developed "in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."—1 Pet. 3: 4. There is not an unconverted sinner in the world, that is in possession of that, which is defined to be, the "inward—inner—new, or hidden man." It is neither IN him, or ON him. He has nothing but that which is represented by "the old man," and he or that is on him, and must be "crucified" and "put off," before the poor, unconverted sinner can obtain, or "put on the new man."—Rom. 6: 6; Eph. 3: 22—24; Col. 3: 8—14. This phrase, "old man and new man, etc, is then only a figurative use of the term "man," not employed to express a living entity, but a state and character. The unconverted sinner then is only a dust-man, with, figuratively speaking, an "old man" on him: i. e., his natural state of sinfulness," "which is corrupt," (the opposite of "the hidden man") "according to the deceitful lusts." Compare Eph. 4: 22, and 1 Pet. 3: 4. The change of the moral nature of the sinner does not destroy his natural affinity to the dust, and neither is it to be destroyed until the dust-man is raised from the dead in the resurrection, and not then,—unless the dust-man has previously "put on the new man," or is a christian.

So God has limited the meaning of the word man when applied to a living, sentient creature, to the LITERAL ORGANISM, and in no instance is it used to express more than that, only by a figure of speech, and then not a living, sentient being, but a character. Its application to angels is no objection to these positions as will be seen by an examination of the texts which refer to them. Let us believe God in preference to heathenism, and trust in Jesus Christ for future life entirely, giving glory to God. Amen.

For the Crisis.

Rome Quarterly Conference.

According to appointment the brethren came together at Rome, (Town House) Thursday the 5th, and other days following. The weather had been cold, and traveling bad; but a goodly number came from abroad, ready to work for the Lord. But few of the people of Rome came out at first. Two years ago the people were much awakened, and many were reclaimed and converted—while Bro. Sevey labored among them. After that, one of the "Coppersmith" family came and "did them much harm;" since which time the religious interest had nearly subsided, except with the few. Conference commenced well, and as it progressed, God gave the drawing spirit, the people began to come out, and finally listened to the word, which was faithfully and forcibly preached. We do not doubt God will bring good out of it. We are glad we went to Rome, and shall expect to [illegible] in the kingdom of God saved by [illegible] The brethren there kindly en[illegible] with much [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 18, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed;

OR,

How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 4.

We now come to Division II, Sec. 9. As we remarked in our last report from "Doubting Castle," in this section we found "a proposition well calculated to throw us into doubt again." The sentiment is expressed in the following language:—

If the Jews obtained the doctrine in their Chaldean captivity, why, if it was a false notion, did not their prophets and the Son of God set them right?"

"Why not?" seemed to echo all around us, and for a moment, we felt confused in our minds, and almost like giving up in despair, to spend the rest of our days in "Doubting Castle." We had not learned then, as now, to call for proof before we admit an assertion; but supposed when learned men said so, that was evidence enough. In this dilemma, we concluded it was best to proceed with caution, hoping for more light from some quarter. We looked over the settled points, one of which was that no proof could be found that either heathen or Jews believed in the conscious state of the spirit for the first two thousand and five hundred years from the creation of man. We then came down the stream of time nearly one thousand years further, to the Chaldean captivity, and made an observation. In one direction we SAW a historical statement that, "during the long period which elapsed between the Egyptian and the Babylonian servitudes," the Jews appeared to be still ignorant of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul; but some time after the Jews returned from Babylon, the two celebrated sects of the Sadducees and Pharisees arose at Jerusalem.—See Gib. vol. 1, p. 531. When we came to these sects, it was clear that some of the Jews had adopted a belief from some source, that man had an immortal soul. If the doctrine was in the Bible, why had they not believed it before?

The Pharisees were noted for receiving traditions of men, and making them of the same authority as the Scriptures; hence the Savior charges them with "making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered."—Mk. 7: 13. On the other hand, the Sadducees were distinguished for adhering strictly to the teachings of Moses; yet the latter were the ones who opposed the Pharisees, and the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. As the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was not fully developed in the writings of Moses, like the death of the entire man, they believed there would be no resurrection. This was their error. But when the Savior reasoned with them on the subject, he brought proof from Moses which they had overlooked.

The error of the Pharisees was the opposite, i. e., believing the real man does not die, and hence needs no resurrection. The Savior taught his disciples to beware of the doctrines of both.

But we come back to inquire, did the Pharisees get their belief of the conscious state of man in death, from the prophets or from the heathen? If from the prophets, then we can read the same doctrine in their writings. If they got their belief from this source, and the Holy Spirit designed to teach the doctrine of the Pharisees, or the conscious state of the spirit of man after death, this would be a sufficient reason why the prophets should not attempt any correction. When we had got so far in our investigations of this point, we noticed a seeming anxiety among the conductors of "Doubting Castle" to have us leave this section and go on to another. But a voice seemed to say, turn to the prophets and see whether they advocate or condemn the doctrine of the Pharisees. We were aware of one fact, that the Lord always gave timely warning of an approaching error or danger, so that his children could be on the watch and escape from the evil; hence, if he foresaw that important error would be presented to his children, this or any other, we should reasonably expect an early warning through the prophets. At this point we turned back to the prophet David, who wrote more than five hundred years before this sect of the Pharisees arose, and we found him saying, as he was moved by the Holy Spirit, "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in" (sheol, the very place where the Pharisees claimed the soul was conscious) "who shall give thee thanks?"—Ps. 6: 5. When we took the sense of this, we saw it was clearly a warning against the idea that a dead man's spirit was thanking the Lord for its happy situation in sheol, or hades. We then read along a little further, and we found the prophet moved to write concerning the [wic]ked between death and the resurrection. [illegible] "Let the wicked be ashamed, [and let them] be silent in (sheol) the grave." [illegible] we saw was a plain [illegible] Pharisaical notion of [illegible] sheol. The [illegible] spirit is the [illegible] house to another. We continued reading the prophet to see whether the Holy Spirit moved him to approve, or condemn such a notion. Among the last of his writings, he speaks of man and says:—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4. This made the conductors of "Doubting Castle" look blank, but our hearts began to leap for joy. We were then satisfied that the doctrine of the Pharisees was truly "a false notion," and most effectually met by the Holy Spirit, through the prophet.

Although we had found enough to satisfy us; for one "thus saith the Lord" is worth more than all the Jewish traditions and opinions of men the world ever produced; still we felt a desire to look further, and see if there were any more warnings against the conscious state of man in death. We recollected that Solomon, the son of the prophet David, was favored with the gift of wisdom above all other men; and as he was thoroughly instructed in the truths of the Bible, and all true philosophy, we felt anxious to know what he said on this subject. Our conductors again manifested some uneasiness when they found we were about to consult the teachings of the wise man. We opened and read, "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one DIETH SO DIETH the other." We asked ourselves do beasts have souls that keep on thinking when their bodies are dead? Certainly not. Then, if beasts and men die alike, is it true, Solomon, that men do not stop thinking at death? Your father David declared that the thoughts perish the day a man dies. We felt anxious to get a plain, positive statement from you, that will forever settle the point whether the Pharisees got their doctrine from the Bible, when they taught that souls of dead men think. Just at this time our eye met the instruction of the wise man, where he says:—"The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not any thing."—Eccl. 9: 5. No form of words could be plainer than this. By this time every doubt was gone, and we shouted "glory" in the midst of the honorable host in "Doubting Castle." We saw it was utterly useless to claim that the Jews got their doctrine of the conscious state of the spirit between death and the resurrection, from the Bible. And then when we read a little further, we found Solomon clinching all the nails, and making the position so strong, that there was no possibility for a Pharisee to get the least foothold upon the word of the Lord, to sustain his theory of consciousness in sheol, the very place where Josephus, Philo and other Jewish writers put the souls of dead men. The wise man says, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in (sheol) the grave, whither thou goest."—Eccl. 9: 10. We asked ourselves, how much do souls know when they get where there is no work, nor devices, or knowledge nor wisdom? Surely, we thought those who believe that sheol is a place of consciousness. do not know what the Bible teaches, or else they do not believe it. When this point was made so plain to our minds, we said, why will men be deluded by the managers of "Doubting Castle" so long; when they might be delivered so easily, by turning from the Will-with-the-wisp lights of tradition, there employed to illuminate their fallacious propositions, and untruthful assertions; to the clear and steady light of God's word?

We go down the stream of time several hundred years more, and we read in Isa. 38: 18, 19, sheol "CANNOT praise thee . . . the living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day."

Without further examination of the prophets, we saw there was no room for DOUBT that the Lord had spoken again and again in the most positive and plain terms against the conscious state of man between death and the resurrection, as held by the heathen and adopted by the Pharisees; and when the Son of God came and was speaking of their doctrine, he said to his disciples, "beware"!!—Matt. 16: 11, 12. If the Pharisees had received their doctrine from the Bible, the Savior would not have said to his children, when speaking of it, BEWARE!!

Thus we saw that the doctrine of the conscious state of the spirit between death and the resurrection, as held by the Pharisees after their Chaldean captivity, "was a FALSE notion," and most positively met and opposed by the prophets and Christ.

Napoleon.

A close English observer, a devoted minister of the gospel, who is watching with great carefulness the signs of the times, when speaking of Napoleon Bonaparte III. says:—

"He resembles a prophetic man more nearly than any one who has yet appeared. He has utterly baffled all the scrutiny of mankind; and played with kings and statesmen, not even as children, but as dolls." "A man so strong in character, so deep in council, so fitted at a moment for every emergency of life, has never before appeared." "It seems as if this man were intended to lead on the human race to the last catastrophe, and to plunge it into the vortex of the last conflict between God and man." "Such enormous influence [has] never yet concentrated in a single [illegible] Euphrates and the Western [illegible] limits of the Cæsars; but [illegible] are wide asunder as the Atlantic and the Indies. Italy is but his stepping-stone to a loftier empire; nor can we doubt that his present aim is to dethrone the Pope, and to make himself, like Charlemagne, Emperor of the ROMANS. Whatever may be the issue, it is certain that Napoleon the Third has become, like Napoleon the First, the only NAME in the world, and, in point of influence, far greater than the First."

In speaking of the present relation of Napoleon and the Pope, the writer says:—"The French Empire sustains and supports the Roman 'Woman,' by means of its army, in garrison at Rome. And yet, at the same time, we observe the strange contradiction that the Roman Woman governs the very beast by whom she is supported. The French Emperor is still controlled by the Roman Church, and dares not act in opposition to its interests. Longing to get rid of the Pope, and to take the seven-hilled city for himself, he is obliged to temporise and draw back, through fear of excommunication. The church of Rome, with all the power of the dark ages, could make its excommunication as formidable to Napoleon, in 1860, as it did to Philip the Second, of France; or Otho, of Germany, in the thirteenth century. The "woman," therefore, both governs the Emperor and is supported by the Emperor."

On this account, she says:—"I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."—Rev. 18: 7–8. Her doom must be near, and the coming of the Son of Man, who will vindicate the right. All things seem converging to a point that can not be far in the future. How perilous the situation of the church at the present time, and yet how few seem to realize it. Many are truly sleeping, and hence see no danger. They know not that the enemy is laying his snare about them to take them soon as they awake to a sense of their deplorable condition. Those who really love Jesus will certainly try to keep awake now, so as to be ready when he comes to give him a joyful welcome.

Dear reader, let us live so that we shall be found in the happy number.

Discussion.

Our discussion with Mr. Eli Ballou is to be at Waterbury, Vt., commencing Tuesday evening, Jan. 24th, and continuing three evenings. Question: "Do the Scriptures teach that any part of mankind will be destroyed after they are raised from natural or physical death?"

Political Spiritualism.

From the first, we have been satisfied that Spiritualism would become a political as well as an ecclesiastical institution; and that the two would be associated together. Although Spiritualists for awhile disclaimed any such object, they do not hesitate to declare it now. Their movements, however, are quite secret, like the under-tow of the ocean, but the current is strong. When Spiritualism acts politically, we think it will be a very popular movement, not known generally, that they are the leaders, or that they have any sinister object in view.

In a recent number of the Spiritual Age, the following proposition is laid down:

"Absolute Political Stature is the attainment of Divine Right in One, to Rule and Govern in that, which regards the Subsistence and development of those of the same concentric Race."

The real point in the proposition is, that the civil power should be vested in one individual, or their COMING MAN," whom they expect to be developed this year to a certain extent.

The writer goes on to say:—

"What I understand by Divine Right, is the same as Christ's Right to be 'King of kings, and Lord of lords.'"

It should be remembered that these extracts are from articles, the sentiments of which are received professedly from the spirits. The writer further says:—

"It would, then, be well for the friends of human freedom to inquire whether the greatest freedom is not in the most absolute authority."

"In giving a brief explanation of the principles upon which this object is to be effected, it is to be understood, that first of all, the individual in whom this Divine Right exists and resides, will be fixed upon by the powers of the spirits."

In speaking of the new government, the writer denominates it "A political institution, such as the world has never yet seen, and of which now it has not the remotest idea." He says, when we come under the approaching new government, "There is no more voting for Presidents, Congressmen, and Municipal officers."

The Voice of the Church.

"Brattleboro, Vt., Sept. 1859.

DEAR SIR:—I thank you for your kindness (in sending me the "Voice"), and have long since intended to acknowledge it. The 'Voice of the Church' embodies a vast amount of important information, and is fitted to be exceedingly useful."

EDWARD WINTHROP, M. A.

The above is from one of the ablest writers on prophecy in the country, an Episcopal minister. Let each one who has not a copy obtain one. Price $1. For sale by the publisher, H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I., and at this office.

☞ He that murmurs under a light cross, goes the right way to provoke God to send [a] heavy [illegible]

Our Tract Column.

For the Crisis.

Tract Fund for the West.

A Bro. in C—— sent or gave me 50 cts. for some tracts for circulation in his own locality (a few months ago.) They were sent—50 cts. worth, or 600 pages. It was rather a cold, dead place, I believe, and they stood all alone in the faith of the gospel. To-day, Jan. 16th, I received another letter, which will tell its own story.

"DEAR BRO. HASTINGS,—Enclosed you will find $1 for tracts. I would like to have you forward them as soon as convenient. That you may judge something of what your excellent tracts, the Crisis, and a few books are doing here, I will pen a few lines that I received from a member of one of the churches in this place. He says:—'Dear Friend: I write a few lines that you may know your books and papers are read with more interest than they have been. Now, instead of saying, "I don't want to hear any thing about the doctrine," they say, "Have you any more books?" "Have you got any more papers?" "I like to read them." "How plain it is that the wicked will be destroyed." Another, a member of the —— church, says, "I believe the wicked will be destroyed,"—another member says, "I most want to take the paper myself;" and she is going to take it with me.'

The lady that wrote me this, told me the last time I saw her that one of her neighbors (none of those before mentioned) took up some of the tracts and read them with such eagerness that she could not help but think of a starving person eating a piece of bread.

And now, Bro. Hastings, with these facts before me, I feel very much encouraged to do what I can to scatter the truth around here. We have lived here —— years. Most of the time I have been disheartened and discouraged, and some of the time have felt it was almost hard to stay where there was not one to sympathise with us in the truths which are dearer to me than all things else. But if I can be of any service to my Master I will willingly stay. We should be very glad if we could aid in the western mission, also the Sailor's mission. But our hands are tied for the present, and we must be patient trusting that if time last a while longer, we may be so situated that we can do something more than we now can for the cause of Christ. Please send mostly of Plain Truths, State of the Dead, Forty Questions, and Scripture Searchers. Yours with much love and esteem."

There, read that, some of your poor whining, faint hearts, who have said, "it's no use to try to do any thing—folks won't read, and I won't try to give them a chance." Some who read this have been living all alone for years; why not go to work and get your wares out in sight? folks won't buy truth till they can see how it looks. I believe I have learned something of God's word that is worth knowing. I mean men shall know something about it, and if they do not, it shall not be my fault, so I write. I leave the personalities, the snarls, the quarrels, and the little narrow-souled sectarianism out of the question. I leave the defence of my character from the lies of outsiders and the perils among false brethren, with the Lord God, as did my Master, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, and when he suffered threatened not. I leave the splitting of hairs to those who are good for nothing else. I leave the railing at the churches to those who are as sectarian as the churches are, and who cannot find enough in the Bible to preach, and so must go digging up carrion to gratify those buzzards who like it; but I, for my own part, in the little of life and time which remains, purpose to spread Christ's truth as far as I can, and so show my love to him who has died for me. I think Satan will have to try some new trick before he gets me away from this work.

Well, the tract fund for the west increases slowly. Perhaps it amounts to some $650 now. I have not time yet to reckon it up. Well, I am going ahead, if the Lord permit. I have bought paper enough to make about THIRTEEN HUNDRED THOUSAND PAGES OF TRACTS. I have not paid for all this paper, because I have not the DOLLARS. I shall have to get trusted for the printing and binding of some of them, but it can be done cheaper by the quantity than otherwise, and I shall go ahead and come out right, I have no doubt. Whether the $1000 is raised or not, I trust some tracts will go out which will tell good news to the perishing and the lost.

I have several new Tracts, which will be good, I trust, such as:—

Judson's letter on Dress;—a very good tract for those who are tempted in that point. 12 pages. Price $1 per 100, post paid; 133 copies for $1 by express. "One Thing," by H. L. H. I hope this may do good. 8 pages. 50 cts. per 100. By mail, 70 cts. per 100. Olive Leaves, No. 7, "Living Water," by H. L. H. No. 8, "The Banner." No. 9, "The Blood of Christ." English Tracts, reprinted.—Good. Several new "Leafletts for Letters." "Peace in Christ." "All things are yours." "Now." "Assurance." "Worth Knowing," etc. 4 pages each. 400 sent by mail for $1. "Statement of account between a Christian and his Master." Those who would like to examine the matter, can here see whether it will pay to serve God. The account is drawn up by a man well skilled in reckoning, one Paul, an ancient tent-maker. Price 1 cent single, 25 cts. per 100. Some new Gospel poetry—Nos. 7 and 8. "We would see Jesus," and "A little while." These are sweet and cheering. I hope to scatter them widely.

A preacher from Ill. writes:—

"I hope you may yet see it duty to visit Illinois. You would find some warm friends. The truths you preach and publish are gaining ground in the West. What we need is books and preachers. May the good Lord send them in his own good time."

Well, I would like to go there, but cannot now. Fight away, Bro. C., I'll try to find some cartridges for you. I should be glad to write more, but time [illegible]. I am busy—have lots of letters to write, books to mail, [illegible] and dispatch. I expect to leave here about Feb. 1st. May the Lord guide my way. Pray for me.

"Reasons for my Hope" will be done, I trust, next week. I send them by mail for 50 cts. in cloth; paper, 30 cts. Four copies by mail for $1. I hope it will do some good. It is past ten o'clock, and I must soon close this day's work. God bless you all. Good night. H. L. HASTINGS.

Address Box 3124, New York City, care G. W. Young.

Jan. 13th, 1860.

For the Crisis.

The Sailor's Tract Fund.

"What a great matter a little fire kindleth."

Owing to my time being so much occupied of late, I have not had leisure to agitate the subject of my present undertaking; yet does my will not relax its energy, or my hope grow weak that it shall yet be brought to a happy and abundant fruition. I believe it is rather owing to my own obscurity, than to a lack of interest in the mighty cause which has for its object the enlightenment of so many of our noble fellow men, that funds are so slowly coming in. Yet, this same small, interrupted stream will in time fill the reservoir from which many shall taste of the truth they now are gasping for. The earth is formed of atoms so minute that a million in a scale would scarcely move the balance, and drops compose the liquid vastness of the roaring deep. The spark from a flint might fire a city; and the tallest of our edifices are raised brick after brick. It vain would man, with all his skill and the mighty resources of his mechanical ingenuity, endeavor to lay a foundation where the coral insect builds his walls of ragged adamant.

So God oft makes use of means weak and but little known, to forward work of the most vital import; and I am ambitious, if I may make use of the term, to be made an instrument in His hands of carrying out that work which lies near unto my heart indeed. Much of my life has gone to waste;—whilst others have shown fruit resulting from a diligent labor in the vineyard of the Lord, my vines have brought forth little other than wild grapes, and where others see the starting forth of the healthy blade, I see mixed thickly with the springing corn, the thorns and thistles of the enemy. Past evils cannot be recalled, but errors may be retrieved; and I have prayed anxiously that I might be the honored instrument of throwing that light upon the sailor's mind which would guide him safely into the haven of eternal life.

To accomplish this, I purpose, after a careful digest of the truths which we glory in, to present them to the seamen in the form of a familiar dialogue. This will arrest his attention, and having done so will enable him to comprehend the doctrines of the Bible, divested of those metaphysical subtleties which disgust and confuse his matter-of-fact understanding. The task is one which is not without much labor; but I do not shrink from it; and if the brethren will but help me to publish the work, it will go through in triumph, and the truth will be heard

"Where truth was never heard to sound before."

I know that times are hard, and that there are many calls upon the benevolence of our people; but

"Shall we whose souls are lighted
By wisdom from on high—
Shall we to man benighted,
The lamp of life deny?"

No; we have a duty to perform in holding up the light, and trading upon the talent entrusted to us, that the former may not be hid under a bushel, or the latter buried in the earth. I thank Bro. Stone for his appeal in behalf of the cause, and would say to him and the other brethren, that next to substantial aid, come words of sympathy. And you will see by reading the following extracts that occasionally I have both. A few smaller sums I have received from friends unknown, and from others who do not wish their names to appear, yet their Father which seeth in secret shall reward them openly.

FROM L. GRINNELL.

"BRO. COTTON:—For the spread of truth I enclose one dollar for the publication of tracts for sailors. May the Lord bless and encourage you in your effort to do good."

FROM J. CURTIS.

"Enclosed I send you two dollars for the Sailor's Tract Fund. May the good Lord direct and sustain you in your undertaking, and stir up the hearts of those that have this world's goods, to furnish the means to send the light of the blessed gospel to a class that I believe to be the most noble-hearted of this world."

FROM L. W. H.

"Feeling an interest for those 'who go down to the sea in ships, who do business in great waters,' having a desire that you may prosper in your undertaking to benefit them, I send you enclosed three dollars for this purpose, praying that the blessing of God may attend you and it.

FROM "A BROTHER OF THE CRISIS."

"While acknowledging the unnumbered mercies of 'our Father in heaven' during the past year, I would present a thank-offering in deed as well as in words. Enclosed you will find three dollars, which will add another share to my stock in the sailor's 'Tract Fund.'

This I wish to have cast 'upon the waters,' trusting in the word of the Lord which will not return to him 'void,' that it shall be found 'after many days.' Remember the gracious promise, Bro C.,—'Blessed is he that soweth beside all waters.'

May the good Lord 'strengthen your hands,' and enable you speedily to accomplish the desire of your heart, in liberally scattering the good seed of the word, among those 'that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters.'"

All who are interested in the sailor's welfare, and who can contribute a mite to the Fund, we hope will do so, and soon there will be enough to start the great and glorious work. Let those who cannot give themselves, agitate among those who can, and soon the life-book will be afloat and to the rescue of the perishing tars.

Your brother, JNO. F. COTTON.

Letters to me may be addressed to the "Crisis Box," Boston.

For the Crisis.

"The Common Interest" System.

No. 2.

"Did not the Apostolic church sell all and have all things common?" I cited some Scriptures in my first which show they did not; Christ, the Twelve and the Seventy he chose, preached throughout Judea, in its various cities, villages and towns, for more than three years. Believers were multiplied through the land, and in Jerusalem. Jesus is crucified, raised, and his Apostles, are with him, and receive his last commission, and told to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature;" "but to tarry at Jerusalem until endued with power from on high." They did so, and Jesus ascended; the Spirit came, they "had a good time," and wished to remain together; but God had not so ordered. The command was, "Go;" but they stayed, and clung about the temple. Yet God worked by them, and three thousand were converted and added to the church.—Acts 2. Then "the Lord added to them daily," as they preached. Now they sold out and "had all things common." But there was a way for God to break up their plan and use them as he designed. So while the work of selling and common interest is going on, Ananias and Sapphira sold, and attempted to deceive. But Peter detects it, and confesses that they had a right to have kept the land or the money for it; but because they deceived they must die. This miraculous judgment of God for deception in the common interest, struck the people with terror. "And of the rest durst no man join himself to them."—Acts 5; 13. This broke up the "common interest" there. But the next verse shows that "believers were the more added unto the Lord, multitudes, both of men and women." But still they of the church at Jerusalem, clung to the place until God permitted "great persecutions to scatter them abroad."—Acts 7: 1, 3, 4, 5. Then they obeyed the command to go, "and went every where preaching the word," and believers were multiplied and churches raised up.

Not a word is said of any other church but that at Jerusalem selling all and making common interest. Nor of those churches raised after, under the Apostles' labors. Philip preached at Samaria and many were converted; then Peter and John went down and prayed with them. Nothing said about selling out. The eunuch was converted by Philip's preaching, but he went on his way rejoicing, and not to Jerusalem. Nothing said of his selling out.

But Peter clings to Jerusalem. God had done much at that place, and Peter had seen much of his power, had "had a good time," and wished not to associate with other than Jewish disciples. Here God worked a miracle to break up his superstition, and Peter goes. Ah! but Peter is "at the house of one Simon, a tanner." Was this Simon a christian? Don't know, but had not sold out. Well, Peter goes down to the house of Cornelius. For what? The angel tells Cornelius that Peter "shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do."—Acts 10: 6. Peter preaches,—the Holy Ghost is given,—some are converted and baptized. It was an excellent sermon. Read Acts 10; 34. But this made some trouble in the "model church" at Jerusalem, and Peter was complained of. "But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them." Yet he did not say a word about preaching that they must sell out, and give him the charge of the money, nor that he must go up and live at Jerusalem, in "the community," nor that he must stop praying in public. And yet he says the angel told Cornelius that Peter "shall tell thee words whereby thou and all thy house shalt be saved." —Acts 11: 1-14. Did Peter do his duty?

While the word of God was being preached, some at Antioch got converted. The church up at Jerusalem heard of it, and sent Barnabas to see about it. We don't know whether they instructed him to have them sell out and move to Jerusalem or not; but he goes to Antioch, and "when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost." Acts 11: 23, 24. Barnabas did not teach them to sell out, and give him and other apostles the money, and move to Jerusalem.

While these things were going on, Saul travels about and "makes havoc of the churches." Nothing said of their common interest, or Jerusalem community. At length he is converted, and the Lord calls him "a chosen vessel," and sends him to be an Apostle to the Gentiles. He goes about the work. God is with him. The Gentiles believe. "But certain men from Judea" taught these brethren, "Except ye be circumcised, ye cannot be saved." Here is trouble again. Paul and Barnabas go up to Jerusalem,—a conference is held,—discussion had, and a decree written for the rule of Gentile believers. Not a word said about selling out, and going to Jerusalem, or a common interest. How is this?

I. C. WELLCOME.

For the Crisis.

A New Pronouncing Bible.

"A new quarto edition of the Bible is just published, in which all the proper names are pronounced, and a copious and original selection of references, and numerous marginal readings are given; together with instructions to each chapter, with tables and maps. Of the pronouncing Bibles heretofore published, orthoepy has to some extent become obsolete; in this edition the pronunciation of the proper names has been syllabically divided and accented according to the present lexicographical standard. The various references of the common revision have been revised, and a large number of apposite references to passages have been inserted in the middle columns, thus furnishing a more complete Scripture concordance than can be found in any of the Reference Bibles now in use. Each book is prefaced by a short introduction embracing all the necessary items of historical interest, and a synopsis of the subjects of which it treats; this constitutes an entirely new feature in this edition."

I should be glad to call the attention of Bible students to this work. I have examined it with much interest, and commend it to all, as an invaluable work.

For sale in Boston, by J. P. Magee, 5 Cornhill. J. V. HIMES.

Correspondence.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—I am now in this city of spindles, and with the few of like precious faith have commenced a meeting where the truth, so little relished by the popular and sect-loving disciples of this age, and so much loved and prized by those who believe the Bible in its literal import, can be plainly preached. Our brethren have hired a large hall in the heart of the city for the coming winter, and have promised the people preaching for the present. It is a kind of a missionary operation. The brethren are few and poor in this world's goods, but courageous and faithful. I see nothing in the way of much good being done here by the preaching of the word, but the lack of means, and we believe in God they will come. The cause is the Lord's, and we are his also. We are expecting to see blessed good times in the revival of good religion, which has an interest in the salvation of men. We purpose, the Lord will, to have a Conference here some time in January, when we shall want those interested in the salvation of men to come and help us, by their preaching, influence, and money.

This is a time to put forth every effort to enlighten, instruct, and to teach the way of God more perfectly. The plain Bible truth in the Spirit, must have an effect to bring men from darkness to light, from Satan to God. O for more living faith in the church to believe the word, so as to make it spirit and life! Amen.

Biddeford, Me., Dec. 29.

From Geo. W. Turner.

BRO. GRANT:—I think I can safely say the cause of truth is on the advance in this place. Although I do not expect that much more can be done than to gather the gleanings after the general harvest, yet I thank God this is being done; for it seems that wherever the glorious doctrines of our Savior's speedy coming, life and immortality only through Christ, and that to be obtained at the resurrection, etc., are preached and fairly heard, honest souls rejoice in them. It would seem there is being more of a division made between truth and error, between the great and glorious truths of revelation as literally understood, and Spiritualism in all its hideous forms.

When I came here fifteen months ago, there were none, as I could find, enlightened on these glorious truths. I commenced doing what I could, and by the blessing of God, we have now a small church established on the Gospel platform and in a prospering condition. We have received one visit from Bro. Wm. Sheldon; had a refreshing time; and also from Bro. G. W. Barnes. Although we are all poor here in this world's goods, I think the brethren are willing to do what they can to sustain the cause of truth. [illegible]

From P. Alling.

BRO. GRANT:—It is an interesting fact that no event has occurred in Europe since the close of the eventful French revolution in 1815, that can possibly be fixed upon for the ending of the 1290 days of Daniel 12: 11. From the connection in which this verse stands with verses 4 and 9, it is most manifest to my mind that this period closes when the time of the end begins. The evidence is clear that at the ending of that revolution, commenced the wonderful running to and fro and increase of knowledge, according to verse 4, which will continue till the close of the 1335 days. As the difference between the two periods is but forty-five years, it follows as a matter of course, if the foregoing is correct, that they are about up.

It is another interesting fact, that that revolution closed by virtue of the acts of the Vienna Congress composed of representatives, kings and emperors of all the European nations, who assembled at the close of 1814, and continued together till the spring of 1815, before they could arrange and adjust the decimal parts of the old Roman world which had been broken up by the wars of Napoleon. The adjustment then made has continued, in the main, nearly forty-five years, and what do we now see? Another convocation of the same powers, to readjust the Vienna treaty, and settle the recent difficulties that have arisen in Italy and other parts of Europe. Nothing is more evident that this, if the 1290 period ended with the Vienna Congress, and the time of the end then began, the forthcoming Congress will close with the ending of the 1335 days.

Query. May not the forthcoming Congress be the gathering of the nations referred to by the Revelator in Chap. 16? Certain it is, that the events, which have occurred at Constantinople, (the mouth of the dragon) and in Italy (the mouth of the Papal beast) have caused this assemblage.

It does appear to me, these events are all occurring at the right time and in their proper place, and agree most perfectly with prophecy. Hence we are justified in believing with much assurance that redemption is at hand. May God add his blessing and aid all that are his, to wait patiently yet a little longer, knowing assuredly, that soon, yea, very soon, He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry, is my earnest prayer.

Norwalk, O.

From Eld. Jon. Wilson.

BRO. GRANT:—I am at River Point, R. I., laboring to stimulate a higher tone of feeling in professors of religion, and to convert sinners to God, by a protracted effort, at the request of Bro. Bellows. We have had the best conference I have enjoyed for many years, and the most profitable debate that I have ever had publicly. I want to say that although I am obliged to differ with the brethren in some points of faith, I believe they are christians; and they treated me with a christian spirit, and I love them and pray for them, and hope we shall see the truth of God as it is in the Bible alike; so as we are of one heart we may be of one judgment, serving the Lord, and preaching the word.

My P. O., address will be North Attleboro, Mass., care of Harrison Holmes, until next summer. If any person should wish to know my argument, if they will send a letter to my address containing four letter stamps, or a request, without fee, they shall have sent to them ten tracts, post paid. Dear brethren, look at the argument, and then judge.

River Point, Jan. 3d, '60.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 28th, 1859, SARAH C., daughter of L. A. and S. C. Follansbee of Danbury, N. H., aged fourteen years.

Sarah professed faith in Christ the winter of 1857, and was baptized by Bro D. F. Leavitt May 3, 1857, in company with her sister, who is left to mourn her loss, with the remainder of the family. We feel lonely without her. That voice that was always in tune to chant the praise of God is silent in death, to be heard no more until the voice of the archangel and the trump of God shall wake the sleeping saints; then we trust she will come forth clothed with immortality, to die no more, but to sing the praises of God and the Lamb in the everlasting kingdom.

Sleep on, sweet Sarah, take thy rest,
Till Jesus calls thee with the blest.

The funeral was attended Dec. 31st, (it being the birth-day of the deceased) by D. F. Leavitt. Discourse from the last clause of the 8th verse of the 12th chapter of Daniel.

Died, in Worcester, Dec. 26th, 1859, of consumption, CAROLINE WHEWELL, aged fourteen years.

One year ago, Caroline was blooming in health and enjoying the buoyancy of youth; but consumption marked her as its victim. For months nature struggled to repel the attack, but at length could hold out no longer. Though she had always been a thoughtful child, she did not, until a few weeks before her death, yield her heart to Christ. When she had found Him who is the chiefest among ten thousand, she could not be dissuaded from being buried in the likeness of his death, with the hope of being raised in the likeness of his resurrection. And though the day on which she was baptized was cold, and she was under the necessity of being borne to the water's edge in the arms of others; yet with a cheerful spirit and a fortitude which astonished every one, she went forward in obedience to the command of our Divine Master, realizing no injury physically, but answering a good conscience by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

A few days before her death, she became firmly assured of her adoption into the heavenly family, and spoke to all around her of the hope she had in Christ; in which state of mind she continued until the last flickering spark of life became extinguished in the dark waters of death.

The deceased leaves a father and mother, her only relations in this country, to mourn the loss of an only child. But they sorrow not as others who have no hope. On the strength of the divine promise they believe she will come again from the land of the enemy and possess a lot of inheritance in the land of Israel. A. ROSS.

Died, in Plymouth, Mass., on the 8th inst., of typhoid fever, JUSTUS HARLOW, aged forty-eight years.

Bro. Harlow's death was sudden being sick but few days. Some eighteen years ago we led our brother into the water with several others, to be baptized in the name of the Lord. He then united with the Baptist Church in Kingston, Mass. After that he removed to Plymouth, his native place, where he lived to the time of his death. He became a firm believer in the personal coming and reign of our Savior on the earth, and in all those associated truths made plain in the Bible. He made that book his study, and aimed to live as he professed. He was ever interested in any good that was, or might be done in the world. His life being uniform and consistent—his influence for good was marked by all who knew him. His death is felt as a loss in the entire community. He has left a wife and three children to mourn for a great loss, and yet to rejoice for the evidence that he sleeps in Jesus, and that he will one day awake out of sleep and sing, "O death, where is thy sting, O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

His funeral was attended at the Baptist church, by a large company of friends who listened with becoming interest to a discourse from Job 14: 14. "If a man die, shall he live again?" The restoration of man through the resurrection of the body, never looked more glorious to our mind.

"May the Lord sanctify this event to the afflicted family and to all the friends and acquaintance. J. S. WHITE.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Per steamship New York. Advices of the 29th ult.

THE CONGRESS.

The Pope refuses to be represented in the Paris Congress, unless the rumored authorship of the pamphlet entitled "Le Pope et Le Congress," be denied by Napoleon.

CHINA.

Advices from China state that the government of that empire had applied for American mediation to avert the threatened hostilities with England and France.

PARIS, Dec. 29. The Pays of this evening contains an article signed by M. de Cassagne, on the pamphlet, "The Pope and the Congress," which the article states has been wrongly interpreted by the newspapers. The pamphlet does not propose to deprive the Pope of the Legations, but advises His Holiness to submit to the present state of things, and proclaims the necessity of maintaining the temporal power of the Pope. M. de Cassagne adds: The pamphlet confines itself to pronouncing an opinion. Congress alone will decide, and ever after that the church will remain full and entire.

ITALY.

Advices from Turin and Milan say the French pamphlet on the Pope has created an immense sensation there as in other parts of Italy.

The Paris Constitutionel, in an article signed by its principal editor, says the Times is perfectly correct in considering the pamphlet "Le Pope et le Congress" as a political expression of good understanding and conciliation between France and England.

ITEMS.

CONVERSIONS.—The Ayrshire Express, Scotland, gives an interesting account of the conversion of nearly the whole of Drumclare, about eighteen miles east of Glasgow. The inhabitants of the village were pitmen engaged in the coal-mines, numbering with their families about three hundred souls, and seemingly sunk far below the moral level of their countrymen. The whole work has apparently resulted from the labors of Mr. Abercrombie, a Baptist minister.

A METEOR SEEN IN THE DAYTIME.—Mr. R. Ford informs us that about nine or ten o'clock in the morning of the 29th ult., he saw descending in the west a large meteor. It displayed light of many colors and shades, and its descent was a beautiful scene. One was seen in Dedham, it is said, the next morning early, and it caused among some much consternation.—Randolph Transcript.

The Norwich (England) Mercury says that after years of mechanical labor and many mathematical tests, Mr. James White of Whickham Market, has completed and has now in constant operation, a self-winding clock, which determines the time with unfailing accuracy, continuing a constant motion by itself, never requiring to be wound up, and which will perpetuate its movements so long as its component parts exist.

A letter from a Boston gentleman who has gone South for his health, states that on the first day out from Washington he had a pistol held to his head, and that he was dogged by four Southern men for hundreds of miles, annoyed and insulted until he challenged the whole crowd of them to fight him, whereupon they backed out. All his newspapers from Boston have been withheld from him, and his letters have been broken open before they reached the post office to which they were sent.

GOOD NEWS FROM FRANCE.—M. Frederic Monod of Paris communicates to the Archives du Christianisme a letter of a very interesting character from a brother in the country, from which it appears that the news of the American revival detailed among his flock had been the means of stirring up a lively interest in divine things, and that several conversions of a remarkable kind had taken place. The work continued to increase in interest.

The [illegible] States is estimated at about [illegible]

Lord Macaulay died on the 28th ult., at London. He had been unwell about a fortnight, from disease of the heart, but had rallied to such an extent that his medical men did not apprehend danger. The result was, therefore, sudden and unexpected. He was only fifty-nine years old, and, as he was never married, his title becomes extinct.

Of all the seats provided for public worship in England, the Congregationalists have only provided 6 per cent. of the total amount.

Notices, &c.

Notice.

Bro. J. S. Brooks, Portland, Me., has an assortment of our books and tracts, which can be obtained of him at the same prices as at our office. This is to accommodate our eastern brethren, and enable them to get express bundles much cheaper.

Bro. John Craig, of Clinton, Mass., writes us that he has good reasons to believe that his boy, lost on the 4th of last July, has been kidnapped. He states that he has searched the towns around, dragged the ponds and rivers; but has been unable to gain any clue to his fate, until a few weeks since, when he heard that two men knew where his boy was. He went to them, but could get no satisfaction, only learned from one of them that the boy was bound out.

Bro. C. requests the brethren to assist him in the finding of his boy. He describes him as slender built, dark brown hair, small nose, face some freckled. His name is Geo. Franklin Craig. Any communication giving tidings of the lost boy, may be directed to his father, John Craig, Clinton, Mass.

There will be a conference in Hartford, Me, in the Stetson school-house, near J. O. Allen's, commencing Thursday, P. M., 2 o'clock, Feb. 2d, to continue over the Sabbath. Bro. Haggett, Hanscomb and Wellcome are expected to be there.

EDWARD M. HAGGETT.

Notice.

There will be a Quarterly Conference in Springville, Bad Ax Co., Wis., Thursday evening, Jan. 26th, 1860; and continuing over the Lord's day following. We hope that all the churches in western Wisconsin will be represented by delegates or letters, at this Conference. We expect a number of our preaching brethren present to preach the Word. Y. HIGGINS.

A New Book.

REASONS FOR MY HOPE, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Price 50 cts. bound in cloth, post paid. Paper covers 30 cts. Four copies in paper sent by mail for $1.00. Address H. L. Hastings, Box 3124 New York city P. O., till Jan. 25th. Then Providence, R. I.

New Hampshire State Conference.

Yesterday, Jan. 2d, I received a line from a brother at Loudon Ridge, stating that the brethren at that place would like the next session of N. H. S. C. holden with them, commencing as early as notice could be given. It now being so late that it is quite doubtful whether the notice can appear in both papers this week, I think it not prudent to call the meeting till week after next. We therefore fix the time for the conference to convene at the Meeting-House at Loudon Ridge, on Friday, Jan. 20th, at one o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

T. M. PREBLE, Clerk of Conference.
Concord, N. H., Jan. 3d, 1860.

Notice.

It is the wish of the Church at Rocky Brook that all brethren having business with the above Church, or preachers wishing to come among us to labor in word and doctrine, would make known their business or wishes, by writing to the corresponding Secretary. By order of the Church at Rocky Brook.

CHARLES F DIXON, Cor. Secretary.
Herald, please copy.

I will hold a conference in Elizabeth, Joe Davis Co., Ill., Wednesday, Jan. 18th, and continue over Lord's day following. The brethren must write me if they wish the above named meeting, and name where (what depot) they will meet me. Direct Muscatine, Iowa, care of J. Covell.

WALTER PRATT.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Providence permitting, I will be in

South Hawley	Sunday, Jan. 22d
Savoy	Jan. 23d, 24th, and 25th
Charlemont	Jan. 26th
North Adams	Jan. 29th
Cheshire	Jan. 30th
Chester Factories	Jan. 31st
Westfield Farms	Feb. 1st

and continue a few evenings where Bro. Phelps may appoint. H. PRATT.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd appoints to preach at

Hartford, Ct.	Sunday, Feb. 5th
Springfield	Feb. 6th
Boodville	Feb. 7th
New Britain	Feb. 8th
Bristol	Feb. 9th
Waterbury	Feb. 10th
Hartford	Sunday, Feb. 12th

Bro. J. K. Bellows will preach in

New Britain, Ct.	Jan. 22d
Unionville, Ct.	Jan. 24th and 25th
Warehouse Point, Ct.	Jan. 29th
Springfield, Mass.	Feb. 1—2

The Lord willing, J. S. White will be in Hartford, Ct., on the last Sunday in Jan. and the first in Feb. I will answer Bro. Berry's request soon.

J. S. W.

Bro. Carpenter will be in East Boston on the 29th of Jan. and on the 5th of Feb., the Lord willing.

Bro. Geo. Champlin will preach to [illegible] Springfield, in Music Hall Block, [illegible] and two or three evenings of th[illegible]

Bro. H. G. M[illegible] Goshen, [illegible] through [illegible]

[illegible] the earliest [illegible] of the church in Danville, [illegible] a series of meetings in this place on the last Lord's day in Jan., and continue every evening during the following week, and over the first Lord's day in February. J. PORTER.

Bro. Wm. Ingraham will preach in Bro. C. Goodrich Sunday, Jan. 29th and Feb. 5th

T. W. Piper appoints to preach in

West Ossipee	Jan. 22d
Sandwich	Jan. 29th
Danbury	Feb. 5th
Meridith Centre	Feb. 7th
Lake Village	Feb. 8th
London Ridge	Feb. 9th
Pittsfield	Feb. 10th
Clarke Town	Feb. 12th
Wolfborough, (Pine Hill)	Feb. 19th

The Lord willing, I will preach as follows:—

Waterbury, Sunday	Jan. 22d
Harwinton, (Bro. Elliott's)	Jan. 23d
Northfield, (Bro. Humphreyville please arrange,)	Jan. 24th
Plymouth Hollow	Jan. 25th
Litchfield Station	Jan. 26th
Pleasant Valley	Jan. 27th
Winsted, Sunday	Jan. 29th

Feb. 5th where Bro. Albert Fox may appoint.

If the above conflict with any previous arrangements, please write me at West Meriden, Ct.

WM. A. FENN.

Eld. Thomas Smith appoints to preach in

Round Pound, Me.	Jan. 22d
Carmel, Me.	Jan. 29th
Surrey, Me.	Feb. 5th

I will preach as follows:—

Hazel Plains, Ct.	Jan. 22d

The intermediate time subject to the order of brethren in the same or adjacent places.

T. S. CANFIELD.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

P. S. W. Deyo.—The books were sent.

Eld. S. G. Clark.—Please send us your address.

I. C. Wellcome.—Yes.

Cash Receipts.

Al. Gifford 218, $1.53; R K Shaw, p.p., 212, $1 50.

J Elliott 237, H Matthews 237, J McWilliams 237, I F Chase 237, Mrs. S F Hutchinson 238,—50 cts. each.

C H Fosdick 234, H Cady 249, Mrs. M A Church 250, T F Farnsworth 252, H Hays 250, R A Olmsted 250, P Alling 231, F D Gilles 246, A A Bostwick 250, H Bolles 250, C Holstead 250, N J Latimer 250, R F Haley 250,—$1.00 each.

J Nudd 286, J Egan 181, Mrs E Wood 260, J Wilbur 273, Mrs. E L Gibbs 248, Ol. Raymond 224, E Tuttle 278, Amb. Smith 276,—$2.00 each.

E S Walker 260, J M Wadsworth 268, Jesse Gay 256, J Thompson 260.—$3.00 each.

Books and Tracts.—E G Emmons 12 cts, D C Tourtelet 21 cts, Eld. J Hemenway $10.35, S J Boswell 18 cts, G W Turner $3.50, M C Kershaw 68 cts, C H Fosdick 12 cts, H Cady 5 cts, D N Kidder $1.00, W Harriman $3.54, G W Lougee $1.50, Dr. J Davis, $1.00, W S Olmsted 12 cts, J C Young 50 cts R K Shaw $3.50, Eld. T Smith $1.00, F D Gilles $1.00, A N Bostwick $1.00, I Thompson 10 cts D Coggswell $1.00, J K Bellows 12 cts, V P Simons 12 cts.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuke as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 6 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 8 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By [illegible] Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 c[illegible] Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or [illegible] the Wicked scripturally [illegible] Baptist minister. [illegible] hundred; 25 cent[illegible] 40 cents; po[illegible]

Chu[illegible] A [illegible]

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns, designed for public and private worship. Published by J. V. Himes. Price 60 cents; postage 9 cts. 1-4 off per dozen. Pocket edition, gilt, $1.

Words of Warning. 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with camp-meetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 60 cts. —postage 10 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed: or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $2.00 per hundred,—3 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Geneseo, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 3 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, Providence R. I.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 3 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—post. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace; or, the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A con[illegible] ment, deduced from a careful examina[illegible] passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo, pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $1[illegible] hundred. Postage 1 cent.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post.[illegible]

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Lenfest. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. —6 Olive Leaves, by the self.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; [illegible] separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality; 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us hear from them: Orders with the CASH are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much as [illegible] cents worth, as packages of tract[illegible] ounces or more go cheaper than [illegible] Those who buy books to sell, wil[illegible] liberal discount. The poor can [illegible] sending stamps to pay the po[illegible] FREE poor also.

Address [illegible]

For sale al[illegible] G. W. Yo[illegible]

The Meeting Place.

BY [illegible]

"The ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion, with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads."—Isa. 35: 10.

Where the faded flowers shall freshen—
Freshen never more to fade;
Where the shaded sky shall brighten—
Brighten never more to shade;
Where the sun-blaze never scorches;
Where the star-beams cease to chill;
Where no tempest stirs the echoes
Of the wood, or wave, or hill;
Where the morn shall wake in gladness,
And the noon the joy prolong;
Where the daylight dies in fragrance,
'Mid the burst of holy song;—
Brother, we shall meet and rest,
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Where no shadow shall bewilder,
Where life's vain parade is o'er,
Where the sleep of sin is broken,
And the dreamer dreams no more;
Where the band is never severed—
Partings, claspings, sob and moan,
Midnight waking, twilight weeping,
Heavy noontide—all are done;
Where the child has found its mother,
Where the mother finds the child;
Where dear families are gathered,
That were scattered on the wild;
Brother, we shall meet and rest,
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Where the hidden wound is healed,
Where the blighted life re blooms,
Where the smitten heart the freshness
Of its buoyant youth resumes;
Where the love that here we lavish
On the withering leaves of time,
Shall have fadeless flowers to fix on,
In an ever spring-bright clime;
Where we find the joy of loving
As we never loved before—
Loving on, unchilled, unhindered,
Loving once and evermore;
Brother, we shall meet and rest,
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Where a blasted world shall brighten
Underneath a bluer sphere,
And a softer, gentler sunshine
Shed its healing splendor here;
Where earth's barren vales shall blossom,
Putting on her robe of green,
And a purer, fairer Eden
Be where only wastes have been;
Where a king in kingly glory,
Such as earth has never known,
Shall assume the righteous sceptre,
Claim and wear the holy crown;
Brother, we shall meet and rest,
'Mid the holy and the blest!

—Selected.

For the Crisis.

The Voice of God in History.

BY LIZZIE ARMSTRONG.

(Continued.)

Over the ruins of Babylon rolled the Medo-Persian car; and that was a gorgeous page amid the records of history. That royal sceptre swayed over the most splendid city of the East. Tyre, with her commerce and her arts, knelt before it, that crowning city whose merchants were princes, and whose traffickers were the most honorable of earth. And the beautiful Palmyra was there, the Tadmor of the wilderness, with her marble palaces, matchless temples, and works of art the most beautiful of oriental creation. Right gracefully did Egypt bow to the same ruler—Egypt, the mystic land of dark, uncertain science; for they had science and philosophy, though in a rude, unfinished state. Their hieroglyphics whisper through the dust of ages about the astronomical lore of their learned men. Egypt was rich in natural resources—rich in her Thebes, her Memphis, her pyramids and her oracles. But even in the silver age of the Medo-Persian reign, the iron grasp of superstition was laid, with a blighting, withering grasp over her beauty, and oh, how it galled the fair proportions of those beautiful cities to see their inmates bow before gods of wood and stone! Even Cyrus was an idolater, and the voice of the Lord said unto him, "I girded thee, though thou hast not known me." Yet they flourished like a green bay-tree, extending their conquests on every side, and daily growing richer in their own arts and sciences.

Grecia lay quietly reposing beneath the shade of their mighty monarchy, but in her midst there slumbered a new planet in fame's bright firmament. A thousand warriors have fought and bled to win the laurel wreath that encircled the regal brow of "Alexander the Great." A thousand warriors and statesmen have seized with an iron grasp the pinnacle of human greatness, [illegible] with haughty step over [illegible] and crumbling crowns [illegible] kingdoms, have written [illegible] letters of blood on the [illegible] Alexander has [illegible] on hu-[illegible] [illegible]shed, [illegible] station upon plains that glitter with the dazzling steel, and waving plumes of contending hosts. It is sublime to work out this vast drama in the halls of fancy, to picture the regal banners supported by the bravery of noble men, amid the din of battle and the roar of musketry; and when the great tragedy is completed, it is grand to hear the clarion notes of victory's triumphant music rolling around the brave. But oh! we do not think, we cannot realize as we read of the dying and the wounded, one half the depth of woe contained in the sentence. We do not hear the piercing shriek as the cold iron rends the quivering flesh—the blood-choking gasp and the low murmuring prayer—the moan for water, or the whispered names of distant loved ones. We cannot see the gaping wounds, the wild look of agony, the cold, still forms lying as they fell convulsively on the sod. We do not look into thousands of homes where abideth the cold, dim shadow of despairing woe, feeding upon the life-blood of those who would have given worlds for only one look at the pale soldier, and to know where he sleeps when the red field is won. Oh! how angels must weep over the carnage of war. The laurel of glory takes root among dead men, and bears the red bloom of blood. The roar of the cannon carries woe to homes and hearts, and the shout of victory is like an iron hoof crushing out the joys and hopes of mothers, wives and sisters.

It was under the dread banner of Alexander that the Greeks marched against the Medes and Persians, and the empire tottered and fell before the simoon breath of the conquerors. And where is it now? Go ask the question amid the ruins of Tyre, or beneath the crumbling columns of Palmyra. Go read your answer amid the musty records of the dark Egyptian shades. The serpent now inhabits the temple where the worshiper once bent the knee in adoration; her oracles have been silent for ages, and the cloud-capped pyramids of Egypt still stand alone in the dreary desert, a mournful monument of human ambition. But the monarchs who planned and the millions of slaves who built them, have gone down together amid the shades of death, and the rank weeds wave mournfully over their dust.

With ruin on every side, Greece flourished like a bright peerless pearl amid the fragments of the past. Greece! renowned, romantic land, with her beautiful scenery and her brave warriors; it was a land of beauty and eloquence, of painting and sculpture; the poet's home and the artist's studio; the brightest gem in the casket of history where repose so many rare jewels. That ancient beautiful spot is hallowed by the memory of all that is ennobling in mental grandeur and inspiring in heroic deeds—all that is fascinating in the trophies of art and thrilling in the beauties of song; it was one brilliant blaze of classic lore. Greece held up for the admiration of future ages a noble constellation of intellect. Are you a mathematician? go sit at the feet of her Archimedes or Euclid. Her scholars have not only explored the labyrinthine paths of philosophy, but have culled the richest flowers from the fields of elegant taste and learning; her historians have recorded in graphic strains the story of her struggles and triumphs; her philosophers and sages have lighted up the dark labyrinthian paths of science; her poets have drawn out thrilling echoes of sublimity and pathos from the lyre of Apollo. Where shall we find an equal for her own dear Homer?—that "father and prince of Epic song." For him the temple of Fame opens her "sanctum sanctorum," and around his name she weaves the sweetest incense that ever arose from her altars. The naked rocks on the banks of the Ægean fired his mind, and "sublimity covered him all day long, and dwelt between his shoulders." We can gaze upon and admire those unparalleled flights of sublimity, while we reverence, almost fear, the giant mind that produced them.

Greece has produced artists who have embodied in the breathing marble and speaking canvas forms of grace and beauty which constituted the masterpieces of the chisel and pencil. Look for one moment upon her Rembrandt, her Appelles, or her Phidas. Yet in nothing has she won a more lasting wreath than that placed by universal consent upon the brows of her orators. Her eloquence began with Pericles, and advancing through a host of illustrious names, reached the meridian of glory [illegible] her matchless Demosthenes. His was [illegible] pouring of passion, intense and burning, [illegible] frantic—of enthusiasm glowing, [illegible] never raving; it was [illegible] and freedom in-[illegible] [illegible]ment. In the [illegible] [illegible]tal cham-[illegible] [illegible] most her walls, and pointed triumphantly to the ruins of Athens and Sparta; and to-day that beautiful Greece lies prostrate in the dust. Oh! how easy it is to weep over the fate of this bright luminary of learning; her light of eloquence, of painting and sculpture is quenched in the long night of time. Her philosophers, sages, statesmen, heroes, poets and artists, mingle in the fragments of her fallen might. Go to the temple of Diana at Ephesus, or come to the mystic feet of the Delphic oracle, and ask the story of her renown—the history of her fall. Alas! that temple was long since burned to the ground, and the last echo of the oracle hath died on the lips of Æolus.

Above its ruins the Roman eagle flapped his exultant wings, and pointed in triumph to the "city of seven hills," that emporium of the iron monarchy of the world, with her towers, palaces and temples—her Coliseum, that mountain of marble, where the gladiator died and the untamed lions of Africa bled,—where the noble, faithful christian fell who dared do any thing but deny his Lord. There was the Roman forum, where an unchained senate listened to the rich imagery, the lofty conceptions and majestic fervor of the gifted Tully; or lingered enchanted by the gushing exuberance, the sparkling brilliancy, the glowing fire of Cicero—that great representative of Roman eloquence. There were her cathedrals, whose altars were rich with offerings of surpassing magnificence, and by St. Peter's side arose the great Vatican with its lofty chapel, rendered immortal by the genius of Raphael and Michael Angelo; around its walls thronged the faces of the mighty dead; poets, painters, sculptors—crowned princes in the world of art,—they were true prophets of the beautiful and good. And Rome swayed her sceptre over Italy, where millions of brave hearts were beating, and imaginations were there as bright and vivid as their own sunny clime. Land of poetry and song! for the historian, the artist, the christian, there is magic in the name

> "Of that far land whose clime
> Is ever like a silvery chime;
> That land of sweetest poesy,
> Of sculpture, painting, minstrelsy,
> Of ever blooming Italy."

The poet too will turn to that home of beauty, canopied by silvery skies, enveloped by golden sunlight, and embraced by the blue waters of the Mediterranean, with nothing to vary her loveliness but the sublimity of her mountains. No wonder, oh! Italia, that the genius of thy children burst forth in song. Thine own Tasso and Dante swept their harps in olive groves or beneath the orange trees, and caught inspiration from the fragrance of matchless flowers and the soft breezes of a lovely coast, while the rich jewelry of heaven strengthened the intense love of the beautiful in their poet souls. They now rest sweetly beneath the bowers of their own native soil, and we can but mourn that the gorgeous luxuriance of that beautiful land was marred by the iron hand of priestcraft, and withered by the blighting curse of popish tyranny.

Rome reached out her hand, and the Arab and Ethiopean bowed in bondage. She reigned without a rival, "mistress of the world," and like a brilliant planet sent her radiance far and wide. She bravely withstood the shock when the victorious Hannibal led the hosts of Carthage over the almost impassable barriers of the Alpine summits—put her armies to flight and stripped three bushels of golden rings from the fingers of her slaughtered knights. But her despised northern enemies, the Goths, Vandals and Huns, with a wild barbarian horde, descended from their mountain strongholds, and like hungry vultures fed upon her splendor and divided her into ten petty kingdoms.

For the last time we are compelled to whisper that the trophies and garlands of fame have faded again. The wreath and diadem which adorned the warrior's brow have been hurled into oblivion. The gigantic bulwarks of genius, the ponderous tomes of learning, the glorious lights of art and the gathering glory of ages, have all fallen together. Ancient Rome is still eloquent, but it is the eloquence of ruins; those tottering temples once echoed to the footsteps of the imperial Cæsars; the cottage of Romulus, the splendid palace of Nero, and the shrines and altars which were sacred to Apollo and the Muses, are buried amid the crumbling fragments of other ages. Nero—from whose name humanity shrinks—lies lower than the ruins of his palace; perhaps all Europe breathed a sigh of relief when the death-angel wound his cold arm around the tyrant; but we will mingle no nightshade of ill-will with the flowers of the grave, for "nothing dies but something mourns," and even on Nero's tomb some unknown hand scattered flowers. He is sleeping, and we [illegible] let his crimes [illegible] him until the [illegible] of the [illegible] sleep with [illegible] the [illegible] Archangel rings through his [illegible] house.

[illegible] Forum ring with no [illegible] [illegible]tors have perished. [illegible] Coliseum still [illegible] have the ivy-crowned walls, and through the long-drawn aisles and gloomy galleries, while the cold night winds moan around its pillared ruin as if sighing over its fallen grandeur. Let us lay the frail garland of sympathy upon the altar of her desolation, and whisper, "Peace to Rome's illustrious shade."

(To be concluded.)

Selections.

William Tyndal—His Invaluable Labors and Violent Death.

And who was William Tyndal,—the man who gave to England its greatest treasure—the printed English Bible? His life was entirely devoted to this great object; from his youth, he felt he had this one thing to do, to translate the word of God into his native tongue and print it. He did so and was martyred for its sake. He was born in 1484, passed his youth in the midst of monks and friars, and was sent early to Oxford, where he made great progress, especially in language.

Now Oxford was the city in which the New Testament, just published in Greek by Erasmus, met with its warmest welcome, and William Tyndal read it—first only as a work of learning, but soon he found it to be something more. That Book spoke to him of God, of Christ, and of being born again, till it completely subdued him. He felt that he had on his hand the Divine Revelation, and that he could not keep the treasure to himself. There were two young men at Cambridge, who had also been reading this Greek New Testament,—Thomas Bilney and John Frith—both afterwards martyrs. When Tyndal joined them, they gained fresh courage and began to address to all around them, that saying of Christ's, "Repent, and be converted;" "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

Bilney and Tyndal left Cambridge in 1519. The friars had not then finished their persecution of the Lollards; and that same year, Thomas Mann, one of their number, who had preached to the conversion of many persons under the great oaks of Windsor forest, was burnt alive for his doctrine, as well as Dame Hawkins, the mother of several little children, for having in her possession a parchment, on which were written the Lord's Prayer, the apostle's creed and the Ten Commandments, in English.

But of what avail was it to silence those obscure lips, while the New Testament of Erasmus could speak? Erasmus was so highly esteemed that he was called "the king of the schools." What he had given to the learned, Tyndal was about to bestow upon the people. When he was between thirty and forty years of age, he was engaged as tutor and chaplain, in the house of Sir John Walsh, a knight of Gloucestershire, and at his table he met with many of the neighboring priests, at whose ignorance he was deeply grieved. He exhorted them also to read the Scriptures, keeping, it is said, Erasmus' New Testament always within reach, to prove what he advanced. The priests disliked to have that book appear, and said "it only served to make heretics," adding, "Why, even we don't understand God's word, as you call it, and how should the vulgar understand it? It is a conjuring book, wherein every body finds what he wants." "Ah!" said Tyndal, "you read it without Jesus Christ; that is why it is obscure to you." "Nothing is obscure to us," said another priest, "we only can explain the Scriptures." "No," said Tyndal; "you hide them, you burn those who teach them, and if you could, you would burn the Scriptures themselves." They soon declared themselves his open enemies; and if he preached, they threatened to expel from the church those who listened to him. "O!" said Tyndal, "while I am sowing in one place, they ravage the field I have just left. I cannot be everywhere. If christians had the Scriptures in their own tongue they could themselves withstand these sophists; without the Bible, it is impossible to establish the laity in the truth."

He went on arguing with all whom he met in favor of translating the Scriptures, till one day a popish doctor, angry with the strength of his arguments, said—"Well, we had better be without God's laws than the Pope's!" This fired the spirit of Tyndal, and he answered with righteous judgment, "I defy the Pope and all his laws, and if God give me life, ere many years the ploughboys shall know more of the Scriptures than you do."

He prayed, he read and carried on his translation. He soon, however, proceeded to London, to seek another retreat, where he might follow out his work. He found a quiet room in the house of Humphrey Monmouth, a pious and benevolent alderman, and dwelt with him six months. This man was afterwards sent to the Tower, on a charge of having aided Tyndal; but he thus justified himself:—"When I heard my Lord of London preach at Paul's-cross, that Sir William Tyndal had translated the New Testament into English, and that it was naughtily translated; that was the first time that I ever suspected or knew any evil of him. The worthy citizen was soon set free.

Tyndal began to fear lest the stake should interrupt his labor. Alas! he exclaimed, is there no place where I can translate the Bible? It is not the Bishop's house alone that is closed upon me, but all England! There lay at that moment in the river Thames a vessel loading for Hamburg; Humphrey Monmouth gave ten pounds for his voyage, and carrying with him only his New Testament, he went on board. "Our priests have buried the Testament of God," said he, "and all their study is to keep it down, that it rise not again; but the hour of the Lord is come and nothing can hinder the w[illegible] as nothing could hinder [illegible] word of God, old from issuing fr[illegible] Jesus Christ of [illegible] from the tomb."

That poor man, then sailing towards Germany, was to send back, even from the banks of the Elbe, the eternal gospel to his country. He left England in 1523 and never returned to it. He seems to have printed first the gospels of Matthew and Mark, and then removed to Cologne. Being again disturbed in the midst of the New Testament, he gathered up the printed sheets and fled to Worms, where he finished it.

One to whom we are so deeply indebted, [illegible] living in painful and [illegible] hiding [illegible] afflicted with cold, hunger, and [illegible] to the Inquisi-[illegible] ces continually thrown in his way to the prosecution of his work. Yet a heavenly atmosphere so appeared to surround him, that the messengers sent by king Henry eighth to entrap and bring him to England, could not talk with him without being ready to be converted to his sentiments. When the last successful plot against his life was laid, the persons who executed it were obliged to bring with them officers from Brussels, for they could not trust those at Antwerp, where he was so much beloved. He was not aware of his betrayers, and was thrown into prison at Vilvoord, where he remained two years. Part of his work in the prison was that edition of the New Testament which he had promised to give to the ploughboys of Gloucestershire.

In the year 1536, Tyndal was led forth to be put to death. He was fastened to the stake, crying out with a loud voice,—"Lord, open the King of England's eyes!" He was then immediately strangled, and his body consumed to ashes.

Patience.

> Patience is the passion of great hearts;
> When brute force, like a scornful conqueror,
> Clangs his huge mace down in the other scale,
> The inspired soul but flings his patience in,
> And slowly, that outweighs the ponderous globe."
>
> —Lowell.

"The Righteous not Forsaken."

To-day on the train from Columbus, at the Lebanon station, an aged and venerable lady, accompanied by a gentleman and two ladies, came on the cars. The gentleman was a minister, and occupied a seat near me. I soon found that the aged lady was Mrs. Francis Kindred, now in her eighty-third year, and on her way to the Widow's Home. Ten years ago she emancipated all her slaves, some six or eight in number, and came with them from North Carolina to Ohio. Here she remained, befriended by strangers. Changes in the family that gave her a home, left her last spring homeless, and the poor-house of Warren county became her home. Rev. W. R. Parsons, of the Methodist Protestant church at Lebanon, found her there and learned her history, and appealing to the friends of the poor, he secured means to provide her a home the remnant of her days. I found her cheerful and happy, praising God for his care and kindness. She said: "When I was in the poor-house, it looked as if God had forsaken me, but I never thought he had, and I would rather die in the poor-house than die a slave-holder."—Central Herald.

Bathing in the Dead Sea.

A pleasant correspondent of the Boston Post writing from Jerusalem, thus humorously describes his Dead Sea bath:

"The Dead Sea has nothing of the desolation which it has been the pleasure of travelers to describe, and it seemed to smile at the secret dread with which it inspires the pilgrim. I, of course, took a bath here; and for a swimmer who has a fancy to keep his legs as well as his head out of the water, I can imagine that it must be quite pleasant. My French friend, who is not a little inclined to corpulency, complained that he could not get down into the water, and floated about, now one side up, now another, for all the world like an inflated bladder. On emerging from the water it was rapidly evaporated by the sun; and the salt crystalizing on our bodies, gave us the appearance of animated sticks of rock candy, or a family resemblance of Lot's wife. With a sensation upon our skin, as if we had been pickled for family use, and with a taste in our mouth compounded of glauber salts and asafœtida, we concluded that one bath in the Dead Sea was enough for a lifetime."

A Beautiful Reply.

A pious old man was one day walking to the sanctuary with a New Testament in his hand, when a friend who met him said:

"Good morning, Mr. Price."

"Ah, good morning," replied he; "I am reading my Father's will as I walk along."

"Well, what has he left you?" said his friend.

"Why, he has bequeathed me a hundred-fold more in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting."

This beautiful reply was the means of comforting his christian friend, who was at the time in very sorrowful circumstances.

A FABLE TO SHOW THE FOLLY OF BOASTING.—A gourd had wound itself around a lofty palm, and in a few weeks climbed to its very top.

"How old mayst thou be?" asked the new comer.

"About a hundred years."

"About a hundred years, and no taller! Only look: I have grown as tall as you in fewer days than you count years!"

"I know that well," replied the palm: "every summer of my life a gourd has climbed up around me, as proud as thou art, and as short-lived as thou wilt be."

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Scrofula.

This is a term which takes its name from a Latin word which signifies sow, while the Greeks used a word of the same meaning, for the same disease, possibly because both Greeks [illegible] [illegible] and Romans found that those families suffered most with scrofula who lived after the brutish manner of swine, although the elevated and refined are not exempt from the taint. Scrofula is an error of nutrition, and hence may attack all colors, constitutions, and temperaments, but those who have light hair and fair skin are most subject to it.

All through the body, there are little bunches of vessels called "glands," which, in their natural state, are not seen, but if diseased, they swell, and when near the surface of the skin, form protuberances of irregular shapes, always rounded; hence, the ancients, who often named things from an apparent quality, called these glands, from their resemblance to an acorn or a bunch of [illegible]. Our aliment, that which nourishes the body, must pass through what is called the absorbent glands before it is fit for nutrition; in these glands it undergoes considerable changes, but if they are in an unnatural condition, are hardened or swollen, the changes made are not perfect—are not healthful; hence it is that scrofula is essentially an error of nutrition; the food does not give all its strength, the person may eat a great deal, and may even look stout and robust, but the appearance is deceptive—there is no endurance.

Scrofula then is manifested in an abnormal condition of the glands, giving a name to the disease according to the locality of the part affected: if in the sides of the neck, it is called king's evil, because in earlier ages, the touch of a king was thought a cure; if the glands of the joints are affected, it is white swelling; if in the bowels, it is tabes mesenterica, or consumption of the bowels; the person wears away to skin and bone, and is literally consumed to death, without any cough whatever.

Why the glands of one part should become more particularly diseased than elsewhere, is simply because that part has been weakened by some violence offered to it.

But how do the glands become diseased at all, or what is the cause of their unnatural condition? In other words, what causes scrofula?

Most generally, persons are born scrofulous, in consequence of one or both parents being diseased in some way or other; but scrofula may be originated in any constitution by protracted wrong living, such as a want of personal cleanliness, or a continued dwelling in low or damp, or filthy localities, or in habitual excesses as to the animal appetites and passions.

Scrofula, like insanity or family resemblances, may pass over a generation. A man may be scrofulous, his children may not have a trace of it, yet his grandchildren may be decidedly so.

A person may be very slightly scrofulous—only a mere trace of it—so little of it as to be scarcely perceptible, or it may be of such an aggravated character as to distort the whole body.

As a general rule, scrofula shows itself in some kind of breaking out on the skin, or in some affection of the eyes. As scrofula is essentially an error of nutrition, by which the food does not impart its full strength to the system, it is characterized by a want of endurance, by a lack of power of resistance, of warding off disease, or averting "colds;" hence, scrofulous persons take cold very easily, and often describe themselves as "always taking cold," or "the least thing in the world gives me a cold," and that "cold" "settles" in the weak part; if in the tonsils, they swell internally; if the lungs are the weak part, a bad cold is the result: if in the head—and a great many have a weakness there—it is described as a cold in the head. Under certain conditions, a scrofulous person has a greater chance of long life than one who is entirely free from it, especially if well-informed and well to do, because, being conscious of a want of robustness of constitution, common sense dictates carefulness, and a systematic avoidance of those causes of ailment which observation indicates as the uniform precursors of particular symptoms, while the fact of being "well to do," gives the means of nursing, and of guarding against those exposures, over exertions and deprivations, which are the fruitful sources of sickness to the unfortunate poor.

A person born scrofulous, or becoming so after birth, need not necessarily remain so to any specially hurtful extent. If, for example, a man suffers from white swelling, or a long and tedious "running" in the neck from king's evil, the "ill humors" of the system, as they are called, seem to find vent there, leaving the constitution, comparatively, healthy, and a long life of reasonable health is the result.

Scrofula may be almost entirely "worked" out of the system in another way, as by a great and protracted change in the habits of life—such a change as involves large out-door activities for the greater part of every twenty-four hours. The same thing may be accomplished, to a great extent, in-doors, as where a sedentary life is followed by spending a large portion of each day in active employment on foot, especially if the mind is deeply and pleasurably interested in that employment; more decided results will follow, if the aid is given, meanwhile, of judicious personal habits, such as scrupulous cleanliness of body and of clothing, of regular, full, and sufficient sleep; of plain, simple, and nutritious food, eaten at regular intervals of five or six hours, and nothing between, with that daily regularity which is essential to health under all circumstances.

A scrofulous person should eat fresh meats largely, and bread and fruits and berries of every description, using vegetables sparingly.

In short, whatever promotes high bodily health, promotes the eradication of a scrofulous taint; hence, it is the greatest wisdom on the part of those who are scrofulous, to study how and what gives to them the greatest general good health, and to live accordingly.

Scrofula manifests itself externally in some, as in lumps, or a variety of breakings out on the skin; in others, it causes some internal malady. In either case, the essential disease is the same; it is in the system—in the blood—and the attempt should be to eradicate, not to cover up.

If there is an external manifestation, external appliances can never radically cure, can never eradicate—their tendency is to suppress—to drive inwards, or elsewhere, generally, if not always, to find refuge in some more vital part, and the whole history reads, "cured, then died." Hence, external manifestations of scrofula are not, indeed, signs of health, but they are signs of safety. It is when measles "strike in" that there is danger.

Salt rheum is scrofula, and afflicts persons for many years, then sometimes disappears for "good and all," to the great gratification of the patient. The next report is "consumption," if in grown persons; "water on the brain," if in young children.

As to taking internal remedies, one of three things is the uniform result:

First, The medicine gradually loses its power.

Second, The system is benefited only while it is taken; or,

Third, The remedy gradually poisons the system, or impairs the tone of the stomach, thus aggravating the "error of nutrition" and hastening a fatal result.

It is greatly to be regretted that these things are not generally known; an incalculable amount of human suffering would thereby be prevented, and the unfor[illegible] poor saved many a hard-earned doll[illegible]

The most that can be expected as [illegible] cure of scrofula is, that it may be [illegible] abeyance—may be kept under by [illegible] habits of life, such as regularity, c[illegible] ness, temperance in all things, and [illegible] industry in the open air, living the [illegible] while, on plain, simple, nutritious fo[illegible] which fresh meats, ripe fruits, coarse [illegible] and cold water are the main. We [illegible] that no medicine ever eradicated s[illegible] or kept it under any longer than w[illegible] is taken.—Journal of Health.

Winter Rules.

Never go to bed with cold or dam[illegible]

In going into a colder air, [illegible] mouth resolutely closed, that by comp[illegible] the air to pass circuitously throu[illegible] nose and head, it may become warm[illegible] fore it reaches the lungs, and thus p[illegible] those shocks and sudden chills whi[illegible] quently end in pleurisy, pneumoni[illegible] other serious forms of disease.

Never sleep with the head in the [illegible] of an open door or window.

Let more cover be on the lower [illegible] than on the body. Have an extra [illegible] ing within easy reach, in case of a [illegible] and great change of weather duri[illegible] night.

Never stand still a moment out of [illegible] especially at street corners, after [illegible] walked even a short distance.

Never ride near the open windo[illegible] vehicle for a single half-minute, esp[illegible] if it has been preceded by a walk; [illegible] ble lives have thus been lost, or [illegible] health permanently destroyed.

Never put on a new boot or shoe [illegible] ginning a journey.

Never wear India-rubbers in col[illegible] weather.

If compelled to face a bitter, cold [illegible] throw a silk handkerchief over the [illegible] its agency is wonderful in modifyi[illegible] cold.

Those who are easily chilled on [illegible] out of doors, should have some cotto[illegible] ting attached to the vest or other gar[illegible] so as to protect the space betwe[illegible] shoulder-blades behind, the lungs [illegible] attached to the body at that point; [illegible] there is worth five times the amou[illegible] the chest in front.

Never sit for more than a minu[illegible] time with the back against the fire or [illegible]

Avoid sitting against cushions [illegible] backs of pews in churches; if the [illegible] cred board feels cold, sit erect w[illegible] touching it.

Never begin a journey until bre[illegible] has been eaten.

After speaking, singing, or preach[illegible] a warm room in winter, do not le[illegible] for at least ten minutes, and even clo[illegible] mouth, put on the gloves, wrap u[illegible] neck, and put on cloak or overcoat [illegible] passing out of the door; the negl[illegible] these has laid many a good and usefu[illegible] in a premature grave.

Never speak under a hoarseness, [illegible] ially if it requires an effort, or [illegible] hurting or a painful feeling, for i[illegible] results in a permanent loss of vo[illegible] life-long invalidism.—Hall's Journ[illegible] Health.

Is Tobacco Poisonous?

Some five years since, a gentlem[illegible] Philadelphia, at the head of one [illegible] most extensive and wealthy banking-[illegible] in this country, literally died of starv[illegible] He was an inveterate smoker, and [illegible] was without a cigar in his mouth [illegible] during business hours. The habit contr[illegible] in early life, led to the use of a [illegible] lighted or not, permitting its moistene[illegible] chewed surface to remain under his t[illegible] This was pursued for years, and it re[illegible] in impregnating the glands beneat[illegible] tongue which terminated in cancero[illegible] cerations. At first it was not regarde[illegible] any anxiety, but inflamation was an [illegible] ant evil, and the immediate cause of [illegible] The roots of the tongue ulcerated, a[illegible] throat sympathized with them, until [illegible] almost impossible to swallow or br[illegible] The only nourishment taken for [illegible] months previous to his death, wa[illegible] liquid character; even that at last [illegible] not be received, so swollen and in[illegible] was the seat of the disorder. Death [illegible] starvation and suffocation finally clos[illegible] scene, the victim being otherwise i[illegible] fect health, except greatly emaciated.

COLDS—DO YOU WANT TO CURE THE[illegible] I will tell you how to do it:

1. Go without eating for thirty-six [illegible]
2. Wash your body in water at a [illegible] perature of eighty-five degrees, all [illegible] and without soap; wipe it dry; [illegible] well; and go to bed and lie quietly, b[illegible] books and newspapers about you, re[illegible] and sleeping alternately.
3. Take no medicine, not even cat[illegible] sage tea.
4. Be cheerful and easy. Let bu[illegible] pass. In ninety cases out of one hu[illegible] this course will break up an acute [illegible] in two days.—Laws of Life.

THE CRISIS
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..........[illegible]
For a single copy 6 months..........[illegible]
For a single copy 3 months..........[illegible]
Five copies to one address for 6 months..[illegible]
Ten copies to one address for 6 months...[illegible]
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months...[illegible]
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months.[illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy [illegible] sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will br[illegible] papers within reach of all who are able to ma[illegible] payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced [illegible] portion to the number sent to one address; [illegible] in places where there is a company of [illegible] may, by combining together, receive a large [illegible] at a low price, which will enable them to sup[illegible] poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability [illegible] sending in the amount of their subscriptions, [illegible] send as much in addition to their subscript[illegible] they are willing to give, for circulating the [illegible] among the poor, which we all ought to fee[illegible] obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—[illegible] matters not intended for publication, write [illegible]

Over all communications for the paper, w[illegible] the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business [illegible]

All who wish to receive the Crisis, sh[illegible] writing to this office, name the town, co[illegible] State in which they reside, and direct to Ric[illegible] GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, qua[illegible] nearly, at the office where it is received, wi[illegible] cents a year to any part of Massachusetts [illegible] cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA Subscribers have to pre-pay t[illegible] age on their papers, 26 cents a year, in add[illegible] the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-t[illegible] bers, or $2.26 a year. [illegible]

The Meeting Place.

BY [illegible]

"[illegible] ransomed of the Lord shall return and come [illegible] with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads."—Isa. 35:10.

[illegible] flowers shall freshen—
Freshen never more to fade;
Where the shaded sky shall brighten—
Brighten never more to shade;
Where the sun-blaze never scorches;
Where the star-beams cease to chill;
Where no tempest stirs the echoes
Of the wood, or wave, or hill;
Where the morn shall wake in gladness,
And the noon the joy prolong;
Where the daylight dies in fragrance,
'Mid the burst of holy song;—
Brother, we shall meet and rest,
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Where no shadow shall bewilder,
Where life's vain parade is o'er,
Where the sleep of sin is broken,
And the dreamer dreams no more;
Where the band is never severed—
Partings, claspings, sob and moan,
Midnight waking, twilight weeping,
Heavy noontide—all are done;
Where the child has found its mother,
Where the mother finds the child;
Where dear families are gathered,
That were scattered on the wild;
Brother, we shall meet and rest,
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Where the hidden wound is healed,
Where the blighted life re blooms,
Where the smitten heart the freshness
Of its buoyant youth resumes;
Where the love that here we lavish
On the withering leaves of time,
Shall have fadeless flowers to fix on,
In an ever spring-bright clime;
Where we find the joy of loving
As we never loved before—
Loving on, unchilled, unhindered,
Loving once and evermore;
Brother, we shall meet and rest,
'Mid the holy and the blest!

Where a blasted world shall brighten
Underneath a bluer sphere,
And a softer, gentler sunshine
Shed its healing splendor here;
Where earth's barren vales shall blossom,
Putting on her robe of green,
And a purer, fairer Eden
Be where only wastes have been;
Where a king in kingly glory,
Such as earth has never known,
Shall assume the righteous sceptre,
Claim and wear the holy crown;
Brother, we shall meet and rest,
'Mid the holy and the blest!

—Selected.

For the Crisis.

The Voice of God in History.

BY LIZZIE ARMSTRONG.

(Continued.)

Over the ruins of Babylon rolled the Medo-Persian car; and that was a gorgeous page amid the records of history. That royal sceptre swayed over the most splendid city of the East. Tyre, with her commerce and her arts, knelt before it, that crowning city whose merchants were princes, and whose traffickers were the most honorable of earth. And the beautiful Palmyra was there, the Tadmor of the wilderness, with her marble palaces, matchless temples, and works of art the most beautiful of oriental creation. Right gracefully did Egypt bow to the same ruler—Egypt, the mystic land of dark, uncertain science; for they had science and philosophy, though in a rude, unfinished state. Their hieroglyphics whisper through the dust of ages about the astronomical lore of their learned men. Egypt was rich in natural resources—rich in her Thebes, her Memphis, her pyramids and her oracles. But even in the silver age of the Medo-Persian reign, the iron grasp of superstition was laid, with a [illegible] withering grasp over her beauty, and oh, how it galled the fair proportions of those beautiful cities to see their inmates bow before gods of wood and stone! Even Cyrus was an idolater, and the voice of the Lord said unto him, "I girded thee, though thou hast not known me." Yet they flourished like a green bay-tree, extending their conquests on every side, and daily growing richer in their own arts and sciences.

Grecia lay quietly reposing beneath the shade of their mighty monarchy, but in her midst there slumbered a new planet in fame's bright firmament. A thousand warriors have fought and bled to win the laurel wreath that encircled the regal brow of "Alexander the Great." A thousand warriors and statesmen have seized with an iron grasp the pinnacle of human greatness [illegible] with haughty step over [illegible] and crumbling crowns [illegible] kingdoms, have written [illegible] letters of blood on the [illegible] Alexander has [illegible] on hu[illegible] [illegible] ...ched, [illegible] ...tion, upon plains that glitter with the dazzling steel, and waving plumes of contending hosts. It is sublime to work out the vast drama in the halls of fancy, to picture the regal banners supported by the bravery of noble men, amid the din of battle and the roar of musketry; and when the great tragedy is completed, it is grand to hear the clarion notes of victory's triumphant music rolling around the brave. But oh! we do not think, we cannot realize as we read of the dying and the wounded, one half the depth of woe contained in the sentence. We do not hear the piercing shriek as the cold iron rends the quivering flesh—the blood-choking gasp and the low murmuring prayer—the moan for water, or the whispered names of distant loved ones. We cannot see the gaping wounds, the wild look of agony, the cold, still forms lying as they fell convulsively on the sod. We do not look into thousands of homes where abideth the cold, dim shadow of despairing woe, feeding upon the life-blood of those who would have given worlds for only one look at the pale soldier, and to know where he sleeps when the red field is won. Oh! how angels must weep over the carnage of war. The laurel of glory takes root among dead men, and bears the red bloom of blood. The roar of the cannon carries woe to homes and hearts, and the shout of victory is like an iron hoof crushing out the joys and hopes of mothers, wives and sisters.

It was under the dread banner of Alexander that the Greeks marched against the Medes and Persians, and the empire tottered and fell before the simoon breath of the conquerors. And where is it now? Go ask the question amid the ruins of Tyre, or beneath the crumbling columns of Palmyra. Go read your answer amid the musty records of the dark Egyptian shades. The serpent now inhabits the temple where the worshiper once bent the knee in adoration; her oracles have been silent for ages, and the cloud-capped pyramids of Egypt still stand alone in the dreary desert, a mournful monument of human ambition. But the monarchs who planned and the millions of slaves who built them, have gone down together amid the shades of death, and the rank weeds wave mournfully over their dust.

With ruin on every side, Greece flourished like a bright peerless pearl amid the fragments of the past. Greece! renowned, romantic land, with her beautiful scenery and her brave warriors; it was a land of beauty and eloquence, of painting and sculpture; the poet's home and the artist's studio; the brightest gem in the casket of history where repose so many rare jewels. That ancient beautiful spot is hallowed by the memory of all that is ennobling in mental grandeur and inspiring in heroic deeds—all that is fascinating in the trophies of art and thrilling in the beauties of song; it was one brilliant blaze of classic lore. Greece held up for the admiration of future ages a noble constellation of intellect. Are you a mathematician? go sit at the feet of her Archimedes or Euclid. Her scholars have not only explored the labyrinthine paths of philosophy, but have culled the richest flowers from the fields of elegant taste and learning; her historians have recorded in graphic strains the story of her struggles and triumphs; her philosophers and sages have lighted up the dark labyrinthian paths of science; her poets have drawn out thrilling echoes of sublimity and pathos from the lyre of Apollo. Where shall we find an equal for her own dear Homer?—that "father and prince of Epic song." For him the temple of Fame opens her "sanctum sanctorum," and around his name she weaves the sweetest incense that ever arose from her altars. The naked rocks on the banks of the Ægean fired his mind, and "sublimity covered him all day long, and dwelt between his shoulders." We can gaze upon and admire those unparalleled flights of sublimity, while we reverence, almost fear, the giant mind that produced them.

Greece has produced artists who have embodied in the breathing marble and speaking canvas forms of grace and beauty which constituted the masterpieces of the chisel and pencil. Look for one moment upon her Rembrandt, her Appelles, or her Phidas. Yet in nothing has she won a more lasting wreath than that placed by universal consent upon the brows of her orators. Her eloquence began with Pericles, and advancing through a host of illustrious names, reached the meridian of glory [illegible] her matchless Demosthenes. His was [illegible] pouring of passion, intense and burning [illegible] frantic—of enthusiasm glowing [illegible] never raving; it was [illegible] and freedom in[illegible] argument. In the [illegible] ...tal cham[illegible] [illegible] most [illegible] her walls, and pointed triumphantly to the ruins of Athens and Sparta; and to-day that beautiful Greece lies prostrate in the dust. Oh! how easy it is to weep over the fate of this bright luminary of learning; her light of eloquence, of painting and sculpture is quenched in the long night of time. Her philosophers, sages, statesmen, heroes, poets and artists, mingle in the fragments of her fallen might. Go to the temple of Diana at Ephesus, or come to the mystic feet of the Delphic oracle, and ask the story of her renown—the history of her fall. Alas! that temple was long since burned to the ground, and the last echo of the oracle hath died on the lips of Æolus.

Above its ruins the Roman eagle flapped his exultant wings, and pointed in triumph to the "city of seven hills," that emporium of the iron monarchy of the world, with her towers, palaces and temples—her Coliseum, that mountain of marble, where the gladiator died and the untamed lions of Africa bled,—where the noble, faithful christian fell who dared do any thing but deny his Lord. There was the Roman forum, where an unchained senate listened to the rich imagery, the lofty conceptions and majestic fervor of the gifted Tully; or lingered enchanted by the gushing exuberance, the sparkling brilliancy, the glowing fire of Cicero—that great representative of Roman eloquence. There were her cathedrals, whose altars were rich with offerings of surpassing magnificence, and by St. Peter's side arose the great Vatican with its lofty chapel, rendered immortal by the genius of Raphael and Michael Angelo; around its walls thronged the faces of the mighty dead; poets, painters, sculptors—crowned princes in the world of art,—they were true prophets of the beautiful and good. And Rome swayed her sceptre over Italy, where millions of brave hearts were beating, and imaginations were there as bright and vivid as their own sunny clime. Land of poetry and song! for the historian, the artist, the christian, there is magic in the name

"Of that far land whose clime
Is ever like a silvery chime;
That land of sweetest poesy,
Of sculpture, painting, minstrelsy,
Of ever blooming Italy."

The poet too will turn to that home of beauty, canopied by silvery skies, enveloped by golden sunlight, and embraced by the blue waters of the Mediterranean, with nothing to vary her loveliness but the sublimity of her mountains. No wonder, oh! Italia, that the genius of thy children burst forth in song. Thine own Tasso and Dante swept their harps in olive groves or beneath the orange trees, and caught inspiration from the fragrance of matchless flowers and the soft breezes of a lovely coast, while the rich jewelry of heaven strengthened the intense love of the beautiful in their poet souls. They now rest sweetly beneath the bowers of their own native soil, and we can but mourn that the gorgeous luxuriance of that beautiful land was marred by the iron hand of priestcraft, and withered by the blighting curse of popish tyranny.

Rome reached out her hand, and the Arab and Ethiopean bowed in bondage. She reigned without a rival, "mistress of the world," and like a brilliant planet sent her radiance far and wide. She bravely withstood the shock when the victorious Hannibal led the hosts of Carthage over the almost impassable barriers of the Alpine summits—put her armies to flight and stripped three bushels of golden rings from the fingers of her slaughtered knights. But her despised northern enemies, the Goths, Vandals and Huns, with a wild barbarian horde, descended from their mountain strongholds, and like hungry vultures fed upon her splendor and divided her into ten petty kingdoms.

For the last time we are compelled to whisper that the trophies and garlands of fame have faded again. The wreath and diadem which adorned the warrior's brow have been hurled into oblivion. The gigantic bulwarks of genius, the ponderous tomes of learning, the glorious lights of art and the gathering glory of ages, have all fallen together. Ancient Rome is still eloquent, but it is the eloquence of ruins; those tottering temples once echoed to the footsteps of the imperial Cæsars; the cottage of Romulus, the splendid palace of Nero, and the shrines and altars which were sacred to Apollo and the Muses, are buried amid the crumbling fragments of other ages. Nero—from whose name humanity shrinks—lies lower than the ruins of his palace; perhaps all Europe breathed a sigh of relief when the death-angel wound his cold arm around the tyrant; but we will mingle no nightshade of ill-will with the flowers of the grave, for "nothing dies but something mourns," and even on Nero's tomb some unknown hand scattered flowers. He is sleeping, and we [illegible] let his crimes [illegible] him until [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] ...archangel rings through his [illegible] Forum ring with no [illegible] ...ers have perished. [illegible] Coliseum still [illegible] the ivy-crowned walls, and through the long-drawn aisles and gloomy galleries, while the cold night winds moan around its pillared ruin as if sighing over its fallen grandeur. Let us lay the frail garland of sympathy upon the altar of her desolation, and whisper, "Peace to Rome's illustrious shade."

(To be concluded.)

Selections.

William Tyndal—His Invaluable Labors and Violent Death.

And who was William Tyndal,—the man who gave to England its greatest treasure—the printed English Bible? His life was entirely devoted to this great object; from his youth, he felt he had this one thing to do, to translate the word of God into his native tongue and print it. He did so and was martyred for its sake. He was born in 1484, passed his youth in the midst of monks and friars, and was sent early to Oxford, where he made great progress, especially in language.

Now Oxford was the city in which the New Testament, just published in Greek by Erasmus, met with its warmest welcome, and William Tyndal read it—first only as a work of learning, but soon he found it to be something more. That Book spoke to him of God, of Christ, and of being born again, till it completely subdued him. He felt that he had on his hand the Divine Revelation, and that he could not keep the treasure to himself. There were two young men at Cambridge, who had also been reading this Greek New Testament,—Thomas Bilney and John Frith—both afterwards martyrs. When Tyndal joined them, they gained fresh courage and began to address to all around them, that saying of Christ's, "Repent, and be converted;" "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

Bilney and Tyndal left Cambridge in 1519. The friars had not then finished their persecution of the Lollards; and that same year, Thomas Mann, one of their number, who had preached to the conversion of many persons under the great oaks of Windsor forest, was burnt alive for his doctrine, as well as Dame Hawkins, the mother of several little children, for having in her possession a parchment, on which were written the Lord's Prayer, the apostle's creed and the Ten Commandments, in English.

But of what avail was it to silence those obscure lips, while the New Testament of Erasmus could speak? Erasmus was so highly esteemed that he was called "the king of the schools." What he had given to the learned, Tyndal was about to bestow upon the people. When he was between thirty and forty years of age, he was engaged as tutor and chaplain, in the house of Sir John Walsh, a knight of Gloucestershire, and at his table he met with many of the neighboring priests, at whose ignorance he was deeply grieved. He exhorted them also to read the Scriptures, keeping, it is said, Erasmus' New Testament always within reach, to prove what he advanced. The priests disliked to have that book appear, and said "it only served to make heretics," adding, "Why, even we don't understand God's word, as you call it, and how should the vulgar understand it? It is a conjuring book, wherein every body finds what he wants." "Ah!" said Tyndal, "you read it without Jesus Christ; that is why it is obscure to you." "Nothing is obscure to us," said another priest, "we only can explain the Scriptures." "No," said Tyndal; "you hide them, you burn those who teach them, and if you could, you would burn the Scriptures themselves." They soon declared themselves his open enemies; and if he preached, they threatened to expel from the church those who listened to him. "O!" said Tyndal, "while I am sowing in one place, they ravage the field I have just left. I cannot be everywhere. If christians had the Scriptures in their own tongue they could themselves withstand these sophists; without the Bible, it is impossible to establish the laity in the truth."

He went on arguing with all whom he met in favor of translating the Scriptures, till one day a popish doctor, angry with the strength of his arguments, said—"Well, we had better be without God's laws than the Pope's!" This fired the spirit of Tyndal, and he answered with righteous judgment, "I defy the Pope and all his laws, and if God give me life, ere many years the ploughboys shall know more of the Scriptures than you do."

He prayed, he read and carried on his translation. He soon, however, proceeded to London, to seek another retreat, where he might follow out his work. He found a quiet room in the house of Humphrey Monmouth, a pious and benevolent alderman, and dwelt with him six months. This man was afterwards sent to the Tower, on a charge of having aided Tyndal; but he thus justified himself:—"When I heard my Lord of London preach at Paul's-cross, that Sir William Tyndal had translated the New Testament into English, and that it was naughtily translated; that was the first time that I ever suspected or knew any evil of him. The worthy citizen was soon set free.

Tyndal began to fear lest the stake should interrupt his labor. Alas! he exclaimed, is there no place where I can translate the Bible? It is not the Bishop's house alone that is closed upon me, but all England! There lay at that moment in the river Thames a vessel loading for Hamburg; Humphrey Monmouth gave ten pounds for his voyage, and carrying with him only his New Testament, he went on board. "Our priests have buried the Testament of God," said he, "and all their study is to keep it down, that it rise not again; but the hour of the Lord is come and nothing can hinder the w[illegible] as nothing could hinde[illegible] ...ord of God, old from issuing fr[illegible] Jesus Christ of [illegible] ...om the tomb."

That poor man then sailing towards Germany, was to send back, even from the banks of the Elbe, the eternal gospel to his country. He left England in 1523 and never returned to it. He seems to have printed first the gospels of Matthew and Mark, and then removed to Cologne. Being again disturbed in the midst of the New Testament, he gathered up the printed sheets and fled to Worms, where he finished [illegible] One to whom we are so deeply indebted, living in painful and perilous labor [illegible] with cold, hunger, and [illegible] ...ces continually thrown in his way to the prosecution of his work. Yet a heavenly atmosphere so appeared to surround him, that the messengers sent by king Henry eighth to entrap and bring him to England, could not talk with him without being ready to be converted to his sentiments. When the last successful plot against his life was laid, the persons who executed it were obliged to bring with them officers from Brussels, for they could not trust those at Antwerp, where he was so much beloved. He was not aware of his betrayers, and was thrown into prison at Vilvoord, where he remained two years. Part of his work in the prison was that edition of the New Testament which he had promised to give to the ploughboys of Gloucestershire.

In the year 1536, Tyndal was led forth to be put to death. He was fastened to the stake, crying out with a loud voice,—"Lord, open the King of England's eyes!" He was then immediately strangled, and his body consumed to ashes.

Patience.

Patience is the passion of great hearts;
When brute force, like a scornful conqueror,
Clangs his huge mace down in the other scale,
The inspired soul but flings his patience in,
And slowly, that outweighs the ponderous globe."

—Lowell.

"The Righteous not Forsaken."

To-day on the train from Columbus, at the Lebanon station, an aged and venerable lady, accompanied by a gentleman and two ladies, came on the cars. The gentleman was a minister, and occupied a seat near me. I soon found that the aged lady was Mrs. Francis Kindred, now in her eighty-third year, and on her way to the Widow's Home. Ten years ago she emancipated all her slaves, some six or eight in number, and came with them from North Carolina to Ohio. Here she remained, befriended by strangers. Changes in the family that gave her a home, left her last spring homeless, and the poor-house of Warren county became her home. Rev. W. R. Parsons, of the Methodist Protestant church at Lebanon, found her there and learned her history, and appealing to the friends of the poor, he secured means to provide her a home the remnant of her days. I found her cheerful and happy, praising God for his care and kindness. She said: "When I was in the poor-house, it looked as if God had forsaken me, but I never thought he had, and I would rather die in the poor-house than die a slaveholder."—Central Herald.

Bathing in the Dead Sea.

A pleasant correspondent of the Boston Post writing from Jerusalem, thus humorously describes his Dead Sea bath:

"The Dead Sea has nothing of the desolation which it has been the pleasure of travelers to describe, and it seemed to smile at the secret dread with which it inspires the pilgrim. I, of course, took a bath here; and for a swimmer who has a fancy to keep his legs as well as his head out of the water, I can imagine that it must be quite pleasant. My French friend, who is not a little inclined to corpulency, complained that he could not get down into the water, and floated about, now one side up, now another, for all the world like an inflated bladder. On emerging from the water it was rapidly evaporated by the sun; and the salt crystalizing on our bodies, gave us the appearance of animated sticks of rock candy, or a family resemblance of Lot's wife. With a sensation upon our skin, as if we had been pickled for family use, and with a taste in our mouth compounded of glauber salts and asafœtida, we concluded that one bath in the Dead Sea was enough for a lifetime."

A Beautiful Reply.

A pious old man was one day walking to the sanctuary with a New Testament in his hand, when a friend who met him said:

"Good morning, Mr. Price."

"Ah, good morning," replied he; "I am reading my Father's will as I walk along."

"Well, what has he left you?" said his friend.

"Why, he has bequeathed me a hundred-fold more in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting."

This beautiful reply was the means of comforting his christian friend, who was at the time in very sorrowful circumstances.

A FABLE TO SHOW THE FOLLY OF BOASTING.—A gourd had wound itself around a lofty palm, and in a few weeks climbed to its very top.

"How old mayst thou be?" asked the new comer.

"About a hundred years."

"About a hundred years, and no taller! Only look: I have grown as tall as you in fewer days than you count years!"

"I know that well," replied the palm: "every summer of my life a gourd has climbed up around me, as proud as thou art, and as short-lived as thou wilt be."

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Scrofula.

This is a term which takes its name from a Latin word which signifies sow, while the Greeks used a word of the same meaning, for the same disease, possibly because both Greeks [illegible] and Romans found that those families suffered most with scrofula who lived after the brutish manner of swine, although the elevated and refined are not exempt from the taint. Scrofula is an error of nutrition, and hence may attack all colors, constitutions, and temperaments, but those who have light hair and fair skin are most subject to it.

All through the body, there are little bunches of vessels called "glands," which, in their natural state, are not seen, but if diseased, they swell, and form protuberances of irregular shapes, always rounded; hence, from their [illegible] called these glands, [illegible] Our aliment, that which nourishes the body, must pass through what is called the absorbent glands before it is fit for nutrition; in these glands it undergoes considerable changes, but if they are in an unnatural condition, are hardened or swollen, the changes made are not perfect—are not healthful; hence it is that scrofula is essentially an error of nutrition; the food does not give all its strength, the person may eat a great deal, and may even look stout and robust, but the appearance is deceptive—there is no endurance.

Scrofula then is manifested in an abnormal condition of the glands, giving a name to the disease according to the locality of the part affected: if in the sides of the neck, it is called king's evil, because in earlier ages, the touch of a king was thought a cure; if the glands of the joints are affected, it is white swelling; if in the bowels, it is tabes mesenterica, or consumption of the bowels; the person wears away to skin and bone, and is literally consumed to death, without any cough whatever.

Why the glands of one part should become more particularly diseased than elsewhere, is simply because that part has been weakened by some violence offered to it.

But how do the glands become diseased at all, or what is the cause of their unnatural condition? In other words, what causes scrofula?

Most generally, persons are born scrofulous, in consequence of one or both parents being diseased in some way or other; but scrofula may be originated in any constitution by protracted wrong living, such as a want of personal cleanliness, or a continued dwelling in low or damp, or filthy localities, or in habitual excesses as to the animal appetites and passions.

Scrofula, like insanity or family resemblances, may pass over a generation. A man may be scrofulous, his children may not have a trace of it, yet his grandchildren may be decidedly so.

A person may be very slightly scrofulous—only a mere trace of it—so little of it as to be scarcely perceptible, or it may be of such an aggravated character as to distort the whole body.

As a general rule, scrofula shows itself in some kind of breaking out on the skin, or in some affection of the eyes. As scrofula is essentially an error of nutrition, by which the food does not impart its full strength to the system, it is characterized by a want of endurance, by a lack of power of resistance, of warding off disease, or averting "colds;" hence, scrofulous persons take cold very easily, and often describe themselves as "always taking cold," or "the least thing in the world gives me a cold," and that "cold" "settles" in the weak part; if in the tonsils, they swell internally; if the lungs are the weak part, a bad cold is the result: if in the head—and a great many have a weakness there—it is described as a cold in the head. Under certain conditions, a scrofulous person has a greater chance of long life than one who is entirely free from it, especially if well-informed and well to do, because, being conscious of a want of robustness of constitution, common sense dictates carefulness, and a systematic avoidance of those causes of ailment which observation indicates as the uniform precursors of particular symptoms, while the fact of being "well to do," gives the means of nursing, and of guarding against those exposures, over exertions and deprivations, which are the fruitful sources of sickness to the unfortunate poor.

A person born scrofulous, or becoming so after birth, need not necessarily remain so to any specially hurtful extent. If, for example, a man suffers from white swelling, or a long and tedious "running" in the neck from king's evil, the "ill humors" of the system, as they are called, seem to find vent there, leaving the constitution, comparatively, healthy, and a long life of reasonable health is the result.

Scrofula may be almost entirely "worked" out of the system in another way, as by a great and protracted change in the habits of life—such a change as involves large out-door activities for the greater part of every twenty-four hours. The same thing may be accomplished, to a great extent, in-doors, as where a sedentary life is followed by spending a large portion of each day in active employment on foot, especially if the mind is deeply and pleasurably interested in that employment; more decided results will follow, if the aid is given, meanwhile, of judicious personal habits, such as scrupulous cleanliness of body and of clothing, of regular, full, and sufficient sleep; of plain, simple, and nutritious food, eaten at regular intervals of five or six hours, and nothing between, with that daily regularity which is essential to health under all circumstances.

A scrofulous person should eat fresh meats largely, and bread and fruits and berries of every description, using vegetables sparingly.

In short, whatever promotes high bodily health, promotes the eradication of a scrofulous taint; hence, it is the greatest wisdom on the part of those who are scrofulous, to study how and what gives to them the greatest general good health, and to live accordingly.

Scrofula manifests itself externally in some, as in lumps, or a variety of breakings out on the skin; in others, it causes some internal malady. In either case, the essential disease is the same; it is in the system—in the blood—and the attempt should be to eradicate, not to cover up.

If there is an external manifestation, external appliances can never radically cure, can never eradicate—their tendency is to suppress—to drive inwards, or elsewhere, generally, if not always, to find refuge in some more vital part, and the whole history reads, "cured, then died." Hence, external manifestations of scrofula are not, indeed, signs of health, but they are signs of safety. It is when measles "strike in" that there is danger.

Salt rheum is scrofula, and afflicts persons for many years, then sometimes disappears for "good and all," to the great gratification of the patient. The next report is "consumption," if in grown persons; "water on the brain," if in young children.

As to taking internal remedies, one of three things is the uniform result:

First, The medicine gradually loses its power.

Second, The system is benefited only while it is taken; or,

Third, The remedy gradually poisons the system, or impairs the tone of the stomach, thus aggravating the "error of nutrition" and hastening a fatal result.

It is greatly to be regretted that these things are not generally known; an incalculable amount of human suffering would thereby be prevented, and the unfortunate poor saved many a hard-earned dollar.

The most that can be expected as to the cure of scrofula is, that it may be kept in abeyance—may be kept under by wise habits of life, such as regularity, cleanliness, temperance in all things, and daily industry in the open air, living, the meanwhile, on plain, simple, nutritious food, of which fresh meats, ripe fruits, coarse bread, and cold water are the main. We believe that no medicine ever eradicated scrofula or kept it under any longer than while it is taken.—Journal of Health.

Winter Rules.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet.

In going into a colder air, keep the mouth resolutely closed, that by compelling the air to pass circuitously through the nose and head, it may become warmed before it reaches the lungs, and thus prevent those shocks and sudden chills which frequently end in pleurisy, pneumonia, and other serious forms of disease.

Never sleep with the head in the draft of an open door or window.

Let more cover be on the lower limbs than on the body. Have an extra covering within easy reach, in case of a sudden and great change of weather during the night.

Never stand still a moment out of doors, especially at street corners, after having walked even a short distance.

Never ride near the open window of a vehicle for a single half-minute, especially if it has been preceded by a walk; valuable lives have thus been lost, or good health permanently destroyed.

Never put on a new boot or shoe in beginning a journey.

Never wear India-rubbers in cold, dry weather.

If compelled to face a bitter, cold wind, throw a silk handkerchief over the face; its agency is wonderful in modifying the cold.

Those who are easily chilled on going out of doors, should have some cotton batting attached to the vest or other garments, so as to protect the space between the shoulder-blades behind, the lungs being attached to the body at that point; a little there is worth five times the amount over the chest in front.

Never sit for more than a minute at a time with the back against the fire or stove.

Avoid sitting against cushions in the backs of pews in churches; if the uncovered board feels cold, sit erect without touching it.

Never begin a journey until breakfast has been eaten.

After speaking, singing, or preaching in a warm room in winter, do not leave it for at least ten minutes, and even close the mouth, put on the gloves, wrap up the neck, and put on cloak or overcoat before passing out of the door; the neglect of these has laid many a good and useful man in a premature grave.

Never speak under a hoarseness, especially if it requires an effort, or gives a hurting or a painful feeling, for it often results in a permanent loss of voice, or life-long invalidism.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Is Tobacco Poisonous?

Some five years since, a gentleman in Philadelphia, at the head of one of the most extensive and wealthy banking-houses in this country, literally died of starvation! He was an inveterate smoker, and seldom was without a cigar in his mouth, even during business hours. The habit contracted in early life, led to the use of a cigar, lighted or not, permitting its moistened and chewed surface to remain under his tongue. This was pursued for years, and it resulted in impregnating the glands beneath the tongue which terminated in cancerous ulcerations. At first it was not regarded with any anxiety, but inflamation was an attendant evil, and the immediate cause of death. The roots of the tongue ulcerated, and the throat sympathized with them, until it was almost impossible to swallow or breathe. The only nourishment taken for some months previous to his death, was of a liquid character; even that at last could not be received, so swollen and inflamed was the seat of the disorder. Death from starvation and suffocation finally closed the scene, the victim being otherwise in perfect health, except greatly emaciated.—Ex.

COLDS—DO YOU WANT TO CURE THEM?—I will tell you how to do it:

1. Go without eating for thirty-six hours.
2. Wash your body in water at a temperature of eighty-five degrees, all over, and without soap; wipe it dry; rub it well; and go to bed and lie quietly, having books and newspapers about you, reading and sleeping alternately.
3. Take no medicine, not even catnip or sage tea.
4. Be cheerful and easy. Let business pass. In ninety cases out of one hundred this course will break up an acute attack in two days.—Laws of Life.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that in places where [illegible] a company or [illegible], they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to ELD. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above: 1 c., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.25 a year. [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 228. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1860. VOL. X. NO. 21.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING,
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, | MILES GRANT,
JOHN COUCH, | GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truths; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

"We are going to a Beautiful World."

AIR.—"World of Light."

We are going to a beautiful world,
Where sorrow never shall come,
A world where tears shall never fall
In sighing for our home.

CHORUS.
We'll be there, we'll be there,
Palms of victory, crowns of glory,
We shall wear
In that beautiful world of light.

We are going to a beautiful world,
When Jesus comes to reign;
Love's banner will be then unfurled
O'er all earth's wide domain.

We are going to a beautiful world,
Where life's fair tree doth grow,
And where beneath the throne of God
Life's crystal stream doth flow.

And soon that heavenly home,
If faithful, we shall gain,
No more a pilgrim band we'll roam,
But with our Savior reign.

There fragrant flowers will bloom,
Unharmed by winter's breath,
Beyond the darkness of the tomb,
Beyond the reach of death.

E. M. F.

West Killingly, Ct.

For the Crisis.

"The Beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

BY J. MCCAMMON.

"The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."—Rev. 17: 8.

(Continued.)

We will now pass to the last figure in which this great spiritual empire is presented. These figures being truly natural, in each one, as they follow in rotation, the growth and development of this great power is made manifest, till as now seen by John in vision, from the tenth to the fourteenth century she is represented at the zenith of her glory, covered with names of blasphemy and drunk with the blood of saints, Chap. 17: 3;—"So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: and on her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, ... and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration." In verse eighth the angel tells him the secret of the woman, and of the beast that carried her. "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." Now mark the peculiar phraseology of this verse, and of the wonder that would be produced on the minds of the people—the dwellers on the earth. When is this astonishment to be produced? When this beast that John saw in vision is raised up upon the earth; for at the time when John saw the vision, this kingdom represented by these various beasts was yet in the future to all the dwellers on the earth; notwithstanding it had existed on the earth in a different form and bore a different name, it was the same idolatrous kingdom, and in its day had made the blood of the saints run like water; but it had received its wound in the head by a sword and had ceased to exist; yet the time here spoken of when this kingdom had ceased to have an existence, was yet in the future to the apostle John.

We will now examine the last clause of the verse,—"The beast that was, and is not, and yet is," looking forward to a time when this beast that is not shall "rise," as though he had been suddenly resurrected from the grave, and to the astonishment of the dwellers on the earth had resumed his former throne, dressed in the habiliments of royalty, and not of royalty alone, but assuming to himself those of majesty and holiness; claiming to have the keys of St. Peter, being his successor, and having power to forgive sins; raising his subjects to heaven and to mansions of perfect bliss, or hurling them down to the regions of the damned at his pleasure. And this is the kingdom that John saw in vision represented by the mother of harlots. Wonder not, then, that the dwellers on the earth should stand amazed when they saw this wonderful sight—"THE BEAST THAT WAS, AND IS NOT, AND YET IS." "Even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." A few marks of identity yet remain so that not a shadow of a doubt shall be left in the reader's mind. First, as to idolatry, identifying her as the seventh head of Pagan Rome restored. This requires but a glance at history, for as previously shown she occupies the throne of the Cæsars; and where in their idolatrous worship, the image of Jupiter once held a place, the Virgin Mary now stands. And where their tutelar deities once stood, a host of deified saints now hold their places. The angel adds, "And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." It is not said he was an eighth head, but an eighth kingdom. Now we have clearly shown that in Pagan Rome there were seven kingdoms or forms of government. And the eighth kingdom, or the one that followed the seventh, which we have now under consideration, is the revived head, or the imperial power, being one of, or previously counted with, the seven—is in fact one of that number; but being resurrected after being both dead and buried, and his place occupied by others, he comes up in a new form, or, as the apostle says, diverse from the rest; yet in every essential particular a new and an eighth kingdom, occupying the throne of the seven that preceded it, and in idolatry fully their equal. Is he identified?

Reader, if I have been tedious, bear with me; I am setting landmarks. Though you may think me presumptuous, yet I tell you truly, I do not wish to change and reset every few years, particularly not to do the work three times in one year.

To mark this eighth or last kingdom as the one on whom blasphemy is written, we will proceed to our last proposition to mark her rise as the commencement of the 1260 days. And in this last place, under the head of blasphemy, I will quote from the articles of faith or creed of Pope Pius IV., in 1560 before his elevation to the papal chair.

"Article 5. I do also profess that in the mass there is offered unto God a true, proper and propitiatory sacrifice for the quick and the dead; and that in the most holy sacrament of the eucharist there is truly, and really, and substantially, the body and blood, together with the soul and divinity, of our Lord Jesus Christ; and that there is a conversion made of the whole substance of the bread into the body, and the whole substance of the wine into the blood; which conversion the Catholic Church call Transubstantiation. I confess that under one kind only, whole and entire, Christ and a true sacrament is taken and received.

6. I do firmly believe that there is a purgatory, and that the souls kept prisoners there, do receive help from the suffrages of the faithful.

7. I do likewise believe that the saints reigning together with Christ, are to be worshiped and prayed unto; and that they do offer prayers unto God for us, and that their relics are to be held in veneration.

8. I do most firmly assert that the image of Christ, of the blessed Virgin, the mother of God, and of the holy saints, ought to be had and retained: and that due honor and veneration ought to be given them.

9. I do likewise affirm, that the power of indulgences was left by Christ to the church; and the uses of them are very beneficial to christian people.

10. I do acknowledge the Holy Catholic and Apostolical, Roman Church to be the mother and mistress of all churches; and I do promise and swear true obedience to the Bishop of Rome, the successor of St. Peter, the Prince of the apostles, and VICAR OF JESUS CHRIST.

Comments are needless. Were more necessary, I could give them. One extract, as to the persecutions of the saints, must suffice. Says Bishop Newton, "Who can form any conception, or who can make any computation, of the number of pious Christians who have fallen a sacrifice to the bigotry and cruelty of Rome?" And then observes, that from good authorities in the wars with the Albigenses and Waldenses, there perished of those poor creatures in France alone, one million. And from the first institution of the Jesuits to the year 1580, in little more than thirty years, 100,000 orthodox christians fell, and that by the common executioner. But enough. We have marked iniquity and cruelty in every place.

We have caged the "little horn," and by marks as indelible as though written by a sunbeam, we have proved him to be one of the trio. And now lest some one should say, though you have identified the little horn as one every way worthy for the place you have assigned him, you have failed to unite them together. My answer is this: I first prepare my parts before I cut my miters. And now lest you become weary, I will apply the key I have found in the cabinet of the ancient seer; and apply the same to this last, this crooked horn. "And behold there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots." That is, before he arose, three of the first, of the original ten, fell, plucked up, rooted out, if we might so express it. In this you will find our key, and in the history of the times we shall be enabled to find the place and unlock the door to this mystery. In doing this, we will try and give the rise and fall of the three horns. Odeacer, king of a German nation called the Heruli, took Rome in 476, transferring the seat of government to Ravenna, the seat of his new kingdom. This government lasted but sixteen years when Theodoric, the Gothic king, plucked up its roots, and planted another in its stead, of sixty-four years' continuance. This, too, had its day, and was overthrown by Narses, who founded the exarchate of Ravenna. And now again the roots of this last kingdom gave way, so that in 752 its place was vacated to the Lombards. These three kingdoms having now fallen, or three of the original ten horns of Daniel's last beast being plucked up by the roots, we will here introduce the little horn, the new king, wherein there are eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things. In three years after the fall of this last kingdom, or in 755, the Pope assumed temporal power, Pepin having given him the kingdom he possessed. His power and great authority having now reached the point, we will unite our three worthies, making one triple-headed monster; and will throw the cloak of Paul's "man of sin," the "mystery of iniquity," around him to hide his nakedness.

As I have completed the different parts of my job, we will cut our miters and glue them together, producing a star of three points; which we will call the star of destiny. A trio in points, in union they are one. In their component parts they are made to point their origin. The first was manufactured from the seventh head of the dragon, and points to the past, and the beast that was. The second was furnished from the body of the leopard, and points to the time that is present, even Papal Rome. The third was made from a crooked little horn, that had sprung up among other horns on the head of a beast that had great iron teeth, and points to the end, when they in an united form shall go down to perdition. Then again, it is a dial-plate pointing the wayfaring pilgrim the place he occupies in the 1260 years marked on the dial, in twelve prophetic periods or hours. One glance will show that we are in the eleventh hour, just time enough to take a little rest, before the Master comes to take the weary ones home.

In review of the whole, we would say, Paul opened the gate, and showed the man of sin. John set the mile stones and gave us the length of his days. Daniel blew the little horn, and the key was found that enabled us to unlock the door, where we found the mystic number, even 755.

(To be continued.)

For the Crisis.

Our Statistical Report.

PREPARED BY DANIEL T. TAYLOR.

No. 3.

I. Comparative numbers. Second Adventism, as the world calls it, may doubtless date its rise in this country in 1843, and the sect embodying this principle is therefore of but sixteen years growth. I have said there are about six hundred ministers holding the doctrine. This exceeds the number of Protestant Episcopal clergymen in the country in 1832, which amounted to but five hundred and eighty-three, though the denomination is the first and oldest of the evangelical denominations planted in America. It exceeds the number of Baptist ministers in 1784, which was but four hundred and twenty-four, though that sect was then in its one hundred and forty-fourth year, being founded in 1639. It exceeds the number of Presbyterian ministers seventy years ago which was then less than two hundred. Methodism took its rise here in 1766, but after eighteen years of existence, had but eighty preachers. The Moravians in America have twenty-eight ministers. The Seventh Day Baptists, seventy-seven ordained and seventeen licentiates. The General Baptists only fifteen ministers. The Church of God, one hundred and thirty-one. The Mennonites, two hundred and fifty. The Cumberland Presbyterians, three hundred. The Reformed Dutch church, three hundred and eighty, with fifty licentiates or candidates. There are more ministers preaching the speedy advent of Christ than are to be found in either of the following churches, viz.: The Associate Reformed Church, the Reformed Presbyterian Church, the German Reformed, the Evangelical Association, the Christians, the Winnebrennarians, the African Methodists, or the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists. There are at least sixteen Evangelical churches mentioned by Dr. Baird in his "Religion in America, 1856," whose ministry is inferior in numbers to that of the so-called Adventists, yet Dr. Baird does not even mention the latter, simply because in their loose and unorganized condition heretofore, no attention has been paid to statistics. The Doctor does not appear to know of their existence even! Of the ratio of increase in the ministry in question, there is no means of knowing anything with certainty. I do not now recall the names of over ten who have gone to other churches during the past ten years, while more than this number have been ordained among us within the past year, and more or less every year. Some come in from other churches. And the deaths are not many or frequent. Those that remain, do so for the love of God and truth; for there is nothing very inviting among us, either in the way of popularity or salary. The talent of this body is not inconsiderable, but compares well with other orders, seeing there are no theological seminaries or schools among us, and less attention is paid to learning than our cause demands. Still there is no lack of men of taste, orators, writers, poets, and men of commanding influence. And in regard to a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and of history as related to prophecy, these six hundred men and women are without a parallel. The Bible is their great weapon, storehouse, furniture, text-book, constitution, creed and charter.

II. Lay membership. Until within a few years past, very few of our churches have organized, or had any enrollment of membership. Nearly all seemed simultaneously to see our great lack, and at once scores of churches came into order, appointed officers and enrolled their scattered members. Numerous Conferences, too, are organized for more concerted action. This is as it should be. Still the work is so incomplete that no certainty in regard to the number of believers can be attained, nor have I sought to collate any. But we will try to arrive at some approximate number. In 1851, according to the census books, there were two thousand, one hundred and twenty-six Adventists in all of Canada, which if we allow the two provinces thirty-nine preachers, would make the proportion of ministers to members as one to fifty-four and a half. If this ratio were generally true, there would be six hundred times fifty-four and a half, or thirty-two thousand and seven hundred Adventists in all America. But there has doubtless been an increase in Canada within nine years, and it is said that twelve or fifteen churches are organized in Canada East, alone. Furthermore, in the four leading denominations, viz., the Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists and Baptists, the average number of ministry and communicants is as one to ninety-three. Carry this out in my computation of Adventists and it would almost double the above estimate. But lest the reader suppose the membership as compared to the ministry decreases among the smaller sects, I have taken pains to ascertain the ratio amongst even smaller denominations whose average ministry is about equal to our own, viz., six hundred, and I still give as the result one minister to ninety members. Once more. Dr. Baird in his "State and progress of religion in America," being a report made at the Evangelical Alliance in Paris, 1855, puts the evangelical and non-evangelical ministry of the country at thirty thousand, seven hundred and fifty-six, and the membership of both at four million, six hundred twenty-seven thousand, nine hundred and ninety-two, which will show in this general estimate the ministry and membership to be as one to one hundred and fifty-one. But taking our other estimate of one to ninety, which is doubtless nearer correct, we find that the number of christians in the States and Canada, who are under the spiritual guidance and tuition of our ministry, and who are looking for Christ to come soon, amounts to fifty-four thousand. If we suppose the number of believers compared with attendants to be as one to three—which is, I think, the average estimate in churches—and allow that not over five hundred and fifty ministers are actively engaged in preaching at the present time, it will be seen that the population of the community generally attending at Advent meetings (of every and all description) and under Advent influence and education, to be not less than one hundred and fifty thousand souls. These figures exhibit the great responsibility of this ministry and the vastness of the work committed to those who seek to make ready a people for the near and personal coming of the Lord.

III. Different views. It is well known there exists a difference of doctrinal opinion among us from Maine to Minnesota. This relates mainly to the nature and destiny of man, the one thousand years of Rev. 20, and the subject of holy time. On this matter I shall speak freely for truth's sake, independently, because I am nobody's appointed agent in this work, and hence responsible for myself alone; and impartially, because I write for the whole body. And what of this want of unity in opinion? Does it prove we are all wrong? Nay, verily. I do not rejoice in view of these seeming separate interests, but would it were otherwise and that the six hundred ministers with their flocks were in full fraternity with each other and "of one mind." But the diversity exhibits some things commendable. It shows an unwillingness to bow down to the creed power such as the Papacy would enjoin. It shows manly independence in the study of the Scriptures. It shows an unfettered conscience and free thought in relation to the things that are esteemed divine. And if it must exist let there be tolerance among all the honest and good. True, there are at least three or four kinds of Adventists. So too, other and far more popular sects are divided. Dr. Baird in his great work to which I have alluded, exhibits two kinds of Episcopalians, eight sorts of Baptists, eight kinds of Presbyterians, and no less than ten varieties of the great Methodist family. Is it then to be wondered at that a people often under great excitement, without organization, and without written creeds, but with an open Bible, and indulging in the utmost freedom of opinion, should separate into four or more varieties, with somewhat varied interests? As for myself, I only wonder that so great a union does at all exist as is witnessed in our ranks. But I ardently desire a closer union among those who look for the Lord, and sincerely think it might be attained, if we will banish intolerance, think and let think, and crush out sectarianism. I say this without wishing to be understood as endorsing every doctrinal notion now afloat. The following is the result of my inquiries on the points of variance already named. Of the five hundred and eighty-four names there are

First. 1. Believers in literal life and death and utter and final destruction, three hundred and sixty-five. 2. Believers in the conscious death-sleep and eternal pain, sixty-seven. 3. Those perplexed and undecided, nine. 4. Those not reported, one hundred and forty-three.

Second. 1. Believers in the First day Sabbath as being more or less holy and divinely obligatory, one hundred and ninety-nine. 2. Believers in no divinely appointed Holy Day under the gospel, but who, worship on Sunday, one hundred and sixty-six. 3. Believers in and observers of the Seventh Day Sabbath, fifty-seven. 4. Those not reported, one hundred and sixty-two.

Third. 1. Believers in the Pre-millennial advent and personal reign, two hundred and fifty-one. (Of this class, fifty-seven, viz., the Seventh Day Sabbath keepers, hold the one thousand years reign to be with Christ in the New Jerusalem in heaven). 2. Believers in the Pre-millennial advent and personal reign, and holding the English Literalist view, or Age to come, one hundred and two. 3. Believers in Anti-millenarianism, or the one thousand years in the past, but holding to an eternal personal reign on earth, twenty-seven. 4. Those perplexed and undecided, twenty. 5. Those not reported and consequently unknown, one hundred and eighty-four Such are the figures of our faith, as I now have them.

For the Crisis.

The Nature and Origin of Jesus.

BY WM. HOBBS.

The origin of Jesus is clearly revealed in the Bible, so clearly, that it may be said in the language of Paul, "It is evident that our Lord sprung out of Judah." Yet the evidence of his origin is ignored by a strange theology, that attaches more importance to a theory of a pre-existent Jesus than it does to the real character of Jesus of Nazareth. To disprove such a theory it is only necessary to show what the Scriptures teach in regard to his origin. To do this, quotations will be freely made, and their meaning illustrated as occasion may require.

That our Lord originated at a particular time, is evident from the fact of its being written that God said of him, "Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee." Here God not only declares him to be his son, but also, that he generated him at a particular time—"This day have I begotten thee." And as this is said in immediate connection with the declaration, Thou art my son, it follows that it can only refer to his divine generation as a son. And as "this day" refers to time, the question naturally arises as to what time is meant. This will require evidence to show when the prophecy of the second Psalm, where the declaration occurs, began its fulfillment. This will be shown to have been at the trial and crucifixion of Christ Jesus; which is proved by Acts 3: 24—28; as the Psalm in question is quoted and explained, as above, in a prayer of the disciples made "with one accord;" and is as follows:—"Lord, thou art God, who hast made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is, who by the mouth of thy servant David hath said, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together, against the Lord, and against his Christ. For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast Anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy council determined before to be done."

Now by reference to the second Psalm, it will be seen that it was when they were thus gathered together against the Lord, and against his Anointed, that the prophecy represents the Messiah as saying, "I will declare the decree, Jehovah hath said unto me, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee." Hence, the phrase, "this day have I begotten thee," must have referred back to a time prior to the fulfillment of the declaration by the Messiah, and so could not have had any reference to his subsequent resurrection from the dead, as some would have us believe, consequently, it could only have referred back to the fact of his being begotten of God when he was conceived by the virgin Mary; as the word "begotten" clearly implies a mother as well as a Father. But to the evidence that Messiah declared what was prophetically decreed that he should.

At the trial of Jesus, when arraigned before the Jewish High Priest, it is written, that "the High Priest asked him and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am; and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven."—Mark 14: 61, 62.

Now this question of the High Priest must have been in reference to some prophecy concerning the Messiah; since all that they knew of a Messiah was through the prophecies. And the form of the question, Art thou the Christ, the son of the Blessed? indicates that the question referred to the prophecy of the second Psalm; since "the Christ" is there spoken of as the son of Jehovah: which name, Jehovah, the Jews had in such reverence, that instead of pronouncing it, they substituted another term instead; one of which was the one the High Priest used,—The Blessed. The name Jehovah, is translated in the Old Testament by the word Lord, printed in small CAPITALS. The terms, "the Anointed," "the Christ," "the Messiah," are all of a like meaning; the first being the English, and the second, Greek; the third, the Hebrew term. Hence, the form of the question indicates that the High Priest had reference to the prophecy of the second Psalm, concerning the promised Messiah's being the son of Jehovah,—"the son of the Blessed;" and was equivalent to asking if he was the subject of that prophecy. And the question being answered affirmatively, he thereby declared "the decree," and fulfilled the prophecy. Consequently, it follows that Jehovah had already said to him, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee. This being so, it could have only referred to his peculiar birth.

This view is confirmed by Paul in Acts 13: 33, as he applies the same passage to his birth. But as this fact is questioned by some; and as they found their argument partly on the Greek term anastasis, it will be necessary to examine Paul's discourse, together with the meaning of the Greek term. The term is thus defined—"A rising up; by metonymy, the author of the resurrection—John 2: 25; met, and meton, the author and cause of felicity; Luke 2: 34."—Lexicon.

Anastasis does not, therefore, of itself signify the resurrection of the dead, unless used in that connection. Like most words, its meaning is governed by its relative position in a sentence. For instance, when God said to Moses, "I will raise them up a prophet of your brethren, like unto thee; and will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him," the phrase, raise up, as there used, can only refer to his being raised up from infancy, by its being said that he should be "raised up of your brethren" to be a prophet. Yet the phrase, raise up, as it occurs in the Septuagint, is anastesei, one of the words of [illegible]. And the same word is used in the Acts, in Peter's explanation of the promise made to the fathers, as follows:—

Acts 3: 22, 26.—"For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up (Greek, anastesei) unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people. Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days. Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, and in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you first, God having raised up his child Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities."

That his being raised up refers here to his being raised up from infancy, is plainly evident from the Greek passage—humin proton ho Theos anasteesas, ton paida autou Jesoun, apesteilen auton eulogounta humas—which is literally translated thus: To you first God having raised up that child of his (Jesus) sent him to bless you. This clearly teaches that he was raised up from infancy, and sent after being raised up; since, according to Christ's own words, his being "sent" referred expressly to his life before his death; hence it cannot refer to his resurrection from the dead. Further, the Greek phrase, ton paida, indicates the same, as this means a child from infancy to maturity. It is applied to Jesus at his birth, in Matt. 2: 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 20, 21, no less than nine times; and is translated in every instance, "the young child." It differs from huios, son, in this respect, that while a son may be a child, a son may not always be a child. So Christ is not called a child after maturity, only as it refers back to the fact that he was once a child—an infant. But to turn to Paul's discourse.

In the 13th chapter of Acts, Paul gives a chronological history, from the exodus of the Israelites out of Egypt to the reign of king David; and then says, "Of this man's seed hath God according to his promise raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus: when John had first preached, before his coming, the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel. And as John fulfilled his course, he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he; but behold, there cometh one after me, whose shoes of his feet I am not worthy to unloose." Here is a clear and distinct proposition made by Paul and proved by the preaching of John the Baptist; namely, that God had raised up a Savior of the seed of David, which was Jesus. He then continues as follows:—

"Men, brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent. For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of their prophets, which are heard every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre. But God raised him from the dead and he was seen many days of them which came with him from Galilee to Jerusalem; who are his witnesses unto the people."

Paul having made two distinct statements in regard to his being raised up from infancy, and from the dead, it follows that when he afterwards speaks, in the same connection, of his being raised up, that it refers to his being raised up from infancy, unless explained to the contrary by direct reference to the resurrection from the dead; anastasis being alike applicable to both facts. Accordingly, having stated his two propositions, and proved each one separately, by what was then present proof, he again repeats each with Scriptural quotations from the prophecies, by way of illustrating the truth of his propositions, which he does as follows:—

"And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus—anastesas Iesoun—as it is also written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." "And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David. Wherefore he saith also in another Psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine holy One to see corruption."

The above statement of his first proposition is emphatically distinguished from the second. First, he says he has raised him up in fulfillment of the promise made unto the fathers, and the promise being, I will raise them up a prophet; which, according to the testimony of Peter, [illegible]

THE WORLD'S CRISIS. WHOLE NO. 228.

[illegible] and both use the same identical [illegible] word to denote his being raised up. [illegible] Paul says not only that he was raised up in fulfilment of the promise made to the fathers, but also, as it is written in [illegible] "Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee;" which clearly refers to generation, and not to a resurrection from the dead.

And this quotation of his was to the point. It was not his part as a logician to quote Scripture to prove a point, when the quotation simply referred to something else, besides the point to be proved. For instance, the quotation from the second Psalm could not have been quoted by him as a proof that Christ was to be raised from the dead, and it has no natural reference to that fact, but naturally refers to generation. But he quotes it as an illustration of the manner that God raised up Jesus from infancy, in accordance with the promise made to the fathers. And what Paul states, is according to the account of the birth of Christ, as recorded by Matthew and Luke.

Luke 1: 26-35:—"And it came to pass [illegible] the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David: and the virgin's name was Mary. And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women. And when she saw him she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be. And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

According to this account, the Virgin Mary conceived a son by the spiritual energy of the Divine Presence. The spirit of God pervaded her being, and she conceived by the power of that spirit. And mark, that it was said that she should conceive a son; whose name was to be called Jesus. Conception, we all know, is the formation of a new being in the womb. Therefore a theory of a pre-existent Jesus, is, to all intents and purposes, a theory of "another Jesus." The virgin's son was conceived by her, hence he was not a pre-existent being—a son incarnate—or born again. But it was Jesus of Nazareth, the virgin's son, that was begotten of God; hence, he partook in the commencement of his existence of the divine nature, in accordance with the fixed law of generation. Hence, "he is the image of the invisible God," and "the first born of every creature," by being the only begotten son of God.

Matthew's account of his birth is thus: "Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise; when as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found of child by the Holy Spirit. Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. But while he thought on these things, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary, thy wife; for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Spirit. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins. . . . Then Joseph being raised from sleep, did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife, and knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born son: and he called his name Jesus."—Matt. 1: 18-25.

Thus we have the testimony of two witnesses of the divine generation of Jesus; which is recognized as sufficient evidence by the law of Moses. Besides, we have the prophetic testimony of Isaiah, as quoted by Matthew, to confirm this evidence of his peculiar birth. And this evidence is of the most solemn character, being given in the name of the great Jehovah, and proves against all contradiction, that Jesus was born of a virgin. This evidence may be questioned and doubted, but no logical argument can be framed against it; from the fact that this evidence cannot be impeached.

To prelude that it is contrary to the law of generation, is an assumption that is not true; [illegible] law simply forbids conception by the agency of the female alone. As this is not claimed in regard to the virgin Mary, the objection against the divine generation of Jesus, is without any foundation, and consequently, whatever may be said against it is not worthy to be called an argument. But what saith the prophecy of Isaiah?—

"Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign: Behold a virgin shall conceive and bring forth a son, and shall call his name Immanuel. Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil and choose the good. For before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings."—Isa. 7: 14, 16."

This prophecy represents Jesus in his infancy, as possessed of infantile powers of [illegible] Luke, that Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man.

[illegible] to have become an infant as here represented, [illegible] to die just before being [illegible]

[illegible] the death of [illegible] he died, he died unto sin once," so we may safely conclude that the passage in the second Psalm—"Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee," is to be understood according to its natural import. And as this evidence is plain and positive, those passages which are quoted to prove a theory of a pre-existent Jesus, are to be interpreted in harmony with the facts concerning his birth.

(To be continued.)

For the Crisis.

"The Common Interest" System.

No. 3.

In my last I had arrived to the conference held at Jerusalem, and the decrees for the Gentile church, in which no mention was made of selling out, and going to live at Jerusalem. Let us still pursue the history of the Apostolic church. I will here remark that there is a great lack on the part of many, about learning for themselves the doctrines of the Bible, so as not to be misled by teachers, and when one rises up with a long tongue, and confident delivery, quotes a few texts and says they teach thus and thus, a class are led on without knowing where.

We find Paul and his companions traveling and preaching in the various parts of Asia and Europe; now working at tent-making, now living in his own hired house; now teaching in a school-room, now in the synagogues; disciples multiplying, churches being organized; then revisiting and exhorting them, reproving and strengthening them. Now we find fourteen epistles written by Paul to various churches; two by Peter; one by James; one by Jude; three by John,—all by inspiration, and full of instruction, correction, reproof and exhortation. Yet not one word of instruction to sell out, and enter what is called the "common interest" system, such as those at Jerusalem once did. Not a word of reproof because they did not do so; not a word of exhortation to do so; but hundreds of facts recorded to show they did not subscribe to any such theory, and that the course pursued by the single church in Jerusalem was not approved of God, although he blessed them in the exercise of their gifts and faith for the salvation of sinners, for whom they labored, and in due time, as I have shown, broke up their plans, to make them instrumental in carrying out his own.

This is the course of Apostolical labors. But it is urged that the church apostatized before Paul's day. Well, did Paul teach the pure gospel, and did he give gospel instruction? I trust our modern apostles will admit he did, "but that he erred some in practice." Very well. We hear Paul say, "but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the fear of God."—2 Cor. 4: 2. Did he do this? I think so. But a word more. Paul says, "Ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons; serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears and temptations, which befel me by the lying in wait of the Jews; and how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you." If Paul tells the truth here, then the doctrine of common interest was not profitable for the churches in Asia, for he did not teach it to them. But it may be urged that Paul was not yet in a perfected state, and had not come to that. But hold, Paul says again, "Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men, for I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Acts 20: 18; 20: 26-27.

Therefore the selling out and common interest doctrine is not in "the counsel of God;" for Paul did not declare it. But lest it be urged that Paul was not converted then, and not fully fitted to teach "all God's counsel," we will cite the investigation to Paul's Epistles to Timothy, when he says, "I have fought a good fight, finished my course, kept the faith." In these epistles the entire reverse of the sell out and common interest principles, are urged upon Timothy as "the doctrine" to which he is to "take heed," that he and his hearers may be saved, and in the putting the brethren in mind of which would constitute him "a good minister of Jesus Christ."

We therefore conclude that the modern system of common interest, and community, is spurious in the extreme, on another foundation, for it does not rest on Christ and the Apostles or Prophets. The gospel that is accompanying it can be as fully shown to be "another," and different from that Paul and John and the other Apostles preached. Therefore those who receive the promulgators "into their houses (of worship) and bid them God speed;" are in danger of being "partakers of their evil deeds." See 2 John: 11. "These things I have written concerning those who seduce you." I have no ill-will towards any, no malice, or revenge. I pity those engaged in the work. I have knowledge of several classes in the history of the church who have tried the same, and [illegible] a disastrous [illegible]. It is not new. I have written [illegible] with a sympathizing heart for those honest ones who are being deceived and perplexed by it, and wished me to write. May the Lord guide us by his truth, and soon come and give us his kingdom.

I. C. WELLCOME.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 25, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 5.

We have now looked over two divisions and nine sections of "Doubting Castle," and found the doubts when examined in the light of truth, like bogus gold in nitric acid, unable to stand the test. We pass to the examination of Division III, Sec. 10, and will let Bro. Burnham state what he saw in this part of the "Castle." He describes it as follows:—

"The primitive christian church, from the days of the apostles to the third century, held, as we find from an investigation of all the writings with which we are favored in relation to the matter, that the disembodied human spirit is in conscious existence, somewhere, between death and the resurrection. They did not all hold that the spirit is immortal. They did not all hold that the spirit goes to heaven at death; but they did, as a mass, hold that the spirit does exist after the body is dead, somewhere. No one acquainted with the history of the primitive church will say to the contrary of this fact. Would not the earlier edition of the christian church be more likely than any other to have the truth on this great question?" (10)

10. When we were incarcerated in "Doubting Castle," its managers made a great display in this section, and showed a degree of self-confidence in the strength of this proposition, that made our faith waver, and we almost sat down in despair again, thinking it would be of no use to make any further efforts to get out of the gloomy windings of this old "Castle." But a friendly voice whispered, "Look over the writings of the fathers, and compare them with the Bible, if they agree with it, they are right; if not, they are wrong. Do not receive as truth all that is asserted." This seemed so sensible, that we resolved to follow the advice, as it appeared to come from one who had carefully examined the matter, and knew that the managers of "Doubting Castle" had made an assertion that facts would not sustain. We thought within ourselves, if we do find this assertion false, which is so boldly and confidently set forth, we shall have but little confidence in any others we may find in this "Castle," till we have fully tested them. We saw that great importance was attached to this proposition, and learned that many pilgrims had made little effort to get out after reading it; and yet, admitting the statement as truth, we wondered why so much more importance should be attached to this, than the writings of the apostles themselves. We thought it must be because the doctrine of the conscious state of the spirit between death and the resurrection was not taught by the apostles. And yet it seemed somewhat reasonable to conclude that, if "the fathers," so called, who immediately succeeded the apostles, believed in the "conscious existence" of disembodied human spirits, they might have learned it from the apostles, and if they did, it must be true.

When we had proceeded thus far, we trembled for the result. We saw very clearly, that the proprietors of "Doubting Castle" were exceedingly anxious that we should not examine the writings of "the fathers," and this gave us some bright rays of hope to believe that we should find, as in other cases, that their assertions were not based on facts. With this feeling we turned to the writings of "the fathers," known by the names of Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp.—These five writers," says Dr. Clarke, "constitute the whole of what are called the 'Apostolical Fathers.'"* We knew, if we did not find the proposition sustained by the writings of these fathers, all efforts to establish the doctrine by the opinion of uninspired men this side of them, would only be labor lost, as when one beats the air; hence we determined to go carefully and look over every thing written by them on this subject; and still further, if we did not find the doctrine in their writings it would be very strong evidence that the apostles never taught it to the church of Christ; and if they did not teach it, it would be equally certain that Christ did not teach it to them; and then it would most clearly follow, that it is not a Bible doctrine.

The "APOSTOLICAL FATHERS" flourished between A. D. 71 and A. D. 140. They immediately succeeded the apostles, and wrote before the time of Justin Martyr. The first of these, BARNABAS, was a companion of Paul, who says of him, "He was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith."—Acts 11: 24. Clement of Alexandria denominates him, "The apostle Barnabas . . . the apostolical Barnabas, one of the seventy, and follow worker with Paul;" hence it appears he was one of the "seventy" sent out by the Savior. His writings [illegible] early christian [illegible] and are [illegible] ted by [illegible] lived in the [illegible] of St. John, [illegible] associated with Paul, and with others who had learned the doctrine of christianity from Christ and the apostles, it looks very reasonable that he should write the same doctrine that they taught.

If Christ and the apostles instructed their hearers that man has an immortal soul that lives on in a conscious state after his death, we shall expect to read it in the writings of this "APOSTOLICAL FATHER." What are the facts? In all his writings, we cannot find a hint that man has by nature an immortal soul. He does not intimate that the wicked are to suffer eternal misery. In the fifteenth chapter, he says: —"For he who does such things shall be glorified in the KINGDOM of God. But he that chooses the other part, shall be destroyed together with his works. For this cause there shall be both a resurrection and a retribution." He teaches plainly that there is no reward till Jesus comes, and no punishment till after judgment. We find nothing about disembodied souls or spirits which are alive in hades or any other place, but plain teaching to the contrary.

We turn to CLEMENT, the second of the "Apostolical Fathers." He was Bishop of Rome, and is thought to be the one whom Paul mentions among his "fellow laborers whose names are in the book of life."—Phil. 4: 3. There is a spurious epistle attributed to him which is thought to have been written in the fourth century. He wrote about the time that St. John lived. In the seventh chapter he says: "It is written, The merciful shall inherit the earth . . . . but the transgressors shall PERISH from off the face of it." In chapter eighteen he says: "What can MORTAL MAN do? or what strength is there in him that is made out of the dust?" In all the writings of Clement, we can find nothing about immortal souls or spirits, or about eternal misery.

We pass to examine the writings of HERMAS, the third of the "Apostolical Fathers." In his second vision he says: "Happy are they that do righteousness; THEY shall NOT be CONSUMED forever."

Again he says, in the third vision, ver. 86, he who abstains "from all evil works, believing that if he shall contain himself from all concupiscence, he shall be the heir of ETERNAL LIFE."

In the Sixth Command he says: "The evil way has not a good end . . . . it is rugged and full of thorns, and leads to DESTRUCTION." Again, in the Twelfth Command he says: "Whosoever therefore shall depart from all evil desires, shall LIVE unto God; but they that are subject unto them shall DIE FOREVER."

In the Sixth Similitude, when speaking of those who "have blasphemed the name of the Lord," he says: "These kind of men are ordained unto DEATH."

In the Tenth Similitude he says that he who neglects the commands, "shall NOT LIVE FOREVER."

In all his writings we find nothing about eternal torment, immortal souls or spirits.

We turn next to the writings of IGNATIUS, the fourth of the "Apostolical Fathers." He was "bishop of Antioch, in Syria, the latter part of the first, and the beginning of the second century." Some say, he was the one whom the Lord took in his arms and set in the midst of his disciples. Ignatius was martyred by being thrown to the wild beasts for being a christian.

In his epistle to the Magnesians, second chapter, he says: "Be ye united to your bishop, and those who preside over you, to be your pattern and direction in the way to IMMORTALITY."

In his epistle to Polycarp, he says: "Be sober as the combatant of God; the crown proposed to thee is IMMORTALITY."

We can find nothing in all his writings about immortal souls or spirits, nor any thing about eternal misery for the wicked.

We now turn to Polycarp, the last of the "Apostolical Fathers." Eusebius, the earliest church historian, says of him: "POLYCARP, disciple of the APOSTLES, who received the bishopric of the church in Smyrna from the eye witnesses and ministers of the Lord."—Euse. B. 3, C. 36. In his epistle to the Philippians, second chapter, when speaking of pleasing the Lord, he says: "Whom if we please in this present world, we shall also be made partakers of that which is to come, according as he has promised to us, that he will RAISE US FROM THE DEAD." Polycarp says nothing concerning immortal souls or spirits existing as conscious entities between death and the resurrection; neither do we find a word from him about eternal torment.

After looking over all the writings of the "APOSTOLICAL FATHERS," and not finding one word about immortal souls or spirits, or that the spirits of men are conscious beings between death and the resurrection, we inquired of the "Doubting Castle" managers, with much earnestness, "why have you caused it to be stated that the primitive christians from the days of the apostles believed that disembodied human spirits existed in a conscious state, when there is not one such statement in all the writings of the 'Apostolical Fathers?'" And to their blushes of confusion, echo answered, "why?" As these fathers received their doctrine from the apostles and [illegible] who were instructed by Christ, it appears clear that they learned and taught nothing concerning conscious, disembodied human spirits; therefore the doctrine is not sustained by them, as asserted by the conductors of "Doubting Castle."

One point should not be forgotten; to wit, that in the Old Testament, we found the Lord giving timely warning through his prophets against the approach of the doctrine of the consciousness of disembodied human spirits; and if this doctrine was soon to be urged upon the christian church by converted Platonic philosophers, who would lead the children of the Lord from the simple doctrine of Christ; we may expect to find a note of warning from the apostles, as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. Hence we read: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy."—Col. 2: 8. It is a well known fact that some of Plato's followers were converted after the death of the "Apostolical Fathers," who succeeded in mingling their philosophy, which taught that souls were conscious in hades, with the Bible. Notwithstanding the Scriptures taught very plainly that all were unconscious in hades; yet, by spiritualizing the word of the Lord, they endeavored to harmonize their heathen philosophy and the Bible; so that in the latter part of the second century, we find the root of the Papal abomination began to grow, which resulted in purgatory, and prayers to the spirits of dead saints. In the latter part of the second century, the belief in the immortality of the soul, which, as we have shown, had its origin among the heathen, began to get a foothold in the christian church, and continued to gain ground till it was established by a decree of the Pope.

It is admitted that the earliest edition of the christian church was more likely to be right than any succeeding one. We have found the point is most clearly settled, that the belief in conscious, disembodied, human spirits has no countenance in the writings of the "Apostolical Fathers" and the "primitive christian church;" therefore, the doctrine is opposed to the teachings of Christ and the Apostles.

We have now carefully examined section ten of "Doubting Castle," and find its assertion is not sustained by historical FACTS.

*[Clarke's Succession of Sacred Literature, p. 92.]

For the Crisis.

Brief Sketch of my Labors.

BRO. GRANT:—Allow me the privilege, through the columns of the Crisis, to give a brief sketch of my labors and travels for a few months past in this part of God's vineyard.

It is now about fifteen months since I moved my family to this section of the country, during which time I have traveled and labored, in preaching the Word, in this state and Iowa. I have the satisfaction to know that in all places where I have preached during this time, God has blessed my labors, although I have had to contend earnestly and ardently for the truth, as the teachers of the dogmas and fables of the day have manifested a disposition to array themselves against it. I have traveled night and day, amidst the confusion of the elements, exposed to snow and rain, the piercing blast of northern winds, snow, mud, and water, beneath my feet, as I have traveled, leaning on my staff from weariness, sometimes my heart sinking in sadness and dejection, in thinking on the past, remembering that I have spent my all in trying to do good to my fellow men, and now have arrived at a period in life's history when my physical powers are becoming prostrated, my health impaired through abundant labors, and my means of support exhausted. But amidst all, when I can look up and by faith descry the Abrahamic inheritance that is in reserve for the saints of God, and hoping that when the book of life is opened and the heirs of salvation are numbered, that then my poor name will be named with that company, this hope has hushed every murmur and led me to exclaim—These light afflictions will work for me a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory!

During the year past I have preached almost constantly; have organized two churches, ordained one elder, and assisted in ordaining two others to the work of the ministry; and as I am again appointed as an evangelist for the ensuing year, and intend to attend to all the calls I can consistently, I wish therefore, that the brethren and friends that desire quarterly conferences would inform me as early as possible, that I may make arrangements to meet their wishes.

The portion of the time I have labored in Springville and vicinity, I have had to contend for the truth earnestly. When I came into the vicinity last year, our Methodist and Campbellite friends were in open hostility against each other, and were engaged in a newspaper quarrel under assumed names of L's and K's; but as soon as I began to preach the gospel of the kingdom, like Pilate and Herod they became friends together, and seemed to be bound to oppose the doctrine of the speedy, personal coming of the Lord and its kindred doctrines. I have thus contended with the dogmas and fables of the day, the advocates of which have manifested a disposition to array themselves in violent hostility against the truth in attacking the truth at times when, and [illegible] there was nobody present to defend it. In [illegible] instances [illegible] an investigation [illegible] us, though they have been very boisterous in attacking the truth at times when, and places where, there was nobody present to defend it.

In February last, a Methodist Doctor agreed to meet me in public discussion. The subject to be discussed was, "Is Jesus Christ the eternal God?" My opponent agreed to affirm. I gave him liberty to get all or any assistance he could in the discussion. At the time and place appointed we met, and it soon became apparent that my opponent intended to back out if he could make any pretence for doing so; the principal reason assigned was, that he did not wish to take the lead in the debate. I therefore allowed him to change the order of the debate, and took myself the affirmative of the negative question. I made this accommodation because I found that he and his friends were determined to suppress investigation, if possible. We therefore changed the question to the following: "Resolved, that the Scriptures do not teach that Jesus Christ is the eternal God."—When we had thus agreed on the preliminaries, it was well understood that the subject was to be thoroughly investigated or closed by mutual consent of the parties. Thus it opened. When I had occupied the first half hour in giving the history of the church and the rise of the Trinitarian doctrine, their principal speaker, Eld. F——, took the stand, and without trying to answer my arguments, went on to affirm that Jesus was the eternal God our Father; in proof of which he adduced the following Scriptures: John 14: 9; John 10: 30, etc. In reply, I remarked that the man Christ that stood before Phillip, had all the physical developments of a perfect and proper man, and we worshiped him as the divine Son of God, or as Mediator between us and God the Father; that we believe that he proceeded forth and came from God the Father, as the express image of his person, but was not the person he was the image of; and then offered the following scripture to show that God is invisible, and that no man hath approached unto him: Exodus 33: 33; John 6: 46; 1: 18; 1 Tim. 6: 16; 1 John 4: 12 and 20. I also quoted other scriptures of the same import, and then stated for my opponent to introduce the case of Phillip's conversation as proof of his theory, seemed to me to be entirely out of place, as he had acknowledged himself to be an Episcopal Methodist, and by their discipline the God they worship was without body or parts, (See Discipline, Sec. 2.—"There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body or parts.") The Eld. expended all his strength the first evening, and quitted the field of contest. The Dr. who challenged me, came on the next evening. God's truth was too mighty for discipline, dogmas and theories. He acknowledged that he was ashamed and sorry that he had ever engaged in the matter. But it was now too late to suppress investigation; they had agitated the matter, and the candid part of the community wished to have the investigation go through.

It now being Saturday evening, I informed the people that if my opponent would not continue the debate, I would bring on the next day what would fully and fairly represent their views. On entering the desk I took from my pocket a Methodist Discipline, and informed the congregation that it was the disputant for the time being, and that it would not abscond or disannul its own declarations. I therefore showed the contrast between the discipline and the gospel of God as taught in the Scriptures, and such was the effect that some wondered that they had never seen the discrepancy in the Trinitarian doctrine before. Others despised the truth, and some rejoiced in God for the truth and light they obtained.

* * * * * *

Notwithstanding all the opposition that there has been to the truth, it has been on the increase, and still is. There was no Advent Christian church in this place when I came here, and but a very few that had ever heard the doctrine of life only through Christ. Brother and Sister Morse were the only believers, so far as I know. Soon after I commenced preaching in the place, a brother and sister Dodgson embraced the truth, and like Priscilla and Aquilla they became helpers in the church in very deed. All of our brethren from a distance that have visited Springville and have had the privilege of hearing the prayers and exhortations of these children, and have been made partakers of their hospitalities, can never forget them. When the Lord gave us these, we organized a church of six members. It now numbers nineteen, and others are standing as at the threshold ready to enter. Investigation is going on in defiance of opposition. Truth is mighty, and, thank God, it is destined to prevail.

I am not so well able to travel as I have been in years past, and if those brethren and friends among whom I have traveled and spent all my means, will now combine with others that need my labors, and will furnish means to purchase me a horse and buggy, according to Bro. Morse's suggestion, I will try and glorify God in the use of them. Your brother in tribulation, hoping for eternal life.

ELD. Y. HIGGINS.

Springville, Wis.

For the Crisis.

Jesus the First.

"Revealed by his Spirit."—1 Cor. 2: 10.

The revealing Spirit "searcheth all things." This [illegible] is [illegible] nearly identified with the "wisdom of God . . . ordained before the world unto our glory."—Ver. 7. This Spirit reveals "the things that God hath prepared for them that love him;" and it is by this Spirit, received by the hearing of faith," (Gal. 3: 2,) that we know the things of God at all. For as "the spirit of man" is needful to know "the things of man;" so "the Spirit of God" is essential to the understanding of "the things of God." "The natural (carnal) man rejects the teaching of God's Spirit, for to him it is folly; and it must needs be beyond his knowledge, for the spiritual mind alone can judge thereof." Ver. 14. Conybeare's translation.

Note I. It was by this revealing spirit—this "wisdom of God"—that Moses got the model of the tabernacle. Its primal form and existence was only "IN SPIRIT." Its inception was only in the mind or "wisdom of God." But who imagines (by light from the Lord) that "the tabernacle" built by Moses existed in a subtle etherial (spatial) and eternal state? Rather, who does not know that it was given to Moses to represent a higher condition of celestial realities to be yet unfolded in the future.—Heb. 8: 9, 10.

Note II. The order as developed in the history of divine dispensations is stated by the Holy Spirit. 1 Cor. 15: 46. That was not first which is spiritual; but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." Thus the natural world—Adam, Israel, Covenant, Jerusalem—was first, in order of time. The New Creation, New Adam, New Covenant, New Jerusalem must succeed. The type precedes the antitype. So much is settled. Amen.

Note III. The faith of Abraham—the model faith—takes these things of the Spirit, that be not, as though they were."—Rom. 4: 17. They were not, in fact, then existing. These three cardinal points, taught by "the wisdom of God"—"the spirit of God"—enable us to apprehend how the things that be not" existed "before the world." They did not exist in fact; but only in "the wisdom of God;" which wisdom we obtain by the hearing of faith—by faith in the Spirit's revealings. The kingdom was thus "prepared before the foundation of the world." The church was thus "chosen in Christ before the world began." "The Lamb of God" was thus "slain before the foundation of the world." He was not thus so slain in fact; but "in spirit"—in the mind of God. Hence when this spirit or mind of God was given to the Apostle, he knew it as the Spirit's revealing of what did actually come to pass "in the fulness of time." This case is clear because "Christ was ONCE offered"—only once in fact.—Heb. 9: 28. Thus understood, our Lord, the Messiah, has "pre-eminence" over Adam, Abraham, and all other honored names. He is "the beginning (chief one) of the creation of God." "He is the head of the body, the church; whereof He is the beginning (chief one) as first-born from the dead; that in all things His place might be the first." Conybeare's Col. 1, 18.

The spiritual Adam was not first in time; because we are so told,—1 Cor 15; 46,—and because that would falsify all the record of his birth by the Virgin, and his resurrection from the dead as "the first fruits" that he might thus have the first place in the new creation. Nay, in all pertaining to the whole creation. Because as all existed originally only in "the Word," (in the wisdom or "spirit" of God) it existed as it was to be actually developed in the divine order. First in time was the natural; but as the chief—the first in reality (as it is forever to exist as the monument of the divine outgoings in grace) we have the spiritual, celestial, and Eternal! The Spirit's teachings "are not yea and nay; but all yea to the glory of God the Father." The frail, flexible, fallen old Adam and his dominion did not stand forth in "the wisdom of God before the world" as the first, the beginning, or chief of his creatures! But the overcoming "Captain of salvation" (with the many sons he is bringing to the glory of his promised kingdom) was then, is now, and will be the (arche, beginning or) chief of all creation! Amen.

Our knowledge of these things, our degree of spirituality, lies in our knowing the things "revealed by the Spirit." (Read the whole chapter with references, 1 Cor. 2.) No one's labor and religious exercises, as such, can constitute this "spiritual" state. Millions of the most devout and most approved among men, are, by the Apostle's standard of spirituality, among the "carnal;" for to be "in the Spirit," is to "know the things freely given us by God." It is so far to enjoy "the wisdom of God ordained before the world." Thus the Apostle was "in the Spirit on the Lord's day." He saw, felt and spoke, according to the revealed and then revealing "mind of the Spirit."

J. B. C.

☞ Three things a christian should steadily labor to maintain: the honor of God, the honor of the gospel, and the honor of his own name. If once a christian's good name sets in a cloud, it will be long before it rises again.

For the Crisis.

Man in Death is Unconscious.

BY J. P. FOWLER.

No. 2.

Prop. 2. "And the Lord God formed MAN (the Adam) of the dust of the ground."

In our last article, the term "man" in the above proposition we carefully examined, and discovered that it was employed to literally designate a literal race of beings, every one of whom is a dust-man. We also discovered, that all other uses of the word "man," whether applied to agencies as angels, or character as christians, was a figurative use of the term, and therefore having a secondary rather than a primary meaning. Again, that this word, "man," is never employed to express what is signified by the term "spirit;" and let it be constantly borne in mind that this term "spirit" is in the neuter gender invariably, and is never preceded by "ho" or "he," masculine and feminine genders, in the Greek Testament. With these considerations, we will continue to investigate the above proposition, and trace this "man" a little further.

1. We wish to ascertain God's disposition of him. Gen. 2: 8.—"And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden: and there he put the MAN whom he had formed." The same dust-man referred to in Gen. 2: 7. See Gen. 2: 15.—"And the Lord God took the man, (margin, "Adam;" margin of verse 7, "dust of the ground,") and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it." The eighth verse then declares that God put Adam into the garden, and the fifteenth what he did it for. In verse 9th, we are told what he was to dress and keep; "Every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food." Therefore "the tree of life, and tree of knowledge of good and evil." Read Gen. 3: 6. "The tree" of knowledge "was pleasant to the eyes," and "good for food." It was his duty to take care of all the trees. Again, in verse 9th, we have the origin and composition of these trees. "And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food." "Out of the ground;" precisely where the man, Adam, came from, and of exactly the same material—"dust of the ground."

This dust-man, thus placed in the garden, out of which dust-trees or trees out of the dust grew, and which could be reduced to dust, was a "living creature"—a "living animal." His principle of life we will examine in the next article. The beasts of the field and fowl of the air were made "out of the ground."—Gen. 2: 19; and the companion of Adam was made of a portion of himself, therefore "of the dust of the ground."—Gen. 2: 21–24. Every thing around partakes of his nature, and of the same material of which he is composed. He was the highest order of dust formation.

2. We will observe his destiny as the consequence of violating the law by which God proposed to govern him, Adam, in his Edenic home. Observe this law. Gen. 2: 17.—"But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it." The result of his disobedience defined. "For in (Heb. Be, after) the day that THOU eatest thereof THOU SHALT SURELY DIE." Who is this "THOU?" See Gen. 2: 8, 15–17. Verse 8,—"The MAN whom he had formed." Verse 15,—"The Lord God took the MAN (margin Adam) and put him into the garden to dress it and to keep it." Verse 16,—"And the Lord God commanded the MAN, saying, of every tree of the garden THOU mayest freely eat. But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, THOU shalt NOT eat of it: for in the day that THOU eatest thereof THOU SHALT SURELY DIE." In verses 16, 17, of Gen. 2: and Gen. 3: 9, 11, 13, 16–19, the personal pronoun "THOU" is employed eighteen times to designate the dust-man, ADAM. Gen. 3: 8, 9, the noun, "Adam" is employed, and in verse 9 we read the following: "And the Lord God called unto ADAM, and said unto him, Where art THOU?"—Adam.

This word "THOU" is employed once when God told Adam what he might eat, Gen. 2: 16; and once when God commanded him not to eat of a specific tree, Gen. 2: 17; and sixteen times to express the destiny of himself and his wife, if they did violate his commands and eat of that tree. Thus Adam, and Eve who was made of a portion of himself, was all of dust, and could return to dust again. Their entire posterity possesses the same nature, and with two exceptions, every one of them of past generations have returned unto the ground, out of which they were taken. Of one of these two exceptions, Enoch, it is positively declared, that the reason why, and the object for which, he was translated was, "that HE (Enoch) SHOULD NOT SEE DEATH," the penalty of Edenic law, for before HIS translation HE had this testimony, that he pleased God;" Heb. 11: 5; demonstrating that the only possible means by which any one of Adam's posterity can avoid death, and prevent returning to the ground is, by a translation of the man that was taken out of the ground. The apostle says that Enoch "was not found, BECAUSE God had translated him," certainly implying that Enoch was sought for. Who would have sought for him, if, at the time Enoch was translated, they had believed as many now do, that some little man inside was Enoch, whom, should you pass him every moment while searching for him, you could not see? Enoch was the name of the responsible dust-man, who through faith walked with God, and had the "testimony that he pleased God." The same was true of "Noah," the definition of which name is, "rest or comfort." The term designated the man who built the ark, and in it found "rest" with all his house, being by it borne safely over the watery billows of destruction, which engulphed the antediluvian world.

To this entire race of dust-men there is one destiny, without a promised Jesus, the Messiah. That unit destiny is, to "RETURN UNTO THE GROUND; for out of it WAST THOU taken: for dust THOU art, and UNTO DUST SHALT THOU RETURN." "SHALT THOU RETURN." No possible means of escape, if God had not promised and sent a Savior. In consequence of faith in the final purpose of God through Jesus Christ, can we only account for the two exceptions to this UNIT destiny, Enoch and Elijah, or the future change and translation of the saints who will be "alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 13–18. There would have been no "coming of the Lord," if God had not promised a Savior, and to him a future reign. Observe Ps. 146: 3, 4.—"Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of MAN in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, HE returneth to HIS earth; in that very day HIS thoughts perish." In whom is there no help? "The son of man." What is his destiny? "HE returneth to HIS earth." What is the result of it? "HIS thoughts perish." Who then thinks? The son of man, who goes to HIS earth—therefore the thinking man is the dust-man. See Eccl. 3: 18–21.—"All go unto ONE place: all are of the DUST, and all TURN to DUST AGAIN." "Again." They were dust then in the beginning. Eccl. 12: 5–7.—"Because MAN goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets; . . . then shall the DUST (the man) RETURN to the earth AS IT WAS, and the spirit shall return to God who gave it." Here we are informed that the man of the dust returns to his original position in death.

We will say something respecting the spirit in our next. For the present we wish to show, and believe that we have done it beyond Scriptural denial, that what the Bible denominates "man," is unconscious in the dust in death." Job 17: 13–16. His resting place. "When our rest together is in the DUST." Job 3: 17–19 is further proof. Isa. 38: 17–19. Please read. Hezekiah, the name of the dust-man, affirms that "the grave cannot praise thee, (God.) The living, the living, (What? why, MAN of the dust,) HE shall praise thee, as I do this day."—They that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth." Yes, "the living" MAN, he shall praise God, but the same dead MAN knows nothing. Eccl. 9: 4–6, 10. This, then, is the unit destiny of the dust-man, and his condition between death and the resurrection from the dead. Amen.

For the Crisis.

Modern Theology and Practice.

A preacher in Exeter in trying to convince a sister of her error in looking for the Lord, said, we have had no signs of his coming yet; and if she wanted to see the Lord she must pray for the conversion of the world—that would be done first, etc. She drove him hard for Bible proof, which caused him to commence on the destruction of the wicked, or "sleepy doctrine," as he called it. He tried to convince her by his assertions, instead of scripture, that man had an immortal soul. She quoted scripture to him, when he made another assertion that was new and powerful, i. e., God created man alive like the beasts, then breathed his spirit into him, that was his immortal soul. And all these immortal souls must be converted before the Lord could come. This preacher was then agitating the subject of a levee, or church fair, for the benefit of the Methodist church, which took place on the 11th inst. All were invited to come and eat and drink as formerly.

This same evening I preached a funeral sermon on the death of many hundred lives lost by the falling of the factory in Lawrence the day before, near by this place. The whole region were horror-stricken while hearing of that awful catastrophe. But this preacher's levee could not be put off; and they met, thus drowning all serious impressions caused by the sudden death of their neighbors. Some that had been to Lawrence that day, and witnessed the awful scene, and heard the pitiful moans of the distressed then under the ruins, calling for help and mercy, said on arriving at this place, and seeing the house lit up, "What is going on?" Being told it was the Methodist levee, they replied, "If they had been in Lawrence to-day and seen and heard what I have, they would not feel like having such a scrape as this, especially professors of religion." But the levee must come on.

Just such preachers as these are the greatest smiting scoffers, saying, "The Lord delayeth his coming;" who get up a levee, eat and drink with the drunken, and furnish us with Peter's signs of the last days. Poor, blind mortals! they see no signs. This is the popular work to convert the world. H. MUNSON.

Exeter, Jan. 15, 1860.

For the Crisis.

The Maine Mission Fund.

Some of our brethren and sisters begin to ask "how we prosper in getting funds for the mission?" Others are farther along in their ideas, and ask, "Have you engaged an evangelist yet?" Perhaps many may wish to know how the matter stands. So I propose to tell them as we progress. It may "provoke some to love and good works." Well, since my last report, Bro. H. gave $2 for the mission. One hundred such hearted men would fill quite a purse for a poor Advent missionary. We have more than one hundred brethren in Maine, more able than he. Sister H. gave $1. That is $3 from one house. The Lord will bless those who feel in the pocket as well as in the heart. Our Bro. S. in Mass. sends $10 more for the mission, and $5 for a poor preacher. Thus we find somebody out of Maine, who is not only looking to see God's cause go forward here, but feels interested to help it go.

So far then, in three and a half months, all the Bro. and sisters, as far as I have knowledge, have paid in $12, while two preachers have promised $15 more. And one active brother out of the State has paid in $20 to aid in spreading the truth in Maine. This is something, truly, but the committee cannot encourage a missionary to come amongst us and spend his time constantly, until others put in a few more "mites." There are some yet to come. Some will come up to the help of the Lord in this movement. But if they wish us to act, they must act first. We have already had a call for some of the money, to be expended for preaching in a destitute place where a preacher has been laboring lately. Several dollars of the $12 given came from the faithful there, and they are as much entitled to help as any others. But our first object, as set forth in the plan, was to raise funds to sustain a traveling evangelist among us. We have some prospect of obtaining one in the spring which would be very acceptable to all classes of our brethren, and beneficial to the cause of truth. Yet we cannot say to him, come and work with us, until we see that there is a prospect that he may live with us, and not be obliged to turn aside from preaching to other work, as most of us are. Yours truly for the mission. I. C. WELLCOME.

Richmond, Me., Dec. 31, 1859.

For the Crisis.

A Request.

Will Bro. S. W. Bishop answer, through the Crisis, the following questions, and oblige an earnest inquirer after truth?

Is the abomination of desolation, referred to by Christ in Matt. 24: 15, the same one spoken of in Dan. 12: 11?

Did the setting up of this abomination cause the tribulation spoken of in Matt. 24: 29? If so, did the tribulation end with the abomination? Was the darkening of the sun, which occurred in 1780, the fulfillment of the prediction in Matt. 24: 29?

Does the "immediately after the tribulation of those days" mean after the commencing of those days, or after the consummation of those days? If it has reference to the consummation of the tribulation, then the sun was darkened thirty-five years before the tribulation ended, provided it ended in 1815. WM. A. FENN.

Correspondence.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you permit me to say a few words through the Crisis, for the comfort and encouragement of the little flock, scattered broadcast over the land? I feel in these days of peril a few words from each other does much good; it often cheers the drooping child as he is buffeted with the arts of the tempter; comforts the mourning child, who feels sometimes he has no friend in the world, and enables us to look up and rejoice in hope of speedy deliverance. And the more we hear or read about it, the more we are cheered. Oh, glory to God! my heart is even cheered now at the thought, we have not always to stay here, where sin and sorrow reign; but are in a little while to be beyond the trials and toils of this wicked life. How often we have been comforted with those words, "a little while;" and yet they are as cheering to-day as when I first heard them, and I am still striving, in the little while I am waiting, to do the Master's will, so as to have an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom. I am not weary of the way, and do not mean to let down my watch. But when I see there are those, whose prospects once were bright, who have seemingly lost all love for God and his cause, I awfully fear sometimes I may at last lose the crown; but I feel to day

"I am bound for the throne!"

Go on, children, the prize is but just ahead; the warfare is nearly ended, and the good ones will meet where no tear shall ever fall,

"For heart be sad;
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Roxbury, Ct.

☞ Some good man has said: "Two things are matter of daily astonishment to me—the readiness of Christ to come from heaven to earth for me, and my backwardness to rise from earth to heaven for him."

For the Crisis.

Eternity.

Eternity is too vast for the conception of created beings. Without beginning, without end! Where is eternity? "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place."—Isa. 57: 15. This is all that is said of eternity in the Bible. It is the dwelling-place of the "High and lofty One," "whom no man hath seen nor can see."

The human mind cannot comprehend the mighty idea. All calculation is vague and blank: reason trembles at the incomprehensible thought, and a humilated sense of our finite nature brings to view the sublime and awful majesty of God. And yet how often do we hear of men going to eternity, as though it were a common, to which all were entitled as soon as they are dead.

O. T. HOBBS.

Randolph, Pa.

Obituary Notice.

It is painful to record the sudden and untimely death of Miss LIZZIE TOWNE, aged about twenty-five years, the daughter of Edwin Towne of Kennebunkport, whose death was caused by the crash and fall of the Pemberton Mill, at Lawrence, which dire calamity destroyed so many lives, blighting the hopes and prospect of others, causing so many hearts to bleed, and drink the bitter cup of bereavement and sorrow, spreading weeping, mourning, and gloom to so many cities, towns, and hamlets.

Sister Lizzie Town was taken lifeless from the ruins before the fiery element began its devouring work, and was carried to the City Hall, but was not recognized till Wednesday morning by her friends, when she was immediately taken to Dudley Stokes, where no pains were spared to give the mangled body as natural an appearance as possible, while the last tribute of respect could be paid her.

The telegraphic dispatch with the SAD TALE soon reaches the home of her childhood and youth, (which she left not a week before) and the parents are palsied with heart stricken grief at the tidings!

The father is soon seen on the way for the precious treasure, and finds it really so; Lizzie is dead!! It is a stern reality. She sleeps! But from her former associations, her christian devotion, her consistent, faithful course, combined with her amiable disposition and cheerful readiness to make all happy who came under her influence, gained for her in Lawrence many friends, whose attachments were strong; thus much grief and mourning were caused here by the broken tie.

Before removing the dear, sleeping one, the solemn services of a funeral were attended by Eld. Ingham, at her "Lawrence home." From here she was taken to her father's in Kennebunkport to be deposited in the grave under the shade of a beautiful grove, (delightfully so to Lizzie in her lifetime) near by her father's house, here to sleep and rest till the trump of God shall awake the sleeping dead and make them live again.

The funeral at Kennebunkport was Sunday, Jan. 15, at 1 o'clock, P. M., at her father's house. Her family and friendly associations, combined with the afflictive cause of her death, drew together a very large concourse of people; the house and door-yard were full, and all seemed to be mourners. Such a scene I have never witnessed before: sighing, crying, and tears could not be restrained. The cruel tyrant had succeeded in bearing away its victim in triumph, but the hope is that soon there will be victory over death, and "all that are in the graves will come forth, they that have done good to life." The services were performed by Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell, assisted by the writer. But it was a time when words seemed powerless; words more weighty than the human voice could utter, had been "heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping. Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted because they are not;" but there is hope in thine end. The child shall come again from the land of the enemy and be brought into her own border, the land of promise. I could but commend these afflicted mourners to God and the word of his grace, which alone is able to comfort and sustain in this trying hour. May they all be fully prepared to meet their loved Lizzie, when the angels shall gather the elect from the four winds, and the Father's good pleasure will be to say to them, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." L. BOUTELL.

Biddeford, Jan. 17, 1860.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Per Steamship Africa.]

The Papal Government took great pains to prevent the pamphlet entitled "The Pope and the Congress" from entering the States of the Church, but it did not succeed, and written copies were soon circulated at Pesaro, Ancona, and other cities. The Florence correspondent of the London Daily News thus describes the result: "I am told that the Central Committee of the Bologna had to make the greatest exertions to keep the people of the Marche in a state of tranquility. Their first thought was that of rising, but fortunately enough more prudent counsels at last prevailed. The priests are in an indescribable state of consternation. They are now fully convinced that the temporal power of their chief is gone forever."

A military writer in a Turin paper asserts that, by next Spring, Sardinia alone would be able to carry on a defensive war against Austria. The Italians could muster 250,000 men, who would be composed of 120,000 Piedmontese and Lombards, 60,000 troops of the line, and the rest of free corps.

At the dinner to Garibaldi, at Turin, the General proposed a toast—"To Hungary, the sister of Italy."

The London press has the following opinions on Walewski's retirement:

The Morning Post believes that the event, more carefully considered, affords strong evidence, if not proof, that the Emperor Napoleon has made up his mind to take his final [illegible] the Italian question. In that case, Congress or no Congress, Italy will be free. The new minister has shown himself a good friend to the alliance with England.

The Daily News thinks "that whether we ought to act with France or stand aloof from her in the affairs of Italy, depends on what she may propose to do, and how she may propose to do it, and upon nothing else."

The Morning Herald considers the retirement of Count Walewski a hopeful sign of Italian independence, and sees in it a proof of the Emperor's determination not to be thwarted by Austria, by the clergy, or by his own servants, in his scheme for reconciling the temporal power of the Pope with the avowed objects of the war in Italy.

The Journal de St. Petersbourg announces that the commerce of Russian subjects in China meets with no impediment, and that the members of the lay and ecclesiastical mission enjoy every desirable protection and liberty, both at Pekin and in the neighborhood.

ITEMS.

THE LONDON CABMEN.—An interesting state of religious feeling exists among the cabmen of London. Many of them have professed allegiance to Christ, and are actively engaged in bringing their associates under the influence of the Gospel. To avoid being compelled to profane the Sabbath, and that they might attend church, some of the drivers have paid their employers the usual Sabbath profits to permit the cab to remain in the yard.

SHAKERS IN AMERICA.—It is said there are four Shaker Societies in Ohio, numbering 1,059; one in Connecticut, numbering 200; two in Maine, numbering 250; two in New Hampshire, numbering 500; four in Massachusetts, numbering 700; two in Kentucky, numbering 500; three in New York, numbering 1,050; making in all eighteen societies, each constituted of several distinct families, or communities, regularly officered with elders, deacons, care-takers, etc., of both male and female orders, according to their unique custom, and numbering in all some 4,000 members.

A LAKE OF BLOOD.—Dr. Dick estimates the number of those who have perished directly or indirectly by war at 14,000,000,000. Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith, has taken the estimates of Dr. Dick, and estimating the average quantity of blood in a common-sized person, states the blood in the veins of those fourteen thousand millions, would fill a circular lake of more than seventeen miles in circumference, and ten feet deep, in which all the navies of the world might float.

Notices, &c.

Editorial Notice.

☞ We expected to receive the Discussion with Eld. Clayton, last week. For some cause unknown to us, they have not reached us yet; therefore friends who have sent in orders for the same, will understand the delay in getting them.

Notice.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CRISIS:—Will you please to inform Brother Shepherd through the Crisis that his Sunday appointments which he has made in the Crisis this week for Hartford, conflict with other appointments which the committee have made with other ministers on those two Sundays; and also that we have preaching engaged Sundays until the first of April, and request Brother Shepherd to withdraw his appointments for those two Sundays. By request of the committee. AARON CLAPP.

Hartford, Ct., Jan. 20.

☞ Elder Y. Higgins requests the brethren in Wisconsin to correspond with him immediately, at Springville, Badax Co., Wis., relative to having a meeting at some central point, to take into consideration the propriety of organizing a State Conference.

☞ There will be a conference in Hartford, Me., in the Stetson school-house, near J. C. Allen's, commencing Thursday, P. M., 2 o'clock, Feb. 2d, to continue over the Sabbath. Bros. Haggett, Hanscomb and Wellcome are expected to be there.

EDWARD M. HAGGETT.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Bro., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. D. T. Taylor will preach in
Boston, Chapman Hall.........Sunday, Jan. 29th

APPOINTMENTS FOR DANIELSONVILLE, CT.
Eld. J. Hemenway.............Sunday, Jan. 29th
Eld. S. W. Bishop Thursday evening and over Sunday.........Feb. 5th
Eld. H. F. Carpenter..Sundays, Feb. 12th and 19th
Eld. D. T. Taylor.............Sunday, Feb. 26th

In behalf of the Church,
H. F. CARPENTER.

Bro. J. T. Sweet appoints to preach at Union Tabernacle, Foster, R. I., Sunday, Jan. 29th.

Providence permitting, I will be in
North Adams..........Jan. 29th
Cheshire..........Jan. 30th
Chester Factories..........Jan. 31st
Westfield Farms..........Feb. 1st
and continue a few evenings where Bro. Phelps may appoint. H. PRATT.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd appoints to preach at
Springfield..........Feb. 6th
Boodville..........Feb. 7th
New Britain..........Feb. 8th
Bristol..........Feb. 9th
Waterbury..........Feb. 10th

Bro. J. K. Bellows will preach in
Warehouse Point, Ct..........Jan. 29th
Springfield, Mass..........Feb. 1—2

Bro. H. G. McCulloch appoints to preach in Goshen, Mass., Jan. 29th, and once in four weeks through the winter.

I will preach in Vienna, (Seavey school-house) Jan. 27th, and Saturday evening and Sunday where Bro. Seavey may arrange, and will labor in that vicinity two weeks, if my health will admit.

JOHN A. KENNEDY.

Bro. Carpenter will be in East Boston on the 29th of Jan. and on the 5th of Feb., the Lord willing.

The Lord willing, I will preach as follows—
Pleasant Valley..........Jan. 27th
Winsted, Sunday..........Jan. 29th
Feb. 5th where Bro. Albert [illegible] may appoint.
WM. A. FENN.

At the earnest solicitation of the [illegible] ville, Canada East, Eld. Miles Grant will [illegible] a series of meetings in this place, at the [illegible] day in Jan., and continue every evening during the following week, and over the first Lord's day in February. J. FOSTER.

T. W. Piper appoints to preach in
Sandwich..........Jan. 29th
Danbury..........Feb. 5th
Meredith Centre..........Feb. 7th
Lake Village..........Feb. 8th
Loudon Ridge..........Feb. 9th
Pittsfield..........Feb. 10th
Clarke Town..........Feb. 12th
Wolfborough, (Pine Hill)..........Feb. 19th

Eld. Thomas Smith appoints to preach in
Carmel, Me..........Jan. 29th
Surrey, Me..........Feb. 5th

The Lord willing, J. S. White will be in Hartford, Ct., on the last Sunday in Jan., and the first in Feb. I will answer Bro. Berry's request soon. J. S. W.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

Marshall Stetson.—The Lyres have been sent to you.

T. G. Newman.—We cannot send any papers of that No. for we have but one left.

W. J. Cabot.—All right.

Cash Receipts.

L Bronson 249, 55 cts; C Wilson 236, 73 cts; A S Sheldon 234, $1.66; M Damon $5.00.

T W Haskins 236, W C Bartlett 240,—50 cts. each.

O K Watkins 236, C Rodman 240, P C Rodman 240, C F Robinson 236, J E Phelps 252, W H Wild 252, C B Wilson 245, A Wilson 234, S S Stetson 208, A H Bolton 251, J H Shepherd 234, M M Evans 234, W Elmore 214, M F Taylor 252, S Benton 284, P Simmons 277, J B Adams 238, Mrs. Chadwick 262, O T Hobbs 262, S Ingalls 242, L D Allen 247, J T Howland 273, J McKee 252, S E Teeple 247, M F Champlin 252, J P Warren 252, O Perry 234, L Peck 248, S Braley 208, J K Billings 252, M L Rich 250, Mrs. M A Fogg 239, J P Blaisdell 206, E Pritchard 239, J Musser 250, C H Wyman 252, H Holmes 234, G A Streeter 284, B Whitney 260,—$1.00 each.

J B White 275, J Dill 274, C Brownell 278, J Pay 278, H A Chittenden 262, M Scammon 226, R Bush 309, A C Haley 279, M M Flint 234, B Snyder 249, J A Stickney 270, Edm. Blood 231, C W Thayer 276, T Leavett 244, D C Jefferson 276, T Richard 248,—$2.00 each.

Books and Tracts.—J C Munson 12 cts, W Allen 18 cts, B Fifield 25 cts, R L Johnson 75 cts, E Miller 24 cts, N Orcutt 25 cts, H Wilcutt $1.00, W White 12 cts, S K Fenton 6 cts, J K Webster 46 cts, S A Chaplin 10 cts, W A Chase 30 cts, W S Moulton $5,00, B Snyder 25 cts, E Wakeman $4 06, C M Matthews $1.09, A H Bolton 6 cts, J P Darling 6 cts, L Smith 6 cts, G A Fuller 6 cts, J B Andrews $1.00, L W Pierce 14 cts, F D Lapham 72 cts, L C Thomas $1.00, W S Chambers 6 cts, L Jones 6 cts, G Dunham 60 cts, F Burr 6 cts, M M Markham 6 cts, F A Roberts $1.00, J K Bellows $3.09, T R Walker 6 cts, H H Arnold 69 cts, S P Matthews 60 cts, L Bronson 12 cts, B F Wilkins $1.10, G A Burbank $5.20, C Wilson 29 cts, S Braley 6 cts, D C Jefferson 30 cts, C T Orvath 30 cts, Eld. J B Cook 40 cts, A S Sheldon 34 cts, Mrs. M A Fogg 56 cts, J P Blaisdell 28 cts, Eld. H F Carpenter $16.30, Eld. T Smith $1.00, S B Saxton $1.00, P Pfeil 63 cts, H H Whitney 12 cts.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

THE CHRISTIAN LYRE: A choice collection of psalmody, ancient and modern, designed for use in public and social worship. Price 60 cents retail. Postage 9 cts. $5.40 per dozen.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 5 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 5 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 6 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 8 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York; [illegible] Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $1.50.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 20 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Sheldon.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price [illegible] $5.00.

The Bible Animal of [illegible] designed for [illegible] by J. V. [illegible] per dozen [illegible]

Words of Warning [illegible] single postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them at less, or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many [illegible] connected with [illegible] written by himself. This is a very entertaining work, and will be read with interest by all. Price [illegible] cts.—postage 20 cents.

The Excellency of the Lord's Kingdom: or Christ the promised Messiah. By Elder Henry A. Seymour. An excellent work, founded upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological [illegible] of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $5.00 per hundred,—7 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to interest the readers. Price 40 cents; postage [illegible]

Foster's Letter and Tract on [illegible], $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Geneseo, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 3 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following works, published and for sale by H. L. HASTINGS, Providence R. I.

1.—The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 15 cents.

2.—The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.—Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 20 cts.—Postage 8 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—post. 8 cts.

4.—The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18 mo. pp. 175, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.—Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an Appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 262, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.—Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12 mo. pp. 460, price $1.25—post paid.

7.—Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

8.—The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings, pp. 87 12mo. 18 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Destiny of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks. 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate state; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by London. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. 6—†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmarks, separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality; 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us [illegible] Orders with the CASH are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive the usual liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage, and those who FEEL poor also.

Address H. L. HASTINGS, Providence, R. I.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos. which can be separated for distribution. The sett contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by A. Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, by [illegible] ry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, by Baxter.

† The Olive Leaves are three [illegible] that can be separated for distribution. [illegible] Little Children, Love one Another; two, The Old Resting Place; three, My Friend; four, [illegible] Love; five, Abundant Grace; six, Go in Peace; by Hastings. Just the thing to distribute among all classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in this universe by a final destruction of [illegible] at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price [illegible] 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms; or, the Kingdom of God the Father, the Kingdom of Satan, the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this Kingdom as it was, as it is, and as it is to be, by T. M. Preble. Price $3.00 per hundred, [illegible] 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and Books can be had of our agent in Portland, [illegible] National No. 3 Summer street [illegible]

☞ The following [illegible] can be had [illegible]

The [illegible] by Elder [illegible] [illegible] very.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

The Suffering Way.

Acts 14: 22.

Oh, who are these before the throne,
This band of conquerors brave?
Why do they wear those spotless robes,
Those palms of triumph wave?
[illegible] whose Jesus' blood
[illegible] every stain;
Through tribulation they have come,
Through suffering, toil and pain.

These are the faithful ones who dared
To meet earth's angry frown;
Who for the truth's sake bore reproach,
To win a victor's crown.
Despised and set at nought by man,
They wandered, sad and lone;
But now the King of glory calls
Them [illegible] his own.

Oh, shall we murmur now, or seek
To shun the suffering here,
When these afflictions work for us
A weight of glory there?
A Father's hand is leading us
On through the storm and gloom;
And when our work is complete,
He'll bring us safely home.

Home, where the trees of Eden yield
Their precious fruit once more;
Home, where the crystal waters lave
The ever-verdant shore;
No sad farewell is spoken there—
No sickness pales the brow—
No mourner weeps beside the tomb
Of loving ones laid low.

The bliss of that celestial home—
The endless glories there—
Will recompense for all the woes,
For all the trials here.
No sad remembrance of these tears,
This agony of soul;
But gladness and eternal joys,
As years unnumbered roll.

That blessed home—'t will soon be ours,
To this bright hope we cling;
We've passed the way-marks and we know
Earth soon shall greet her King.
Oh, pilgrim, watch a few more days,
And walk by living faith;
Hold fast the truth in this dark hour;
To draw back now is death. S. M. H.

Portsmouth, N. H., Jan., 1860.

For the Crisis.

The Voice of God in History.

BY LIZZIE ARMSTRONG.

(Concluded.)

Since the organization of those ten kingdoms, the British lion and French eagles have joined with other standards and marched against the Russian Bear, that great "King of the North." Europe has been convulsed to her centre; her very foundations have quaked; her thrones have tottered; her crowns have almost crumbled; her brave sons have fought, and bled, and died. Yet amid it all those ten kingdoms have stood, "partly iron and partly clay, partly strong and partly broken;" and thus are they destined to stand until the ushering in of the fifth great monarchy of earth; for "in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom."

This is the great crowning point where tend the vast chains of prophecy; through them all we trace the unerring wisdom, the inflexible justice, and unquestionable veracity of God. One monarchy can never supplant another without carnage and bloodshed; and lo! "Multitudes, multitudes are in the valley of decision, for the day of the Lord is near," and legions of earth's warriors are brought up hither by ambitious commanders, who would sway their sceptres from sea to sea, and from shore to shore! "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near, beat your ploughshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears." Their warriors and valiant men are gathered there 'neath every standard under heaven; every banner is floating in the air, and alas! every man's hand is raised against his brother man, and the roar of cannon and the clash of dripping steel drown the groans and shrieks of the dying, as thousands fall upon thousands—the last sacrifice of earthly monarchs on the altar of ambition.

This is a scene from which the sun shall veil his face, and the moon turn away in terror; the earth shall quiver, and the heaven's shake, while those matchless stars close their sleepless eyes to shut out the bloody view. Oh! what were the pass of Thermopylæ, or the plain of Marathon, the field of Austerlitz, or the scene of Waterloo, compared to the armies of earth gathered to battle with the Most High? for all nations are gathered and brought down into the valley; the heathen are wakened and summoned to the vale of Armageddon, for there will the Lord plead with the nations for his heritage and for his people. "These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them." "In that day, saith the Lord, I will smite every horse with astonishment and his rider with madness." "Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get you down, for the press is full, the vats overflow, for their wickedness is great." And lo! far through the smoke of war they look with dismay, to see the bright canopy of heaven parted, and behold a white horse, and him that sat upon him was Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war; his eyes are as a flame of fire, and on his head are many crowns. And he is clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean; and out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God; and he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, "King of kings and Lord of lords."

Tremble, ye monarchs of earth! for your thrones are crumbled beneath you; your sceptres are withered in your hands; your diadems are faded before the breath of the conqueror, and your names melt away from the gaze of that eye before which the angels bow. And the seventh angel sounded, and the echo rolled back with the voices of thousands, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and forever." The words—rolled through the vast concave of heaven, and echo answered back—"Forever and forever!" And the silvery azure of heaven was thrown backward and revealed the matchless splendor of Jehovah's temple, and there enshrined in the "holy of holies" was the Ark of his Testament—vivid lightnings flashed before it—angel voices quivered through the air—the echoes of heavy thunder rolled through the regions of ether, and the earth trembled beneath the shock; but it is only

"The rumbling of His car,
The trampling of His steeds from far."

And in the midst of the blazing sun stood an angel—"And he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God; that ye may eat the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great." And the eagles and vultures gathered there to feast on the blood-stained forms of thousands of the slain. And the command came to the angel, "Thrust in thy sharp sickle and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth, for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God; and the wine-press was trodden without the city; and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horses' bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs."

And behold a throne was set in heaven, and circling around its bright proportions was a rainbow, vivid and clear as an emerald; but the stones of earth paled before Him that sat on the throne. A crystal sea was spread out at his feet, "and out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunderings, and voices; and there were seven lamps burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God. And there was silence in heaven for about the space of half an hour. Angel voices were mute with awe—angel fingers laid motionless across the harp strings; and before the golden altar which stood at the foot of the throne, was a bright being in glittering garments, bearing the golden censer, and he offered up the prayers of the saints with a rich cloud of floating incense before the throne of God. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."

Where now is the bloody wreath of Alexander—the brilliant diadem of a Cæsar—the dazzling crown of Napoleon, or the laurels of the great "King of the North?" Where is the dark sceptre of Domitian, before which thousands trembled, and the iron thrones of tyranny erected in so many places on this beautiful footstool of the Eternal? Their names are whispered no more, for "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" the "glory of Him whose glory makes pale the brightness of the sun and dim the light of the moon,"—their grandeur fades before his face like stars in the presence of the King of day. Where is Babylon, with her towers and turrets like icicles piercing the sky? Where is Tyre with her merchants, her frankincense and myrrh? Where is Sparta, Troy, Palmyra, Balabec, Jerusalem, Athens and Rome? Their splendor is fallen before the city of the Great King.

The Holy Land, whose glorious beauty was marred by the cruel sabres of the Babylonians and the sacrilegious feet of the Persian cavalier; whose beautiful head has been bowed by the tyranny of the haughty Saracen, the brave Greek and the invincible Roman,—that beautiful spot was the Savior's home and Israel's trust. The crusading knights of Europe for years struggled for its possession, but when the fifth great monarchy of earth sways its sceptre over her fair proportions, and the dark rolling clouds of war have floated away, she will be robed in more than her ancient beauty; for the saints of the Most High shall inherit the land, and the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the deep.

The barren waste of Sahara smiles in gladness; the palm tree and the laurels wave where the mournful cypress and willows once flourished. The spot where the low moans of anguish and despair was once heard, rings with the victorious song of the redeemed. There is no undercurrent of sadness there; low down in the depths of the heart there is no half smothered echo of a wail. There is no sheeted ghost of despair in the chambers of memory, wandering through the silent halls of the past; but all nature unites in the mighty anthem of joy to sing the clear, rich notes of praise.

And amid the rolling grandeur of countless burning suns, this little world of ours will be the high altar of Jehovah, where will be seen the brightness of his glory, in richer abundance than it ever shone on the golden mercy-seat beneath the expanded wings of the sacred cherubim. "For ye shall go out with joy and be led forth with peace; the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

Harvard, McHenry Co., Ill.

For the Crisis.

How ought we to Exhort Sinners?

As we acknowledge that the means Infinite Wisdom has appointed for the salvation of a lost world must be the best and most effective, it is highly important that we understand what they are and practically adopt them. The imperative command, "He that hath my word, let him declare it faithfully," applies emphatically to this subject. Obedience to it involves the honor of Jehovah and the eternal salvation of men condemned to everlasting destruction. Moreover, if we do not faithfully warn the wicked of their impending ruin, their blood may be required at our hands.

What then is our rule in this great duty? It is as follows: "O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore THOU SHALT HEAR THE WORD AT MY MOUTH, and warn them from me. When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand."—Ezek. 33: 78. The apostles of Jesus Christ were bound to observe the same holy principle of strict conformity to the word of the Lord in their ministry to perishing men. They were to teach "all things whatsoever (Christ) commanded" them, after assuring them, "as the Father said unto me, so I speak."—John 12: 50.

How then did the prophets of God, the apostles and "the faithful Witness" of the truth, exhort sinful and perishing men? They exhorted them to immediate repentance toward God; to turn unto him with full purpose of heart from all their evil ways. Thus they maintained the righteous authority of God's law, which demands the supreme love and worship of all intelligent beings towards himself as their Creator, Preserver and Benefactor. As this obligation never ceases for a moment, it would have been rebellion against the Most High to have allowed any substitute.

The glorious gospel of the blessed God was announced to a perishing world, with the imperative command, "REPENT YE, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matt. 3: 2; 4: 17. Repentance is a change of mind, or heart, or disposition. "The carnal mind is enmity against God." The change required, is love or reconciliation to him. All repentance destitute of this, is selfish, and needs to be repented of. The great and immediate duty of every sinner is "repentance toward God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ."—Acts 20: 21.

There is no such thing as impenitent and unbelieving sinners coming to God, or to Jesus Christ, "just as they are." "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Heb. 11: 6. "If I regard iniquity in my heart, (which every impenitent sinner does) the Lord will not hear me."—Ps. 66: 18. So Jesus teaches us that there is no true and availing coming to him, without we are willing to deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow him.—Matt. 16: 24. This is repentance, or a change of disposition. Some, alas! come to Christ, as the young man in the gospel history, "just as they are," supremely selfish, desiring eternal life, while they are carnally minded; lovers of riches and pleasure "more than lovers of God." They pray for pardon while they will not repent and give up their idols, in direct opposition to the word of Jesus Christ; "Except ye repent ye shall . . . perish."—Luke 13: 3. They presume on the mercy of God, make a public profession of religion, still minding chiefly "the things of the flesh," and go down to perdition with a lie in their right hand.

Faithfulness to God and to dying men requires us to present the immutable claim of the Almighty to a rebellious world, of immediate and entire reconciliation to him. "Be ye reconciled to God," is the indispensable mandate.—2 Cor. 5: 20. "Make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"—Ezek. 18: 31. The divine commands to the sinner to make himself "a new heart," to love God, to repent, are one and the same simple requisition to the sinner as his immediate duty. Is it said, that a new heart is the gift of God, and the effect of being born of the Spirit, and therefore the sinner must be directed to PRAY for the HOLY SPIRIT, to be born again as a new creature in CHRIST JESUS, etc.? It is indeed true, that the sinner is so in love with sin, that he never will change his heart or love God, until he is begotten or born of the Spirit of God; but it is equally true that he never will pray aright until he is born of the Spirit. God commands him to REPENT and pray, Acts 8: 22, without which God will not hear. See Ps. 66: 18. He must ask in faith, or not "receive anything of the Lord."—James 1: 6, 7. Now, if a man thus prays, before he is born or begotten of the Holy Spirit, he must have spiritual life before he is born of the Spirit; for true repentance and faith are exercises of spiritual life; and if so, he does not need to be born of the Spirit, for he already possesses the principle of holiness.

Prayer, if not mockery, is the sincere desire of the heart. To suppose that an unrenewed man prays to be born of the Spirit, is to suppose that the old heart desires to be a new heart; which is to suppose that an impure fountain can send forth pure streams, and a corrupt tree can bear good fruit. An impenitent man may have a selfish desire for something which he conceives necessary to save him from destruction; but a direct desire for holiness is a holy desire, and cannot proceed from an unholy or unrenewed heart.

God will honor his own word. This is the fire and the hammer which he uses to melt and break the rocky heart. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth."—James 1: 18. In vain do we attempt to be wise above what is written.

The gracious provision of the gospel is ample "for the whole world."—1 John 2: 2. All are freely invited to partake of it.—Rev. 22: 17. All with one consent make excuse.—Luke 14: 18, and will not come unto Christ for eternal life.—John 5: 40. "No man can (will) come unto me, except it were given him of my Father."—John 6: 65. "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thine help." "To thy name, O Lord, be the glory forever!" Respectfully submitted,

HENRY GREW.

Philadelphia, Dec. 31st, 1859.

Selections.

The Words we Speak.

Our words are imperishable. Like winged messengers they go forth, but never to be recalled—never to die. They have a mighty power for good or evil through all time; and before the great white throne they will be swift witnesses for or against us.

Within the massive walls of a gloomy building, a nobleman was undergoing inquisition as to certain acts of his previous life. He had been told that nothing he might say should be divulged or recorded, and he spoke freely. But soon behind the arras, his ear caught the sharp clicking sound of a pen which recorded every word he uttered; and by those words he was to be judged. Do we remember that there is an ear that catches every word we utter, no matter how lightly, how scoffingly, how secretly spoken? And by these words shall we one day be acquitted or condemned.

The words we speak have a mighty power; and there are words angels might covet to utter. There are words of comfort to the afflicted. There are sad hearts that need comfort everywhere; and there are words of blame and cold indifference, or feigned sympathy, that fall like lead upon the stricken spirit; and there are blessed heart-words of cheer which bear up the soul and enable it to look out from the dark night of its troubles and discern the silver lining of the gloomy cloud.

There are words of counsel to the young, to the tempted, the erring. Speak them earnestly, affectionately, and though the waves of circumstance may soon waft them away from your observation, yet such is God's husbandry, that if uttered in faith and with prayer, he will take care that on an earthly or heavenly shore the reaper shall rejoice that he was a sower.

There are kind words; how little they cost, how priceless they are! Harsh words beget harshness; and fretful words, like a certain little insect, sting us into a feverish impatience. But who can resist the charm of kind loving words? The heart expands beneath them as to the sunshine, and they make us happier and better.

It was said of the gifted Mrs. Fry, that she had a wise, kind word for all, and those kind words unlocked stony hearts as well as prison doors, and made her a blessed visitant to the criminal and the outcast.

Then there are cheerful words, and why should we dole them out with such miserly care? They ought to form the atmosphere of our homes, and to be habitual in all our social intercourse. We have so many weaknesses, so many crosses, so much that is down-hill in life that the habit of thinking and speaking cheerfully is invaluable.

But there are other words against which we should pray, "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my mouth; keep the door of my lips." There are words of falsehood and deceit. They lurk in our expressions of civility, our professions of friendship, our transactions of business. How early do children even, begin to weave a web of deceit, and how carefully should those who train them watch against this sin, and by example and precept, teach them always and everywhere to speak the truth.

There are slanderous words—how mischievous they are! There are the words of the tale-bearers that breed suspicions and jealousies in neighborhoods, and between families. There are envious words and flattering words and faltering words which are no better. Then there is the long list of idle words, or by-words as they are called.

How many there are who shudder at an oath, who yet break the spirit of the third commandment, by constantly interlarding their conversation by expletives!

But there is another class of words to which we would gladly refer—they are the words of eternal life. Cornelius sent for Peter that he might speak words to him. What blessed words those were! Will they not be remembered with joy by both speaker and hearer throughout all eternity? As we pass along through the world, God will often let us speak a word for him; and if we seek his aid he will make it a word of power and comfort, a word in season to him that is weary.

"Speak gently; 't is a little thing,
Dropped in the heart's deep well;
The good, the joy, which it may bring,
Eternity shall tell."—Ballard.

God's People Known to Him.

Tamar may disguise herself, and walk in an unaccustomed path, so as Judah may not know her. Isaac, through the dimness of his sight, may bless Jacob, and pass Esau. Tract of time may make Joseph to forget or be forgotten of his brethren. Solomon may doubt to whom of right the child belongeth; and Christ may come to his own and not be received. But the Lord knoweth who are his, and his eye is always over them. Time, place, speech, or apparel, cannot obscure or darken his eye or ear. He can discern Daniel in the den—Job though never so much changed, on the dung-hill; let Jonah be lodged in the whale's belly, Peter put in a close prison, Lazarus be wrapped in rags, or Abel be rolled in blood; yet can he call them by name, and send his angels to comfort them. Ignorance and forgetfulness may cause love and knowledge to be estranged in the creature, but the Lord is not incident to either; for his eye, as his essence, is everywhere; he knoweth all things.—John Barlow, 1616.

Don't be Hasty.

1. Because you will be likely to treat quite lightly two very good friends of yours, Reason and Conscience, who will not have a chance to speak.

2. Because you will have to travel over the same ground in company with one sober Second Thought, who will be more likely to have with him a whip of scorpions than a bunch of flowers.

3. Because the words or actions involved in it are more likely than otherwise to be misunderstood, and therefore to be severely judged.

4. Because this is one way to please and give great advantage to a great enemy of yours, one powerful enough to be called the "Prince of the World," and who has caught more people than can be counted, in this very trap.

5. Because such a fire may be kindled that it cannot be put out ever by all the water a whole engine company can throw, with Second Thought for their captain.—Sel.

Prayer.

Prayer is the incense of the soul,
The odor of the flower,
And rises as the waters roll
To God's controlling power!

Prayer is the spirit speaking truth
To Thee, whose love divine
Steals gently down like dew to soothe,
Or like the sunbeams shine.

Jesting with Scripture.

There is a practice which is fearfully common even among the professors of religion, and from which, alas! ministers of the gospel are not always free, which cannot be too severely condemned, as offensive to God, and injurious to the best interests of man. We allude to the practice of connecting ludicrous anecdotes with passages of Scripture. We know by sad experience, and we appeal to the experience of others for the confirmation of the remark, that so lively is the impression which is often produced on the mind by the association of something grotesque with certain texts of the Bible, that such passages can hardly be read in the most serious moments without bringing up to the mind some idea which it requires a strong effort to prevent from producing a smile. This is one abuse of sacred things not less displeasing to God than under the Old Testament it would have been to desecrate from a holy to a common use, the sacred implements of the temple, the holy anointing oil, or the hallowed fire of the altar. If to put new wine into old bottles, or to sew a new patch on an old garment be unwise, incongruous, how much more so to prostitute the sacred words of inspiration to point a jest for the amusement of the social circle! To do so in the presence of the young, is peculiarly injudicious. Jeremy Taylor forcibly remarks on this subject:

"Some men used to read Scripture on their knees and many with their heads uncovered, and all good men with fear and trembling, with reverence and grave attention. For all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is fit for instruction, for reproof, for exhortation, for doctrine, not for jesting; but he that makes that use of it had better part with his heart to make a tennis-ball; and that I may speak the worst thing in the world of it, it is as like the material part of the sin against the Holy Ghost, as jeering of a man is to abusing him; and no man can use it but he that wants wit and manners as much as he wants of religion."—Sel.

How to take Life.

Take life like a man. Take it just as though it was—as it is—an earnest, vital, essential affair. Take it just as though you personally were born to the task of performing a merry part in it—as though the world had waited for your coming. Take it as though it was a grand opportunity to do and to achieve, to carry forward great and good schemes; to help and cheer a suffering, weary, it may be a heart-broken brother. The fact is, life is undervalued by a great majority of mankind. It is not made half as much of as should be the case. Where is the man or woman who accomplishes one tithe of what might be done? Who cannot look back upon opportunities lost, plans unachieved, thoughts crushed, aspirations unfulfilled, and all caused from the lack of the necessary and possible effort? If we knew better how to take and make the most of life, it would be far greater than it is. Now and then a man stands aside from the crowd, labors earnestly, steadfastly, confidently, and at length becomes famous for wisdom, intellect, skill, greatness of some sort. The world wonders, admires, idolizes; and yet it only illustrates what each may do if he takes hold of life with a purpose. If a man but say he will, and follows it up, there is nothing in reason he may not expect to accomplish. There is no magic, no miracle, no secret to him who is brave in heart, determined in spirit.—London Jour.

Outside and Inside.

"Two things a master commits to his servant's care," saith one—"the child and the child's clothes." It will be a poor excuse for the servant to say at his master's return,

"Sir, here are all the child's clothes, neat and clean: but the child is lost!"

Much so with the account that many will give to God of their souls and bodies at the great day:

"Lord, here is my body; I was very grateful for it: I neglected nothing that belonged to its comfort and welfare; but as for my soul, that is lost and cast away for ever. I took little care and thought about it."—Flavel.

HAVE A PURPOSE.—No man ever becomes great, or wise, or rich, by accident. We teach in the nursery, in the school, at every step of education, that a young man's prosperity must depend upon himself. We say to the young, "If you are industrious and frugal, and if you set before you a distinct object in life, you will succeed; but if you are indolent, and improvident, and changeable, you will come to no good." A man must have a purpose, he must make up his mind what he means to be and do, or he cannot reasonably hope to succeed in life. Whether a man is a christian or a man of business, it is indispensable to his success that he should know what he means to do, and purpose to do it.

Reading for Youth.

Little Foxes.

A happy holiday party had assembled one summer afternoon at Nettie Bailey's house, and, of all places you can imagine, the Bailey farm was the most attractive for holding children's levees. Comfortable, wide, open apartments, furnished in the good old-fashioned style, and the whole family, from dear old grandma to the least, quite free from nervous complaints. A beautiful lawn encircled the house, stately trees threw out their cool shadows, and one they called the ladder-tree, which a child six years old could easily climb. But the grand old barn, minus modern improvements, was, after all, the most irresistible part of the establishment, as had just been decided by a unanimous vote of the party, in response to the question, What shall we do first? "The barn, the barn!" said they, with one voice.

Grandma had been kissed by the whole cluster of rose-bud lips, and she was looking on complacently from her arm-chair. As they were about starting from the room, she said, "Pleasant and happy as robins, all of you. Now don't let the little foxes catch any of you, darlings."

A general sensation ensued, and exclamations followed thick and fast. Two or three of the smaller ones ran up to grandma's chair for protection.

"I ain't afraid," said Nettie; "grandma's got on her quizzical face; she don't mean real foxes."

"Please tell us," urged the children, crowding up to listen.

"Can you wait long enough for grandma to preach a little sermon?"

"O yes, indeed," chimed in all the voices; grandma's talks were considered an extra treat with the young folks.

"Well, then, my subject this afternoon is Little Foxes, and my text you may find in the Book of books; and what book is that, children?"

"The Bible."

"Yes, indeed, it is; and in the Song of Solomon it says, second chapter, fifteenth verse, 'Take us the foxes, the little foxes that spoil the vines; for our vines have tender grapes.' You all know that foxes are very cunning little creatures; they steal into the most tempting gardens and spoil every thing that comes in their way; it is just so with heart foxes, creeping into the loveliest characters to mar and spoil them. They even come sometimes into a beautiful garden like this, (grandma gave a look which they all understood,) and play their naughty, ugly tricks.

Now it is a great thing to know these little foxes when you see them, for they often wear masks to hide their true faces. I'll call over a few of their names. Fretfulness is a real fox, and so is willfulness, and jealousy, and selfishness, and fault-finding, and tattling. Oh, how they nip the buds and flowers; they sometimes come to parties without an invitation, the saucy intruders—and that is the reason I told you to look out for them this afternoon. Grandma's preached her sermon, and now you may run."

After this timely warning, the foxes were unusually wary, and for a good while there was hardly a loop-hole for them to creep through. Swinging, jumping in the hay, keeping house in the cribs, took the starch out of muslin frocks and the curl out of more than one head; but the more Clara Rich shook hers about, the tighter clung to it the brown ringlets. Clara was the acknowledged beauty of all the parties, and she had a good disposition to match.

While they were in the height of enjoyment, George Bailey came up from the corn-field. He stopped to wash his hands in the brook, and was ready to offer his services at swinging the girls. Mary Ray and Clara were standing together, and George asked Mary to take the first swing. She jumped in, leaving Clara piqued at his imagined partiality. She drew back, refusing to take the next turn on the plea of not feeling well. Poor Clara! she was bitten on the most sensitive spot in her nature,—self esteem—by that miserable little fox, jealousy, and it smarted cruelly. Neither coaxing nor pity did it any good, and she might have suffered a long time had not grandma's warning suddenly come into her mind. She gave a steady look at her tormentor, which sent him sneaking off, and a hearty laugh made the cure complete. Clara took her place in the swing and a pinch on her rosy cheek with a good grace, and ran up to a group of girls who were discussing rather warmly whether to play school or forfeits; each party had a stiff will in the matter.

"Shoo! shoo! shoo! I spy a little fox," cried Clara, running around them. This opened their eyes, and the old barn rang again.

George laughed, too; he had heard before of grandma's little foxes, and guessed what the joke was.

There wasn't much chance for any of the fox tribe again that afternoon, and it is pretty likely the girls will never forget grandma's sermon. The dear old lady did not question them about it when they came in to supper; she felt quite sure, by their happy faces, that there were no foxes about them.

When the old town-clock struck eight, and they all came up for a good-night kiss from grandma, one of the little rogues whispered under her cap border, that the little foxes came but didn't stay long.

Grandma laughed and said she was satisfied.—Independent.

Kind Manners.

"Will you lend me your knife to sharpen my pencil, George?" asked little Mary Green of her brother, who was sitting at the opposite side of the table.

George drew the knife from his pocket, and pushed it rudely towards her, saying at the same time, "Now don't cut your fingers off."

The knife fell upon the floor, and as it was evening, it took Mary some minutes to find it, and her brother made no offer of assistance. He was studying a geography lesson for the next day, and seemed to be much engaged with it. At length he closed his book and atlas exclaiming, "Well, I'm glad that lesson is learned."

"And now will you please to show me how to do this sum, before you begin to study again?" said Mary, who had been for some time puzzling over a sum in subtraction, which appeared to her very difficult.

"You are big enough to do your own sums, I should think, Miss Mary," was the answer.

"Let me see. What! this simple question. You must be stupid, if you cannot do that. However, I suppose I must help you. Give me the pencil."

The sum was soon explained, quite to Mary's satisfaction, and several hints were given her as to those which followed, which prevented her meeting with further difficulty. Her brother did not mean to be unkind. He loved to help her. It was only his manner which seemed harsh and cross. Presently his mother took her sewing and sat down at the table where the children were studying. George wished for the large dictionary which was in the book-case at the farther end of the room, and he took the lamp and went to look for it, leaving his mother and sister sitting in darkness until his return.

"This is impolite, George," said his mother; "there is another lamp upon the mantle-piece, which you can light if you wish to use one."

George made no reply, but instantly replaced the lamp, and lighted another. After finding the dictionary, he returned to his seat, and hastily blew out the lamp, instead of placing the extinguisher over the flame. The disagreeable smell of the oil filled the room, and his father, who was sitting near, reading the newspaper, looked up and said;

"You are impolite again, my son. Have you not often been told that it is not good manners to blow out a lamp in that way?"

"I cannot always think about manners," replied George, rather rudely.

"And yet they are of great consequence, George. A person whose intentions are really good, and who desires to be of use to his fellow beings, may impair his usefulness very much by harsh and unkind manners."

"If we do what is right, father, I should not think it much matter how we did it."

"You are mistaken, George. It makes a vast difference in the amount of good we perform. I will tell you of a little instance which will show the truth of this. I visited this morning a very poor woman in the neighborhood. My means did not enable me to do a great deal for her relief, but for the little which I gave her, she appeared deeply grateful. Finding that she had formerly been employed as a washerwoman by a gentleman whose office is near mine, and whom I know to be wealthy and benevolent, I asked why she did not apply to him for some relief. The tears came into her eyes and she replied,

"Indeed, sir, I know the gentleman is very kind, and he has helped me before this when things went hard; but, indeed, I would rather suffer than go to him; he has such a harsh way of speaking to a poor body. A kind word is a good thing, sir; it comforts the troubled heart. A penny from some is worth a dollar from others.—The Little Truth Teller.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22..00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to [illegible] GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i.e., $2 will pay for [illegible] numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 229. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1860. VOL. X. NO. 22.

The World's Crisis IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING AT No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:

HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal, coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

To J——.

Sister, thy hopes and home are mine,
Our joys move hand in hand;
We're one in blood, and one in Christ,
Bound with a two-fold band.

For thee, I'd ask not cloudless skies,
For sunset's crimson fold
Is richest when it falls on clouds,
And fringes them with gold.

I'd hope that when the shadows fall,
Thy faith shall never fail;
But point thee from the conflicts here,
To rest "within the veil."

I'd ask for thee that heirship high,
For which the christian waits,
A glorious, bright, eternal home,
Within the golden gates.

F. P.

Pine Avenue, Jan. 13th, 1860.

For the Crisis.

"The Beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

BY J. MCCAMMON.

"The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."—Rev. 17: 8.

(Concluded.)

We will now take our measuring line of 1260 years and try it with the times. First, it is said that the Bishop of Rome had himself been declared universal Bishop in 606; and here is the mark, the rise of the beast that rose out of the sea, or, as has been explained, out of the multitudes of the people; and, as I would still further say, out of the awful corruptions of that degenerate age, as out of the abyss or bottomless pit. It is said he was a bishop, the representative head of a great spiritual hierarchy, that rose up in that corrupt age. We admit it all, and that the date of his rise was just 606. Here we would ask, how do you know he was the beast with seven heads and ten horns, and ten crowns upon his heads? Now to be a beast he must be a king possessing kingdoms; to be the beast his kingdom must be universal over the Roman Empire. Was this true of the Bishop of Rome? No. Then was he a pope? Popes were made by the second beast that had two horns like a lamb, and a voice like a dragon. Was he then a manufactured article? for I have already proved that all popes are things made. Commencing at 606 of the Julian period, and measuring the way, we land at 1866; but as each Julian year is five days six hours longer than a prophetic year,—our time being prophetic, not Julian years,—to find true time we must deduct eighteen years, which brings us back to 1848. And here we would ask, what happened? Negatively the world was not destroyed. Papal Rome is still in existence; Christ, the long-looked for Messiah did not come. Robert Kemble, who wrote his Key to the Apocalypse in the year 1700, one hundred and forty-eight years beforehand, and marked this date with a precision that was truly wonderful, says the Pope would lose his temporal power in that year. True, in that year, the crowned heads of Europe were made to totter on their thrones, and Pope Pius the IX., the now reigning Pope, was driven into exile by his own people, and only restored by the power of Louis Napoleon, the now reigning Emperor of France, who sent an army and stormed the city of Rome, and after its surrender restored the Pope to his throne, who now supports him in it. We would here say that though our learned friend, R. Kemble, gave us the key, and himself marked the year, yet he failed to open the right door. For it was impossible for him to lose that which he never possessed. But what took place? It was the loss of that great spiritual power or influence he held over the minds and hearts of the people, as Pope, claiming as he did to be Christ's ambassador, and reigning in his stead; that he could by the mere issuing of his decree, or bull, make kings tremble on their thrones and nations bow like whining sycophants to his feet! Who, now, we would ask, outside of his own deluded followers would bow in his presence, or where's the [illegible] to do him homage? Still, like Nebuchadnezzar's great tree, whose height reached to heaven and its sight to the ends of the earth; whose leaves were fair, and its fruit much, under which the beasts of the field dwelt, and on whose branches the fowls of heaven had their habitation; and though decay has marked it for its own, its heart being rotted out, its foliage becoming withered, and the marks of death everywhere seen on the ends of its branches; yet its roots continue vigorous, and the scions spring up from the same in every place, and to the observing eye can be known by the marks given.

The measure taken from 606, leaves us in darkness and doubt, so far as it respects Christ's coming, and we will try again. We will find our starting point at the mystic number, 755, and measuring again on the Julian road we find our line reaches to 2115. Here again, our line is too long for prophetic periods, and we must again deduct eighteen years which gives us true time, 1997. But as God added seven days to his patience in times of Noah, before he brought the flood upon the earth, so now he may give seven years grace to an earth now overflown with wickedness; which, added to 1997 gives 2004, differing one year from my dial plate, which discrepancy arose from throwing away the fractions in the latter place.

And now, gentle reader, we have conducted you to the last period; beyond it no prophetic numbers will reach; short of it the 1260 years of the beast and of Daniel's little horn would not have their fulfillment, neither is the time left any more than is needed to fill up the book of prophecy, and bring in an everlasting righteousness; neither is the time allotted any more than enough for the earth to fill up the measure of her iniquity, and make her cup to overflow, when the sanctuary must be cleansed, and the place made holy so that the Lord, the righteous Judge, may come and set up his glorious kingdom. Our time does not depend on chronology; but on marks and periods, in which we think it is hard to be mistaken, more than a few years, and that number between 1997 and 2004.

We have in the world's history, three great periods. The first reaching to the call of Abraham from the land of his fathers, including the flood. The second reaching to the birth of Christ in 4004, of the world's history, including the Mosaic dispensation, and from the birth of Christ to his second advent, just 2000 years; in which he has intrusted his money in the hands of his servants, saying, "occupy till I come;" and dreadful will be that reckoning if he finds them beating the menservants and the maid-servants; for the day of reckoning is just at the door. Look up, then, ye down-trodden and disappointed saints; ye whose heads are drooping like bulrushes, and are sometimes tempted to look back to the flesh pots of Egypt. Look up, the time is just at the door. Let the song of praise be again heard; let the daughters of Israel look up. Put on the wedding robe. Behold the Bridegroom cometh! He will come and not tarry. Let the Bride make herself ready.

For the Crisis.

The Nature and Origin of Jesus.

BY WM. HOBBS.

No. 2.

The fact that the virgin Mary conceived a son and called his name Jesus, is of itself enough to show the theory of "the pre-existence" to be a theory of "another Jesus." For a son conceived refers to the formation of a new being, and not to the incarnation of a pre-existent being. With this agrees the statement of Paul, that "when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his son, made of a woman, made under the law."—Gal. 4: 4. And to this agrees another statement of his, of like import, contained in the following: "Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God, which he hath promised afore by his prophets, in the holy scriptures, concerning his son Jesus Christ our Lord, who was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead."—Rom. 1: 1–4.

This declaration of Paul, that "Jesus Christ our Lord was made of the seed of David," clearly teaches that his being originated with his birth—he was "made of the seed of David"—not made into the seed of David according to the flesh. He also declares that he was "the son of God according to the spirit of holiness;" which is all very plain. If the nature of Christ had not been imbued with the spirit of holiness, he would not have been the son of God; for a son partakes of the nature of the father, and God being holy, his son would partake of holiness of nature. And herein consists the beauty, the loveliness, the excellency of our Christ,—his nature partook of the very spirit of holiness. And this holiness of nature was derived from Him, who said of him, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee.

The evidence of Christ's origin being plain and positive, it is not to be set aside by inferences in favor of the pre-existent theory: for inferences that clash with positive evidence cannot be otherwise than illogical. For instance, the inference that Jesus pre-existed because John the Baptist testified, "After me cometh a man preferred before me," is illogical. For the word, before, is there used in the sense of preference; as it was "a man," not a divinity, that he said was before him: and Jesus, as "a man," was born after John; hence he was not before him in time, but in preeminence. And this view is confirmed by parallel passages in the other gospels, where it is said, "There cometh one after me mightier than I, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose."

Again, it is inferred that because he is said to have "come down from heaven," and to have been "from above," that therefore he came from some far distant region of infinite space, "away down, down, down, to this lower world," and entered the womb of the virgin and was born again,—which, to say the least, is inferring strange things on small evidence and against evidence. This error arises, partly, from the supposition that heaven is a certain locality at an immense distance from the earth; whereas the Bible recognizes heaven as extending from the earth to the starry firmament. Hence, we read of "the dew of heaven," and of the lightning that cometh out of one part of heaven and shineth to the other part of heaven. Take the words of Christ to Nicodemus,—"No one hath ascended into heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the "Son of man which is in heaven;" and any one can see that it does not imply a descent from a great distance, since the Son of man while on earth was in the heaven from which he descended.

The first time the word "heaven" occurs in the Bible is in Gen. 1: 8,—"And God called the firmament heaven." And the same God has said, "Heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool;" hence whatever is from God, by a figure of speech, is said to be from heaven. Thus the baptism of John is said to be "from heaven."—Matt. 21: 25. And further, it is written that "every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—James 1: 17. Jesus came from God by divine generation; hence, by the figure of speech called metonymy, he is said to have come down from heaven, as every good gift is said to have come down from above, from the Father of lights.

This view of the heavenly extraction of the Son of man is confirmed by Paul in 1 Cor. 15: 45, 47. "And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven." It is somewhat singular that Paul should assert, and re-assert, that the second man was not before the first. Why was it, unless he meant to confute those who might afterward teach that the second man was before the first? He also asserts that the second man was from heaven; from in the sense of origin, not from in the sense of outside of heaven. His being from heaven is, therefore, no evidence of the pre-existence of the second man before the first, according to Paul. The very reverse is taught now, as it is held that his being from heaven, is evidence that the second man was before the first. To suit one of their inferences, in respect to what they think is meant by his being from heaven, they involve Paul in a plain contradiction; for fear that may figure away the testimony that he came down from heaven. Let such consult a proverb found in Matt. 23: 24.

The words of Christ just before his death, are quoted as proof of a pre-existent Jesus. He said to his disciples, "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again, I leave the world and go to the Father. His disciples said unto him, Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb."—John 16: 28, 29. If Christ, in his birth, came from God by divine generation, as has been proved, then, in his death he returned to God. His spirit returned to God that gave it, when in the last death agony he cried, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." That plainly was no proverb. John 17: 5, is relied on as proof of a pre-existence. As this passage is familiar with many, we will quote the original Greek, and translate it word for word—"Kai nun doxason me su Pater, para seau'o, te doxe he eichon pro tou ton kosmon einai, para soi."—And now glorify me, thou Father, with thyself, the glory which had before the world was, with thee. In this request of Christ, "Glorify me, thou Father," it is implied that God had a glory reserved for him; hence the phrase, The glory which had before the world was with thee, refers to the glory that God had reserved for him before the world was. That the glorification consisted in his obtaining a glorified body through his death and resurrection, we have his own words as evidence, in what he said just before his death. Hence it could not have been a glory that he possessed before, only by predestination. The following is the passage alluded to:—"And Jesus answered them saying, The hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."—John 12: 33. This clearly refers to his being glorified in his death and resurrection, as will be further evident by reading onward to the thirty-third verse.

Again, on the night of the betrayal, when Judas went out to betray him, it is said, "Therefore, when he was gone out, Jesus said, Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him. If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself and shall straitway glorify him."—John 13: 31, 32. And soon after, in the same night, he makes the prayer from which our extract is taken, and begins thus: "Father, the hour is come: glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee." The adverb of time, "now," and "the hour," shows that it was when Christ was here on earth, that he was glorified, in the resurrection of his body to a glorified state of immortality. And since he did not possess a glorified body until then, the passage, (John 17: 5,) cannot refer to a pre-existent state, but to a glory predestined to him.

To conclude, then, we can say,
With more truth than poetry,
It was the Son of God that died;
And being raised was glorified:
Crowned with glory as Lord and head,
Both of the living and the dead:
Therefore, not before the world began,
Possess'd this glory the Son of man;—
Only through God's own predestined plan.

Again, that this is the glory referred to, is further evident from the fact, that in the same prayer he prays for his disciples to the Father, and says, "They are not of the world." If he was not of the world by coming from some other world, where he had a pre-existent glory, then it follows, that the apostles pre-existed and came from another world; but as this was not true of the apostles, it follows that Jesus did not pre-exist in glory.

Once more, to the same effect, in the same prayer, he says of the disciples, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so also have I sent them into this world." v. 18. Now if the passage in verse 5, be understood to teach the pre-existence of Jesus, it would follow that he was sent into the world before he was born, and then it follows that he sent the apostles into the world in a similar way; which would prove that the apostles pre-existed. So the preachers of "another Jesus," of a pre-existent character, introduce endless contradictions and absurdities; altogether repugnant to the simplicity that is in Christ.

We ought not to have any fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. For that theory that leads men to contradict the obvious import of the declaration of Jehovah, concerning his Son, cannot be otherwise than unfruitful. He that believeth not God hath made him a liar. "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee," is his declaration concerning Jesus Christ our Lord.

A NEW CREATURE.—A Scotch girl was converted under the preaching of Whitefield. When asked if her heart was changed, her true and beautiful answer was—"Something I know is changed; it may be the world; it may be my heart; there is a great change somewhere, I'm sure, for every thing is different from what it once was." A very apt commentary on that passage (2 Cor. 5: 17); "Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away, behold all things are become new."

☞ Some writer has said, "When a man begins to find fault, note his spirit. If he is bitter, harsh and vindictive, don't listen to him. He will either grieve your heart, or infect you with his own spirit. If he comes cursing like a Shimei, pass him by. But if he comes weeping like a Jeremiah, you may weep with him, and mourn over the desolation of Jerusalem."

☞ It is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in Providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.

For the Crisis.

Our Statistical Report.

PREPARED BY DANIEL T. TAYLOR.

No. 4.

I. Calling and office. Of the names of the preachers reported to me, eighty-six are represented as performing the work of a pastor in care of a local church. This number is too small, though as the Seer of Patmos saw the judgment-proclaiming angel on the wing; so it seems to be the genius of the Advent message not to locate, but to fly. Nevertheless there are scores of our churches dying out, or barely existing, without expansion, for the want of efficient, faithful, pastoral labor, by some good, resident shepherd. But it is just to say that in this respect we are no worse off than the Baptists, whom Dr. Baird represents as having nearly twice as many churches as they have preachers. (I think we have supplied them with too many preachers already. But this is a digression.) Only ten men are reported among us as fulfilling both the office of pastor and evangelist, though doubtless there are four times as many. The remaining four hundred and eighty-eight I have put down as evangelists; most of them constantly itinerate, many are without local charge, but preach around in their neighborhood with success, never going far from home; others have a more extended circuit and ride in cars or otherwise, ten, twenty, fifty, or one hundred miles to their places of appointment, their field the world. Those reported as having been ordained "by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery" amount to three hundred and forty-two; those not thus ordained, sixty-seven; those not known by me, one hundred and seventy-five. Some few, in opposition to all history and general consent and custom, do not believe in such outward ordination; many of the above mentioned number are waiting for a favorable opportunity to receive this very proper and solemn rite, while not a few, from what cause I know not, have preached for many years and are in advanced life, but have never thus been "set visibly apart," though perhaps meanwhile laboring successfully and inwardly approved of God. Why, I am led to inquire, do such neglect the scriptural form of the "imposition of hands"? Is it not apostolic and proper for all?

II. Condition. I find among us in the ministry, fifteen over sixty years of age, but judge the true number to be nearer thirty. Those over seventy years of age are stated to be four in number; over eighty, but one, and that one Eld. Jonathan Wilson, who is eighty-three, and yet quite well and active in the Lord's work. The majority are young or middle-aged and in the prime and vigor of life. Such are needed, for the work is great, the toil incessant, the labor arduous, and the field very wide. Three hundred and sixty eight are reported as being generally well, and one hundred and forty-eight remain, of whose condition in this line of inquiry I am uninformed. But there yet are found two more classes of whom I must speak, and these are the sick and the idle; the former of whom are said to be nine, and the latter thirty-nine in number. Those sick are more or less known—some being idle because of ill health, while others are so from choice. Some have incurable chronic diseases, slowly but surely hurrying them to the grave. They would labor on in the field, but cannot. Some, perchance, have toiled hard and long in much weariness, till disease compelled them to lay by. Do any of this class stand in need? Are their wants supplied? Are they remembered by those who in better days have had their arduous labors in the Lord? Is the condition of this class attended to among us, or is the wicked motto adopted—"Poor old horse, let him die"? There is great chance for inquiry in this direction, and I suggest the appointment of a Committee in every state to look into the matter. We have one "Preacher [illegible]," and it is well. Let more be organized, if needed. And let not the worthy and poor sick minister fail to make known his wants nor hesitate to ask for and receive aid, when it is truly needed.

And the idle,—what shall I say of them, what to them? I speak not of those idle from illness, and who cannot preach! such are excusable. Nor of others who are worn out with toil and old age. But of those who for a few discouragements or the offer of more lucre, turned aside from the great work of proclaiming the near advent, and are gone to their farms, their merchandise, the ledger, or the doctor's office. Perhaps forty men in tolerable health, and with fair talents have done this Jonah-like work. Some, I am sorry to say, are almost entirely backslidden from their Lord. Brother, do you feel the call and yet refuse to obey it? And is it not "hard for thee to kick against the goads"? You want to get rich a little faster, perhaps, than while preaching unpopular truth among an unpopular people, both of which the devil hates. Ah! small salaries here, but the kingdom and crown hereafter. The Master asks—"Lovest thou me more than these" fish, i. e., worldly gain? You thought once you was called of God to preach his gospel. Were you mistaken? If not, when did He take back the divine commission? O come to the rescue, for the Lord hath need of thee! Is thy talent small? All have one,—remember Jeremiah. No such plea avails when duty calls. Its nature is imperative. Why stand ye here all the day idle? Go work in my vineyard, saith God. The night cometh when no man can work. Work, work, work, then, while it is called to-day. Suffer this appeal for your good. Come back from Tarshish and lay all on the altar for God and truth, and once more consecrate your life-long energies to the Redeemer and his cause.

III. Ministerial support. Advent ministers are in no danger of wealth from fat salaries. The want of system—organization, and, in some sections, means, will keep them from this. And here, as in all other churches, some do not give according to their means. No doubt there are instances where the wages of active and more prominent preachers amounts to $1000 per annum, but such are rare. My opinion is that from $150 to $300 is nearer the average. But even this low average fails to exhibit the facts concerni[illegible] those who suffer hardship and privatio[illegible] poor support. Some have turned away from the ministry from this cause. About twenty-two of our preachers practice medicine, more or less, to assist in gaining a livelihood for themselves and families. I believe it is right for every minister to have a good trade to turn his hands to in an emergency. So, I think, did Luke and Paul. But when wishing to "give himself wholly" to the work of God, he should not be discouraged and hampered by stingy supporters who have enough. Our churches do better than ten years ago, and many do sufficiently well; but scores of preachers have written me, saying, "I labor all the week, and then preach Sundays for little or nothing," showing a lack still existing somewhere.

The labor of our preachers in some instances is immense. One writes from Canada: "During the last year I have preached two hundred and sixteen sermons, attended seventy-five prayer meetings, and other meetings averaging one a day, traveled with my team sixteen hundred miles, by stage forty, by railroad five hundred, besides writing, reading, etc." And his health is not good. Another writes, "I cannot travel much by reason of poverty and a large family." And this in the West, where, writes another indefatigable laborer, "the interest to hear is great." One from Nova Scotia writes, "I am a shoemaker, work hard, preach as often as I get time; received by collection twice, seventy-five cents, found some persons more needy than myself and gave it to them and more with it." This reminds me of two sickly preachers meeting at a town in Mass., last fall; it was No. 1's appointment but No. 2 did one third of the work and gave No. 1 fifty cents besides, while the thirty or forty of those Adventists who sat and listened, gave of their substance to neither. An Elder in Minn. says it "is a new country, we are poor and badly in debt, money scarce and hardly to be got," and says if he had means of support he would devote all his time to God's work. One in Vt. writes, "I could not get support, so since 1855, I doctor and preach all I can."—Another in N. Y., "I labor with my hands for the necessaries of life, but would rather be devoted to the work of the Lord." Let such go forth trustingly, and be supported by us. One in Iowa says, "I preach on my own hook—people too stingy to sustain preaching. I would like to preach regularly for a people who would give me neither poverty nor riches for my labor. Have preached two years occasionally and received $1." One in Mass. says sadly, "I am poor and can't work, or I would." From Iowa again one writes, "I labor hard to support my family." One from Wis. writes, "We have a small church, I preach here and elsewhere for nothing and board myself, and pay fifty dollars a year to other preachers for books and then give them away; have not taken one cent for preaching." In C. W. one "preaches three hundred and seventy-five sermons and travels one thousand miles a year." Many speak of feeble health. An active elder in Wis. writes me, says he is sixty years of age, in poor health, but amid pressing calls labors continually; has spent in nine years more than $700 over and above all receipts, and only wishes for a good beast to carry him to appointments.

There is no end to this story of privation, toil, and suffering. As the West, tracts are much needed, and are often alluded to as excellent auxiliaries. Let them be paid for and sent out there. If any are rich—and we have rich Adventists—let them lay out their money in this great and good cause. Better do so than heap it up for the fires of the last day, now nigh unto kindling. Brother, sister, come to the rescue and do your duty.

For the Crisis.

Our Worthiness.

"And they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy."—Rev. 3: 4.

Christ speaks this of the saints, and its literal truthfulness cannot be denied. What shall we say, then, of the prayer, "not for any worth or worthiness of our own, oh Lord, but for Jesus' sake?" Does it conflict with the words of Christ? Mark three things concerning Rev. 3: 4. First. They are the words of Christ! Second. He does not say by what means they became worthy. Third. He speaks of them after they have finished their probation, and stand or are ready to stand, in judgment. This last is plain from the fact the christian's whole life is a warfare, and when he has gained a complete victory through faith, his work here is finished, and he may lay his armor by and rest in hope: but until then he cannot be said to be an overcomer, nor worthy to walk with Jesus. "But," one may say, "we have overcome all foes thus far, and are therefore overcomers now." Very well, if you think so. But Christ pronounces no one worthy to walk with him in white until they have been fully tried.

Notice the second point: Christ does not say by what means they became worthy. Have they always been so? No. How then came they so? Let Paul answer. "By grace . . . . through faith. Not of works lest any man should boast."—Eph. 2: 8, 9. Whence comes salvation? Not from faith or obedience, for they are the works of the creature; but from the promise of God that "the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land."

We now come to the first point, viz: these are the words of Christ. Are we to use them as a plea to obtain God's blessing? Are we taught anywhere in the Bible to present our own merits to obtain favor from God? "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." Where are the merits of our blessed Lord to appear? Do they appear in us? Then let us call them his, and not our own. For the true position of the saints read Matt. 25: 34—40. Our Lord says, "Come ye blessed of my Father . . . . for I was an hungered and ye gave me meat," etc. What is the reply? 'Yes, Lord; we know it'? Oh no, no! but "When saw we thee an hungered?" etc. Witness their humility, and backwardness to admit any merit of their own deeds. But concerning Jesus Christ they say, "Thou art worthy . . . . for thou wast slain," etc.—Rev. 5: 9.

The church should learn this lesson from the word of God, and from experience—that man's weakness is God's power, (1 Cor. 1: 27), and all boasting is excluded. "He that glorieth let him glory in the Lord."—1 Cor. 1: 31. Obedience is but a proof of faith, and through faith we are justified according to the promise. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16.

A few words on the expression "for Jesus' sake." "Jesus Christ does not need any of your prayers," says one; "it is for your own sake you pray." Perhaps you do not rightly consider the expression, "for Jesus' sake." One principle translation of the word "dia," from which the words "for . . . sake" are rendered, is "because," and this is evidently the meaning of the term in many places. Instance, "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake," (because of my name). "We are fools for Christ's sake; "delivered unto death for Jesus' sake"; "esteem them very highly in love, for their work's sake," and many others. Also in the form of prayer in question, it evidently means the opposite of what precedes it.

We seek for blessings, not because we are worthy, but because Jesus is worthy, and his name is given us whereby we can come and be saved. Then let his name be honored. Let it stand where God hath placed it, "far above all principality and power;" and while on our knees let us cry, "not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give praise."

FRANK BURR.

Bakerville, Conn.

☞ Your character cannot be essentially harmed, except by your own acts. If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be so that none will believe him.

☞ Always do as the sun does—look at the bright side of everything. For while it is just as cheap, it is three times as good for digestion.

For the Crisis.

Man in Death is Unconscious.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 2.

PROP. II. "And the Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life."

Having in our previous articles carefully examined the origin, disposition and destiny of "MAN," and clearly discovered that God formed him of DUST, placed him in Eden's garden, and in consequence of his transgression destined him to return to the ground out of which he was taken, it is now necessary for us to examine the principle of life, or the relation which "the breath of life," which God breathed into "MAN," sustained to the man in whom it was placed. It is truth alone that we seek in all our investigations of the word of God, for error can never profit us, either here or in the judgment of the great day of God. Therefore let us approach this question without prejudice, and critically examine it with christian candor. This is the clause of Gen. 2: 7, which is employed to prove that we have immortal souls, which are little independent living beings, which is quoted above as our second proposition. Let us first examine this clause a moment, in connection with Zechariah 12 : 1, which reads: "The burden of the word of the Lord of Israel, saith the Lord, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the (ruach) SPIRIT of man within HIM." This Scripture evidently refers to the same time and the same events as are recorded in Gen 1 : and 2 : the last clause of which is in harmony with the second clause of Gen. 2 : 7. It may be objected, that the Hebrew word translated in Gen. 2 : 7, (n'shamah,) is different from the word translated in Zech. 12 : 1, (ruach.) This is, however, no objection to their meaning the same thing, as may be seen by reference to Gen. 6 : 17,—"Wherein is the breath of life," (ruach,) and also Gen. 7 : 15, 22, where the same phrase, "the breath of life," occurs, and is applied to every thing that lives by breathing, and is translated from the Hebrew word, "ruach."

We will now invite attention to two points worthy of a candid consideration.

First. The phrase, "THE SPIRIT OF MAN," is never employed in the Bible to denote any thing primarily pertaining to "MAN," only when it points out an ATTRIBUTE of the DUST-MAN.

Secondly. The word "SPIRIT," is never employed to point out any thing in "MAN," upon which HIS present life depends, which THING is itself capable of independent conscious life as an INDEPENDENT CONSCIOUS "SPIRIT OF MAN."

We will first carefully investigate the second point, and prove its truthfulness. We, of course, do not mean to be understood to say in this proposition, that God, "in whom we live and move and have our being," although called a "spirit," is not a being of independent conscious life, for that has nothing to do with our proposition. We affirm that the term "Spirit" points out nothing in "MAN" of this kind, capable of independent conscious life, as an independent conscious "spirit of man." Neither do we refer to demons, who possess living men only, and therefore cannot be the spirit upon which it is said the life of man depends. We then proceed to suggest some proof of the above point.

1. We affirm that the spirit of life IN "MAN," is NO PART of the "MAN." Now to our text, Gen. 2 : 7. "The Lord God breathed into HIS nostrils the breath of life." "The breath of life" is no part of the "HIS," for the "MAN" was, before HE could be designated by the pronoun "HIS." It was not until after the dust of the ground had been so formed as to constitute "the man," the "Adam," that the breath of life was breathed into HIS nostrils which constituted a part of the dust-formed man. The breath was breathed "INTO" the "man" through HIS nostrils, therefore the man was previously formed to receive breath INTO himself. It could not enter INTO him, until he was in order to receive it (the breath.) It is therefore positively no part of man. That upon which man's life depends being breath, is therefore not an independent conscious spirit. Observe more proof. Zech. 12: 1.—"And formeth the spirit (ruach) MAN within HIM." Now mark! The prophet does not say that the Lord formeth the spirit-man within man, but that he "formeth the spirit of man WITHIN HIM." Man must be, in order to contain the thing "formed." It is not him, or a part of him, but "WITHIN HIM." The man—the him, is complete, entire, wanting nothing to make him a man, before the spirit is formed "within him." It is therefore no part of him, any more than the (ruach) spirit or breath of the beast, is a part of the beast. See Job 27 : 1–3. He, JOB, the name of the dust-man, is the "man" that speaks. He says;—"As God liveth, who hath taken away MY judgment; and the Almighty who hath vexed MY soul; all the while MY breath is IN ME, (Job) and the (ruach) spirit (breath of life, margin, the breath which God gave him, Gen. 2 : 7,) of God is IN MY nostrils, MY lips shall not speak wickedness, nor MY tongue utter deceit." Who is this "MY?" Let us answer it by asking another question. To whom does the pronoun, "WHO" refer, in the first and last clauses of the second verse? "As God liveth WHO," etc., "and the Almighty WHO," etc. Is it the God, or his independent conscious life, entity? O no! It means God. If all, then, "MY" means Job, the dust-man, and therefore the ME, and MY breath IN ME, are two things. "The breath, the spirit of God, (see margin) is no part of "JOB," of "MY" or of "ME." It is IN the nostrils of Job, which are first formed to receive it. Observe Isa. 2 : 22.—"Cease ye from "MAN, whose breath is IN his nostrils." This needs no comment. See Ps. 146 : 3, 4.—"The son of MAN. . . . His breath goeth forth, HE returneth to HIS EARTH; in that very day HIS thoughts perish." Not the thoughts of the ruach, breath, which is in him, but the thoughts of the dust-man perish. Here again the man, and the ruach, breath or spirit, are NO part of each other. Job 32 : 8. "But there is a spirit IN MAN; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth THEM understanding." It is not said in this Scripture that there is a spirit-man; but "a spirit IN MAN." The man is a perfect man, without the spirit, and then the spirit is put into him.

There is not to be found in the Bible a record of the death of any "MAN," which teaches us that that which leaves "MAN" at death, is an independent conscious life entity. We do not die, because a little independent conscious life being goes out of us and runs away, nor are we made alive at the resurrection by his running back into us, but we are told why we die and how we die in the Bible. We die because of sin. Rom. 5 : 12; 1 Cor. 15 : 56. Now read Ps. 104 : 29.—"Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled: thou takest AWAY their BREATH, THEY DIE, and RETURN to THEIR DUST." Eccl. 12 : 7.—"Then shall the DUST RETURN to the earth AS IT WAS, and the spirit (ruach) shall return to God who gave it." When did God give it? When he "formed man of the dust of the ground." The term dust is evidently here employed to represent the man. Read the last clauses of Eccl. 12 : 5 and verse 7 together, and we now easily and readily discover that the 7th verse was never designed to teach that at death a living conscious being leaves a perfectly organized man and goes to God.

Observe Eccl. 3 : 21.—Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" The word (ruach) here translated spirit is the same that is translated breath in verse 19. This is no part of either the "man" or "beast," as we have before shown, and there is no indication that, in either the man or beast, it knows any thing. The text acknowledges the "MAN" and the beast, and asks, "who knoweth the spirit of man, and the spirit of the beast?" All we know of it is, that it is the life principle in all animals. Read Eccl. 3 : 18–21 together, and this fact will be perfectly obvious. It is not the spirit that knows any thing, but the inquiry is, "Who knoweth the spirit," etc. Lk. 23 : 46. Said JESUS, "Father, into thy hands I commend MY spirit, (pneuma;) and having said thus, HE gave up the ghost." "Ekepneusen, from Ekpneo." "Ekpneo" is composed of "Ek, out of," and "pneo, to breathe, to blow as the wind." There is certainly no ghost of independent conscious life in Ekepneusen. This word, then, merely means "to breathe out, to expire, die." As in Mark 15 : 37, 39. See Greenfield's Gr. Test. and Lex., and marginal reading on Mark. 15 : 37. Jesus commended to his Father the principle of life, and breathed it (his breath) out. The same is true of Acts 7 : 59. In both texts, the Greek, "pneuma," has "to," the sign of the NEUTER gender. Observe now that it was Jesus and Stephen who thus commended their spirits, "to pneuma," to God and Christ. The veritable persons died, and were buried. Yes, "the MAN Christ Jesus," and the MAN Stephen, both died, and what they commended to God was no part of them.

We could easily refer to many more Scriptures, which positively prove the truth of our position, found in both the Old and New Testaments, but we believe that enough has been quoted to prove the truth of our second point, that the word "SPIRIT" is never employed to point out any thing in man upon which his present life depends, which THING is itself capable of independent conscious life: as an INDEPENDENT CONSCIOUS SPIRIT OF MAN.

Now it will amount to nothing to quote texts of Scripture to prove that the spirit or breath returns to God at death; this we admit, and it is therefore by no means the point in debate. We make no issue at all on this point, but this is our issue: The spirit that returns to God when a MAN DIES, is NOT an INDEPENDENT CONSCIOUS LIFE PRINCIPLE or BEING. The Bible neither affirms that the life principle in man knows any thing in a man or out of a man, but that all that is known, the "MAN" himself knows, and when the DUST-MAN ceases to know any thing, there is nothing belonging to him or connected with him that does. Let this point be kept fully in view in reading these articles, and we may come to the same conclusion. O, that that heathenish fog-being, that dwells in the imagination of so many who profess to believe the Bible, may be dispelled by the gospel sunlight! Amen.

Parents who wish to train up their children in the way they should go, must go in the way in which they would train up their children.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 1, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; OR, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 6.

We have now been over three Divisions and ten apartments of "Doubting Castle," and examined with much care every reason for doubts, and found they vanished before the light of truth, like snow before a July sun.

In the first Division, it was stated that all nations, during their entire history, had believed in the conscious state of the human spirit after death; but on examination, we could find no proof that any nation believed it till more than two thousand and five hundred years from creation; and then it was not believed by the people of God, nor taught in the Bible. We found it evident that the heathen obtained the idea from demons, in a manner corresponding with the establishment of modern Spiritualism, and was finally worked into the Jewish and Christian churches, as Spiritualism is now gaining a strong foothold in Protestant churches.

When we examined the second Division, we found no proof that a single Jew believed in the conscious state of the spirit between death and the resurrection, till after their return from the Babylonian captivity, nearly three thousand and five hundred years from creation. And when we looked into the Bible we found most faithful warnings against the adoption of any such belief.

In the third Division, the managers of "Doubting Castle" endeavored to make us believe the spirit is immortal and conscious after death, because "The Fathers" believed it; but when we examined their writings, we could find no proof that one of them believed it. By this time, our doubts about the truth of the assertions found in "Doubting Castle" were very strong; and we were better satisfied than ever that it was rightly named, and that it was exceedingly doubtful whether we should get any light or truth if we went through all its gloomy windings. We felt anxious to put up over the gateway to its entrance, for the benefit of passing pilgrims, what the Savior said of this Pharisaical doctrine to his disciples, "BEWARE," but as the conductors of "Doubting Castle" would allow no such warning, we resolved to explore it to its very heart's core and expose it when we got out, if we ever did. With this feeling, we passed into the fourth Division, to examine its contents. We will let Bro. Burnham describe it, as he will do it better than we can. He found the following:

"I will now proceed to call your attention to the Bible argument on this question. 'Death' and 'die' are words not always used in the Bible, to signify the utter extinction of being. Our Lord said, 'Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit. Die, here, does not mean extinction of existence, for the germ of the corn still exists all through the process of dying. Paul said, 'Thou fool! that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die.' But if it dies, it does not lose the germ of its existence. (11) It is said of a dead person, in the New Testament, that when Jesus raised her to life, 'her spirit came again.' (12) It is said of Christ, in the Greek New Testament, 'when he had said this, he dismissed his spirit,'—Landis. In both of these cases, there was a separation of one part from another, whatever those parts were." (13)

11. We really felt glad, when we found the managers of "Doubting Castle" were going to give their Bible reasons for being there; and we thought as we read their first statement, they understand putting things in a position well calculated to blind the unsuspecting pilgrims. Though we felt very strongly fortified when we left Division III, this statement in the eleventh apartment almost staggered us, and made us feel some like a man who had been driving his team through deep snow drifts, which at first sight seemed almost impassable, and had come where the drift looked deeper still, causing him to stop and consider a moment before advancing; and yet resolved not to turn about till further progress was impossible.

After due consideration, we concluded to look this proposition square in the face, and give it a careful inspection in the light of truth. The point in the proposition is this; when the Savior said "die," he did not mean die, but living still. This sounded so much like the other assertions we had found in "Doubting Castle," that a big doubt as to its truthfulness came into our mind on its second reading. We thought at once, the Savior and Paul knew better whether the seed dies in the process of germination, than any one in the "Castle," and hence their positive declarations outweighed every thing opposed. We sought information from those who had watched closely the process of germination, and learned that the whole "corn of wheat," including the germ, does actually DIE as Jesus said. In the process of dying, the radical or root, and the plumula or stalk, sprout or grow from the ends of the germ; but the germ itself rots and dies. In rotting, it assists the growth of the radical and plumula, as decaying animals would enrich the soil where they were laid. The difference between the grain and man is this: The new grain grows up at once on the death of the corn; but man must wait till the sounding of the last trump.

After settling the foregoing facts, we thought good to look at the meaning of the word rendered die in the passage referred to, and its use in other scriptures. The word is apothneesko, and is defined, "to die, to become putrescent, rot as seeds."—Greenfield. We saw there was no idea of life contained in the word chosen by Christ and the apostle to represent the death of the "corn of wheat;" but that the whole of what is sown dies.

We next looked at examples of the use of the word, and saw that the "Doubting Castle" definition was in harmony with Spiritualism and went to prove that there is no such thing as death and hence all the talk in the Bible about death is foolish and untrue. The word apothneesko occurs one hundred and twelve times in the New Testament. We will cite a few examples of its use. "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die."—1 Cor. 15 : 32. Paul declares that those who have "fallen asleep in Christ are perished," if the dead rise not. No germ, then, living on in the spirit land, praising the Lord. The Savior says:—"Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead."—John 6 : 49. When he says the fathers are dead, shall we contradict him and say they are alive? Again: "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead."—John 11 : 14. If dead in this passage means Lazarus is alive, or any part of him, then there is no death, and Satan was right when he said, "ye shall not surely die."—Gen. 3 : 4. Says Stephen, when speaking of Abraham, "Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran: and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell."—Acts 7 : 4. "And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in the sea."—Rev. 16 : 3. Was there a germ, or real beast entity preserved alive after they died? Remember the wise man says, that beasts and men die alike, or to use his language, "As the one dieth, so dieth the other."—Eccl. 3 : 19. Then it follows, that if there is a living germ or spirit existing in a conscious state as the result of man's death, so it is in relation to the beast. Says Paul in Rom. 7 : 6, "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter." Does Paul mean that there is a life-germ in the old law that is not dead? so that we are partly under the old covenant and partly under the new? In all the one hundred and twelve examples where the word apothneesko occurs, we find none, where we can get the idea that it does not imply the death of the whole of that to which it is applied.

When we got through with the examination of this noted proposition in "Doubting Castle," with which so many pilgrims have been perplexed, and blinded, and left to wander in sorrow and darkness in the crooked mazes of the old "Castle," and found it untrue, entirely unsupported by facts, we said to ourselves, we may just as well consider the whole of "Doubting Castle" founded in error, and lump it all off at once into hades or some other unseen place, as to spend so much time in looking it over and be obliged to do it at last; but on a moment's reflection, we concluded to go on, thinking there might be some poor souls incarcerated in some of its dark rooms, despairing, like the unrescued who were buried beneath the rubbish at the Lawrence calamity.

For the Crisis.

Affairs in England.

The Rev. Edward White, some of our readers will recollect, is the author of a work entitled "Life in Christ," maintaining immortality through Christ only. He is pastor of a congregational church in London, and we have heard him described as an eloquent preacher. He has lately become the editor of the Christian Spectator, a monthly magazine representing the interests of the dissenters. The following extracts from a letter lately received from him will show the state of the question in that country:—

"Great, as you are aware, is the obstinacy of English theological opinion; and it is only as opportunities are watched that any progress can be made. I had a letter to-day from Mr. Mansel, author of the Bampton Lectures on The Limits of Religious Thought, in reply to one in which I had assailed his assumptions and recommended a dose of Hudson. . . . His work is quoted in all parties as sufficient to stop our mouths. He will be partly answered by another friend of mine, a Yorkshire clergyman, who is about to bring out a little treatise on this subject. . . . But you will scarcely believe that it is impossible to get a notice of it ["Debt and Grace"] in any review. A religious paper editor,—one of our freest—told me last month that he dare not. Such is Liberty of Prophesying in our country. . . . . The notion is that our view diminishes the opinion of the evil of sin, and removes the chief restraint from sinners. All the popular views of sin are grossly selfish, as are the notions of redemption. It is wonderful they do not see that if God's chief idea of the evil of sin had been the quantity of torment it would bring, that he would have set forth a far more appalling spectacle of torment than the crucifixion. That, however moved pity rather than terror or horror. It drew men rather than overwhelmed or scared them. In a word, the evil of sin is its contrariety to the wisest and most lovely nature—and our view brings all this with great force. . . . .

The editorship of the Magazine above mentioned will bring me into contact with many chief men of the orthodox school. It is intended to be free, yet can use its freedom only a little at present, since its circulation is among Dissenters chiefly, who are as much slaves to their sects as the Established Church is to the State. . . . As my views are known, I shall be narrowly watched, and all I say or insert, narrowly observed. Still there is one good sign. The pleasure at my taking the post seems to be general among the best sort of Dissenting men; and this would not be unless they had moved a little. . . .

The perpetual irritation of our foreign politics directs men's attention from theology. Your folks seem to be both political and theological at once. Not so here. If a parcel of bungling diplomatists, or a couple of fiery generals embroil the United States and England at Tram River; or if that horrible pest, L. Napoleon, keeps his cauldron boiling, and always pitching first one state and then another into it, we shall never have the opportunity of religious reform. All the go here is rifle clubs, and the Congress, and how to get ourselves well through that meeting of infernal spirits; and while this lasts, there is not much hope for [theology.]"

The author of "The Limits of Religious Thought" above referred to maintains that the mystery of Evil bebars us from all reasoning against the eternity of Evil. F. D. Maurice has replied to the work, and has handled this point very ably.

The pamphlet on our list, "The Rights of Wrong," touches the same question. It seems to us that if sin is so monstrous a thing as to defy all law, not only of action but of thought, that it leaves a very poor argument for its eternal subsistence. Such contradiction against all rule implies rather an element of self-destruction and dissolution. At least we know not how a God of all power, wisdom, and goodness, should be bound to continue in eternal being that which he abhors. "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil." Is the "evil of sin," or its hatefulness, any reason—or does it allow any reason—for its eternity?

For the Crisis.

Modern Spiritualism opposed to the Cross of Christ.

Our sin-ruined and fallen world, with the advancement of six thousand years resting upon it, has perhaps never been assailed with a doctrine more fearful in its tendency, delusive in its hopes, and fatal in its consequences, than "Modern Spiritualism." And one would be led to suppose, that a doctrine so nearly allied to that presented by the subtle foe of mankind to our first parents, as they stood forth in the garden of Eden, dressed in their robes of primeval innocence, "Ye shall not surely die," (although uttered in direct opposition to the positive edict of the great Jehovah, that death was the penalty annexed to disobedience,) would scarcely find a response in the minds of the thinking men and women living in this age of light and refinement. But alas for poor human nature! their direful history from that period up to the present has been one continued scene of revolt and departure from the high and holy commands of the Author of their being. And yet, in the midst of this our lost condition, from which it was impossible to extricate ourselves by any power or moral greatness of our own, the love and compassion of God toward our hapless lot was such as led him to provide a Savior, whose arm alone was sufficient to bring life and salvation, whereby rebellious man would be redeemed and made forever blest. It is this astounding fact, this glorious truth, which above all others demands our highest admiration, our true and lasting gratitude; but which in these last days, by a large portion, particularly of the Eastern world, is being ignored, and vainly attempted to cover with oblivion. As well might the puny arm of mortal man attempt to blot out the noon-day sun shining in his meridian strength, as to obscure or dim the lustre of this blessed truth, that God "hath exalted Jesus Christ, to be a Prince and Savior, that he might give to Israel repentance and forgiveness of sins," and that at the name of Jesus "every knee should bow, both in heaven and earth," no other name being given or known among men whereby they can be saved. So that those who, in their delusion, reject Christ as the way of life and salvation, reject the only door of hope to a glorious immortality beyond the grave, and as a result consign themselves to everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord.

Our thoughts have been directed in this channel, by recently coming in contact with a document, styled the Banner of Light; which, after giving it a perusal, we concluded to be unmistakeably the banner of darkness. And hence, as a lover of the blessed Savior, wish to give our humble influence against such an invasion upon his glorious name and character. This infidel sheet, hailing as it does from the Eastern metropolis of learning, is sustained by some of the most talented and noble intellects of the day; in consequence of which it is the more dangerous in its influence, particularly upon those who are not firmly established upon the sure foundation of gospel truth. But notwithstanding the pretentions to literature and science, and the learned communications, furnished by those claiming for themselves to belong to the progressive class of thinking men and women, we feel still to endorse the theory of good old Paul, rather than theirs, that though an angel from heaven preach any other doctrine or gospel than that which he preached, "let him be accursed;" and again the same veritable witness, who had been caught up to the the third heaven, and saw and heard the glory that was not lawful for mortal tongue to utter, could repeat,—"If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema, Maranatha" —or accursed when the Lord cometh. And that this new school of learning, which prides itself on having thrown off the shackles of Orthodox darkness, and entered into the more luminous light of Spiritualism, do reject Jesus as the Savior of the world, and a greater portion of the fundamental truths of the Bible, we will let them speak for themselves. At a recent meeting convened at Longwood, Chester Co., the writer remarks, "The angels of peace and truth stood on the platform, bearing to other worlds many beautiful records of true benevolence, world-wide charity, and aspiring thought." And among these angels of mercy stood a Mr. Trescott, who was admirably sustained in demonstrating the baleful influence of sectarianism upon the world. He continues; "The dogmas of an angry God, the Atonement, and everlasting rest of a monotonous and stationary heaven, find no admittance to this progressive assembly; these old dogmas lie buried deep, deep from sight, at Longwood, and the true religious principle reigns lovingly in their place."

The Atonement! Make false this glorious truth, and take from the sinner this only remedy, and our fallen world would be enveloped in moral night, without a single Goshen in its midst, or verdant oasis to cheer the desert gloom of its darkness. O where is the christian of fervent piety, whose heart will not ache at the utterance of such sentiments before the young and uninformed minds of the rising generation, in connection with the destruction of the true spirit of devotion in many of our churches? It is truly lamentable that many otherwise noble and philanthropic minds have embraced these soul-killing views, vainly expecting to enter heaven on their own broken system of good works, without even wishing or desiring the mediation of Christ in their behalf.

Shall not we, then, who do believe him precious, cling more closely than ever to the cross of Christ, our only source and centre of happiness, our highest excellence and chief joy, and final expectation of admittance among the redeemed; the sinner's only hope, the bright and radiant star, by which his erring feet are guided to the gates of Bethlehem, where his filthy rags and spirit of heaviness are exchanged for the garment of praise and salvation? May christians unceasingly pray that the great Head of the church will prevent this tide of iniquity from making a further approach in our midst, and that he will ever enable us to cling to the blood-stained banner of the Cross, by whom the world is crucified unto us, and we unto the world.

M. A. T.

Neals' Creek, Ind.

Unfulfilled Prophecy.

A remarkable work has just appeared from the pen of the Rev. Dr. Cumming, on the subject of our blessed Lord's prophecy respecting the close of the present dispensation, or the time of his second advent. He notes, in detail, the various aspects of the times, and arrives at the conclusion that the world is on the eve of a great crisis in its history—in other words—the "great tribulation" which is to precede the immediate coming of the Lord. It is well known that Dr. Cumming is a pre-millenarian, and the tendency of his arguments may easily be anticipated. We have no sympathy whatever with his views on this subject, but we are quite prepared to admit that a crisis of no ordinary magnitude may be at hand; nay, even at our doors. We are distinctly told by our Lord that one sign of "the end" will be the preaching of the gospel to all the world, "for a witness unto all nations." He does not say that all nations would embrace the gospel, and thereby be converted; but he affirms that all nations would, to some extent, hear the preaching of the gospel. The heralds of the gospel would stand upon every shore. Now one remarkable evidence that the period of the end cannot be far distant, is found in the consideration that there is scarcely a single portion of the globe upon which the message of the gospel has not been preached. So far as this sign is concerned, we have ground to expect the speedy advent of Christ; seeing that what He affirmed must take place preparatory to the end has already taken place, and is manifest before our eyes at the present day.

Again, another token of the approach of a great era, is the unequivocal, the irresistible evidence of the decadence and the imminent destruction of that huge sacerdotal tyranny and superstition under which the world, and Europe especially, has so long groaned —we mean the Papal apostacy. It is certainly true that "the Pope trembles in the Vatican." He has a presentiment of the nearness of his doom. What office in Europe would insure his pontifical life for five years? Now reflect what this power was in ancient days—a power that made kings tremble on their thrones; a power that could force a German Emperor to remain doing penance amid the snow in the trenches around the Imperial City, till the Pope gave him absolution; the great power that could reign over the kings of the earth. How are the mighty fallen! Is this the name that shook kingdoms—that made the earth to tremble? And do not recent events indicate the decadence of the system to the very verge of destruction? In her blind infatuation, Rome may exult with joy, and be flushed with hope, and be elated with triumph; her princes, and prelates, and advocates may vaunt her power, and make new aggressions, and display new corruptions, and be entranced in a dream of security, when her awful doom is nigh. There is great reason, indeed, to believe, as Dr. Wordsworth remarks, that as the great river, the river Euphrates, the glory and bulwark of ancient Babylon, became a road for the conqueror of the city; so the swelling stream of Rome's temporal and spiritual supremacy, which has now flowed on so proudly for so many centuries, and has served for her aggrandizement, may be, in God's hands, the means of her destruction and final desolation.

On another occasion we shall probably notice all the signs indicated by Dr. Cumming, as marking the approach of the era of "the Great Tribulation." Every human being is concerned in this truly great event, and it cannot be treated with indifference. It is a remarkable circumstance, that the London Times devotes its columns to a consideration of the subject. In a late number it says:

"In a chapter in "The Great Tribulation," headed, "1867," it is attempted to show, and with some success, that, however much our best interpreters of prophecy differ in details, they all agree that 1867—if their views be correct—must prove a great determining crisis in the world's history. There are certain dates, in the books of Daniel and the Apocalypse, expressed in various formulas. One is, "time, times, and half a time"—that is, a prophetic year, two prophetic years, and half a prophetic year, or 1260 literal years. Another form of the same period is forty-two months. This is a governing period, but its commencement is the difficulty. It describes the dominant duration and tyranny of a great apostasy in Christendom within the ten kingdoms, and at the running out of these 1260 years, that apostasy is steadily to begin its decay. The author of the "Horæ Apocalyptiæ," and "The Great Tribulation," incline to date the beginning at this period, in A. D. 532, when Justinian gave his vast prerogatives to the Bishop of Rome. On this hypothesis the 1260 years run out in 1792, and certainly at that date Romanism began its decadence in a baptism of blood. One remarkable proof is the following: Sixty years ago there were 5000 priests in Paris. The actual number now is 800.

To this period of 1260, ending, as we assume, in 1792, Daniel adds a period of thirty years. This would bring us down to, 1822. Then, also, and that very year, was the beginning of a great change in Eastern Christendom, "the drying up of Euphrates," or progressive decay of Mohammedanism at its fountain. What goes far to confirm this, is the fact that another period given by Daniel, called 2300 years, on the end of which the "cleansing of the sanctuary," i. e., the preparation of Palestine for its people, was to begin. Dating this period at what has been, if not clearly, at least probably assigned, before Christ 478, we find its termination in A. D. 1822. To this period Daniel adds another of forty-five years. This brings us down to 1867. Daniel says he is specially "blessed" who arrives at 1867. Supposing this correct, 1867 would be, in the words of Lord Carlisle, "the close of this dispensation," and, according to others, the restoration of all things, the baptism of the earth, and the regenesis of nature.

Another class of interpreters date the 1260 years at the decree of Phocas, in 607, which they think was the real transformation of the Western Church into a corporate apostasy. If so, they would end in 1867. The same writers also hold that Daniel's great epoch, ending in the restoration of the Jews began before Christ 433, and ends, therefore, in A. D. 1867, and that then, as they believe, the crescent in the east, and the crucifix in the west, will both disappear, and Christianity, the light of a few, be then the glory and gladness of all mankind.

What casts some light on this subject, is the ancient, and, as Bishop Russel has shown, almost universal belief that the week of Creation was in brief the type of the great week of the world—that is, that the six working days of the Creation week correspond to the 6000 working years of the world, and that, as the former ended in the Sabbath-day rest, the latter will culminate in the Sabbath of 6000 years—what St. Paul calls "the rest that remaineth for the people of God."

Now, the question occurs—have these 6000 years nearly run out? According to the vulgar chronology they are short of their end by at least 140 years. But Fynes Clinton, followed by others, has proved to demonstration that there is a mistake in the vulgar era, and that the birth of Christ must consequently be put forward to the year of the world, or Anno Mundi 4132. This is really brought out with immense force, and in all likelihood it is correct. If so, we are again brought down to 1867, as the close of the world's long working week, and the eve of its magnificent and long predicted Millennial Rest. Rev. Dr. Cumming quotes, in his chapter of "The Great Tribulation," headed 1867, an array of names who concur with him in looking forward to 1867 (not, as ignorantly charged, prophesying the end of the world) as a great crisis—a testing crisis—intersected by the various lines of prophetic dates.

It appears from all this, that these writers on prophecy have handled this branch of investigation as others treat geology, chemistry, or astronomy. It is a legitimate subject of research. The errors of geologists and chemists do not fairly militate against their respective fields, and we do not see why the errors of interpreters of prophecy should be adduced as a reason for ignoring what is difficult, but Divinely commended to our study. We do not discover any fanaticism in the works on prophecy referred to. The writers constantly guard themselves against misapprehension, repudiating the claims of the prophet, and accepting only the relation of the student. Some of their works are very learned. The "Horæ" of Mr. Elliot does credit to the theology of the age. Others are very popular. It is not, therefore, fair in rash and reckless writers, to confound the sober, even if mistaken, students of a grand text, with fanatics and enthusiasts.

But whether these interpretations be right or wrong, there is no doubt that the barometer of Europe singularly—it may be accidentally—corresponds with their deductions from prophecy."—Church Witness.

Correspondence.

From a "Pilgrim and Stranger."

Bro. Grant:—I believe in a little from this, the judgment will set, and the books will be opened. And, dear reader, are we all ready? Are we prepared to say now, should he appear, Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us? Or would our voice be raised in cries for mercy? When Jesus comes, mercy will be gone forever. If you are not prepared before then, you will be lost, eternally lost. Think of it, ere it is too late to repent. You may think, as time after time you find the Spirit of God striving with you, that when your youthful days shall have passed away, that you will then serve the Lord. But alas! it may not be your privilege then; you may feel, long ere your form is bent by age, the arms of death slowly encircling you,—long ere the bloom of youth is passed from your brow, you may be laid in the cold and silent tomb. O, I warn you to flee from the wrath that is soon to be poured out upon a guilty world; soon the voice of warning will no more be heard, and the friends that we have laid away in the cold embrace of death will be raised; those that have done the will of God while here on earth, will be raised to immortality and eternal life in the paradise of God.

I think that ere long we shall see the heavens depart as a scroll, when it is rolled together, and every mountain and island will be moved out of their place. In those days men will seek death, but shall not find it; they shall desire to die, but death shall flee from them, and then shall their eyes be consumed in their sockets. Then shall they wander to and fro upon the earth, they will cry for rocks and mountains to fall on them, to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne, who shall judge all nations at his appearing and kingdom. I believe in a little while, the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

As we look on the land around us, we see the signs portending Jesus' coming near at hand. We see that wickedness abounds in its worst forms; we see that it is increasing from day to day. We see that some are departing from the faith once delivered to the saints, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared as with a hot iron. How many of those do we see around us. I believe there are great signs portending the speedy coming of Christ. O let us prove faithful, even unto the end, that we may hear it said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," and receive the crown of life which fadeth not away; which I believe, will soon be given to the little flock, that persevere even to the end. Then shall their day of rejoicing come.

Whatever our lot or our station here, if we belong to the church of God we are to have trials and tribulations; it is a part of the inheritance promised to the pilgrim. No permanent rest can be found here for the wayworn traveler who is bound for the "Celestial City," but we shall rest by and by, when the storms of life are o'er. We shall rest by and by, with the ransomed host at last; and though the way is encompassed with dangers unnumbered, while we are as strangers and pilgrims passing through this dark vale of woe, we will look to God at all times, knowing that if we trust in him he will save us at last. And though the world [illegible] all its charms to us; though Satan annoy us, as we know he will try to, yet our days of affliction will soon be past, and we shall land where peace shall reign forever. If we do the will of our heavenly Father, he has promised us with all his disciples of old, a heavenly country, a land of rest, a kingdom that shall stand forever.

Then shall our mourning be succeeded by joy and gladness. Then shall we be no more pilgrims and strangers, but have a home! There will be no homeless wanderers. There no sad tidings will be wafted on the midnight breeze. There the death-knell will never reach us, and we shall not say we are sick. Never shall we take the parting hand, and bid adieu to friends we love more than ourselves. The day of our redemption is soon to dawn; signs portend the morning cometh, and we will press our way on a little longer, for this is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation. For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God. We shall also reign with him by and by, and let us take heed to ourselves and to the doctrine, that we continue in them, always abounding in the faith, for in doing thus we may save ourselves. O, let us have on the whole armor of God, that we may withstand all the fiery darts of the enemy. Let us be a "peculiar people" zealous of good works, whose acts daily show us to be a people chosen out from the world. The Lord has promised that if we obey his voice and keep his covenant, then shall we be a peculiar treasure unto him above all people, for all the earth is His, and soon I believe He will come and reign upon his throne.

O let us awake to newness of life! Let us trim our lamps with "care" that they may not go out, when that day of darkness and of gloominess, that day of clouds and thick darkness shall come, which is spoken of by the prophet. O let us no more hang our harps on the willows; let us no more rest by the deluding streams of Babylon! Let us shake off the drowsiness that has come upon us, and hasten on our journey, ere the morning dawns wherein those that shall be found with no oil in their lamps will be left; while they that are ready will go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb. O how blessed, when this old earth shall have yielded up the millions upon millions slain, and the jewels shall be gathered home. May we be there!

For the Crisis.

A Minister wanted on a Circuit where he can be sustained.

Honeoye, Canadice, Springwater, Conesus, Scottsburg and Dansville, constitute a circuit, within a range of about fifteen miles, and wish and will sustain a minister of ability and piety to preach the blessed gospel of the kingdom and of the hope of life through Christ. Will some one answer this call and enter the field?

Call on or address Ira Allen, Jr., Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y.; Noah Tibbals, Canadice, Ont. Co., N. Y.; E Wetmore, East Springwater, Liv. Co. N. Y.; A. Aldrich, Springwater, Liv. Co., N. Y.; A. Arnold, Conesus Centre, Liv. Co., N. Y.; Wm. Brown, Dansville, Liv. Co., N. Y.

By request, L. P. Judson.

Lockport, Jan. 2d, 1860.

For the Crisis.

The late "Clayton" Discussion.

This deeply interesting debate, faithfully reported and revised by the disputants, is now before me, and I regard it as another victory achieved by truth over the widespread legends which have so long usurped her place and privileges among every sect and denomination in christendom. I will not attempt a review of the Discussion, but I must say that it is to me lamentable to read with what fierce zeal and cutting sarcasm men will cling to and defend doctrines which are as hideous in contemplation, as revolting and deadly, as those monsters which spring engendered from Nile's reeking mud, even as the "souls immortality" was first conceived by the imaginative idolators of ancient Egypt.

It has been often said, that it matters little what a man believes in, provided he be sincere. Yea, I have advanced the same theory, in my ignorance, but could not do it now; for in that case, I should excuse the bloody sacrifice of Moloch, the suttee of the Hindoo, or the more ferocious butcheries of vindictive Rome, who makes the murder of a heretic, or Bibleite, a passport to heaven. If the Bible teach the immortality of man, independent of Christ as the "life-giver," then should that doctrine be propagated and defended at every hazard and against all odds; but if it do not teach, but rather, in the most unequivocal manner repudiates it, then it is a dangerous dogma, perilous alike to the teacher and the taught. Jugglery and priestcraft have no auxiliary more powerful than the invention of the existence of a disembodied soul. Without it, Paganism in all its phases of deformity, Popery with its pains, penalties and purgatorial fires, and other denominations which make a capital of it, would be blown to the winds of heaven, and man would rise up exultingly from his chains and slavery, a free believer, and true adorer of that God, so wantonly traduced, so little understood. If life eternal mean immortality, it is only the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and not the innate property in man, which can preserve him indestructible amid devouring flame, which shall make the iron-bound earth a lake of molten fire, dry up the channels of the deepest sea, while the affrighted heavens will pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat! Nothing but fanaticism could imagine anything so horrible, so utterly at variance with the probable. It destroys the harmony of God's revelation, strengthens the idol-worshiper, arms the infidel and scoffer, appals the timid, terrifies the supplicant from his Father's feet, and drives the doubtful and wavering to despair.

I fully endorse the sentiment of Eld. Grant, when, in his debate with Dr. Litch, he said, "I wonder that this doctrine has not made more infidels than it has." It is indeed a wonder; but the light is now being brought to minds made sceptical from false teaching, and the avidity with which the precious, long hidden truths are seized upon, shows how eagerly men and women thirst after the unwarped, unvarnished doctrines of the everlasting gospel.

All ye who love to see the doctrines we advocate successfully battled for, and ably defended, should read this discussion for yourselves. It will strengthen you in your Bible faith, and enable you also, perhaps, to become champions for the truth. You can give to all inquirers a reasonableness for your belief, which the hard pressed "hell-fire-arian" cannot do. I would again say, read this work, by all means, and when you have read it pass it to your neighbor; and I question not but the result will gladden your heart by another convert being brought into the faith, another lamb into the fold of Christ.

Jno. F. Cotton.

Obituary Notices.

Died, Jan. 8th, 1860, at Fishcreek Landing, Oneida Co., N. Y., Mr. C. Brown, aged fifty-six years.

The deceased has for some three years past been under the wasting disease of consumption. Although his life had not been that of a child of God, yet during the last few weeks he seemed to try to bring himself under the control of the divine Spirit, by asking God to forgive the past and prepare him for the future. Although myself and others visited him, knelt by his side, and asked God to bless him, it only seemed to create in him a greater desire for a brighter evidence. He seemed not to be satisfied until the last hours of his life, as the family circle were gathered around to bid him farewell. When asked by his loved companion if all was well, he replied, "All is well;" and there seemed to be perfect resignation to the will of God.

He leaves behind to mourn his loss, a loved family circle; and may that God who has promised to be the widow's God and a Father to the fatherless, not only smile upon that companion already in the narrow way, but smile also upon those children, that they may be an unbroken family in the kingdom of God. Comfort was administered to the bereaved hearts in the presence of a large and attentive audience by the writer, from John 11: 24. C. B. Turner.

Died, in South Killingly, Ct., Jan. 17th, 1860, of consumption, Mary S., daughter of S. and L. Young, aged fifteen years and one month.

Mary, like Samuel of old, was dedicated to the Lord when but a child. Her life was that of a christian. She ever delighted in obtaining knowledge of the Scriptures, and conversing upon the blessed hope of life at the coming of Jesus. She would frequently get her sisters together and pray with them, and instruct them from the Bible. A few days before her death she called her parents and sisters to her bedside, one at a time, and bade them farewell, with an earnest request that they should try and meet her in the kingdom of God. She suffered much in her sickness, but did not murmur or complain at her lot, but looked forward with joy to the day when the crown of life should be bestowed upon the faithful. When death laid its cold hand upon her, it found her with the word of God in her hand, looking after the portion of truth that describes the New Jerusalem.

Bro. and Sr. Young feel deeply their loss, but they sorrow not as those that have no hope, for they believe that Jesus will soon come, and then they expect to meet to part no more. We endeavored to comfort the afflicted with the word of truth in 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8. J. Hemenway.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 12th inst.]

CONGRESS.

A Paris despatch says it was becoming every day more doubtful whether Congress would assemble; and the Paris correspondent of the London Times says there were many indications that the chances of Congress meeting were of the most shadowy kind.

FRANCE.

A Chapel in connection with the English Church in Paris, after being open for two years, had been suddenly closed by the French authorities, it is believed on account of a short service having been given in French, for the benefit of children of British subjects who do not understand English.

The latest rumors from Paris say Canrobert was not going to Rome as successor to the Duc de Grammont, but will carry to the Papal government propositions which, if rejected, would be followed by an order for the evacuation of Rome by the French troops. All sorts of reports were current as to the relations of France and Rome, but they were very contradictory and wholly unreliable.

ITALY.

The news of Walewski's resignation had produced a very painful impression on the Pope. He called together the principal members of the Sacred College, and declared to them he would never fail in the mission which God had entrusted to him, and that, like his predecessor, Pius 7th, he would rather suffer exile and even martyrdom.

It is said that France supports the protest of Piedmont against the enlistment of foreigners for the Papal army, and particularly against the wholesale introduction of Austrian recruits into Ancona.

Letters from Genoa speak of the probabilities of hostilities in Italy.

It was reported that the Duke de Grammont would be removed from Rome to Constantinople, and that Canrobert would probably go to Rome as Ambassador and Commander of the French troops.

In Paris the appointment of Marshal MacMahon to the command of the French army in Italy, numbering 50,000 men, was regarded as a sign of warlike complications.

It was believed that the Papal troops, reinforced by the Austrians, would enter the legations, and in that case, Sardinia would send a force to aid the Roman insurgents.

The King of Naples is reported to be largely increasing his army.

Rumors had been current of an intention on the part of the Pope to quit Rome, but the Paris "Patrie" gives a denial to the report.

AUSTRIA.

Charges were rife against Austria of a disguised intervention in Italy.

Le Nord directs attention to recruiting going on in Vienna for the Pontifical army, under the eyes of the Austrian government. An Austrian general directs operations. They choose the best soldiers, who were disbanded on account of reducing their own army, and the most able officers, whose services are now available in consequence of peace. It is just as if they had formed an auxiliary corps of the elite of their veteran troops, and transformed them by a mere change of uniforms into the army of the Pope. Le Nord adds:

"The conduct of the cabinet of Vienna on this occasion is not merely dishonorable—it entails dangers to peace and on Austria herself by breaking her word. Austria tears up the preliminaries of Villa Franca and the treaty of Zurich, and in her turn frees France from engagements entered into by Napoleon respecting the restoration of the Dukes and their restored rights."

Canton, Nov. 26. The treaty between the United States and China has been put in force.

Part of the English troops designed for operation against the Chinese have already left for the North.

Marseilles, Jan. 11. Letters from Constantinople of the 4th announce public agitation increasing. It is supposed Fuad Pacha would soon be dismissed.

FEELING IN ITALY.

The fraternal feeling of the Italians is manifesting itself in a very practical and pleasing manner. The universal cry is that all should be free or all should perish. The Venetian, Mantuan, and Tyrolese fugitives, flocking to Milan, Modena and Bologna by thousands, are everywhere the object of public and private benevolence, of unbounded hospitality. There is only the memory of common suffering, the hope of common release. The Venetian fugitive youths will have the choice between joining the ranks of the patriot army and pursuing their studies at any of the Lombard, Tuscan or Æmilian Universities, everywhere free of expense. At Milan, Bologna, Turin, Genoa, and other towns, Venetian committees are formed, with a twofold object—the relief of present suffering, the promotion of future enfranchisement. A Mantuan committee has also lately been constituted at Milan, whose avowed purpose is to set at nought the preliminaries of Villafranca, and manage an election of deputies to the national Parliament at Turin by their province, as if there were no Austrians on the Mincio, and Italy were as free to the Adriatic as Napoleon III. vowed he would make her. At Mantua, at Venice, at Trent, people vie with each other as to who shall spurn Austrian amnesties and reject Austrian advances with the greatest boldness and obstinacy.

American Catholic Defense of the Pope's Temporal Sovereignty.

A remarkable document has been put forth by the Catholic bishops of New York. The first signature is that of Archbishop Hughes, and the manifesto bears throughout the marks of his strong and sagacious intellect. It is in form an ordinary address to the Catholic clergy and laity, but it is mainly a reply to the celebrated pamphlet attributed to the Emperor of the French, on the subject of limiting the territorial extent of the Pope's temporal sovereignty, or in other words, a vehement protest against the supposed purpose of the Emperor to sustain the revolt of the Romagna against Papal authority. On this point, it speaks the voice of Catholic America.

Archbishop Hughes—for we shall assume that the language is his—states the proposition of the French pamphlet to be, "to diminish, if not altogether to destroy the Pope's temporal power, and, as we understand the language, to give him back to us and two hundred millions of Catholics over the globe, a most respectably sustained pensioner and prisoner in Rome, with an extent of territory so limited that nothing shall be found therein, except peace and happiness." The writer will not believe that the Emperor of the French would mark out such a programme; but he proceeds to combat it as if he feared it might be so. After pointing out some inconsistencies in the pamphlet, he vindicates the right of the American Catholics to manifest their interest in the question, because the soil of the Roman States is, and ought to be, common to the whole Catholic world. He says: "An attack on the States of the Church, we are free to declare beforehand, shall be considered as an attack upon us and upon our rights." But one of the most interesting points of the document is the history of the origin of the Pope's temporal sovereignty. Speaking on the duty of the Church to make itself heard "on questions of eternal justice," he says:

"The temporal authority of the Pope is one of these questions. His title, as it stands today, is beyond all dispute the most legitimate that can be put forward by any sovereign in Europe, or in the world. Trace history backwards, and you will find that no rival claimant has ever appeared; that no dynasty has ever been displaced or sent into exile by him or his predecessors; that his title is confirmed by centuries; that it has been ratified by the consent of all the nations of Christendom; that no protest has ever been recorded in the archives of the human race against its validity. But some, perhaps, will inquire into the origin of this title. We answer that the origin does not appear on human record. All we know is, that after the conversion of Constantine the Great, the seat of empire was transferred from Rome to Byzantium. During the immediate subsequent ages the Emperor and his successors withdrew not only their presence, but also their protection, from the people of Italy. The people ceased not to invoke the aid of the Emperor in periods of trial and of desolation, of famine, pestilence and invasion by barbarous nations. To their appeal no answer came, nor any aid. In these trying circumstances the people raised their hands to the Sovereign Pontiff, calling on him to be their temporal savior, as well as their father. Neither were they disappointed. In famine he supplied, as far as possible, their wants. In pestilence he was among them as their comforter. At the approach of cruel invasion he went forth from the Eternal City, bare-headed, to meet the barbarian leader—to offer his own person for the sacrifice—but to plead for the safety of the people. In this act of charity, it is well known that his pleading and his influence became, on more than one occasion, a shield of protection for their otherwise abandoned nation.

Many writers assert that Constantine the Great, conferred on him by written documents a certain species of political right to govern what was then, or soon after, called the Duchy of Rome. Other writers, with erudition quite as respectable, deny the truth of this statement of a donation by the first Christian Emperor. We do not enter into this question, for it appears to us of very slight importance. All we know is, that the temporal authority of the Emperors, from Constantine the Great, ceased to be exercised in what is now called the States of the Church, but especially in that portion which was more immediately connected with the Imperial city of Rome. It was not usurped by the Holy Father. It was rather forced upon him by the wishes and clamor of a neglected and ungoverned people. It was a 'res derelicta.' But at all events, in the origin of the temporal power of the Pope, he was the chosen ruler of the Italian people, within the limits of what afterwards became his civil jurisdiction."

The royal donations of territory which were subsequently made to the Sovereign Pontiff only recognized the title with which he was already invested. The people are still true to the Holy Father, but they have been made to appear hostile by outside appliances. This has been the case with the people of the Romagna. The Archbishop's argument in this connection is so ingenious, that we copy it:

"Many of us have traveled through Italy, and are well acquainted with the condition of things in the Papal States. It is well known that for a period of forty years or more, there have been two governments in the States of the Church. One, the open, mild, paternal government of the Holy See. This was on the surface of the soil. The other was a subterranean government, organized and supported by arch conspirators. Its decrees were never published, but its secret enactments were carried into execution, ever and anon, by the prompt use of deadly weapons. Thus, as we are convinced, the free sentiment of the people in the States of the Church has been, by the necessity of the case, stifled and repressed. Those who loved the government of the Holy Father did not dare to say so openly. That would have compromised their temporal interest, perhaps their lives; and thus there is no country in the world in which the sincerity of political sentiment, whatever it may be, has been so artistically concealed as by the people of the Roman States. Are they in favor of the Carbonari? As a people they have not said so. Are they in favor of the more recent conspirators? They have not, as a people, so declared themselves. Are they in favor of the Pontificial government as a people, or taking them one by one? The answer to this question might be a shrug of the shoulders. They are afraid of the subterranean cabinet, and the terrible edicts which it has the means to execute in secrecy and in blood.

We do not admit, therefore, the plea which is put forward as a pretext for depriving our Holy Father of the temporal government of his States. Or, if we do admit it, we trace its existence to the agency, in part, of the very Powers who now make it a plea for the rapine which, from the outset, it was in their mind to perpetrate.

Take away the fear inspired by the subterranean government, which has so long kept Italy in a state of fermentation, and the people of the Romagna will be perfectly contented under the mild government of the sovereign Pontiff."

To the allegation that if Louis Napoleon should withdraw his troops from Rome, the Pope would not be safe, the writer says it may be true, but such language "implies that the Pope is already in bondage—it implies an insult to all Catholics." A solemn warning is given to the French Emperor not to touch the States of the Church, with a reference to the fate of his uncle; and a fierce reproof is administered to England for endorsing the positions of the French pamphlet.—Journal.

Married.

In Sullivan, Madison Co., N. Y., by Eld. C. B. Turner, Mr. ALONZO PANGBURN of Vienna, and Miss HARRIET ALCOTT of Sullivan.

Notices, &c.

The Lost Found.—Bro. Craig wishes us to say he has found his boy, and would express his gratitude for the interest manifested in his behalf by different brethren in the search which has now proved successful.

Notice.

D. R. and M. S. Mansfield will commence a series of meetings at Reading, Hillsdale Co., Mich., on the evening of Feb. 16th, 1860. We hope to see a goodly number of our brethren and sisters at this meeting. Come praying in the Holy Ghost that God will prosper the word preached, and that precious souls may be brought to acknowledge Christ and the power of the gospel.

A. N. Seymour, Evangelist.

Note.—My correspondents may address me, till the middle of Feb., at "Springville, Bodax Co., Wis." After that as formerly, at Castle Rock, Dakota Co., Minn.

W. Sheldon.

Conferences

At New Durham, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 23d, to hold over the following Sunday. Brethren Billings, Otis and others are expected.

At Dover, commencing March 1st, Thursday evening, to continue over the following Sunday. Brethren Billings, Bishop and others are expected. J. G. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—In behalf of the church in Springfield, I am requested to extend an invitation to Bro. Wm. Sheperd to transfer the appointment which he had made at Hartford for the 5th and 12th of Feb. to this place, as we see that they conflict with other arrangements.

Also, please give notice that there is now but one meeting held in the city by the brethren believing in the pre-millenial advent of Messiah. We are trying to live and love as brethren, and help one another in the way to "life eternal." We are succeeding in the effort, blessed be the Lord.

I am requested to make this statement by the brethren who formed the other body and who are now with us in heart and soul. Yours in hope, R. E. Ladd.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Bro., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Providence permitting, Eld. George Champlin will preach in

Bristol............Feb. 5th
Eld. Daniel A. Jones............Feb. 19th
Eld. H. F. Carpenter............March 4th

JOHN H. SUTLIFF.

The Lord willing, I will preach as follows:—

Plainfield Pond............Feb. [illegible]
Cheshire............Feb. [illegible]
North Adams............Feb. 12th
Gold Spring............Feb. 16th
Pine Swamp, Ct............Feb. 19th
Pawling, N. Y............Feb. 21st

S. S. BRAZEE.

Bro. D. T. Taylor will preach in Boston, Chapman Hall............Sunday, Feb. 5th

Eld. C. Goodrich appoints to preach in Goshen, Mass............Feb. 12th

APPOINTMENTS for DANIELSONVILLE, CT.

Eld. H. F. Carpenter..Sundays, Feb. 12th and 19th
Eld. D. T. Taylor............Sunday, Feb. 26th

In behalf of the Church,
H. F. CARPENTER.

Eld. Wm. Shepherd appoints to preach at

New Britain............Feb. 8th
Bristol............Feb. 9th
Waterbury............Feb. 10th

T. W. Piper appoints to preach in

Lake Village............Feb. 6th
London Ridge............Feb. 9th
Pittsfield............Feb. 10th
Clarks Town............Feb. 12th
Wolfborough, (Pine Hill)............Feb. 19th

Eld. Thomas Smith appoints to preach in Surrey, Me............Feb. 5th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

W. W. Buck.—We are unable to inform you where the pamphlet can be obtained.

Wm. Sheldon.—Twelve cents.

N. Lazell.—We exchange them.

Veritas.—Paid to 208.

Cash Receipts.

E Burpus 234, $1.16; S H Waldron 222, $1.08; E Jewett 266, $3.00; H Curtis 224, 50 cts; J G Bush 288, $1 50; D W Grant 256, $1.12.

L T Cunningham 252, E M Smith 232, J Sherman 243, I R Wilcox 227, A W Taylor 244, Mrs. O Staples 251, B Perham 252, J Bailey 250, W Kingsbury 243, B E Wetherby 252,—$1.00 each.

R E Wood, M Allen 278, T Turney 278, Moses Smith 299, D F Wolcott 228,—$2.00 each.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

D W Spear 18 cts, W L Stroud $1 27, J S Brooks $6.00, G Wheeler 15 cts, R E Wood 6 cts, C H Randall 30 cts, I C Wellcome $1.08, A Bayles 12 cts, I Forbes $1.00, A K Morse 13 cts, J H Slater 25 cts, M Young $5.43, A H Perkins $3.00, J Monta 6 cts, Dr. H Tagert 30 cts, S D Berry 50 cts, L H Ballard $1.00, G T Steward 6 cts, J G Bush 50 cts, J Vickery 12 cts, Moses Smith $1.00, Mrs. E N Overlock 73 cts, L Smith 48 cts, A B Warner $2.50.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

Human Destiny, A Discussion: Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all? By C. F. Hudson and Sylvanus Cobb. 478 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00 post paid.

The Nature of Faith, and the Evils of Sect. By the late W. H. Starr. With a Memoir and Notes by C. F. Hudson. 289 pp. 12mo. Price 50 cts. Postage 16 cts.

The Christian Lyre: A choice collection of psalmody, ancient and modern, designed for use in public and social worship. Price 60 cents retail. Postage 9 cts. $5.40 per dozen.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

The Soul—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

The Spirit—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 8 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 6 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York; Truman and Spafford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $1.54.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $4.00.

Life and Religious Experience of [illegible] Munger, including [illegible] connected with [illegible] by himself. This is a very interesting work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 50 cts. —postage 10 cents.

The Harp: a selection of sacred hymns, designed for public and private worship. Published by J. V. Himes. Price 60 cts.; postage 9 cts. 1-4 off per dozen. Pocket edition, [illegible]

Words of Warning. [illegible] cts. single postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them so low, or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed: or Christ the promised Messiah. By [illegible] Seymour. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $2.00 per hundred,—4 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of [illegible] incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Geneseo, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 3 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We also have the following works, published and for sale by H. L. Hastings, Providence R. I.

1.–The Voice of the Church on the Coming and kingdom of the Redeemer, or a history of the Reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor, edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 420, price $1, postage 18 cents.

2.–The Great Controversy between God and Man. Its origin, progress and termination, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. pp. 167, neatly bound in cloth, price 60 cents—postage 10c.

3.–Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, and a Sign of the Times. By Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Edited with a preface, by H. L. Hastings. 1 vol. 18mo. pp. 122. Price, in paper covers, 30 cts.—postage 8 cts; cloth gilt, 40 cts.—post. 8 cts.

4.–The Fate of Infidelity: or the Dealings of Providence with Modern Infidels; together with an appendix, containing a brief account of the special judgments visited upon the early opposers of Christianity; by a converted Infidel. 1 vol. 18mo. pp. 176, cloth gilt, 25 cents—post-paid.

5.–Future Punishment: an Argument in two parts, from Reason and Scripture, by H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister of England; with an appendix on the State of the Dead, by John Milton. This work is one of patient thought and calm and christian argument. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 312, price 75 cents—postage 16 cents.

6.–Debt and Grace: or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. A most learned and valuable work, exhibiting great candor, ability and research, containing quotations from some four hundred writers of all ages and languages, and showing conclusively that eternal life is the peculiar privilege of the believer in Jesus Christ. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 480, price $1.25—post paid.

7.–Pauline Theology: or the Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment as Taught by Paul. A convincing argument, deduced from a careful examination of every passage on the subject of Future Punishment in Paul's fourteen epistles. 12mo. pp. 84, 15 cts. single, $10 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

8.–The Old Paths: or the Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life; embracing copious extracts from the apostolic fathers, with arguments and remarks, by H. L. Hastings. pp. 87 12mo. 15 cts. single, $12 per hundred—post. 1c.

Important Questions—3 Nos., 4 pp. each. Price, per sett, 3 cts. single; $1.50 per hundred.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith. By R. Patterson. 12mo. Price, postpaid, 75 cts; $6 per dozen.

Tracts on Prophecy, (bound,) 224 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts.

Tracts on Immortality, (bound,) 220 pp. Price, postpaid, 60 cts. Both volumes mailed for $1.

Tracts of 24 pages. Price, 5 cts. single copy; $3 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half a cent per ounce if ordered to the amount of eight ounces or upwards.

1—Church not in Darkness; 2—The Three Worlds; 3—The Last Days; 4—Plain Truths; by Hastings. 5—Noah, his Age and Ours; 6—Desire of all Nations; 7—It is Done; by John Cumming. 8—A Voice of Warning; 9—New Heavens and Earth; by D. T. Taylor. 10—*Ancient Landmarks; 11—State of the Dead; by Milton. 12—Intermediate State; by Grew.

Tracts at 3 cents single copy; $1.50 per hundred: postage 1 ct. each, or half cent an ounce for packages of eight or more ounces.

1—Future Punishment; by Grew. 2—Scripture tract number one, Destiny of the Wicked. 3—Outline of the coast of Man; by Lenfest. 4—Key of Truth; 5—Man's Future State; by Sheldon. —6†Olive Leaves, by the sett.

Tracts at 2 cents single copy; $1 per hundred.

1—The Night Cometh; by J. Adey. 2—The Day of Judgment; by St. Cyril.

Tracts at 1 cent single copy; 50 cents per hundred.

1—Olive Leaves, separate; 2—Ancient Landmark, separate; 3—Forty Questions on Immortality. 4—Scripture Searchers, one, two, three, four, five and six.

The above Tracts are on hand, and orders can be filled at once. Let us scatter them. Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons ordering tracts should order as much or more than fifty cents worth, as packages of tracts containing eight ounces or more go cheaper than smaller quantities. Those who buy books to sell will receive them at a liberal discount. The poor can have them free by sending stamps to pay the postage,—and those that feel poor also.

Address H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

For sale also by N. Branch, Moline, Ill.; G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York.

* The Landmarks are issued in setts of six Nos. which can be separated for distribution. The sett contains, The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists; the Duration of the Earth, by A. Clarke; Hope and Duty of the Church, by M. Henry; Restitution, by Cyril; Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather; Loving Christ's Appearing, by Baxter.

† The Olive Leaves are three neat four page tracts that can be separated for distribution. No. one, Little Children, Love one Another; two, The One Resting Place; three, My Friend; four, Wondrous Love; five, Abundant Grace; six, Go in Peace; by Hastings. Just the thing to distribute among all classes of saints and sinners.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a final destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 8 cts.—postage 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms: or, the kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $6.00 per hundred, 90 cts. per dozen, 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. B. Brooks, No. 8 Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Waite, Warwick, R. I.—

The Harp, by Elder Himes; 200 Stories for Children; Satanic Delusion; Bible Hell; Great Controversy [illegible]

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

I'm glad Salvation's Free!

Oh trust ye in the Lord,
His arm salvation brings,
He is the Lord above all lords,
The mighty King of kings.
CHORUS.
I'm glad salvation's free,
I'm glad salvation's free,
I'm glad salvation's free for you and for me.
[illegible] salvation's free!
The living waters flow
[illegible] holy hill,
[illegible] without money, without price,"
"[illegible] whosoever will!"
CHORUS.

I [illegible] each mercy owns
A [illegible] above,
[illegible] our only hope of life
Was bought by dying love.
CHORUS.

[illegible]
When deep in sin we lay,
Thank God, the ransom came!
And now we find our way to God
Through Jesus' worthy name.
CHORUS.

We know He "bore our sins"
"And carried all our grief;"
"Lord, we believe"—we trust in Thee,
"Help Thou our unbelief!"
CHORUS.

For the Crisis.

Leaves from the Note Book of a Traveler.

No. I.

March 11th. Have been to hear Bishop B——, to-night. His discourse was characterized by simplicity and plainness. I was glad when he named his subject,—"Presumptuous hopes," for I thought it would be heart-searching, and I resolved to let the truth probe deeply, that I might more perfectly understand the basis of my hope. As he passed on from one false hope to another, I could not feel that they answered to mine, but when he began to describe the christian hope, its marks, each point touched upon awakened a response in my heart. I did abhor sin—I did truly repent of sin—I did not rest on any self-righteousness, but alone on Christ—I did feel a continual dissatisfaction with myself, my works, my attainments,—I did feel an earnest desire to go on to higher attainments.

Would that I could portray his language, so expressive of christian experience! I felt at the close of his discourse a more firm confidence in my being a child of God, than when I went, for doubts had harassed my mind yesterday and to-day

[illegible]th. Bro. B. called yesterday. He remarked—"I have prayed for you." This inspired my heart with renewed courage. Yes, it thrilled through my soul with power and sweetness, and as I retired to pray, with a stronger faith thereby imparted, the words of Jesus were spoken to my heart, as I knelt before the Mercy Seat:—"I will pray the Father for you!" and I thought within myself, if the assurance from a minister of the Lord Jesus inspires me with faith and hope, how much more ought the promise of Jesus—the ever-living Advocate—the all-prevailing Intercessor with the Father, who stands in the immediate presence of God; to impart strong consolation—to inspire with unwavering faith—to beget within the soul the full assurance of hope. "I will pray." Who promises? Jesus, the Merciful High Priest, the all-sufficient Savior! For whom? "For you." O how it thrilled my heart with joy! I seemed to hear the words spoken to me, "I will pray the Father for you!"

It was thus with power and saving efficacy they were spoken to my heart fourteen years ago. I had for days prayed, labored, wept, agonized, consecrated, and striven to believe for the blessing of purity, and a closer walk with God, but apparently in vain. My heart never seemed so polluted, —God never seemed so unmindful of my petitions—Satan never tried so hard to keep me from the point for which I strove. At last I could pray no longer. I was almost despairing of mercy, when sweetly a voice whispered in music tones to my mortal ear, "I will pray the Father for you." It was Jesus who spoke. My heart responded, "Jesus cannot pray in vain, I will trust in Jesus!" Then came the deliverance from the oppressive burden—the rest of soul—the joy of the Holy Ghost. And now again, these words have caused my heart to glow with emotions of gratitude, that I have such an Intercessor, with faith, in such an all-sufficient Redeemer.

April 21. A day of peculiar temptation. When I knelt for prayer this morning, before leaving my room, the burden of my supplication was for grace to enable me to perform with quietness and patience the labors devolving on me. I besought the Lord to keep my heart and my tongue from fretfulness. My nervous system is exceedingly irritable, and the labors before me were peculiarly calculated to excite my nerves, and in view of this I pleaded for special help from God. To my surprise, I have not for years so deeply suffered as during the forenoon. Much there was to annoy and harass me, and it seemed as though a legion of devils were within, inspiring my mind with dreadful thoughts, and agitating the outer man exceedingly. O how I was tempted to doubt the efficacy of prayer, and even the very existence of God. Had I not, with a deep consciousness of my weakness, and in sincerity of heart sought deliverance from the very influence which was now in an uncommon degree affecting my being? Why was I thus left to suffer? What profit was there in prayer? Such were the thoughts which forced themselves upon me. Fearful, dreadful beyond description, were the horrors of that tempest which swept apparently with destructive power over my soul, and my mind seemed for a few hours to be a total wreck, and I saw nothing before me but the darkness of despair.

Yet how shall I describe it?—beneath the surging billows—down, down, deep in the soul, an undercurrent was smoothly gliding, unagitated by the tempestuous winds which were shaking the outer tabernacle. And when the storm had passed, utter desolation did not follow in its track, but the eye of faith calmly looked heavenward, and as I knelt in prayer, the language of child-like trust was breathed out in the sweet words—"My Father." Instead of that fearful wreck of mind which but an hour before seemed actually to exist; new vigor was imparted,—instead of the darkness of despair, the light of joy and hope refreshed my soul. My prayer was not lost! I triumphed over the foe, who took advantage of circumstances, and with fierce assault strove to cast me down into the depths of unbelief! M. D. W.

For the Crisis.

Religion.—No. 5.

IS IT PROGRESSIVE IN PRINCIPLE?

It is a very common thing to hear of conversions, in which persons claim to have received vast additional light—if not such overwhelming convictions as to have completely shown them the error of their former position—with not only the abundant evidence so easily seen, which consciously and indisputably moves to the new conclusion; (why have they not seen it before?) but great accessions of grace—never obtained in the old faith, and always abounding with the new. The exhibition, at once, takes the character of an excessive laudation of the last found conception; while intense apprehension is experienced for the fate of the cast-off garment, especially the lover of that old and quaint arrangement of truth. Finding fault, even without stint or reason, with what they once so dearly loved, and for which they would have sacrificed even life itself; at the same time that another of equal ability (and why should we not say of equal piety?) leaves this newly discovered palace, with all its gorgeousness, to the excited and ecstatic convert as a dismal prison, immured within which he has spent his best days in the vain struggle for religious freedom and enjoyment, and obtains his rest, and final field of true light and labor, in the other brother's forsaken mansion of error.

Just at this moment we have distinguished examples of change of this kind. Now we ask, must it not be referred to principle in either case? There is, of course, no disposition with the intelligent and charitable public to attribute any motive to the learned Plummer Professor at Cambridge, in his return to the Trinitarian and Orthodox fold, but that of christian sincerity. Or the learned preacher and lecturer of Brooklyn, who manifestly inclines to the dogma so recently left by the former. Who can suppose that any other power but evidence to his mind has produced the change?

Instances of relapse to Romanism or of conversion to Protestantism occur all the time; in each of which cases there is claimed, by the multitude, a flood of light and truth. If there is a religious truth advanced; if light is given, there is true progression. But what is light to one mind is darkness to another. All these changes are embraced within the religious position, and consequently must be permitted to claim a notice under the topic of our remarks.

We inquire, then, is the religious standpoint occupied by the men of this age an advanced one? Does it give us the idea of progression? If we consider doctrine the standard unqualifiedly, then there is but little to be said (unless we may suppose some new discoveries which shall compel general consent;) for only as that is qualified can the condition arising be qualified. The progress, then, will be found only in the ratio of the success of one party, and that party which shall be supposed the most correct in conception! But thus we shall never advance true theology, nor can we suppose it can ever be promoted; for only a portion will have a seat in that car, and they shall claim that all discovery has been previously made, and so there is a stand on the old and long held ground. But from the tenacity of each in the retention of the old possession, and the strife for mastery in the application of their doctrinal forces to the world, the church is brought to a dead-lock. W. S. C.

PRAYER.—A good old author says, with quaintness: "Prayer is the rope in the belfry—we pull it, and it rings the bell up in heaven—and so it is. Keep that bell moving. Pull it well, and though the bell is up so high that you cannot hear it ring, depend upon it, it can be heard in the tower of heaven, and is ringing before the throne of God, who will send answers of grace according to your faith."

☞ To repent of sin is as great a work of grace as not to sin.

For the Crisis.

Waiting for the Messiah.

"Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him."

This language is frequently quoted, in both speaking and writing, in all localities, by those who believe in, and are looking for, the personal appearing of our Lord, the second time, without a sin-offering, unto salvation. But is such quotation correct and applicable, when applied to ourselves, as it is, invariably? Let us see. That the above scripture is yet to be used in the manner applied, by some class, none can well doubt, but by whom is the question? As to the time when used, according to the prophet, it is when, The face of the covering and the vail cast over all people and spread over all nations is destroyed, and that is to be at the resurrection, when death is swallowed up in victory.—1 Cor. 14:34; Isa. 22:8. Evidently that covering is death, and that vail is the blindness of unbelief. Through unbelief in God's word—"Thou shalt surely die,"—came transgression, which is sin, and by sin came death," and so death passed upon all men (covered all men), for that all have sinned.—Rom. 5:12. Death shall feed upon them—shall cover them.—Ps. 49:14; Hosea 13:14; Rev. 1:18; 21:4. "And there shall be no more death."

But is not the prophet speaking here particularly of Israel? From the latter clause of the 8th verse it would seem so. "And the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it!" Where has he said that? Moses told them in Deut. 28:58, they should fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD, or their plagues should be made wonderful—they have been. He then pronounces the blessing and the cursing. After these come to pass, and they call them to mind, and return unto the Lord their God and obey his voice, (the gospel spoken by him, Heb. 1:2,) then the Lord should turn their captivity and have compassion upon them, and would return and gather them. "If any of thine be driven out unto the outmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee." Please turn and read the whole of Deut. 28 and 30; read more carefully than ever before. Well, he came to his own and they received him not; they rejected their Lord.—Jesus of Nazareth. "His blood be on us and on our children," was then their language. Crucify him, give us Barrabbas.—But more definitely was it said, in Isa. 6:9—12, "And he said, Go, and tell this people (Israel), hear ye, indeed, but understand not, and see ye, indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes. . . . Then said I, Lord, how long? And he answered, until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate, and the Lord have removed men far away." Deut. 30:7; "And the Lord thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which persecuted thee."

2 Cor. 3:13-16.—"And not as Moses, which put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished: but their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same vail untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which vail is done away in Christ. But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart. Nevertheless, when it (Israel) shall turn to the Lord, the vail shall be taken away." Then the Lord my God shall come, and all his saints with him. Phil. 3:20, 21.—"For our conversation (citizenship) is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Then Israel will believe; for then shall the Lord "roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. So shall ye (Israel) know that I am the Lord your God."—Joel 3:16, 17. And it shall be said in that day (by Israel) Lo, this is our God (Jesus of Nazareth, whom we rejected); we (Israel) have waited for him (over eighteen hundred years) and he will save us!" Rom. 11:25-27.—"For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." "And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins."—Jer. 31:31. They are the people that shall use that scripture, I believe, not Adventists, surely—we know already He is our God. We believe in him, trust in him, expect him, look for him, and rejoice in him. We have not waited for him, we have only watched, but Israel! alas! alas! how has he waited, and wept, and lamented in bitterness and in bondage. In the morning they have said, would God it were evening! and at even, have they said, would God it were morning; but God, even their God, will come with a recompense, and save them. Then they will sing, Ps. 118,—"O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good, his mercy endureth forever; let Israel now say, his mercy endureth forever." They will also sing the song in Isaiah, 26th chapter. But we (the church) will sing, (Rev. 5:9,) that new song; saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people and nation. And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." 1:5;—"Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen."

But ye, my brethren, "Ye have need of patience; that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise; for, yet a little while and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry."—"Cast not away therefore (my brethren) your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward." GEO. W. STETSON.

Olena, Ohio.

For the Crisis.

Conference in Jersey Co., Ill.

I have been thinking our eastern friends may feel—if they do not say—the western brethren occupy too much space in the "Crisis" in their reports of conferences and travels, and crowd out much valuable matter which the household of faith need, and the cause of truth demands. Perhaps we have been most too free with our ink and paper, and have exhibited our folly by our multitude of words. Well, as I may not be guiltless, I will be more exemplary for the future.

Our conference in Jersey Co., Ill., was very good—the weather was unfavorable—congregation was not large—truth found way to some hearts. The brethren are doing considerable in that region by scattering tracts and lending books. It is evident the minds of the people are undergoing a great change on theology. Some of those that were the most opposed, are now strong advocates for truth. I will give a specimen of the feeling when Bro. L. commenced laboring in that region. I will transcribe a few sentences from a letter received. "Eld C. designated me in his prayer 'as an old, one-armed, gray-headed sinner—child of the devil! Emissary of the devil;—devil's minister going about breaking up the churches,' etc. But to cap the climax, Eld. W. (both Baptist preachers) in his evening prayer, pointed me out by calling me 'a gray-headed, one-armed, black-hearted child of the devil,' and that God would kill me unless I could be converted to their doctrine, with a shower of the most awful curses that ever came from the lips of men professing godliness." If this is the spirit of the leaders, you can judge what the effect would be. Now was not that praying with a vengeance? I am sorry to learn that Eld. C. is now a deranged man.

Bro. Adam and Abram are using tracts and books to the glory of God, and the seed begins to spring up. Bro. L. is not behind in the good work. Ah! our tract department is telling the story. They preach loudly—they are like fire-brands in the stubble of error. May the good Lord speed the work. They need a good laborer in that region.

The brethren accompanied me to the ship as formerly, after a blessed season in waiting on the Lord at the pilgrim's home (Bro. Brown) who lives near the sea shore, (Father of waters,) and took the parting hand with a sad heart, mingled with joy, of one day—and I hope it may not be long—greeting all of the pure and the blest in the coming kingdom.

I might give many other items of interest in connection with my labors there, but I have seen so many paper revivals—and something that had no show only on paper, that what little I do must speak for itself or it will never be known. W. PRATT.

For the Crisis.

God's Work in East Killingly, Ct.

Thinking that the readers of the "Crisis" would be interested to hear of the prosperity of the cause of truth, I would say that the Lord is at work in this place, in convicting and converting sinners. Some months since, I felt as though something might be done for the people in this place, if the door could be opened for preaching; but I could not see the way open to come here until about six weeks ago. Having no engagements, I came here a stranger, not being acquainted with any one in the place, and engaged a place to hold meetings, and engaged board at the hotel in the place; trusting in the Lord for means to pay my way. I soon learned that the people had ears to hear. I opened the battery of truth, and endeavored to show them that eternal life was lost by sin, and that the only way to get life was through Jesus Christ; and that God was just and merciful, and would not torment the wicked forever. The truth commended itself to the minds of the people, and they became much interested. I gave liberty for any to ask questions or to raise objections. Knowing that truth will bear investigation, I had nothing to fear. The people began to read the Bible, to see if these things were so. Some said if the Bible was true, we had the truth; others believing it to be true, began to confess the truth.

After preaching about three weeks every evening, sinners began to inquire what they should do to be saved. We endeavored to point them to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Soon we heard the young convert lisping forth the praise of God for what they had found. Last Sabbath we had the blessed privilege of leading five happy souls into the water, and a number more intend to go forward soon. Quite a number of backsliders have returned to their first love, and sinners are still coming over on the Lord's side. The enemy is busy in circulating false reports, and trying to stop the work, but it is somewhat with us as it was with the believers of old,—the more they oppressed them, the more they increased. I regret that I have to say that the most bitter foes that we have are those that profess to be christians. The Lord have mercy and forgive them, is my prayer, for they do not realize that they are fighting against God. I have now been here about six weeks, and the interest does not abate, but rather increases.

I would here speak of the benefit of tracts. I sent to Bro. Hastings for a bundle, and scattered them among the people, and I think they were as good as so many preachers. The people had something to direct them to the portions of Scripture that they needed, and soon informed themselves in relation to the subjects discussed. I paid what I could afford for the tracts, and the rest was furnished by Bro. Hastings. Brethren, keep up the tract cause; it is doing good.

I feel much encouraged to continue to make an effort to open new fields of labor, for God blesses the preaching of the word to the saving of souls. I have found the Lord to be good in opening the hearts of the people to supply my wants. The non-professors in this place gave a practical demonstration of their interest in the cause by their attendance and money, and with what brethren and sisters have contributed from other places, I have been able to pay my way as yet. To the people be many thanks, and to God be all the glory. Amen.
J. HEMENWAY.

Jan. 6th, 1860.

Selections.

Friendship.

"If there be aught beneath the skies
That vies with things above,
'Tis friendship, when its sacred charms arise
From pure and virtuous love."

Friends, have you friends, true friends, friends indeed? Thank Heaven for them; they are precious gifts of God, far better than rubies. Who are they? True friends will not boast of their friendship; but when need-be comes, the day of trial, darkness, a darkness that may be felt, when flesh and heart fail, then true friends will rush to your rescue, flee to your bosom, grasp your hand sympathetically, pour in the oil and wine of consolation, hold up the hands that hang down, strengthen the feeble knees—their hearts are open, their purses, their all. Mark; David and Jonathan—here was true friendship, founded on virtuous principle, pure, genuine love to God, love to man, a union of sentiment, a union of soul, beautiful, harmoniously. Such friendship is permanent, everlasting. Such friendship is that of Jesus to his disciples, those who love him and keep his commandments.

The friendship of Jesus exceeds all other friendships. Hark!—hear him: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Reader, have you this friend, that sticketh closer than a brother? If not, of all persons you are most miserable.

"Can there a balm on earth be found to heal the troubled soul?
'Tis friendship, for it cheers, though all around the waves of trouble roll;
Yes, while our earthly comforts fly,
We still retain one friend—
'Tis Jesus; while he lives we cannot die,
Nor can his friendship end."

—Golden Rule.

Worship in Singing.

A gentleman, who was traveling in Germany, made the inquiry in an important place in which he happened to be on the Sabbath, in which church he would be likely to hear the best music. The answer was: "We do not have any music in church." Somewhat surprised, he asked if no hymns were sung. The person inquired of responded in the affirmative, but seemed to have no idea that this was music; it was a religious exercise into which music came incidentally, without doubt, but in such a subordinate place as to be hardly regarded for its own sake. This is the proper idea in congregational singing. Music is not the object, but devotion. The exercise must not be regarded as musical, but religious. The most rhetorically elegant prayers are not necessarily the best by any means; but, on the contrary, the rhetoric may become a positive hindrance. So with the singing of hymns; that manner which most effectually engages the hearts of the congregation is best, though it may lack musical elegance.

Remarkable Conversion.

When Oliver Cromwell entered upon the command of the Parliament's arms against Charles I., he ordered that every soldier should carry a Bible in his pocket. Among the rest there was a wild, wicked young fellow, who ran away from his apprenticeship in London for the sake of plunder and dissipation. Being one day ordered out on a skirmishing expedition, or to attack some fortress, he returned to his quarters in the evening without hurt. When he was going to bed, pulling his Bible out of his pocket, he observed a hole in it, the depth of which he traced till he found the ballet had stopped at Eccl. 11:9,—"Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk thou in the ways of thy heart and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." The words were sent home to his heart by the Divine Spirit, so that he became a sincere believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. He lived in London many years after the civil wars were ended.

Scatter the germs of the Beautiful
In the depths of the humble soul;
They shall bud and blossom and bear the fruit,
While the endless ages roll;
Plant with the flowers of charity
Hope, the portal of the tomb;
And the fair and the pure about thy path
In Paradise shall bloom.

The Duty of Reproof.

We have recently met with an obituary, the writer of which seems to have got entirely out of the stereotyped common-place of such performances. Describing the subject of his notice just as he was, he gives currency to some traits of character which are alike rare and worthy of commendation. One of these is thus mentioned:

"He was a bold reprover of infidelity, and of profanity, especially that which seemed to be intended as an insult to God and religion. He would reprove any man of his acquaintance, let his position be ever so prominent, who was in the habit of ridiculing religion even in a public hotel where he said such conversation was abusive to all the travelers who had been brought up in christian morals."

Would that there were more such! Few duties of the christian profession are so generally neglected, even by sincere and earnest men as that of reproof. Private expostulation with a wrong doer is unfrequent, while public rebuke of public sins is still more rare. And yet it is in reality not difficult to perform. The reprover has the conscience of the offender on his side; he has the general sense of the community, the claims of propriety, and the demands of duty all with him. What he needs is "meekness of wisdom," a mild but firm representation of the wrong done, and a sense of dependence on God for strength to perform the duty, and grace to make it effectual. Profanity, and abuse and ridicule of religion, are sins so gross and inexcusable, so painful to all devout and well bred persons, so opposed to all decency, so injurious to the young and thoughtless, and so gratuitous in themselves, that no christian should ever hesitate a moment in reminding the transgressor of his sin, and his exposure to Divine wrath. "Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him." "He that rebuketh a man, afterwards shall find more favor than he that flattereth with his tongue."—Christian Intelligencer.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Harriet Martineau on Modern Dress.

Do the petticoats of our time serve as anything but a mask to the human form—a perversion of human proportions? A woman on a sofa looks like a child popping up from a haycock. A girl in the dance looks like the Dutch tumbler that was a favorite toy in my infancy. The fit is so the reverse of accurate as to be like a silly hoax—a masquerade without wit: while, at the same time, it is not an easy fit. The prodigious weight of the modern petticoat, and the difficulty of getting it all into the waistband, creates a necessity for compressing and loading the waist in a way most injurious to health. Under a rational method of dress the waist should suffer neither weight nor pressure—nothing more than the girdle which brings the garment into form and folds. As to the convenience of the hooped skirts, only ask the women themselves, who are always in danger from fire, or wind, or water, or carriage-wheels, or rails, or pails, or nails, or, in short, everything they encounter. Ask the husbands, fathers, or brothers, and hear how they like being cut with the steel frame when they enter a gate with a lady, or being driven into a corner of the pew at church, or to the outside of the coach, for want of room. As for the children—how many have been swept off pathways, or foot-bridges, or steamboat decks by the pitiless crinoline, or hoops of some unconscious walking balloon! More children have been killed, however, by the extension of the absurd petticoat fashion to them. For many months past, it has been a rare thing to see a child under the tunic age duly clothed. The petticoats are merely for show; and the actual clothing, from the waist downwards, is nothing more than thin cotton drawers and socks, leaving a bare space between. For older boys there is a great improvement in dress—the tunic and loose trousers being preferable in every way to the stiff mannish tailed coat and tight trousers of half a century ago. But the younger children are at present scarcely clothed at all, below the arms; and the blue legs of childhood are a painful sight, whether in a beggar boy or a citizen's son.

Sunday Pig Dinners.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Aug. 6th, 1856.

DEAR SIR:—Since I last saw you, I have been in almost uninterrupted health; my strength was so great, that I could labor with any man at any kind of work all day, and feel best at night, and during the hot days I did most and felt best. This, I suppose, caused a carelessness in diet, though I hardly yet am conscious of it, for I seldom over-eat, though I did Sunday before last—that hot Sunday—eat such a dinner as I would have done on Monday, and then yielded to the influence of the day, there being no service in church in the afternoon, and laid down on the floor and slept till tea-time. Monday morning, I awoke at 4 o'clock, with a profuse painless diarrhœa, and by 3 o'clock, P. M., I was passing a white, watery fluid, and passed more water than I had drank in a fortnight.

We are in a state of betweenity entirely, as to whether we are under most obligation to ask pardon of a pig or our correspondent for the heading we have given to his letter. We are rather inclined to vote for the pig. Pigs don't eat "Sunday dinners." They treat every day alike, and eat, every day, at least, when they can get it, until they don't want to eat any more. Man is the only animal in nature who eats more than he wants, as far as our knowledge of natural history informs us.

We have much less muscular and mental exercise on Sundays than on week days, hence, much less wear and tear and waste, therefore a proportionably less need for supply or repairs. Multitudes make the dinner for Sunday the most sumptuous of the week, with artificial tempters of the appetite to boot. It is no wonder, then, that on Sunday afternoon, we are a nation of gorged anacondas, too sleepy to see, too stupid to think, and too lazy to move.

The best Sunday dinner—best for the body, best for the soul—is half a glass of water, a piece of bread and butter, and a slice of cold meat. Thus doing, while our servants will bless us, our ministers will preach to listening congregations and not to sleeping hulks.

Meanwhile, if any one desires at any time to get up an extemporaneous amateur cholera-morbus performance, let him take a nap on the floor soon after a hearty dinner. The lowest part of a room being the coldest, a person sleeping gets chilled on the outside, checking all exhalations and driving the drains inwards, to find vent in the manner just named. To clergymen who officiate in the morning and afternoon, the advice is given to eat nothing at all beyond an apple or two or orange, or piece of bread and butter, with a cup of warm drink between the services, they will thus be able to preach easier to themselves and more profitably to their hearers, because it requires less physical effort, and the mind is more active.

We personally know two western clergymen, equally eminent, and deservedly occupying positions of high responsibility—one eats nothing between the services, the other dines on strong tea—the former we have never known to be ill, the latter has a dangerous attack of sickness every year or two, and is very often complaining between times.—Journal of Health.

Useful Recipe—How to burn Coal.

Nine out of ten who attempt to burn coal in a stove, waste about as much coal as is necessary to be consumed for the obtaining of all the heat desirable. Observe the following rules. We will suppose the stove cleaned out.

First, To make a coal fire: Put in a double handful of shavings, or light kindling-wood instead. Fill the earthen cavity (if the stove has one) nearly full of chunks of dry wood, say four to six inches in length. On the top put a dozen lumps of egg coal. Light with a paper from beneath. In ten minutes add about twenty lumps more of coal. As soon as the wood has burnt out, fill the cavity half to two-thirds of coal. The coal will, by these directions, become thoroughly ignited.

Second, Never fill a stove more than half or two-thirds full of coal, even in the coldest weather.

Third, When the fire is low, never shake the grate or disturb the ashes, but add from ten to fifteen small lumps of coal, and set the draft open. When these are heated through and somewhat ignited, add the amount necessary for a new fire, but do not disturb the ashes yet. Let the draft be open half an hour. Now shake out the ashes. The coal will be thoroughly ignited, and will keep the stove at high heat from six to twelve hours, according to the coldness of the weather.

Fourth, For very cold weather. After the fire is made, according to rule first and third, add every hour about fifteen to twenty lumps of egg coal. You will find that the ashes made each hour will be about in that ratio.

DANGER OF READING BY TWILIGHT.—The London and Edinburg Philosophical Magazine contains an account of the sudden loss of power to distinguish colors, produced by straining the eyes under a very feeble light. It says: "A sea captain, who was in the habit, when time hung heavy on his hands, of occupying it by working at embroidery, was one afternoon engaged upon a red flower, and being anxious to finish it, prolonged his labor until twilight came on, and found it difficult to select the suitable colors. To obtain more light, he went to the companion-way, and there continued his work. While thus taxing his eyes, his power of distinguishing colors suddenly vanished. He went upon the deck, hoping that an increase of light would restore his vision. In vain. From that time to the present (more than ten years) he has remained color-blind."

HOW TO MAKE SLEEP REFRESHING.—Take sufficient exercise in the open air during the day. Eat light suppers. Avoid tea and coffee, and all unnatural stimulants. Eschew feather beds; sleep on hair or cotton mattresses, with a light covering of bed-clothes. Have your room ventilated.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to pre-pay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above, i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 230. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1860. VOL. X. NO. 23.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

The Bible.

TUNE.—"The old Oaken Bucket."

O give me my Bible, the statutes of heaven,
Its great constitution I know to be pure;
Its laws and its by-laws in justice were given,
And all is divine and unalt rably sure.
I know, when I read them, in love they were blended,
Nor e'er disannulled since the time they were framed;
No foul legislation has ever amended
One jot or one tittle that therein is named.
The old fashioned Bible, the dear blessed Bible,
The family Bible, that lies on the stand.

Though thousands have written a substitute for them,
To sway over others the sceptre and sword;
Yet ever unaltered these laws lie before them,
Th' unchanged and immutable word of the Lord.
Then give me my Bible, and let me obey it,
Instead of the statutes and doctrines of men;
Aside for a moment forbid I should lay it,
To listen and argue for dogmas again.
The old fashioned Bible, the dear blessed Bible,
The family Bible that lies on the stand.

—Selected.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

The Nature and Origin of Jesus.

BY WM. HOBBS.

No. 3.

IMMANUEL.

This name signifies, according to Matthew, "God with us;" and is the name that Isaiah predicted should be applied to the son who was to be conceived by the virgin. Why he was to be called by that name, may be gathered from such expressions as Paul uses; as for instance, "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself;" and, "In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily," which is expressive of another declaration,—"God was manifest in the flesh." The flesh, is a term used in the Bible to denote humanity, and in the above, has reference to "the man Christ Jesus;" the person in whom God was manifested. The only true and proper Divinity, is God manifested in the person of Jesus. This is what Christ taught, and he made in one instance, a direct distinction between himself and the Divine manifestation in him. Hear him:—

"Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him. Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou, then, Show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works' sake."—John 14: 1—12.

The works or miracles wrought by Christ, are attributed by him, not to himself, but to the indwelling presence of the Father; and this they were required to believe "for the very works' sake;" as though the works were manifest evidence of the indwelling presence of God in him. He disclaims any intention of assuming to be God; for in the saying, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father,"—he explains by saying, "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." Herein he has given us an example,—and the analogy of faith requires us to keep this distinction between the man Christ Jesus and God manifest in him, even where the distinction is not so clearly expressed. For instance, in the saying, "Before Abraham was I am!" if the word "before," refers to himself, then he spoke not of himself, but of the great I Am as manifest in him. For if this be understood of his pre-existence, it does not agree with the record that God gave of him, "Thou art my son this day have I begotten thee."

Again, the expression, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last," is not to be understood personally of Jesus, as the Son of God, because, in the Apocalypse, where this passage occurs, there is a manifest distinction made between him and the Alpha and Omega. Thus in chap. 8, it reads, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come; the Almighty." And in verse 45, it reads,—"Peace from him which is, and which was, and which is to come, and from the seven spirits which are before his throne: and from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first-born* from the dead." Here, then, we have a clear distinction made between the Alpha and Omega and Jesus; which is further seen by chap. 4: 8. By an examination of that chapter, together with chap. 5, it will be seen that the trisagion, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and which is, and which is to come," is addressed to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. That doxology is expressive of the true worship of believers in the one God; who was holy, and who is holy, and who is to be holy in all futurity to come—eternally, unchangeably holy.

Jesus, in the Bible, is recognized in two characters. First, in his original character as the son of Mary and son of God: "who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered,—he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously; who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead unto sin, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye are healed." And second, in his representative character as the medium of the Divine manifestation: so that he could say, "He that seeth me, seeth him that sent me." And again, "They have seen and have hated both me and my Father."

In respect to his original character, as said the Apostle, "Beware, lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the rudiments of the world; and not after Christ: for in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." There is a vast difference between the teachings of Paul, that in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and the theory that he is God; as this theory goes on the assumption that the fulness of the Godhead dwelt in him spiritually, that is, independently of him bodily considered. To infer such a theory from the teachings of Paul, is about as sensible as to infer that if a man dwells in a house, that therefore the house is the man. God could manifest himself in his fulness, in the bodily person of Christ, without being confounded with him, and to infer anything different is vain deceit. God was manifest in the flesh. This being the universal testimony of the Scriptures, the question naturally arises as to how he was manifested? By his word and spirit, is the only proper answer that can be given; and principally by his word; since it is only by his word that the mind becomes sensible of spiritual manifestations of God. This being so, we come naturally to consider the account given by St. John, concerning the word. He wrote as follows: "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God."—John 1: 1. To understand what he means, it is necessary to find what is the scriptural use of the phrase—the word. That the phrase is elliptical, and means "the word of God," is evident from the fact, that the same writer speaks of the word being manifested in Jesus, and hence, he, speaking of Christ in Rev. 19: 13, says, "His name is called the word of God."

Every communication from the Divine mind is called in Scripture, "the word of God," and "the word," and in some instances, Omniscience itself is meant by this phrase. Thus in Heb. 4: 12, 13, it is written, "The word (Gr., ho logos,) of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do."

Here, the word means omniscience; and in this sense the word is God; it being the conscious existence of God; and is the great source of all conscious life, and intellectual light. It cannot, therefore, be a secondary person, as the Gnostics held, and as the Arians and Trinitarians hold. We call the Bible the word of God, because it is the medium of Divine communication; and by the same figure of speech, Christ's name is called the word of God; he being a living medium of the Divine communication. But when we come to speak of the word independent of any medium, we understand the word to mean Omniscience. Hence, the word is God, and does not apply to Christ independent of his human personality; as outside of his humanity he ceases to be a medium.

In the beginning was the word. This assertion refutes those who confound the word and the son of God together. The word was in the beginning—before the son of God was begotten or born; as the scriptures clearly teach. "The phrase, 'And the logos was with God,' amounts to asserting that the logos was most intimately connected with God."—Prof. Stuart. If the logos or word means, taken in its fullest sense, omniscience, then indeed, the word is most intimately connected with God. But, says Prof. Stuart, "Is it probable that a revelation from heaven is made to inform us that the attributes of a being are with that being." To this it is replied,—If it was not for ignorance of the Divine Being, we should not need to be taught anything in reference to Him; but since the Gnostics of John's time taught that the word was a derived being, and their pernicious error has been followed by Trinitarians and others, it is necessary that they should be informed that the word was with God, that is, most intimately united to God—ho Logos en pros ton Theon. Let this sentence in the Greek be digested by those who put too much stress on the term, "with."

"And the word was God." This explains what is meant by the assertion, "The word was with God," that is, so essentially connected with the being of God, that it is the conscious existence of God. The word was God; but Jesus is the son of God, hence, Jesus and the word are separate existences; the one is the medium of the other. If this is not so, John would have boldly asserted that Jesus was in the beginning, instead of founding an improbable theory of a pre-existent Jesus on such a feeble foundation; and thereby to tax the ingenuity of the votaries of that theory, to grope their blind way through their labyrinths of contradictory theories.

And the word was God. On this Prof. Stuart speaks as follows: "It is said, that Theos is destitute of the article, and therefore cannot designate the Divine Being, who is Supreme. This observation is far from being justifiable, either by the usage of the sacred writers, or the principles of Greek syntax. Among instances where the Supreme God is certainly designated, and yet the article is omitted, the inquirer may consult the very chapter in question, v. 6, 13, 18; also, Matt. 19: 26; Luke 16: 13; John 9: 33; 16: 30; Rom. 8: 8; 1 Cor. 1: 3; Gal. 1: 1; Eph. 2: 8; Heb. 9: 14. Besides, every reader of Greek knows that where the subject of a proposition has the article, the predicate omits it."

"The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." From this, it is evident, that the word was God; as all conscious existences are derived from that only source of existence, Omniscience; and He from whom all life is derived, can only be God. And the use of the personal pronoun, only confirms the fact, that the word was God; and in no way confirms the Gnostic theory of a secondary person.

"In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." This explains how existence and intellectual light are derived from God; and it agrees with another scripture,—"There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding."

"There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that light, but was sent to bear witness of that light." Verse 9. "That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Here is a clear distinction made between the light and Jesus; the one in whom the light was manifested, in what is asserted of John the Baptist. The meaning clearly implied is this: John was not the one in whom the light was manifested, but was sent to bear witness of the one in whom the light was manifested. Or in other words, he was sent to bear witness of the light, as manifested in the man Christ Jesus. This is evidently the implied meaning; else, the assertion that a man sent from God was not that light, would be puerile; and it would amount to asserting that a created man was not uncreated light. That it was uncreated light, flowing direct from Omniscience, is evident from its being said, "That was the true light, that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Our whole being is derived from God; "seeing that he giveth us life, breath, and all things." "In him we live, move, and have our being."—Paul.

"And the word was made flesh." John says in his first epistle, (chap. 1: 2,) that the word of life was manifested; which explains what he meant by the above phrase. The word was made manifest in the flesh. "The flesh," is a term used in scripture to denote human being, and not simple flesh, in the ordinary sense of the word. And Paul declared that Jesus, the son of God, was made of the seed of David. But, says one, Why need we stumble, since it was according to the flesh only, while as to his spirit he had some other origin? Well, that is an assertion that contradicts the facts concerning his origin, so far as it relates to existence prior to his birth. According to the flesh! This does not help the pre-existent theory at all; since that does not deny the previous assertion, he was made of the seed of David. As to his being, he originated out of David's posterity, but as to his nature, it was derived from God, when he was conceived by Mary. But the claim of David's posterity to Christ is only in reference to his origin out of that family, it was only according to the flesh: his origin otherwise identifies him with the whole human family. The doctrine of the incarnation of "another Jesus," cannot be based on Paul's declaration, that Jesus the son of God was made of the seed of David, according to the flesh; since such a Jesus would not have been made of the seed of David, but made into the seed of David; and by a process that must have been very unnatural, and disagreeable to any other being.

But to return. "And the word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." It is abundantly proved by the Scriptures, that Jesus, as a man, was the only begotten son of God; whereas there is not a particle of proof that the word was ever begotten. Hence, there is no sense, propriety, or reason, for understanding the above to teach, that the word is there recognized as the only begotten of the Father. Such a theory would ignore the positive evidence of Christ's peculiar birth, as recorded by Matthew and Luke, and other evidence of a similar character. The word was not begotten: but was manifested in the only begotten, and thus the glory of an indwelling Deity became a glory appended to him. If it had read,—the glory of the only begotten, it might then have been regarded as an explanatory phrase, as identifying the word as the only begotten; but the phraseology is guarded—"The glory as of," or as the Catholic version has it,—"The glory as it were of the only begotten of the Father." The phraseology is therefore appropriate, since it was the son of man, as a man, who was the only begotten; and the Divine glory being manifested in him, became as it were of him. How proper, then, would it be for God, as manifest in him, to declare himself as the great I Am, in saying to the Jews, "Before Abraham was, I AM." But, that these words were not spoken by Christ, of himself, will be shown in another article.

For the Crisis.

Our Statistical Report.

PREPARED BY DANIEL T. TAYLOR.

No. 5.

I. Literature. For the early history of Adventism in this country, as well as notices of its first publications, I refer the reader to Litch's "Rise and Progress of Adventism" in the first number of "The Shield" printed in 1844; also "Memoirs of William Miller." I design to speak more especially of the present, though I will here give some facts which may be of interest in reference to the past.

William Miller's first printed pamphlet of sixty-four pages was issued at Brandon, Vt., 1833. It was reprinted at Syracuse, N. Y., in 1835. His "Lectures" appeared in a 12 mo. of two hundred and twenty-six pages at Troy, N. Y., 1836. How many of these first works on prophecy were printed, I have never learned. In 1840, B. B. Mussey, of Boston, published five thousand of a new and revised edition of the Lectures. The same year Eld. J. V. Himes re-published the Lectures and also started "The Signs of the Times;" and two years later, "The Midnight Cry;" and in June, 1844, the latter journal announced that up to that time, no less than five millions of Adventual papers and other works had been published. I have taken pains to collect of adventual and prophetical papers, fly-sheets, and periodicals printed in this country since thirty years ago, about seventy-one different varieties, which unique specimen volume, the curious reader will find bound and deposited in the library of the "Antiquarian Society" in Worcester, Mass.

In my collection of American writers on prophecy, I count two hundred kinds of books, pamphlets, and tracts, issued by the general Advent body. This does not include the works on Immortality and the Sabbath question put forth among us, but only those relating to prophecy, and the coming and kingdom of Jesus. Of these, sixteen are from the pen of William Miller. Ten or even twenty thousand copies of some of these works have been printed, but if the average number of each were but twenty-five hundred, it would amount to half a million of publications in the last twenty-five years, exclusive of the numerous periodicals and papers. Not all these are now in circulation; many of them pointing to certain dates in the past, and their circulation expired with the passing of those dates. The number now in circulation, from the various publishing offices, is about ninety, both large and small; while the literature now printed, growing out of the so-called question of Life and Death, and the Sabbath, is counted by scores, being numerous. Not all works included in this estimate originated with the Advent body; but a number of works on the prophecies, sold at all our offices, are put forth by writers of other denominations.

Great pains have been taken to obtain and circulate all the best English and American works on the grand themes of Christ's coming and glory, no matter who were the authors; and the valuable works of Dr. Cumming, Dr. Bonar, and others in England, have had a wide circulation by our hands. I have with some difficulty procured the number now printed of the various works which have attracted the most attention in community and been most widely read. See the following table in which the figures set opposite their titles and authors will indicate how many of each have been printed, and show that Adventists have not been at all slow in seeking to disseminate their literature among the community.

LITCH.	Messiah's Throne and Mill. Glory	3,000
BLISS.	Time of the End	1800
"	Memoirs of William Miller	1500
"	Exposition of the Apocalypse	800
FASSETT.	Discourses on the Millennium.	600
TAYLOR.	Voice of the Church or Hist. Mill.	3616
HASTINGS.	Bound Tracts on Prophecy	500
"	The Great Controversy	1820

Besides the two works here mentioned, Eld. H. L. Hastings has printed within the past five years over 160,000 Tracts of the prophetical and practical character, comprising some twenty varieties. How many of this kind have been thrown off from the Herald office during the past ten years, while Eld. Himes was publisher of the paper, it is impossible to tell; but we hazard nothing in estimating them at 100,000.

TURNER.	Present Dispensation, etc	5,000
"	True Israel	5,000
"	Other minor works	9200
THOMAS.	Elpis Israel	2500
"	Anatolia: On Daniel's Prophecy.	3,000
MARSH.	The Age to Come	6,000
"	Other publications, estimated at	10,000
WELLCOME.	Exposition 24th Matthew	1700
"	The Two-horned Beast. Rev. 13.	4,000
WHITE.	Signs of the Times	7,000
"	Prophecy of Daniel in Eng.	8,000
"	Prophecy of Daniel in French	2,000
"	The Saints' Inheritance	2,000
ANDREWS.	The three Angels. Rev. 14th	3,000
ORROCK.	Army of the Great King	875
PREBLE.	The Three Kingdoms	1600

The other minor works on prophecy in circulation from the "Advent Review" and "World's Crisis" offices, including some printed by the editor of "The Bible Examiner," as well as those printed more privately, may be safely estimated at 50,000.

The literature on the doctrine of Immortality and Endless Life now printed and read may be judged of by the following figures:

HUDSON.	Debt and Grace	3000
"	Other Tracts	6500
LITCH & GRANT.	Discussion	3500
GRANT.	Man, Soul, Spirit	12,000
BURNHAM.	Anti-eternal Torment	10,000
TURNER & JONES.	Discussion and other works	16,000
BLAIN.	Death not Life	12,500
"	Glad Tidings	6,900
"	Other minor works	37,000
DOBNEY.	Future Punishment	5,000
GREW.	Works on Life and Death	15,000
HASTINGS.	Pauline Theology	10,000
"	Old Paths	2,000
"	Other minor works	40,000
SHELDON.	Key of Truth	6500
REED & ELLIS.	Bible vs. Tradition	4,000
STORRS & MATTISON.	Discussion	2,000
"	Six Sermons	100,000
HALL.	Man not Immortal	3,000
"	Present Condition, etc	2,000

No works in defence of eternal suffering have emanated from us as a body, save the above "Discussion" by Eld. Litch, together with Litch's "Pneumatologist," and perhaps some others by the same author. With this exception, the chief works of this description, including the above, advocate a literal and eternal second death.

The foregoing, in some few instances, are rough estimates, presented in round numbers and made from facts and figures sent me, but in most cases the figures have been furnished directly by the printer and publisher, and are concise and definite. The figures all speak for themselves, and amply demonstrate the indefatigable activity exhibited by those writers and publishers among us who hold certain peculiar views of man's nature and destiny, as also how earnestly the press has been used to disseminate to all men a knowledge of Christ's coming and kingdom.

A few small works advocating the First-day Sabbath, have been sent out at the East from the Herald office and other publishers, and some few sustaining the free view of holy-days from the Expositor office and from others; but the great majority of Sabbatical works extant, advocate the keeping of the Seventh Day, and have been issued from the publishing office of the "Advent Review and Sabbath Herald" in Michigan. The following will exhibit the circulation of works by the latter, viz:

First day not the Sabbath	10,000
Seventh day is the Sabbath	10,000
Nature and obligation of the Sabbath, etc., in English, Holland, French and German	10,000
The History of the Sabbath	8,000
The Law of God and Testimony, etc	6,003
Perpetuity of the Royal Law	6,000
Other works I estimate at	20,000

These are the works of this class which I am informed "have the most general circulation." The "Review" is the only journal among us holding pre-millennial views and advocating the sanctity of the Seventh Day, and its supporters, though a decided minority, are very devoted, zealous, and active in the promulgation of their peculiar views of the Sunday and Sabbath.

Lines for Meditation.

Beautifully and tenderly wrought out is the comparison of the long suffering of God to the affectionate care of a nurse, in these lines from one of Quarles' Meditations:

"Even as a nurse, whose child's imperfect pace
Can hardly lead his foot from place to place,
Leaves her fond kissing, sets him down to go,
Nor does uphold him for a step or two.
But when she finds that he begins to fall,
She holds him up and kisses him withal;—
So God from man sometimes withdraws his hand
Awhile, to teach his infant faith to stand;
But when he sees his feeble strength begin
To fall, he gently takes him up again."

For the Crisis.

"Blessed are the Meek."

These words were addressed to the disciples of Christ in his Sermon on the Mount, as he sat and taught them the necessity of cultivating those christian graces, without which it was impossible to be his disciples. It will be seen at once, by every comprehensive mind, that no where in Christ's teachings does he ever utter a command, ever make a requisition, ever press home a truth, but he always speaks of the blessed effects of strict obedience to his instructions, and of the direct recompense which is sure to follow. Here was a class of persons, he had not forgotten in his role of christian graces, when he says, "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." In this promise there was no mental reservation; it was as plain to the most ignorant disciple that followed him, as they were sure that they believed it was Christ that uttered it. Meekness is an attribute, without which no man can acceptably appear before God.

Is there any analogy between him who, with a sanctimonious countenance, and eyes uplifted, arises from his seat with a marked solemnity that a lamb driven to the slaughter might envy, and pours forth a cold formula of words, which were it not for the time and place, might be taken for a forensic debate; and him who, in Gethsemane, groaned in spirit, while great drops of sweat trickled to the ground? Is there any analogy between him who, in his exhortations, holds forth an elaborate argument or formal exposition of doctrine, or attempts to chain the attention of his audience by his sublime oratory and beautiful rhetoric; is there any thing in that man which is characteristic of him who hath said, "Give us this day our daily bread?"

This christian grace of meekness is fully developed only in those who are surely and truly born of the Spirit. A great proportion of the human family, who, after the loss of some near and dear one, have donned the garb of mourning, and while the canker of sorrow has been gnawing at their heart-strings, and while the memory of the departed has been kept fresh as the grass above their graves, they may perhaps have felt a certain degree of meek submission to God's will; but as time, with its all-healing panacea closes the wound that death with his ruthless hand has made, the memory of the dead is almost, if not entirely, forgotten, and the heart drinks deep again of worldly passion and earthly joy. But this meekness, this lowliness of heart, occasioned by sorrow, is not that to which Jesus refers in his sermon; but meekness of character, occasioned by regeneration, is the great attribute which characterizes all those who are heirs to that inheritance promised by God.

Meekness occasioned by a forced submission to God's will, is rather suggestive of affliction; hence our Savior says, "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted." But to him who possesses this peculiar nature which Christ referred to when addressing the multitudes, is promised a recompense of a different character; hence he says, "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." When Christ declares, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven," he did not convey the idea that they must be little children, but as little children possessing their peculiar nature, which is characterized by innocence, humility and dependence. When a human being has attained to that point in the system of conviction, where worldly passions give place to heavenly aspiration, there commences a gradual yet sure descent from the pinnacle of earthly ambition, and almost before he is aware of it he is down in the valley of humiliation, sipping of the cup of sin, till he has quaffed its very dregs and is led to cry, I can drink no more, take it away; when he is just here, where he loses all hold on worldly things, when meekness covers him as a garment, and where the cord of worldly hopes snaps asunder, and he cries with Peter, "Lord, save me;" put him just here, and God stretches out his arm, snatches him from the womb of night, and enshrouds him with the new-born glories of a blessed immortality.

There is no philosophical reason to suppose a man will repent of sin, until he is convinced he is sinful. He may have in the abstract a reprehensive conscience; but until that man is fully convinced that he must be regenerated, and that body, soul and spirit in the concrete should be employed in serving God, he can never feel the necessity of repentance.

Like the widow of Sarepta, while she entertained the majestic guest, she found her empty store mysteriously replenished, and while she looked at her famine-stricken boy, and beheld the fair flesh come o'er his wasted limbs like a garment, she mused on her changed lot; yet, to Jehovah's name gave not the praise; but when the silent moon moved forth all radiant on her star-girt throne, she uttered a heathen's gratitude, and hailed in the deep chorus of Sidonian song, "Astarte, queen of heaven!" But then there came a day of wo. That gentle boy, in whom his mother lived, for whom alone she deemed time's weary heritage a blessing, died. And while the tide of passionate grief broke wildly forth from that mother's heart, the prophet came, and from her bosom took the breathless clay and bore it to his chamber. There he knelt in supplication that the dead might live. He arose and looked upon the boy. His marble cheek gave no sign of life. He knelt again in one agonizing, voiceless strife of intercession. Upon the dead once more the prophet gazed. A sob—a shiver from the half-sealed eyes, a flash like morning—and the life came back to its frail tenement. But the soul of her of Sarepta, in that blest hour believed; and with the kindling glow of faith, turned from vain idols to the living God.

So man, as he creeps forth from the slough of poverty and want, and enters the arena of worldly prosperity, forgets that God is the author of this great change, but rather imputes his success to his own personal exertion; and yet he may not see through what labyrinth he has worked his way to affluence. But he is there, and is thankful; yet God gets not the glory. There must be a more powerful display of God's direct agency; like Thomas, not satisfied with seeing, he must feel the print of the nails, and thrust his hand into his side.

Paul, in his epistle to the Ephesians 4: 1—3, says, "I therefore, a prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Paul, in addressing the Ephesians, did not convey the idea that these attributes were at all being [illegible] out in their nature, but all of them [illegible] a character that embodying them and amalgamating them, must become a necessity in order to produce the desired result [illegible] ly, keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Again, Col. 3: 12: "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering." Mindful as man may be, of the [illegible] this great attribute in his [illegible] knowledge of its necessity [illegible] an unceasing desire for its possession while he urges its [illegible] [illegible] hat all reforms, no matter whence their origin, no matter whether eighteen hundred years of time's transmigration has demonstrated, that heathen philosophy is not christian practice; no matter, I say, whether they spring forth from the light of God's word, or not, if they are to be looked upon in an abstract point of view, they regard them as garbled proofs, poured from the same [illegible] of nonsense that contains everything except their theological mirror; hence to get rid of the horrid dogma, as they call it, they exclaim, oh consistency, thou art a jewel!

But there is a class of people who [illegible] [illegible]

Considering the importance of this attribute, I hope that these remarks on the belief of the truth, and the detection of error, shall not appear to be misplaced, nor be altogether useless.

I will now, once more, advert to the fundamental proposition, that meekness to be beneficial must be active, and not merely speculative. It is a dreadful error, to suppose that Jesus came to save men from the punishment of sin, without redeeming them also from its power, or that he hath gone to heaven to prepare a place for them, without, at the same time, preparing them for that place. If benevolence is the great giant temple of these great principles, so meekness is the chief corner stone of the whole superstructure, as well as the culminating germ of all christian philosophy. As these considerations should become serious with all, so from their vital worth they should prove profitable in perfecting us against that day that shall usher us in upon the untried scenes of another world.

O, may we be clad in the garment of meekness, which shall effect for us an entrance to that great feast of tabernacles, that immortal banquet by His side, where there is no betrayer. C. G. Carre.

Blackstone, Mass.

☞ We have been requested to insert the following from the Expositor.

Discussion at Buchanan, Mich.

Bro. Marsh:—I embrace the first opportunity of writing you an account of the discussion which was held at Buchanan, Mich., Dec. 6, 7, 8, between Elder P. S. Russell and myself.

The questions under discussion were,

1. Resolved, That the kingdom of God spoken of in Daniel 2: 7, was set up in the day of the Roman Cæsars.

2. Resolved, That in death there is an entire cessation of the conscious existence of man, until his resurrection therefrom.

Elder Russell affirmed on the first resolution, and I on the second. The debate lasted three days and two nights, during which time seventeen speeches were delivered on either side.

Elder Russell is considered the champion of the so-called "Reformation" in the Western States. Elder. R. has always been considered, so far as I could learn, the ablest debater of the Disciple churches of the West, and we consider that he did as well as any man that they could have selected, in sustaining skykingdomism and ghostology.

On the first proposition he labored hard to show that the kingdom was set up on the day of Pentecost, at which time Christ was crowned king, etc. His first remarks were that the Bible brought to view two kingdoms; one was the kingdom of Daniel, which was during the time of its existence, the kingdom of God. But he argued that it had been abolished as a kingdom never more to exist.

We showed from the prophets that God had not cast away that kingdom forever, but simply was to overturn it, till he comes whose right it is, when God will give it him. We then went on to show that Jesus was the person specified in the promise. Please read Ezek. 12: 25, 27; Isa. 9: 6; Luke 1: 31–33; Acts 2: 30. Elder R. having admitted that Daniel's kingdom was the kingdom of God, it was easy to show that a restoration of that kingdom would constitute the kingdom of God, and here we identified the kingdom of Israel with the kingdom of God spoken of in Dan. 2., which to our mind completely overthrew Elder R.'s position of a church kingdom.

In his second speech he went on to prove that the kingdom was nigh at hand in the days of Christ's first advent, and hence it must be evident that the kingdom was set up on the day of Pentecost, or thereabouts, for he argued that after Christ ascended to his Father, there was nothing of the kind preached, which, as he maintained, was demonstrated evidence that the kingdom must have been set up at or near the day of Pentecost.

In reply to this point, we showed that when the kingdom of Babylon was in power, Medo-Persia was at hand, or the next in order, and when Rome was in power, the next kingdom at hand, would be the kingdom of God, for it was to succeed the fourth kingdom of earth, according to Daniel's prophecy, and was to be just as literal and real. After he was driven from this position, he brought Micah 3 and 4, to show that the kingdom was set up in the last days of Judah's commonwealth.

In reply to this, we proved that the last days were subsequent to the plowing of Zion as a field; which event took place, A. D. 70. Hence the prophecy could not possibly apply to the days of Pentecost, for Zion had not been plowed as a field then, and was not till forty years after the day of Pentecost. But the prophecy requires the fulfillment of the establishment of the Lord's house subsequent to the plowing of Zion as a field; and further, we proved that the house of Jacob brought to view in Micah 4: 2, was the kingdom of Israel under the dominion of the Messiah, which establishes the fact that the kingdom of God and the kingdom of Israel are identical, etc.

He quoted Micah 4., and referred to Acts 2, as a fulfillment, but he demonstrated that all nations were not gathered on the day of Pentecost, but simply a few Jews who were devout men, not of every nation, which was a fair confutation of his position. The next texts upon which he based his arguments were Col. 1: 13; Rev. 1: 9.

On the first text we gave the following translation, and it was not overthrown though several efforts were made. The text can be fairly rendered thus, "who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and changed us for the kingdom of the Son of his love," or, "hath changed us in order to the kingdom, etc.

Every scheme was made to subvert this translation, but to no purpose. This view of the text clearly answered the objection urged from the preposition, "into."

On Rev. 1: 9, we gave Wakefield's translation; "I John, your brother and sharer with you in enduring the affliction of the kingdom of Jesus Christ." After Elder R. was driven from these passages, he then went into an argument on the increase of the kingdom from the day of Pentecost, till the present time. As a basis of his argument he referred to Isa. 9: 6–8. Here we demonstrated that it was Daniel's kingdom to be increased, under the Messiah, David's royal Son.

From this point it was entire repetition of the foregoing positions. And we took the liberty to show that the fifth kingdom could not be set up till the fourth empire had made a decem-manifestation of its kingly power, which was about five hundred years after the first advent of Christ, and that those kingdoms were still in existence unsubdued by the kingdom of God.

According to the Disciples' view, sinners, instead of the saints, take the fact that they are baptized into the kingdom, whereas the Scriptures most clearly show that the saints take the kingdom at the expiration of Gentile rule.

Again, it was shown that the disciples of Jesus were heirs and not possessors of the kingdom. James 2: 5. We also showed that the church was called to inherit the kingdom at the time Christ comes in his glory, which could not be true if they were already in the kingdom and had been for 1800 years. The foregoing simply presents an outline of the leading positions taken in the discussion of the kingdom question.

With regard to the second question, I would only state that Elder R. brought forward the same class of texts which are usually presented by those who believe in the conscious state of the dead. We trust that every objection was fairly met, and answered to the satisfactian of the auditory.

Elder R. was so hard driven that he denied Job as a witness in the case, and said Solomon was not inspired when he said man died as do the beasts, as brought to view in Eccl. 3: 18, 21. We told the audience that we came to debate with a man who believes his Bible, but found that it was necessary to prove the authenticity of the Scriptures, in order to give authority to our testimony. His failure was apparent to all. When a man denies the Bible, or parts of it, to evade the force of testimony, it is good evidence to me that his case has lost its charms to him. The debate closed with the best of feelings, and we believe much good has resulted from the same.

The discussion was well attended by the citizens of Buchanan, and they gave the best attention to the arguments on both sides. We have never been permitted to pass through a debate more pleasantly than through this. May the effort redound to the glory of God and aid in building up the truths of the gospel.

I have been brief in the notice of this discussion from the fact that most of the brethren are familiar with the arguments on either side. And we know the debate has done good to many that attended it, and here we leave the matter, believing that it was overruled for good by our heavenly Father.

Your brother in hope of life.

H. V. Reed.

Bro. Marsh:—I read the foregoing sketch of this debate between P. T. Russell and H. V. Reed to the congregation in Buchanan, whose sentiments were defended by Reed, and they endorsed it as a faithful sketch, and authorized me to send it to you for publication. Bro. Reed is a young man, a fine speaker, gentlemanly in debate, quick for a thought, and well posted in the prophecies concerning the reign of Messiah on David's throne, over Judah, Israel and the nations. The cause of truth is safe in his hands, and he ought to be well sustained by the lovers of the truth, for he is worthy.

Your brother waiting for the kingdom of God.

J. W. R. Lurie.

Buchanan, Mich., Jan. 6, 1860.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 8, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 7.

We will now continue our examination of the fourth division of "Doubting Castle."

12. We pass to the twelfth apartment. Here we find the following:

It is said of a dead person, that when Jesus raised her to life, "her spirit came again."

But it is the same word that is translated breath, and is thus rendered by the "Improved Version" of the New Testament, published in London about fifty years since; also by Thompson, the "Emphatic Diaglott," and by Wakefield. We find no proof in the Bible that any thing but "the breath of life," which was breathed into man's nostrils, leaves him at death.

The account in Luke does not say that she came again and went into the body, but the spirit or breath, "and she arose straightway." The return of the "breath of life" caused her to live again. Here we found no proof that the spirit or breath exists as a conscious entity between death and the resurrection.

13. We will now take a look into the thirteenth section. This is so like the last, that it needs but a moment's time to illuminate this room with the light of truth. Here we read the following:—

"It is said of Christ, in the Greek New Testament, when he had said this, he dismissed his spirit."—Landis.

Mr. Landis is one who is deeply interested in sustaining "Doubting Castle," and takes great pains to make the pilgrims contented in this gloomy abode. He has spared no effort to make every thing in the "Castle" appear as well as possible. He is one of the principal managers, and there has been considerable talk of making him the next President of the institution. He has set forth the passage under consideration in the best light he could, to favor the sentiments maintained in "Doubting Castle." But we saw that even his rendering afforded nothing to prove that a conscious spirit was dismissed, being our Savior, instead of him who hung upon the cross. When "he dismissed his spirit," he did not dismiss himself. He still remained upon the cross as a sacrifice for sins. The spirit dismissed is in the neuter gender, and therefore was not Christ himself, the Lord of glory.

The passage is found in Lk. 23: 46. It reads as follows: "Having said this, he gave up the ghost." The phrase "gave up the ghost" is from expneo, which is compounded of ek, meaning "from out of," and pneo, "to breathe, to blow, as the wind." Expneo is defined, "to breathe out, to expire, die."—Greenfield. Liddell & Scott define it as follows: "To breathe out, or forth," "make an end of," "to breathe one's last, expire, to die."

The same event is recorded in Mk. 15: 37. It reads as follows: "And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost." Thompson, Mace, Sawyer, Campbell, Wesley, Wakefield, Whiting and the Syriac read, "expired," instead of "gave up the ghost," or "dismissed his spirit," as rendered by Landis. "Expired" gives the true meaning of the original.

It is said of Christ, "He took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham."—Heb. 2: 16. "And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."—Phil. 2: 8. "Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren."—Heb. 2: 17. As Christ took upon him our nature and died, he died as we do. He breathed out the spirit or breath and expired; "but God raised him from the dead."—Acts 13: 30. After his ascension to his Father, he says: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore."—Rev. 1: 18. This is positive proof that the personal identity, known as the Son of God, our Savior, actually died; but now lives to die no more. This shows beyond controversy, that the spirit, or breath, which he breathed out, was not himself, any more than is "the breath of life" in the nostrils of man; hence, we saw clearly that there was nothing in this section to prove that man has a spirit that lives on as a conscious entity when he is dead.

We will leave this section and pass on to Division V. Here Bro. Burnham found the following:—

"The Jewish nation were forbidden by Jehovah to consult with 'the dead.' (14.) Why were they not told that the thing is impossible? (15.) Why were they left to infer that such a thing might be done? The very prohibition shows that some did consult with the dead—does not intimate that it is a farce—but simply states that it is criminal." (16.)

When we read this proposition, we saw that it had a strong point, well calculated to awaken doubts concerning the sleep of the dead. Truly, we thought, why should the Lord forbid his people from consulting with the dead, when such a thing was impossible? But judge of our surprise, when we found that this was only another assertion forged by the managers of "Doubting Castle," and that the Lord had made no such prohibition. We now come to the full conclusion, that we must not expect to find any thing truthful in "Doubting Castle," and that it was truly erected in opposition to the interests of the King of kings, and we longed for the time to come when the old "earth" should share the fate of "Babylon the Great,"—"be utterly burned with fire." May the Lord soon say, "Come out of her, my people." This "Castle" seems to join hard upon the old Roman inquisition, and was evidently built by the same company, who have leased a part of it to Protestants, who have fitted up their portion in very elegant style, for the accommodation of those who pretend to have visits from departed human spirits.

When we showed the conductors of "Doubting Castle" that their statement in section fourteen was a forgery, they seemed to care but little about it. They had become so callous with misrepresentation and deception, that remorse for such wickedness had long since departed. They seemed determined to sustain the "Castle" at all hazards. It was perfectly evident they cared nothing about "the way of truth," only to fill it with error, and perplex the faithful pilgrims.

Let us now look at their perversion of the Scriptures of truth. The passage on which they found proposition fourteen is in Isa. 8: 19–20, and reads as follows: "And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter; should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." The expression, "for the living to the dead," is somewhat elliptical and obscure; but taken as it is, it affords no proof that the Lord forbade their seeking information of the dead, with the idea that those who sought of such could get it; but asks them why they sought intelligence from such a source, implying there is none to be obtained. Dr. Clarke renders the passage: "Why should you seek unto the dead concerning the living?" This gives the true idea. There is no use in seeking unto the dead to get information concerning the living, because none can be obtained.

The Septuagint, by Thompson, reads as follows: "If they should say to you, 'Apply to the belly speakers (Greek, Ventriloquists,) and to them who cause a voice to proceed from the ground;' those vain babblers who speak from the belly, should not a nation apply to their God? Why consult the dead concerning the living?"

Let us now look a moment at section fifteen. Here we read, "Why were they not told the thing is impossible?" Indeed, they were told so, as has been most positively shown in examining the first Division.

Again, it is asked, "Why were they left to infer that such a thing might be done?" They were not thus left; for they were expressly told hundreds of years before Isaiah wrote, that "that the dead know not any thing." Hence the folly of trying to get any information from the dead. For this reason they are asked, "Why consult the dead concerning the living?"

The Jews were forbidden to consult familiar spirits, or demons; but never forbidden to consult the dead. These demons pretended then, as now, to be departed human spirits, for the purpose of making the inhabitants of our world believe that their leader told the truth, when he said, "Ye shall not surely die." They, evidently, have a home in "Doubting Castle." Let all beware of their devices.

Pilgrim Notes.

Tuesday, Jan. 17th, we left Boston for Castleton, Vt., where we had the privilege of addressing a large and attentive audience, at the Town Hall. Our discussion in this place, about a year since, with Mr. Cutting, a Universalist preacher, has resulted in awakening in the minds of the people, an anxiety to hear more relative to the great truths taught in the Bible, which are now taking deep root in many honest hearts. The people have ears to hear. The Sabbath before we came, a popular minister in the place took occasion to warn his flock against our influence, but a large number disregarded the warning, and, like true men, came and heard before they passed judgment.

We found an excellent home in Bro. Graham's kind family. May the Lord reward him for his labors of love to a weary pilgrim.

Wednesday, 18th inst., Bro. Graham took us to Poultney to see our dear Bro. and Sr. Howell, with whom we had a most happy visit. They are pleasantly situated, and highly esteemed by the faithful church of which Bro. H. is pastor. He is the right man in the right place. Their meetings are excellent. I learned that two requested prayers at their last meeting. Poultney is one of the oases in earth's dreary waste. May it continue so till Jesus comes. Bro. and Sr. Howell returned with us to Castleton, and remained till Saturday evening, rendering efficient aid in our meetings. We felt thankful to the Lord for permitting us to have this happy interview together. A large number of Brn. and Srs. came from Poultney to assist in our meetings. By the blessing of the Lord, a very deep interest has been awakened in this place, which we hope may be of long continuance. The work is, apparently moving about the same as at the commencement of the one in Poultney. Several asked questions at the close of our sermons, unsuccessfully endeavoring to show that our position was unscriptural. Truth ever shines the brighter the more closely it is examined. Thus it was in this case. We felt like praising the Lord for a hope that can not be picked in pieces by quibbling skeptics, or obscured by caviling sectarians. The people saw there is a wide difference between the Bible and the popular theology of the day, and consequently, both cannot be true. Though reproach should come from bigoted professors, who have "a form of godliness" and deny the power thereof," some have resolved to bear it for Christ's sake, and embrace the truth. We hope Castleton will not be forgotten in the prayers of the faithful.

Monday, 23d, we left C. for Rutland, in company with Bro. Howell. Although it was nearly 3 o'clock when we arrived, Bro. Batchelor persuaded Bro. H. to preach in the evening, and by a little effort notice was given sufficiently to secure a large congregation of people, who listened with deep interest to a very instructive and comforting discourse. The church in R. is prospering under the faithful labors of Bro. Batchelor. The congregations are increasing in numbers and interest.

Tuesday, 24th, we visited Deacon Smith, who was just alive. He has long been a faithful follower of Christ, bearing the burden and heat of the day, with a christian fidelity and perseverance rarely exhibited in these last days. During our meetings at R., he saw, embraced, and boldly confessed the great Bible truth of life only through Christ.

The Discussion with Ballou.

Our discussion with Mr. Eli Ballou, editor of the Christian Repository, is successfully closed. It was held at the Town Hall in Waterbury, Vt. We had a very crowded house of deeply interested listeners. We discussed three evenings and one afternoon. The question read: "Do the Scriptures teach that any part of mankind will be destroyed after they are raised from natural or physical death." Mr. Ballou is considered a great champion for the Universalist faith, one of their most able disputants. We shall not give any report, as Bro. Howell was present and took notes, and will soon give a synopsis of the arguments.

"Anti-Tobacco Journal."—This is a valuable Journal, published by Geo. Trask, Fitchburg, Mass. The following are his reasons for publishing this Journal. We bid him God speed in this enterprise. Just such a work is needed.

Reasons for Publishing this Work.

Ten years ago I was a victim of Tobacco, —a tremulous, haggard clergyman, on the verge of the grave. I relinquished the poison; God smiled upon me, and I have been a robust and active man since; as all who know me can testify.

Believing then, as I now do, that Tobacco is as great a curse as can be named, I gave myself to battling it without compromise.

I have seen very much of the destructive effects of this great narcotic. I have written books and tracts, preached and lectured extensively against it; and now, through the pages of this Journal, I purpose more fully to speak that I do know, and testify that I have seen.

My views are regarded as radical. Radical or otherwise, I shall not deal in any superficial way with this enormous evil, but shall show that the raising, selling, and using of Tobacco, is a sin against God, and a mighty obstacle to the conversion of men and the salvation of the world.

1. Such a Journal will give a permanent form to a great amount of Anti-Tobacco material which I have been accumulating for ten years; this material now lies in the shape of Statistics, Facts, Anecdotes, Manuscript Lectures, Tracts and Letters—which, if presented to the public as "permanent documents," would urge on reform, and accomplish much good.

2. Such a Journal might give some record of the current ravages of Tobacco, and assure our contemporaries and posterity that we are not utterly insensible to one of the great scourges which now afflict our race; that we have done what we could.

3. As many Clergymen and other gentlemen have dropped Tobacco within a few years, they have something to say about it; many of them are ready to give some account of their conversion, if in so doing they can rescue others from a Tyrant which once held them in bondage. Such testimony we need; such a Journal can appropriately publish it.

4. Such a Journal, should it contain reliable Statistics and stirring Facts,—should its chapters be short, pithy, and abounding with anecdotes,—would be read; many of its statements would find a place in newspapers and other publications, and, with the blessing of God, would do much for a reform now struggling into existence.

With the prayers and patronage of here and there a generous and good man of progressive spirit and bearing, I give this Journal to the public, I launch this humble craft; and, nailing the flag to the mast, —God helping me,—whether it be one year or twenty, you will find me, my reader, battling this enemy till I die.

☞ Assurance is glory in the bud; it is the suburbs of Paradise; it is a cluster of the land of promise; it is a spark of God; it is the joy and crown of a christian; how great, therefore, is their impiety and folly who deny assurance, or who cry it down, under any names or notions whatsoever.

Our Tract Column.

For the Crisis.

The Light Ship.

This is the name which I have given the tract which I am preparing for our seamen, and which when securely moored and her lantern illuminated, will, I trust, throw a light, steady and clear, revealing the shoals and sunken rocks upon which so many have been lost; and also the deep but narrow channel which leads into a good anchorage, and the secure harbor of eternal rest.

The plan of dialogue which I have adopted, has been approved by those of our preachers whom I have consulted, as the best mode of introducing the vital truths of our faith to the sailor's understanding. Yet it has many difficulties which would not at first appear, as, in pursuing the conversations, questions arise in my own mind and which I put into the mouth of the questioner, which set me thinking and examining for a satisfactory answer, and delay me not a little. The fear that I might hazard an opinion which was not truly in accordance with scripture, and which might lead into a fatal error, makes me go on much more cautiously than if I were writing an every day article. I have laid, as it were, my keel, and raised the stem and sternpost, all of which is good, solid oak. Now every timber in this ship must be carefully examined as to its soundness, perfectly free from the sap and dry rot of modern sophistry or "antiquated superstition." Then all must be squared and fitted by the Word, from keelson to rail, from head to tafferel. All done according to the gospel of the kingdom. Having undertaken this task, it behooveth me to seek help from God, that he may enlighten my mind and guide my hands, that the work may redound to his glory in the salvation of sinners generally, but of sailors in particular. I do not think I can get the matter condensed into a 32 page tract, nor will I try to do so, if I find that I require more room. I wish to make it such as shall answer the purpose for which it is written.

I hope the friends and brethren will not deem me tardy, as I shall get along as fast as possible, considering the delays, frequent difficulties which I meet, and the short time which I can devote nightly to its compilation. Be patient, my friends, and help me with your prayers, and in the Lord's good time the work will be accomplished. I have not the slightest fear in regard to the funds, as I have now received about half which I expect to require for its publication.

Since I wrote last I have received the following monies, viz: from A Friend, 50 cts., N. B., $1.00, Moses Smith $1.00, J. T. Howland, $1.00, A. W. Taylor, $1.00, P. Tandy, 50 cts., O. N. Harvey, 50 cts., I. D., $2.00, and $5.00 from W. A. Smyth of Worcester. I would gladly publish the kind words which accompanied these donations, but I do not feel at liberty to occupy too large a space in the columns which even now are too limited for the words of wisdom and truth which are crowding for insertion. For the assistance which has already been extended, receive my sincere thanks,—for that which is to come, I trust in God. With another earnest desire that you will still remember me in your prayers, I am, dear friends, yours faithfully.

Jno. F. Cotton.

For the Crisis.

Answer to Questions by Bro. Fenn.

Dear Bro.:—In endeavoring to answer your questions, I shall tell you what I understand to be truth. If in this matter you or others differ from me, that difference shall never, the grace of God helping me, cause me to love you any the less. The ruling principle in my heart is now, and ever shall be, love to God and all mankind. I would to God that this principle might abound more and more.

To your first question I answer: I think that the abomination of desolation (Matt. 24: 15) and the abomination that maketh desolate (Dan. 11: 31, and 12: 11,) are identical. Other good brethren, however, think differently. If on this point they are right and I am wrong; with the position these brethren take, there can be found no objection in this prophecy to my argument on time. Please note one fact: the main features of the argument on time, as published in my tract, are unaffected by any position that can be taken on the 24th chapter of Matthew.

In answering your first question I have answered the second; for if the abomination of desolation here spoken of is that power commonly denominated the Papacy; it follows, as a matter of course, that the tribulation on the church must come in consequence of setting up that power.

To your third question, I answer, No. Let me explain: This tribulation is of a peculiar character. It is such a tribulation as never was to that time, and never should be after it. In speaking of this matter, the Son of God says (Mark 13: 24) that the sun shall be darkened in those days, yet after the tribulation. Now if our former position be correct, viz: that the 1290 days are shortened by the 1260, it follows as a matter of course that the days here spoken of in which the sun was to be darkened, must be shortened days. It would look like an inconsistency, to me, to suppose that Christ would say that God had shortened those days, and then go on talking about them just as though they had not been shortened. The conclusion, then, is inevitable, that if our former position as named above, be correct, the sun must have been darkened in the 1260 days, yet after that great tribulation, such as never was, had been passed by the church.

If on the other hand, as some good brethren believe, the great tribulation was shortened by the Reformation under Martin Luther, the matter is settled, of course, that this tribulation must have stopped short of the ending of any of the periods in Daniel or Revelation. With any position, then, that has ever been taken by us as a people which has not proved itself incorrect, I am most fully sustained in saying that the tribulation of Matt. 24: 15 ended before the abomination of desolation. When we consult the entire prophetic plan, as contained in Daniel, Matt., Mark and Rev., we make the following points, viz:

1. The entire church is to pass through a great persecution which is to continue for many days. See Dan. 11: 35.

2. After the many days are ended, she is to be holpen with a little help. But notwithstanding the help afforded her, yet (v. 35) some of the church are to fall by persecution all the way down to the time of the end. Thus, this great persecution on the entire church for many days, does not continue down to the time of the end, but stops short of it thirty years at least; and from the point where these many days end, the persecution continues down to the time of the end in a very much diminished form.

3. I have proved in the tract on time that the time of the end commenced in 1815, where the abomination that maketh desolate ended, and the 1290 years of its existence terminated.

4. Consequently, the great tribulation, such as never was, of Matt. 24: 15, must have ended previous to the termination of the 1290 days. The facts in history are as follows: Martin Luther commenced advocating a system of truth and moral equity, the triumph of which established free toleration throughout the Roman Empire in 1815. This, however, was a progressive work. Accordingly we find that in 1774, Maria Theresa, Empress of Germany and Queen of Austria, commenced a system of religious and political reform, which resulted in the abolition of the torture in the hereditary states, and the circumscribing of the power of the Inquisition within very narrow limits in Italy, as early as 1778. Austria was the sixth head on which the woman sat, and consequently she exercised a controlling influence throughout those countries in the interest of the Pope of Rome. The consequence was, this persecution was never so great after this point of of time. In 1780, the sun was darkened in fulfillment of Matt. 24: 29. In 1785, Francis Joseph of Austria deprived the papal Nuncios of all authority in Germany, which ended the 1260 days. Thus, whether we take one or the other of the positions named above, the sun was literally darkened in the 1260 days, yet after the great tribulation had passed.

Thus I have endeavored to answer your questions. And if any others should be asked in the same spirit of love manifested in your request under consideration, I will endeavor to answer them as well as I can. Yours in christian love, expecting eternal life this year. S. W. Bishop.

For the Crisis.

The Pre-existence of Christ.

In answering Bro. Perry's request through the paper, I need do but little more than repeat a few passages of the Word.

"In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God. The same was in the beginning with God; All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. . . . He was in the world, and the world was made by him. . . . And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us." See John 1.

In this passage we see that Christ in the beginning was called the Word. This was the name by which he was called. He and his name are not one and the same thing, any more than any other being and the name of that being are the same. Word, is the name by which Christ was called. And it is one of the names by which he was called since he was on earth. Rev. 19: 13.—"And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called The Word of God." This person whom John saw in vision, was called the Word of God. Word being only the name by which he was distinguished. So far all is plain, that Christ, who was called the Word, was in the beginning with God. And he was God, with God the Father in the creation at the beginning. Neither is it any robbery for Christ to be called God. "For unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, oh God, is forever and ever." And surely, if God has called his son God, John might with propriety say that he was God in the beginning.

This being called the Word, who was with God the Father, became flesh and dwelt among us. John 3: 17.—"For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." It would seem that he was somebody before he was sent. At least, this would be the most natural way to understand such a plain passage. John 6: 33.—"For the bread of heaven is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." If he came down from heaven, he was there to come down. "For I came down from heaven." The I was there to come down. Chap. 8: 42.—"For I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me." He must have been there to have been sent. Chap. 13: 3.—"And that he was come from God, and went to God." He that came from God went to God. Chap. 16: 28.—"I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again I leave the world and go to the Father." The same I that came from the Father went back to the Father, after having taken on him the seed of Abraham, as elsewhere noticed. Chap. 17: 5.—"And now, oh Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Jesus prayed to be glorified with the glory he had with the Father before the world was. Surely we must say that he prayed understandingly; and if so, he knew what glory that was, that he had before the world was; and to know that he must have been with the Father, a conscious being. Or did he know of glory that he had, before he had any existence? 2 Cor. 8: 9.—"For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich." Christ was rich, and he became poor. Then there was a time when this change took place. The first that we know of him in this world, he was poor. Then before he came into this world he was rich. If he was rich, he was there to be rich; and if so, then he did exist as a being before he came into this world. Or was he rich before he had any existence? Col. 1: 15.—"Who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature; for by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him and for him." The him they were created for, is the him who created them. Or did he create all things before he was, or before he was created? He said, "Before Abraham was I am."

These are some of the passages which make it plain to my mind, that Christ had a being before he came into this world. If these do not prove it, it cannot be proved. If an effort were made to prove his pre-existence, I do not see that language any more to the point could be used. To say that Christ was in the beginning, but not there as a being, in view of such scriptures as I have cited, is to lay a rule by which all the Bible that is a subject of faith, may be considered mystical, that is, not as we read it. To me, it is as certain that Christ had a being before he came here, as that God the Father had a being. The Bible reveals a Savior, who was, and who is, and who is to be,—the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace.

J. S. White.

Correspondence.

From P. B. Morgan.

Bro. Grant:—I am happy to say that we have not been wholly disappointed in our labors; have now seen the brethren much revived. I have baptized forty, while there are yet others contemplating the duty. The brethren on Stillwell Prairie have organized themselves into a church, which, when completed, will probably number some fifty, who are already rejoicing in the truth. They contemplate building a house of worship the coming summer, should time last. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy."

Union Mills, Ind., Jan. 3d, '60.

From Bro. Benja. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—May grace, mercy and peace be multipled to you and to the brethren generally, who love the Lord Jesus and his appearing. I thought it good to acquaint the brethren generally of my whereabouts, my prospects and success. I am still in the field, still find enough to do; yes, blessed be God, and a heart to do it; still I enjoy labor in the cause of God and my fellow men. My health remains good, and my spirits too. Depression, that natural infirmity of my nature, has not troubled me for many months. Since I wrote before, I have visited eight towns, and given from two to seven lectures in each town, and visited more than a hundred families. Have had a lecture most every evening; have scattered many tracts on the peculiar doctrines of the Advent faith.

I have had very candid hearers, and found many interesting cases of inquirers for the truth; have pointed many to Jesus as the Savior of sinners, and to the doctrines and truths of his word, in relation to his coming kingdom, the resurrection, the state of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, the inheritance of the saints, the signs of the times, etc., etc. I find many are led into these truths by the Spirit and the Word, who have never heard these subjects preached upon. The truth is spreading rapidly in this eastern State.

There are but very few Advent preachers in this part of Maine, and yet the truth is fast gaining ground. Here is a very large field for labor. There are several counties where I do not know of a single Advent preacher, and yet they would be received kindly and used hospitably almost every where, and in almost any neighborhood I can get up a meeting and have a candid hearing and find hospitable usage.

Why don't some of our Advent brethren come down east into this large field all ready for the harvest, or perhaps I should say, all ready to receive the seed of gospel truth? I cannot promise them great pay. Perhaps they would not get as much salary as brother Paul did. I am contented with a much less salary. Paul got thirty-nine lashes at two different times—was imprisoned, and stoned all but to death—was in perils by sea and perils by land—in perils among robbers and in perils among false brethren. I have never been whipped, nor imprisoned, nor stoned. I have been in many perils by sea and land, and among those of whom I expected better things; but having obtained help of God I continue unto this day, still willing to suffer, willing to labor, willing to spend and be spent.

And for the encouragement of other brethren, let me give an account of my expenses the last five months. I started out with $25, and have spent five months in travelling, visiting and lectures. During this time I have traveled seven hundred and sixty miles, visited eight hundred and ten families, given one hundred and twenty-eight lectures, and written one hundred and sixty-two letters. And all this expense has come out of that $25. Now the brethren will see that missionary labor does not after all need to cost so much as many think for, and if one with such moderate means can sustain a missionary in the field, it does seem as though more ought to be sent out.

Now come, brethren, ye who love Jesus and his appearing, ye whose hearts burn with fervent love to Jesus and your fellow men, consecrate your hearts to God anew, yes, and property too. Remember by-gone days, when you were willing to give all for Jesus; was not that consecration a blessed one? Try it again, cast yourself upon the Lord, lean upon his strong arm, trust in him, and launch out into the great field; take a Bible in your pocket, and a staff in your hand,—you don't need any horse or carriage. No, I know by experience, you will be much better off without. I have thanked God many times, I had no horse with me; many would rejoice to put you up, who could not conveniently put up your horse. Call at every house, especially the houses of the poor, you will be gladly received; you will find hearts ready to be instructed; you will find great hospitality and kindness, and room enough everywhere for all your labors, and grateful hearts, too. You would be growing in knowledge, as well as in grace, and your feet would be like hinds' feet, your soul like the chariot of Aminadab, and through your God you would run through a troop, and through your God you would leap over a wall. Try it, brethren, as I have, and you will find it so. If you need, you will find brethren ready to supply your need; I never have lacked for any good thing. I have seen the time once and again, and again, when I had to borrow, but always found those who were ready to let me have what I wanted. You might occasionally take up a collection, if you needed, but as a general thing, I object to it, for people will say, money is your object. I want to take away every objection. I never have one taken for me, but accept all freewill offerings.

The people in these eastern counties are generally poor, but open-hearted, kind and hospitable. Come, brethren, I know there are hundreds who are well able, well qualified too, for this work. Come, enter the field; time is short; what you do must be done quickly; thousands are ready to hear, doors are open, ears are open, everything around invites you to come; and he that reaps shall receive wages, and gather fruit to eternal life.

I would say, I hope to visit the brethren in N. H., in a few weeks, the Lord willing. Pray for me. I remain your brother in Christ.

Amherst, Me., Dec. 26th.

For the Crisis.

Report of the Rhode Island Conference.

Conference met according to adjournment, Bro. E. Bellows presiding. As the clerk was not present, some brother (I think Eld. Geo. Champlin,) proposed that, as some persons were propagating in this State the doctrine called the "non-resurrection of the wicked," we discuss the following question: Do the Scriptures teach that the wicked will have a resurrection to conscious life? Was adopted, and discussed through the afternoon and Thursday forenoon, by several brethren.

Thursday, P. M., a business session, Bro. Bellows in the chair. Prayer was offered. Bro. E Bellows was re-elected Moderator for the ensuing year; J. D. Brown, Clerk; J. P. Babcock, Treasurer; when the conference adjourned as a business meeting, to meet again on the last Wednesday in March, 1860, at Peacedale; or, if not received there, at Providence, R. I., New Market Hall. After this the brethren resumed the question under discussion, and continued it until Friday noon, at the regular hours of the conference. At the close of the session of Friday forenoon, the following resolution was adopted unanimously:—

Resolved, that without wishing to be dogmatical, we as a conference express our conviction, that a doctrine known as the "non-resurrection of the wicked to life," which is being propagated in our State, is not biblical, and as such does not receive our approbation or support; but, on the contrary, does receive our disapprobation heartily expressed herein; yet we love those who thus believe, who give us good reason to believe they are christians, by a well ordered life and a godly conversation.

The brethren then voted the discussion of the question of the "Age to Come" in the afternoon, and adjourned to meet at 2 o'clock, P. M.

P. M., 2 o'clock, met according to adjournment, Bro. Bellows presiding. Prayer was offered. The following question was adopted for discussion: Do the Scriptures teach that there will be probation for any people after the second coming of Christ? which was discussed till near 5 o'clock. Adjourned.

The meetings of the conference have been very instructing, and spiritually beneficial. This report was read and adopted at the close of the conference.

Jos. D. Brown, Clerk.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Lakeport, Madison Co., N. Y., Harriet M., daughter of James A. and Eliza A. Brazee, aged thirteen years.

She was the only daughter of our beloved Bro. and Sr. Brazee, and the stroke falls heavily. It is little over two years since they embraced the hope as revealed in the Bible; and this hope, which is like an anchor to the soul, serves to bind up the breach that death has made. Harriet was a child beloved by all; and her loss will not only be felt by those nearly connected, but by many neighbors and friends. Although her sickness was that of consumption, ending in the congestion of the brain, yet for weeks she bore it patiently. Her hand was ever found busy in selecting, making, and placing in every secret corner and book, marks which only tend now to bring her fresh to the memory of those who loved her; and, if possible, to rivet more lastingly than ever upon their minds, that sweet disposition, that heaven-born principle (love) which seemed to dwell richly in her heart, as well as the ingenuity of that hand now palsied by death. One of the choice selection which was made by her own hand, (which we publish below by request of the parents,) seems to speak the sentiments of that youthful heart. But she sleeps in Jesus; blessed sleep!

Comfort was administered to the mourners by the writer, in the presence of a large and attentive audience, from these words: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Close the door lightly,
Bridle the breath,
Our little earth-angel
Is talking with death.
Gently he woos her,
She wishes to stay,
His arms are about her,
He bears her away.

Music comes floating
Down from the dome,
Angels are chanting
Her sweet welcome home;
Come, stricken weeper,
Come to the bed,
Gaze on the sleeper,
Our idol is dead!

Smoothe out the ringlets,
Close the blue eyes;
No wonder such beauty
Is claimed from the skies.
Cross the hands gently
O'er the white breast,
So like a wild spirit
Strayed from the blest.
Bear her out gently—
This idol of ours—
Let her grave slumbers
Be 'mid the sweet flowers.

C. B. Turner.

Bro. Peter Schneider, a member of the Strawberry Point church, fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 23d, 1860, aged twenty years.

Consumption was his fatal disease, a victim to poisonous medicine and bad treatment. He suffered much. It was hard to part with him. His gift was needed in the church to spread the truth, which truth he found himself by reading the Bible while he was a member of the Freewill Baptist church. He died in the firm belief of life only through Christ in the resurrection. Sermon by the writer from 1 Pet. 1: 3-5, in the Congregational Church at Yankee Settlement.

Peter S. W. Deyo.

Died, in Mt. Holly, Vt., Jan. 12th, of typhoid fever, Charles H. Chilson, aged nineteen years. Also, Harriet Chilson, aged fourteen years. The deceased were children of Martin and Eleanor Chilson.

The circumstances attendant upon the death of this brother and sister were very touching. They were not considered dangerously sick until they were past all medical aid. The Monday night before they died, the young man sank rapidly, and it was feared he might not live until morning. A neighbor in the morning came in, saw he could not live, and conversed with him on the subject of his soul's salvation. He requested him to pray for him. He did so. The dying young man then said, "Now I am going to pray for myself." A brother that was present told me that prayer was enough to melt a heart of stone—so simple, so touching, so faithful. He said it was the first prayer he ever offered to God; yet good evidence was manifest to all that he that hears the young ravens when they cry, lent a listening ear, that the angels carried tidings to the court of glory that the dead was alive, the lost was found. He called for his sister; said he, "Mother, I want to see Hattie." His mother told him she was so sick she thought she could not be moved. But he continued in importance, till finally she was put in a large chair and carried to her dying brother. "Hattie," said he, "I have been praying, and I want you to pray." "Oh," said she, "I cannot pray; I never prayed; I don't know how to pray." Said he, "There is no use in making a great fuss about it. All we have to do is to ask God for what we want, and he gives it to us." Harriet finally said if all but mother would leave the room, she would pray. She did pray. Her simple, child-like prayer winged its way on the wings of faith to the mercy seat, and another name was written in the Lamb's book of life.

On Thursday morning, at 5 o'clock, Hattie's peaceful spirit took its happy flight to the God that gave it. At the same time it was thought Charles was dying. Death-sweat was constantly wiped from his dying face, and the physician said he had but a few moments to live. His mother with some effort aroused him and told him his sister was dead. Said he, "Is Hattie dead? I want to see her." The shrouded little form was brought and laid upon the bed by his side. He arose upon his elbow, and kissed her pale, cold lips most fondly. Many witnesses say it was a scene long to be remembered. He then engaged in earnest prayer to God, his fervent and simple faith melting the stoutest hearts, and at the close he distinctly said, "Amen;" and earth's journey was done.

On Sunday the writer attended the funeral service. A large and solemn congregation listened to remarks from Heb. 12: 25, and we hope and trust it was not a lost opportunity. Although the congregation was said to be the largest ever convened in town, yet a solemn stillness reigned throughout the house. We laid them in one grave side by side, high up on the snow-clad Green Mountains, to sleep for a few brief days, until the voice that awakened a Lazarus from his slumber shall bid them arise. May a broken-hearted father and mother meet them with joy. They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided.

H. Bundy.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 14th ult.]

Queenstown, Jan. 14. M. Villemaire is publishing a pamphlet in which he advocates the territorial rights of the Pope.

It is rumored that a majority of the French Bishops have expressed themselves ready to launch into public opposition, but Rome hesitates to give the signal.

At Vienna it is fully believed that the government intends openly and actively to interfere in Central Italy, in favor of the exiled Dukes and the Papal government. The Pastoral of the Arch-Bishop, published in the Weimar Zeitung of the 11th, confirms this fear.

The Univers announces that the Bishop of Perignan is about to publish a pamphlet in answer to the "Pope and the Congress."

The Vienna Gazette has published an imperial decree, enacting that the testimony of Jews shall be regarded as of the same value as that of christians. This measure is considered as preliminary to according full civil and political rights.

The Diet of Denmark has decided, by a large majority, that the bill for the separation of Church and State be read the second time.

The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post will give up the Romagna, provided that the rest of his dominions shall be secured to him.

Vienna.—Dispatches received from Paris within the last few days have produced a very disagreeable effect, inasmuch as they announce that a complete understanding between France and England has been established. It is added that the Government is now convinced that, contrary to what was believed, neither Russia nor Prussia will in any way defend in the Congress the integrity of the Pontifical States. It is no doubt true that those two Powers are not disposed to make themselves the champions of the programme set forth in the pamphlet "Le Pope et le Congres;" they do not consider the re-establishment of the power of the Pope as a matter of absolute necessity, especially as experience has shown that his Holiness cannot hold possession of the revolted provinces without the assistance of foreign troops. It is believed here that the court of the Tuileries will content itself with the independence of Romagna, and will be disposed to leave the rest of the Papal territory to the Pope.—Times.

Rome.—It is stated by the friends of the Pope that the enlistments abroad for the Papal army have no other object than to bring its effective force, which numbers 18,000, up to 20,000 men. This augmentation of the Papal army was agreed upon by the Holy See and France before the war in Italy.

The struggle for mastery between Louis Napoleon and the Pope has assumed an importance which cannot be exaggerated. The Emperor has addressed a letter to the Pope, in which he frankly states what he thinks should be done to settle the Italian question on a firm basis, and calls upon the Holy Father to accede to his wishes. The letter was written on the 31st of December, and on the 1st of January the Pope pronounces an allocution in reply to the congratulations of the French army, represented by General Goyon, the Commander-in-Chief of the French division in the Papal States. In this allocution the Pope condemns the pamphlet in extremely strong language, and denounces it as a "monster monument of hypocrisy." Unfortunately, Louis Napoleon's letter arrives the next day, in which the principles laid down in the pamphlet are reiterated, and to which the Pope is requested to subscribe. Now either the Pope must ignore his allocution, or Louis Napoleon must withdraw his letter. This is another diplomatic knot which the Emperor will have to display his usual talent and tact in untying.—London Times.

The Cologne Gazette contains the following: "The attitude of Prussia and Russia merits examination. It is said they were both drawing towards Austria, and that those powers would unite in opposing French tendencies in Italy. Austria desires the restoration of the Dukes and the restitution of the Romagna to the Pope, whilst Prussia and Russia do not think that the restoration is possible."

It is stated that 30,000 French troops are to be sent to Leghorn. The Mediterranean Railway Company has received orders to hold themselves in readiness to convey that number.

TURKEY.

The Levant Herald, an English paper, published at Constantinople, says: "We risk nobody's contradiction in affirming that the American missionaries have done more to advance civilization and pure religion throughout Turkey, than all the other agencies, diplomatic or missionary, which European policy or propagandism has ever set to work upon the country."

ROME.

A letter from Florence in the Patrie says: "I have been informed that the Pope has come to the resolution to retire to Benevento, if the French army should be ordered to evacuate Rome. Benevento is a small duchy containing about 30,000 inhabitants. It was given to His Holiness by the treaties of 1815, and is entirely possessed by the religious corporations established there. This duchy is hemmed in by the Neapolitan territory; it is very strongly fortified by nature and by its isolated position, and would offer a secure asylum to the Pope in the event of an insurrection in his states. He would be surrounded by subjects of the King of Naples, hitherto very devoted to the pontifical court."

A correspondent of the Nord affirms that the Court of Rome is divided into two strongly marked parties, constituting a state of things calculated to aggravate existing difficulties. One of these parties is in favor of concessions, whilst the other insists on maintaining at all risks, the prerogatives of the Holy See.

ITALY.

A Florence letter in the Nord says: "The Tuscan government is now concerting with the Sardinian Minister and the Governor of Emilia the appointment of a mixed Commission, to be charged with the unification of the laws of the different countries. The commission is to be composed of four Lombard and Piedmontese jurisconsults, two Tuscans, one Romagnol, one Modenese, and one Parmesan. All the preliminaries have been settled, and the Commission will be named very shortly."

A letter from Valleggio, of the 12th, in the Constitutionnel, contains the following: "You will in a few days see in the journals, if it has not already appeared, a fact of extraordinary temerity—the desertion, in a body, from Mantua, of 600 Hungarians, all armed and equipped, and headed by their commandant. From Casal-Maggiore, where they arrived in the night, they proceeded to Cremona, where they met with a magnificent reception."

Le Nord says the Emperor of Russia is about to espouse the cause of the Pope, but the London Times denies it.

It is reported that attacks upon the Swiss soldiers have been made by the populace on their marches, and a sharp contest took place at Macerata.

It is rumored that the increased intimacy between Austria and Prussia has in view the renewed subjugation of Hungary.

The Herald says the Archbishop of Paris has resigned his seat in the Council of the Empire. This council was created to guard the interest of the Napoleon dynasty in case of the Emperor's death. The Archbishop's withdrawal is expected to give a more determined attitude to the clerical party in opposition to the Emperor and Papal policy.

AUSTRIA.

Austria may well shrink from a renewal of the war in Italy, for she has internal difficulties enough to encounter to call for all her wisdom and firmness. Not only are Hungary and Venetia in a state of profound discontent, but even in Austria itself and amongst the Government officials there is a growing spirit of angry dissatisfaction with the high-handed policy adopted by the Minister of the Interior.

The commercial treaty between France and England was expected to be signed in a few days.

Married.

In Providence, R. I., Jan. 29th, 1860, by Eld. J. D. Brown, BENJ. J. CHURCH and Mrs. ELIZA COULTER, both of Pontiac, R. I.

Editorial Notice.

"The Destiny of the Earth under its coming King."—By James Inglis. This is an interesting tract of 48 pages, showing Christ is to be king over the earth. We are glad to see the light advancing. The work is for sale by Bro. Wm. Shepherd, Newark, N. J. Price 10 cts.

Notices, &c.

☞ The Lord willing, I will comply with the request of the brethren to preach in South Waterford, and Stoneham, Me., Feb. 12th, 19th and 26th, as they may arrange. Severe sickness of my boy prevented my filling the appointment in Hartford, Me., last week. Will try to visit them in March.

I. C. Wellcome.

Notice.

D. R. and M. S. Mansfield will commence a series of meetings at Reading, Hillsdale Co., Mich., on the evening of Feb. 16th, 1860. We hope to see a goodly number of our brethren and sisters at this meeting. Come praying in the Holy Ghost that God will prosper the word preached, and that precious souls may be brought to acknowledge Christ and the power of the gospel.

A. N. Seymour, Evangelist.

Conferences

At New Durham, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 23d, to hold over the following Sunday. Brethren Billings, Otis and others are expected.

At Dover, commencing March 1st, Thursday evening, to continue over the following Sunday. Brethren Billings, Bishop and others are expected.

J. G. Smith.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

F. H. Berick will preach in
Fair Haven, Ct. .... Feb. 19th

Bro. J. K. Bellows will meet with the brethren in
New Bedford, Mass. .... Feb. 12th
New Boston (as Bro. Howard may arrange,) .... Feb. 14th and 15th
North Fair Haven .... Feb. 19th
Long Plain, Mass. .... Feb. 21st and 22d
Westport .... Feb. 23d and 24th
Plymouth, Mass. .... Feb. 26th
Roxbury .... Feb. 28th and 29th
East Boston .... March 1st and 2d.
Lynn, (Dye House) .... March 4th

J. W. Crabtree appoints to preach in Unionville, Ct. .... Feb. 10th
and over the following Sunday.

J. B. Cook will preach, if the Lord will, in Cleveland, Ohio .... Feb. 15th and 16th
Ravenna, Portage Co. .... Feb. 17th and 19th
Ashtabula, Ashta. Co. .... Feb. 21st and 22d
Meadville, Pa. .... Feb. 24th and 26th
Blooming Valley .... Feb. 29th

Eld. M. Batchelor will preach in Hoosick, Willcox Corners, N. Y., Friday, Feb. 24th and continue over the following Sunday. Brethren scattered around are invited to attend.

APPOINTMENTS for DANIELSONVILLE, CT.:
H. F. Carpenter .... Sundays, Feb. 12th and 14th
D. T. Taylor .... Sunday, Feb. 26th
A. Higgins of Palmer .... March 9th
Hiram Munger .... March 12th
In behalf of the Church,
H. F. Carpenter.

Providence permitting, Eld. George Champlin will preach in Worcester, (Warren Hall) Sunday .... Feb. 19th

Providence permitting, Eld. Daniel A. Jones will preach in
Bristol .... Feb. 12th
Eld. H. F. Carpenter .... March 4th
John H. Sutliff.

The Lord willing, I will preach as follows:—
Cold Spring .... Feb. 16th
Pine Swamp, Ct. .... Feb. 18th
Pawling, N. Y. .... Feb. 21st
S. S. Brazee.

Eld. C. Goodrich appoints to preach in Goshen, Mass. .... Feb. 12th

T. W. Piper appoints to preach in
Clarke Town .... Feb. 12th
Wolfborough, (Pine Hill) .... Feb. 19th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

Bro. J. Howell.—No. 4 of your present series of articles came too late for insertion this week.

H. Grew.—Have received a package of tracts from you.

M. W. Buck.—Paid to No. 218.

S. J. Parsons.—Book was sent; but will send again when we receive a supply.

Hiram Hall.—Not received.

C. Newell.—Books sent.

S. G. Clark's P. O. address is Freeport, Ill.

Harvey Pratt.—We prefer the Eastern.

S. H. Waldron should have been cr. $1.00 for Crisis, and .06 for tracts, instead of $1.03.

T. G. Newman.—The box has been received. Too late for "notices" this week.

Eld. Moses Chandler's P. O. address is Monmouth, Warren Co., Ill.

M. L. Pratt.—Your question is now being discussed in the paper. See this week's number.

Y. Higgins.—Your com. was published a fortnight since.

Dr. Narramore.—You did not give us your subscriber's name! The paper will be sent when we know to whom and where to send it.

Cash Receipts.

E Dennett, for Portsmouth Brn., 234, $14.00; J Ellmore, 2 copies, 280, $4.00.

J Ellis 229, J D Fletcher 208, Mrs. S Orcott 241, H Gibbs 242, P Banto 242,—50 cts. each.

J Bradley 231, L French 256, N Miller 199, Miss L Armstrong 250, W Cook 241, N Clark, Jr., 253, C H Green 243, L Case 260, C H Thompson 260, C Haley 253, J W Pollock 225, A Knowles 234, J Potter 206, J A Cole 250, J Jones 235, Mrs. M A Barnard 238, S Scott 234, S J Parsons 247, I J Stedman 255, A Ware 148,—$1.00 each.

A V G Smith 287, S Horr 250, S R Hathorn 238, S S Armstrong 234, J S Morrison 280, J Armstrong 260, Jos. Haley 234, J Scott 169, W White 256, J Buzell 260, Mrs. Harrington 280, C N Harvey 273, H H Dickenson 279, Mrs. H Patten 260, G A Burbank 280, M Perley 260, C Newell 260,—$2.00 each.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

G W Sprague $14.40, J Chapman 9 cts, A Bayles 43 cts, W N Houghtaling $5.31, E Bellows $3.00, Dr. A M Higgins $5.40, P B Morgan $5.00, N Lazell $5.40, T J Lobdell 12 cts, S Case 6 cts, R L Davis 13 cts, D W Spear 30 cts, W White 48 cts, L Smith $3.54, L A Chapin 20 cts, J B Richardson $2.00, C N Harvey 50 cts, A Logan 30 cts, D D Chaffee $1.20, C F Churchill 12 cts, Eld. L Scott $1.00, A Ware 27 cts, M Russel $2.24, C Newell $1.12, W F Breckenridge $3.56, W Evans 60 cts.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

Human Destiny. A Discussion: Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all? By C. F. Hudson and Sylvanus Cobb. 478 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00 post paid.

The Nature of Faith, and the Evils of Sect. By the late W. R. Starr. With a Memoir and Notes by C. F. Hudson. 289 pp. 12mo. Price 50 cts. Postage 16 cts.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen. 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

The Soul—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuke as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

The Spirit—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 34 pp. Price, 5 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $4.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 6 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 5 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 8 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 8 copies for 30 cts. Mailed post paid. $2.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, post-paid $1.25.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Shepherd. [illegible] $4.00.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including [illegible] connected with camp-meetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work, and will be read with interest by all. Price 50 cts.—postage 10 cents.

Words of Warning. 3 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low, or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological views of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $3.00 per hundred,—5 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the young. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Geneseo, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We have also on hand the following:—

PUBLICATIONS
of
H. L. HASTINGS,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor; edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 420 pp. $1 00
The Great Controversy between God and Man: its Origin, Progress, and End; by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 167 pp. 60
Reasons for My Hope, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 129 pp. Paper, 30 cts. Cloth 50
Forever with the Lord, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 60
Earth's Destiny, as revealed in Scripture, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 60
Tracts on Prophecy, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 50
Tracts on Immortality, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 50
Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith, by Robert Patterson. 12mo. 320 pp. 75
The Infidel's Fate, by a converted Infidel. Cloth gilt, 25
Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, by Wm Ramsey, D D., edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 120 pp. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth 40
Pauline Theology: The Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment, as Taught by Paul, by H. L. Hastings. 84 pp. Paper, 15
The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life, by H. L. Hastings. Paper, 87 pp. 15
Tracts of 24 Pages.—3 cts single; $1 for 1600 pages—by mail 1200 pp for $1.

The Church not in Darkness,	by H. L. H.	pages 24
The Three Worlds,	by H. L. H.	" 24
The Last Days,	by H. L. H.	" 24
Plain Truths,	by H. L. H.	" 28
Will all men be saved?	by H. L. H.	" 24
Voice of Warning	by D. T. Taylor	" 24
The New Heavens and Earth,	"	" 24
Ancient Landmarks, 6 Nos.		" 24
Olive Leaves, 9 Nos.	by H. L. H. &c.	" 24
Important Questions, 9 Nos.	by H. L. H.	" 36
State of the Dead,	by John Milton	" 24
The Intermediate State,	by H. G.	" 12
Destiny of the Wicked	by H. L. H.	" 12
Future Punishment,	by H. G.	" 12
The Key of Truth,	by W. S.	" 12
Man's Future State		" 12
Letter on Dress	by Adoniram Judson	" 12
The Day of Judgment,	by St. Cyril	" 12
Outline of the Coast,	by A Voyager	" 8
The Night Cometh,	by John Adey	" 8
Gems, 9 Nos., poetry,	by H. L. H.	" 12
One Thing		" 8
The Coming and Kingdom of Christ,		" 4
The Duration of the Earth by A. Clarke		" 4
Hope and Duty of the Church, M. Henry		" 4
The Restitution	by St. Cyril	" 4
A Warning Voice,	by Cotton Mather	" 4
Loving Christ's Appearing,	by Baxter	" 4
Little Children, Love one another		" 4
The One Resting Place,	by H. Bonar	" 4
My Friend,	by H. L. H.	" 4
Abundant Grace	"	" 4
Wondrous Love	"	" 4
Go in Peace	"	" 4
Living Water	"	" 4
The Banner	Anonymous	" 4
The Blood of Christ	"	" 4
Are you a Christian?	by H. L. H.	" 4
Why not Now?	"	" 4
Are you Pardoned?	"	" 4
Are you safe?	"	" 4
Are you Saved?	"	" 4
Do you Pray?	"	" 4
When Will He Come?	by J. C. Ryle	" 4
Statement of Account	by H. L. H.	" 4
Man in Death	By Bishop Law	" 4
Forty Questions on Immortality		" 4

SCRIPTURE SEARCHERS.

No. 1 The Destiny of the Wicked		" 1
No. 2. The State of the Dead		" 1
No. 3. The Coming of Jesus		" 1
No. 4. The Resurrection		" 1
No. 5. Plain Truths		" 1
No. 6 The Judgment		" 1

POETRY.

Brother, Shall we Meet?	by H. L. H.	" 2
Sister, Shall we Meet?	"	" 2
Stand up for Jesus!	"	" 1
The Harvest is Past	"	" 1
Beyond!	"	" 1
At Rest!	"	" 1
We would see Jesus	by Josephine	" 1
A Little While	by J. G.	" 1

LEAFLETS FOR LETTERS.

Life Insurance, Envelope Size	H. L. H.	" 12
Home	"	" 12
Lost, Lost	"	" 8
Peace in Christ	"	" 4
Worth Knowing	"	" 4
All things are Yours	"	" 4
Now	"	" 4
Assurance	"	" 4
About God	"	" 4

The foregoing Books and Pamphlets will be sent by mail, postage paid, upon the receipt of the amount of their respective prices. Orders with the cash respectfully solicited. Persons who send $5, with the order, shall receive $12 worth of books at the retail price. Tracts are sent by mail, 1200 pages, on the receipt of a dollar. When sent by express, or at the expense of the buyer, 1600 pages will be sent for one dollar. Terms cash. Persons who desire to do good can obtain Four hundred tracts, of four pages each, for $1. These may be widely distributed, and open the way for religious conversation. Persons may thus be a blessing to those around them. The poor can have any of these tracts sent to them free, by remitting stamps to pay the postage. Ministers can have specimen copies of the tracts and pamphlets sent free. All letters, orders, and remittances should be addressed to the Publisher,

H. L. HASTINGS, 43 Weybosset St.
Providence, R. I.

January, 1860.

* * These publications can be obtained in Boston of Miles Grant, 167 Hanover st.; New York of G. W. Young, 138 William st.; Philadelphia, J. Rob Porter, 725 Erie st., and they can be ordered of any publisher through all Booksellers.

Bibles of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Minion, references between the verses, $1.00 to $2.25. Nonpareil, marginal references, [illegible] between verses, $1.30 to $2.16. [illegible] between verses, $1.75. [illegible] to $1.75. Diamond, marginal references, 75 cts. to $1. Bindings, Roan, Calf and Morocco, [illegible] the difference in prices.

Glad Tidings; or Bible proof that sin and sinners are to end in the universe, by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 8 cts. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms; or, the kingdom of God the Father, the Kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $2.00 per hundred, [illegible] 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agents in Portland, Me., [illegible] Bangor, No. 3 [illegible]

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. E. [illegible], Warwick, R. I. [illegible] The Harp, by [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] Where Sorrow will be no More.
[illegible] There'll be no sorrow there."

I.
My Father, [illegible],
When mortal [illegible] are o'er;
To me thy glorious blessing give,
[illegible] forevermore.

CHORUS.
[illegible] sorrow will be no more,
Where sorrow will be no more,
In the saints' bright home,
[illegible] the world to come,
Where sorrow will be no more.

II.
When all of earthly joy
Has fled and passed away,
O give me bliss without alloy,
In realms of endless day.
CHO.—Where sorrow will be no more, etc.

III.
When all earth's cords of love
Are rudely torn apart,
Then let immortal Friendship's band
Engird my glowing heart.
CHO.—Where sorrow will be no more, etc.

IV.
When all earth's songs are done,
Its rapture turned to shame,
Be mine that song before the throne,
Of Moses and the Lamb.
CHO.—Where sorrow will be no more, etc.

V.
Fountain of life thou art,
To thee I lift my cry,
O grant to me that blessed part,
To live and never die!
CHO.—Where sorrow will be no more, etc.

For the Crisis.

The Right Word in the Right Place.

A lecturer on the proper use of words once remarked that, "It is the first characteristic of a well dressed man that his clothes fit him; they are neither too small and shrunken here, too large and loose there." Now it is precisely such a prime characteristic of a good style, that the words fit close to the thought. The power of saying just what we mean, is not merely an elegant accomplishment; it is this, and more than this: it is nearly allied to morality, inasmuch as it is nearly connected with truthfulness.

How much time we have to spend in reading words upon words, to learn what we wish to, when the writer, had he known how, or had he been careful to have used the proper words—or to have put the right word in the right place, thus expressing his meaning in a less number of words—would have saved us, perhaps, half the time, by using the proper language.

Then again, often we have to sit and listen to lecturers, and especially professed preachers of the gospel, for an hour at a time, and hear a long list of words strung out, which seem to have but little bearing upon the subject—and all this just because the speaker does not use the right word in the right place, and, as a consequence, has to use many more words than is necessary to convey his meaning to the hearers.

Now, if he would learn to put the right word in the right place, he would say what he has to say in fewer words, thus pleasing his hearers, and also enabling himself to say more—that is, more in substance in the hour—thereby giving more instruction. Speakers, whether public or private, who say what they say in a few words—that is, having the language concentrated, the secret of which is, to have the right word in the right place—are always listened to with more interest than are those who use so many words; and so spend a great deal of time talking, and say but little worth listening to after all.

Time is precious. Life is short, and probation is almost ended. Men are dying for the want of substantial food—the bread of life. Fluid, wind or gas will not keep alive. Then give them material substance.

What calls these remarks from me at this time is, because I have come into possession of a little pocket dictionary and reference book, called "The Right Word in the Right Place," and it comes up to my wants so exactly, that I would recommend its notice to all writers. It contains synonyms of most every word in common use. As an instance of its beneficial use, I will suppose that I am writing about something which has a great agreement in appearance and character with some other well known thing which I use for a comparison. Well, my language being small, I cannot hit upon the proper word to express the meaning which I wish to convey, in relation to the likeness of the two things. So I open the book of synonyms, and find the word Agreement, which comes as near to my meaning as any word I can think of, but does not exactly express what I want expressed. I find "agreement" in the book, with its synonyms. Thus: "AGREEMENT—accordance, bargain, concord, concurrence, compact, contract, covenant, testament, resemblance, likeness, harmony, melody, unison, etc." Now here are over a dozen words all having about the same meaning, but cannot all be used in a like connection, because there is a right word for every place, and another word might be improper. Now I find that the synonym, "resemblance," is just the word which expresses what I wish expressed, and so I use that word. If I could not have got hold of that word, I [illegible] to have used, perhaps, two dozen words to have conveyed my meaning.

Here we can see the advantage of such a book of Synonyms to have at hand [illegible] all can see the advantage of using proper words and concentrated language.

This book contains, also, a dictionary of technical terms. One sample: "ROTUNDA (architectural term)—a round. A round building, as the Pantheon of Rome." Also, a list of abbreviations; a collection of foreign phrases; their meaning; rules for punctuation; writing for the press; proof-reading; hard words made easy, etc.

This book can be carried in the pocket. Costs 50 cents. Published by Fowler & Wells, 308 Broadway, New York.

S. D. BERRY.

For the Crisis.

Experiences.

BRO. GRANT:—We have passed one more division figured on the dial-plate of Time—one more of those shorter periods, that, in the aggregate, fill up a mysterious cycle in "duration Infinite." Perhaps none of the fractions of eternity will afford a record more intensely interesting to living intelligences, than this AION of the fearful ruins of evil, and of the sublime workings of the remedial economy of divine favor, in which our first being is cast.

In Eden's groves of surpassing beauty and loveliness, our progenitors commenced existence to experience "good," when the sun and star-marks on the great chronometer of heaven's clock-work began the count of "days and months, of seasons and years," to "the new-made beings,"—marking the times allotted to the formation of that character, that would render the livers in Paradise worthy of unending being, and of the honor of the sceptre of this province of Jehovah's vast empire, as well as of transmitting life to holy and happy descendants to fill the world, and make it "a garden of God," by their own skill and labor, under the divine direction, as the honored coworkers with God. But another experience was possible; the experimental "knowledge of good and evil,"—a knowledge interdicted by the benevolent Creator,—but of which our venerable ancestors in an evil hour, under the pressure of temptation, hazarded the proof. An experience that cost them Paradise and life, and that has since filled every measure of the "course of Time" with "lamentation and mourning and wo!"

But One "beheld our hapless grief." The Father-love in the heart of the great Creator was moved. He pitied, he loved, and the First-Born came from the enjoyment of that "glory he had before the world was" with the Infinite Father;—from the experience of heaven's unembittered ecstasies, to drink the bitter cup of human griefs! What a change from heaven's "boundless bliss," to the agonies of Gethsemane, and the death of the cross on Calvary! He experienced suffering,—became "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," that our sorrowful experiences might be changed to eternal enjoyments; he died to make us "the children of God, the angel-equals through the resurrection; and was humbled to the "form of a servant," that we might become "kings and priests," and wear a "crown of glory that fadeth not away."

The "days of mourning" will soon be gone by forever, with all the bitter experiences of the church of God. The racks and flames, the tortures and horrid deaths of the martyr ages; the "cruel mockings and scoffings" of all ages, will soon give place to the experiences of unmixed good in the incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading inheritance. The index in the horology of heaven points—THE END! He that sits upon the throne will soon make all things new. Redemption's countless host will soon be by the river of life, and be eating the monthly varieties of fruit on the tree of life, in the "Paradise of God." Shall we all meet in "God's kingdom,"—in the land of the ever-living?

An awful experience of "evil" yet awaits the incorrigible sinner.

"O what eternal horrors hang Around the second death!"

"The resurrection of damnation!" But the mind recoils. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." There is no redemption from "everlasting destruction,"—no resurrection from the deep graves of the "second death."

A few more of the trials and afflictions of this life and the "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty" will be experiencing the exceeding great and "eternal weight of glory;"—will be "present with the Lord" in eternal life.

"O what are all our sufferings here,
If Lord, thou count'st us meet
With that enraptured host to appear,
And worship at thy feet?

Give joy or grief, give ease or pain;
Take life or friends away;
But let us find them all again
In that eternal day."

S. A. CHAPLIN.

Pierceton, Ind.

☞ The steady pursuit of gain is the best evidence that an individual loves riches; and steadfastness in following Christ is the best evidence of true conversion. Remember Lot's wife; and "no man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God," are the warning words which your Lord addressed to you who are faltering in his service.

☞ Cold prayers are as arrows without heads, as swords without edges, as birds without wings; they pierce not, they cut not, they fly not up to heaven. Cold prayers always freeze before they reach heaven.

For the Crisis.

Information Wanted.

BRO. BURNHAM:—Will you please to give, through the Crisis, your proof of the truth of the assertion, that "the early christian church, until the third century, as a mass, held the doctrine of the conscious state of man in death?"

L. S. HOWARD.
J. L. BROOKS.

INFORMATION GIVEN.—Yes, dear brethren, with the utmost pleasure. Such proof is due you, and due the public also.

1. Polycarp's Prayer. "The God of angels, and powers, and of every creature, and of the WHOLE RACE of just men WHO LIVE in thy presence!"—Horæ Apoc. p. 198. Polycarp was a disciple of the Apostle John, and represented the faith of the church in his time.

2. Justin Martyr. Justin Martyr died in the same year with Polycarp. "And now since we affirm that the soul survives the body, and exists in a state of sensibility, and since the souls of ill men are tormented, but those of the good free from punishment, do we not affirm the same as your poets and philosophers?"—Just. 2 Apol. Justin Martyr, it will be seen by the above, represents the faith of the church in his time: for he says, in the above, WE AFFIRM thus.

3. Irenæus. Irenæus died A. D. 202, and therefore must have written and preached in the second century. "'Tis the body that dies, and is dissolved, but not the soul nor the spirit."—London Lat. Trans.

I will write more at length when I can—perhaps next week.

EDWIN BURNHAM.

"Be Ye Kind One unto Another."

Be kind one to another,
Ye brothers in the strife;
That stand in armor side by side
Upon the field of life!
The battle rageth fiercely,
And dangers round thee dart,—
And wouldst thou turn thee from the foe
To pierce a brother's heart?

Be kind one to another,
Ye sailors o'er life's deep—
Let not the hand and heart grow cold
When winds and tempests sleep—
For soon the skies will darken,
No light upon thee shine—
And thou wilt wish that brother's hand
Was warmly clasped in thine!

Be kind one to another,
Ye reapers of the plain,
That have gone forth with sickles bright,
To garner golden grain!
The night will come when ye must leave
The dusky fading lea,
And would ye have a brother turn
With no good night for thee?

Be kind one to another,
Ye children of one God;
O clasp your hands, and trusting keep
The path your Father trod!
The world hath little for ye,
But He hath much to give,—
Then raise your hearts, ye brother band,
And hope in Him and live!

—Jenny Marsh.

For the Crisis.

Sketch of Travels.—No. 2.

Had rather a pleasant ride up the Illinois river. Did not run aground. Somewhat different going down; we laid on a bar some thirteen hours—all one night. Should have had a good night's rest if the swine had not been so numerous on deck. Their constant squealing forbade sleep, and reminded me of him who found it husky living to tend them.

On my arrival at Newburg, in Pike Co., I found an appointment out. Good congregation assembled, and the word fell in some good soil, I trust. A few still keep their lamps trimmed and are waiting. I hope their light will shine until the day dawn and the Day Star arise. Next day rode some thirty-five miles, and preached two evenings at Mt. Pleasant. Then to Ripley, and preached four sermons. Those sermons were intended to show the evil of "hobby" riding. I guess it would not have harmed the professed christian world to have heard them, adventists, so called, not excepted. This puny, sickly theorizing christianity—no, unchristianity—I am tired of. It never makes a full grown man. It makes babes—sometimes they get to be quite large babes. Yet if they ever get strong enough to leave the cradle, they are puny and dwarfish. They know but little about God, prayer, devotion, and a christian life. This skeleton christianity has no flesh, nerves, sinews, nor life, nothing but bones, and they wired together by some far-fetched, one-sided theory. I do not object to a skeleton, if you will only get the gospel body over it, and cover it, and give it life. Nor babes, for they can and will grow to be men by proper diet; but a mere skeleton, or a dwarf, is no pleasant sight.

In Hancock Co. I held some meetings. At Warsaw Prairie we had a very good meeting. The tide is turning there. The little "Scripture Searchers" and tracts are opening the eyes of the people, and they are astonished to find their long-cherished ideas have no foundation in the Scriptures. I was urged strongly to hold a series of meetings in that region, but for want of time I had to leave.

In Warren Co. I preached twice to good congregations, notwithstanding it was a cold, stormy day. Eld. Chandler has moved to this place. I hope and pray God will make him a great blessing to that people and the surrounding region. But few take the Crisis there. Brethren, send on and get the paper, it will be of more value to you than rubies. Do not neglect it any longer.

Called on Dr. Wood at Moline, and staid over night. Bro. W. is in the work, and the word is more precious than gold to him. He is opening the eyes of some of the Methodist friends by his untiring efforts. May God's blessing rest upon his labors.

W. PRATT.

For the Crisis.

The Great Chart.

HISTORICAL, CHRONOLOGICAL & PROPHETICAL.

Bro. John Stevenson's great work is justly exciting admiration wherever seen. When shown in Ohio last summer, it was the subject of the most profound interest; but one or two items having been misconceived, they became the occasion of mistake by Bro. Alling, which he wishes corrected through the Crisis. The delay in correcting it results from my delay in seeing him, etc., etc. I did desire, also, to be able to announce a reliable conclusion, for myself at least, as to this impotant element of "all Scripture." The mistake, in its precise form, I cannot recall, which must be my apology for not repeating it. But this statement will cover the ground, I trust.

The chart was devised and written out by Bro. Stevenson himself, in Canada. The work was his, in its inception and execution. "Honor to whom honor" is due. The chronology of man is a little out of harmony with that of Holy Scripture. "The kink," of course, lies there. While the combined chronologies of earth, presented by our brother, in connection with the times of Revelation, furnish, so far as I see, the only solution. Allowing the Bible to take its proper precedence, and its Sabbaths and Jubilees to have been typical or representative, I see no other solution than that he presents, and I accept his work as the very best. My desire has been (like his) to find a more full and satisfactory chronology in the time of Augustus, etc., (like that we find in the age of Herod) to justify the change needed to harmonize precisely human and inspired chronology. But Bro. S. has boldly taken the bull by the horns—he admits the difficulty, and then, by a new adjustment, the human succumbs to the divine; and the best harmony I can conceive is the result.

The common view ignores the adjustment of "the times and seasons" in the "shadow of good things to come!" This "shadow" was given by Jehovah in his "pattern of heavenly things." Heb. 8 to 10. The Sabbaths, Sabbatic years and jubilees, are essential to any rational conclusion as to the Bible times, given to limit Gentile rule, and foretoken the kingdom of God. Jesus "came not to destroy the LAW or the prophets, but to fulfill"—to fill FULL; to consummate the purpose for which they were given. Matt. 5 : 17; Lk. 24 : 25–44; Rom. 3 : 31; Heb. 8 : 9, 10; Acts 3 : 21. The prophets are not the primary nor the systematized form of truth. "The Law" was the primary form. It was prior to "the prophets." It contains the shadow, type, pattern, example—of affairs in the Melchisedeck kingdom. "The times and seasons" thus *fore*shadowed in "the pattern of heavenly things," cannot be deranged. We can sooner unsettle "heaven and earth."

I am still learning, I trust; but have learned more on this point from Bro. Stevenson's unexampled work, than from all human helps beside. These remarks are due for the truth's sake—due to the brethren who may regard my testimony; yet my first purpose now is to correct the mistake. This great work was wrought out by Bro. John Stevenson.

J. B. C.

Selections.

Unappreciated Talent.

We frequently hear literary men complain that they are neglected because the taste of the age is false, and popular readers are incapable of appreciating their talents. The charge may not be without truth, though the neglect of which they complain is chiefly attributable to themselves, in not conforming to the requirements of the taste they choose to condemn, instead of seeking to please. Literary wares are like all others in one respect; if they do not supply a want, there will be no demand for them. If a man would please the multitude of readers, he must write on subjects and in a style that is pleasing to them; otherwise—so far as popularity is concerned—his labors will be in vain. A writer may be learned, but dull; elaborate and ornate, but exceedingly tiresome; while without learning or elaboration another may be natural and simple, and therefore always welcome to the thousands who read chiefly for enjoyment.

The notion that genius will excite reverence in those by whom it is least understood is a manifest delusion, though a very common one. Talent is best appreciated by talent, and knowledge by knowledge. The man who imagines that the higher he is placed above his judges the more they will admire him, might equally expect that he would look larger the further he receded, or his voice sound louder the greater the distance from which he spoke. Excellence must be recognized before it can be applauded, and to recognize it implies in some degree a kindred excellence. For a cultivated understanding to display only its choicest stores before the uncultivated, is much like exhibiting colors to the blind. When genius prefers to wrap itself in its own dignity, rather than adapt itself to the level of the age it should instruct, it must suffer the complicated misery of conscious power, general neglect and poverty, and probably be quenched at last in hopeless despondency.

It is certainly true that people, whose intellectuality is the first characteristic which protrudes itself upon our attention, are seldom favorites. This is true of both men and women. We appreciate and are won by that intellect which is a reserved force, a power in abeyance—swathed in the rosy tissues which a warm heart so delicately weaves. But from that intellect which is a naked and pointed steel, we are continually starting back, lest it prick and probe, and even mortally wound us, in the weakest, the most sensitive, the most unguarded spot in our nature. Then, in pure pride and pomp of intellect, there is ever something so overbearing, so selfish, so redolent of bitterness,—no wonder people hate it. But such indications generally proceed from the brain-parvenues,—the second rate. They may have "talent," a talent which can be measured, and sounded, and made available to set ends, every inch of it; but they have not a soul large enough to recognize and love the universal humanity, the God seal stamped upon the nature of every creature belonging to the family of man.

Clinging.

Cling to the Mighty One,
Cling in thy grief;
Cling to the Holy One,
He gives relief.
Cling to the Gracious One,
Cling in thy pain:
Cling to the Faithful One,
He will sustain.

Cling to the Living One,
Cling in thy woe:
Cling to the Loving One,
Through all below:
Cling to the Pardoning One,
He speaketh peace:
Cling to the Healing One,
Anguish will cease.

Cling to the Bleeding One,
Cling to His side:
Cling to the Rising One,
In Him abide:
Cling to the Coming One,
Hope shall arise:
Cling to the Reigning One,
Joy lights thine eyes.

Hold On.

Hold on to your tongue when you are just ready to swear, lie, or speak harshly or use any improper word.

Hold on to your hand when you are about ready to strike, pinch, scratch, steal, or do any improper act.

Hold on to your foot when you are on the point of kicking, running away from study, or pursuing the path of error, shame, or crime.

Hold on to your temper when you are angry, excited, or imposed upon, or others are angry about you.

Hold on to your heart when evil associates seek your company, and invite you to join in their games, mirth and revelry.

Hold on to the truth, for it will serve well, and do you good throughout eternity.

Hold on to your virtue—it is above all price to you, in all times and places.

Hold on to your good character, for it is, and ever will be, your best wealth.

Why art Thou Cast Down?

Yea, christian, wherefore? Does not each promise still stand up, an unscathed pillar, upon the summit of which shines the pure, soft light of heaven? Are not God's strong-winged angels still all—aye, ALL—ministering spirits to the heirs of salvation? Does not Jesus still live, and does he not bear your name upon his heart as he maketh intercession? Is he your sympathizing friend? And does not God reign? Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Is there not a home of sweet, sinless rest, where the battling soldiers of the cross shall by-and-by be crowned? Then why cast down? Right shall yet triumph. Dry up your tears. Look up—up! GOD REIGNS. There is enough in these two words for faith to fasten upon to give a present and permanent victory. Cheer up, and honor God by trusting in him. "Let the children of Zion be joyful in their King."

"Live on the field of battle,
Be earnest in the fight;
Stand forth with manly courage,
And struggle for the right."

CHILDREN.—When we feel, like Wordsworth, that "the world is ever with us;" that we are growing out of the earth, earthy; that our perceptions of the beauty and truth of God's universe are becoming dull—we rush into the society of children—into the company of hearty, happy children, who love flowers and birds, pet rabbits, clowns and pantomimes, strange, wonderful legends and mystic elfin traditions—not the abominably clever little men and women produced by "the forcing system," who have no relish for the simple joys of childhood. We join them in their revels; we listen to their prattle; we make their pursuits ours, their pleasures ours, and, as far as we can, their nature ours. Our heart grows purer, our mind grows healthier; something of a new life and a new spirit lifts us above ourselves.—Ex.

Promises.

Promises in themselves are certain; but the ways of performance are often undiscernible and hidden; therefore we must live by faith, and not by reason, and measure the truth of God's Word by the strength of his power, and not by our own conceits or apprehensions. "Lay aside," saith the Apostle, "every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset you." "Alas," may the soul answer, "If it be a weight, how shall I move it? if it be a besieging and accompassing sin, that doth so easily occupate and invade all my faculties, how shall I repel or drive it off?" "Well," saith the Apostle, "if you cannot quit yourself of your clay and of your burden, yet run with patience the race which is set before you; be content to draw your chain." But how can the soul be patient under such heavy and such close corruptions? "Look," said he, "unto Jesus, the author and finisher of your faith, consider him, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." "He doth not any of his works by halves; [illegible]

Promises are, many times, subordinate one to another, and are performed in an order, succession, and dependency; therefore we must not anticipate, nor perturb the order which God hath put in his promises, but wait upon him in his own way. "Grace and glory will he give," but first, grace before glory; no man must snatch at this promise till he have interest in that. Godliness hath the promise of this life, and of that to come; but we must note the order which our Savior puts: "First seek the kingdom and righteousness of God, and then all things shall be added unto you."

God doth not fulfill his promises in us only, but by us, too; and these things which in regard of his Word are his promises, are also, in regard to his command, our duties. And, therefore, we must take the promises in that connection and dependency which they have amongst themselves.—Bishop Reynolds.

Reading for Youth.

A Boy's Anger.

A TRUE NARRATIVE.

What agony was visible on my mother's face, when she saw that all she said and suffered failed to move me! She rose to go home, and I followed her at a distance. She spoke no more till she reached her own door.

"It's school time now," she said. "Go, my son, and once more let me beseech you to think upon what I have said."

"I shan't go to school," said I.

She looked astonished at my boldness, but replied firmly—

"Certainly you will go, Alfred. I command you."

"I will not!" said I, in a tone of defiance.

"One of two things you must do, Alfred, either go to school this morning, or I will lock you up in your room, and keep you there till you are ready to promise implicit obedience to my wishes in future."

"I dare you to do it," said I; "you can't get me up stairs."

"Alfred, choose now," said my mother, who laid her hand upon my arm. She trembled violently, and was deadly pale.

"If you touch me I will kick you," said I, in a terrible rage. God knows I knew not what I said.

"Will you go, Alfred?"

"No!" I replied; but quailed beneath her eye.

"Then follow me," said she, and she grasped my arm firmly. I raised my foot—"oh, my son, hear me!"—I raised my foot and kicked her! How my head reels as the torrent of memory rushes over me! I kicked my mother—a feeble woman—my mother! She staggered back a few steps, and leaned against the wall. She did not look at me. I saw her heart beat against her breast.

"Oh! Heavenly Father," said she, "forgive him—he knows not what he does!"

The gardener just then passed the door, and seeing my mother pale, and almost unable to support herself, he stopped. She beckoned him in.

"Take this boy up stairs, and lock him in his room," said she, and turned from me. Looking back as she was entering her room, she gave me a look of agony, mingled with the most intense love!—it was the last unutterable pang from a heart that was broken.

In a moment I found myself a prisoner in my own room. I thought for a moment I would fling myself from the open window, and dash my brains out, but I was afraid to do it. I was not penitent. At times my heart was subdued; but my stubborn pride rose in an instant, and bade me not yield. The pale face of my mother haunted me. I flung myself on the bed, and fell asleep. Just at twilight I heard a footstep approach the door. It was my sister.

"What may I tell my mother from you?" she asked.

"Nothing," I replied.

"Oh, Alfred! for my sake, say that you are sorry. She longs to forgive you."

I would not answer. I heard her footsteps slowly retiring, and again I threw myself on the bed, to pass another and fearful night.

Another footstep, still slower and feebler than my sister's disturbed me. It was my mother's.

"Alfred, my son, shall I come?" she asked.

I cannot tell what influence, operating at that moment, made me speak adverse to my feelings. The gentle voice of my mother thrilled me through, melted then the ice of my obdurate heart, and I longed to throw myself on her neck, but I did not. But the words gave the lie to my heart when I said I was not sorry. I heard her withdraw. I heard her groan. I longed to call her back, but I did not.

I was awakened from my uneasy slumber by hearing my name called loudly, and my sister stood at my bedside.

"Get up and come with me. Mother is dying."

I thought I was yet dreaming, but I got up mechanically and followed my sister. On the bed, pale and cold as marble, lay mother. She had thrown herself on the bed to rest; arising to go to me, she was seized with a palpitation of the heart, and was borne senseless to her room.

I cannot tell you with what agony I looked upon her. My remorse was ten-fold more bitter from the thought that she would never know it. I believed myself to be her murderer. I fell on the bed beside her. I could not weep. My heart was burned in my bosom; my brain was on fire. My sister threw her arms around me and wept in silence. Suddenly we saw a slight motion of mother's hand; her eyes unclosed. She had recovered consciousness, but not speech. She looked at me and moved her lips. I could not understand her words. "Mother, mother!" I shrieked, "say only that you forgive me!" She could not say it with her lips, but her hand pressed mine. She smiled upon me, and lifting her thin, white hands, she clasped my own within them, and cast her eyes upward. She moved her lips in prayer, and thus she died. I remained still kneeling beside that dear form, till my sister removed me. The joys of youth had left forever.

Boys who spurn a mother's control, who are ashamed to own that they are wrong, who think it manly to resist her authority, or yield to her influence, beware! Lay not up for yourselves bitter memories for the [illegible]

Inquisitiveness.

"Where have you been, Helen?" asked Caroline Swift of her sister, as Helen, with a package in one hand, and some letters in the other, entered the parlor one stinging winter's day.

Caroline had been seated near the fire, sewing; but as her sister came in with a package, up! the little girl sprang; and, allowing cotton, thimble, and work to find whatever resting place they could, she hurried across the room; and without so much as "By your leave, sister," she caught hold of the letters, and commenced asking questions as fast as her nimble tongue could move.

"Which question shall I answer first?" asked Helen, good humoredly, trying, as she spoke, to slip a letter out of sight.

"Tell me whose letter you are trying to hide there," cried Caroline, making an effort to thrust her hand into her sister's pocket.

Helen held the pocket close, saying gravely: "Suppose I should tell that this letter concerns no one but myself, and that I prefer not to name the writer?"

"O! dear, some mighty mystery, no doubt. I didn't suppose there was any harm in asking you a question."

Caroline's look and tone plainly indicated displeasure.

"There is harm, Caroline, in trying to pry into anything that you see that another person wishes to keep to herself; for it shows a meddling disposition, and is a breach of the command to do as you would be done by."

"Your're breaking that command yourself," retorted Caroline, "for you won't let me see what I want to see."

"God's commands do not require us to forget our own rights. I am not bound to do to you what you have no right to require of me. We have all a perfect right to request of each other whatever is perfectly conducive to our welfare and happiness, provided it does not improperly infringe upon that of the person of whom the request is made. You trespass upon my rights when you attempt to pry into my affairs."

"Mercy, Helen! don't preach any more. I guess I'm not the only meddlesome person in the world. One half the people I know need nothing more to make them take all possible pains to learn about a thing, than to know the person whom it concerns wishes it kept secret. But where have you been, pray? and what have you in that bundle?" and Caroline tore off the paper cover from the package which Helen had laid upon the table.

"Caroline," said the mother of the two young girls, "why do you not wait to see whether your sister is willing for you to open her package? From your tone, my dear, one would judge that you were appointed to cross-question Helen, and had a right to be angry if she declined explaining all her motives and intentions to you."

"For pity's sake! mother, have not I a right to ask my sister all the questions I please? I tell her every thing that I do, and I think she might show the same confidence in me."

"You have a right, my daughter, to ask any proper question of any one, but it is unmannerly to ask too particularly about things that do not concern you; or to speak at all respecting a thing which you see that another desires should pass unobserved. It shows a small and vulgar mind to seek to pry into the affairs of another, unless there be some great necessity for doing so. Never press a matter where there is a disposition to be reserved upon a subject. Be refined, my child; remember that courtesy is as much a command of the Bible as honesty. I have often heard you, my thoughtless Carrie, mention impatiently the annoying habits of one who is often here. You have said, in great anger, that no one of the family could have a new shoe, or a neck ribbon, or could go across the street twice, without being questioned and cross-questioned by that young lady, until she became possessed of all the particulars concerning the purchase of the walk. It is not well to be violent in condemning one's neighbor, my children, but it is not wrong to take notice enough of their faults to determine to shun them in in our own conduct, and also to try, if a proper season offers, to help them to amend. I never wish to hear you speak again so harshly of the person to whom I refer; but I very earnestly desire that you should begin in season to check habits which, if suffered to go on, will render you just as far from a favorite with your friends, as she, poor orphan girl, is with hers. She had no one to point out to her her faults and her dangers; therefore the condemnation will be nothing to compare with yours, if you forget that the spirit of the golden rule, which is the true spirit of christianity, requires attention just as close and constant to all the little, hardly noticed habits of heart and life, as to those of the more marked and noticeable;

"'Tis in these little things we all can do and say,
Love showeth best its gentle charity."

—Ex.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..........$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..........1.00
For a single copy 3 months..........50
Five copies to one address for 6 months....4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months....8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months....15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months.22..00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Bro. they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—On all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

[illegible] at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents [illegible] of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to prepay the postage on their papers [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 231. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1860. VOL. X. NO. 24.

The World's Crisis

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING

AT

No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:

HENRY V. DAVIS, | MILES GRANT,
JOHN COUCH, | GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Live for Something.

Live for something, be not idle—
  Look about thee for employ!
Sit not down to useless dreaming—
  Labor is the sweetest joy.
Folded hands are ever weary,
  Selfish hearts are never gay;
Life for thee hath many duties—
  Active be, then, while you may.

Scatter blessings in thy pathway!
  Gentle words and cheering smiles,
Better are they than gold or silver,
  With their grief dispelling wiles.
As the pleasant sunshine falleth
  Ever on the grateful earth,
So let sympathy and kindness
  Gladden well the darkened hearth.

Hearts there are, oppressed and weary,
  Drop the tear of sympathy,
Whisper words of hope and comfort,
  Give, and thy reward shall be
Joy unto thy soul returning,
  From this perfect fountain head,
Freely as thou freely givest,
  Shall the grateful light be shed.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Man in Death is Unconscious.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 4.

PROP. II.—"And the Lord God breathed into HIS nostrils the BREATH OF LIFE."

In No. 3 we discovered, by an examination of the second point referred to, that the "spirit" of life, upon which the life of the dust-man depends, is not a being, but a principle of vitality, and that it is never employed to teach that in man it is a living creature, but to give life to the dust-man, and therefore that it is the dust-man who lives, and not the spirit of life which is within him. We also proved that this "spirit" is no part of the "man," but that upon which the life of the man depends. In this article we shall notice the first point suggested in the last article.

The phrase, "THE SPIRIT OF MAN," is never employed in the Bible to denote any thing primarily pertaining to MAN, only when it points out an ATTRIBUTE of the DUST-MAN. Let us bring this point to the impartial standard of Scripture truth, and try its merits by divine revelation. Observe Matt. 22 : 37 and Luke 10 : 27, where reference is made to some of the attributes pertaining to man. We will quote Luke 10 : 27; and let it be remembered that what is denominated "the spirit of man," is never spoken of as POSSESSING anything. "And HE answering said, Thou"—the man—the certain lawyer says—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy HEART, and with all thy MIND; and thy neighbor as thyself." Now the attributes of the man are expressed by the terms—heart, the seat of the affections and passions,—soul, the life,—strength, the power,—mind, the intention, purpose; the intellectual or intelligent power in man. Therefore it is the man who has these attributes, and neither of these attributes are independent conscious life creatures.

Before proceeding any further in our investigations, we will suggest the use of the genitive and dative cases of nouns in the Greek language. "The genitive connects with the object named, the idea of separation, origin, or possession." "The dative connects with the object named, the idea of addition, OR TO OR FOR which any thing is said or done."

It is sometimes the case, that the Greek term, Pneuma, spirit, is used in the genitive case, and sometimes in the dative. For want of observing this fact, the phrase, "the spirit of man," has been employed by some, who oppose man's unconsciousness in death, to prove that the spirit of man always denoted the same as man and spirit; and that therefore man has a separate, independent conscious life entity, by that name. Even the genitive case does not always denote "possession," as may be seen above, and the dative case is never employed to express the idea of possession.

Let us, first examine a text where the Greek word, Pneuma, is in the dative case. This is considered a stronghold against the fact so often announced in the Bible, of the unconsciousness of man. Observe Heb. 12: 23,—"And to the spirits of just men made perfect." This is the clause of the verse, that is supposed to teach the independent existence of a conscious spirit. Now the dative plural of the third declension of Greek nouns, is formed by adding "Si" to the root word. For example: "Basileus"—a king. Dative, plural, "Basilusi"—kings. Now to text—"the spirits of just men." "Pneuma"—spirit. Dative, plural, "Pneumasi"—spirits. Remember that the dative case denotes adding to, or to or for which any thing is said or done. In Heb. 12 : 23, "Pneumasi," the spirits, etc., is employed to affirm that something is done, i. e., "made perfect." This text would have more clearly expressed the Bible idea, with the following translation: "Kai, and, Pneumasi, lives, Dikaion, genitive, of just (men) teteleiomenon made perfect." "And to the lives of just (men) made perfect." Made perfect unto eternal life.

The Bible teaches us what God will do for man in the resurrection and future state, and there is not a promise to the spirit of man as if it was an independent living creature. "Pneumasi" are what are made perfect, and if independent conscious life entities are made perfect, the text does not affirm that any thing is done for the "just men" in whom they live. This word cannot possibly express more than an attribute of the men; and if it is translated lives, it declares the fact that, the lives of just men are made perfect; which will be true when the Lord Jesus Christ comes, for he will then give to just men, and not living independent spirits of men, immortality—eternal life. Heb. 12 : 22-24 points to the blessing of the new covenant to be realized at the end of this dispensation, and therefore in a future state. In the covenant we are come unto them now by faith, but not to all of them in reality until Jesus comes again. Once more, observe that the Greek word, Pneuma—lative plural, Pneumasi—is never used in the masculine or feminine genders, but always in the neuter gender, which is not grammatically employed to denote living beings or entities. Note a few texts. Matt. 5 : 3.—"Blessed are the poor in spirit," etc. To Pneuma. "To" is the sign of the neuter gender. Acts 15 : 28.—"It seemed good to the Holy Ghost." To agio Pneumati. Acts 15 : 8.—"Giving them the Holy Ghost." To Pneuma, To Agion.

We might multiply these references to any extent to prove that the Greek, "Pneuma," is in the neuter gender, and it will be found in the same gender invariably, whether it is applied to God or to man. Read John 4 : 24. We shall leave out the "a" because it is not in the original text. "God is spirit"—Pneuma. "Ho" is the sign of the masculine gender. "Theos," God. It is not ho Pneuma, but "HO THEOS"—"God," masculine gender, "is spirit," denoting his substance, which is in the neuter gender. The term neuter is compounded of "ne"—not, and "uter," either, and of course means neither masculine or feminine, when applied to the gender of nouns. It can be made to denote the masculine or feminine gender only "by personification, a figure of speech, by which life and action are attributed to inanimate objects; or by some adjective, verb or pronoun, representing a gender." "Pneuma," then, being only of the neuter gender, denotes nothing that literally possesses life or action in itself, and cannot be made to do so only by personification, a figure of speech.

Another fact which proves it, "pneuma," to be of the neuter gender is, that "all nouns of the third declension (in Greek) with the Genitive in 'atos,' are neuter." This is positively the case with "Pneuma." Nominative, Pneuma: Genitive, Pneumatos. We affirm that it is impossible to find a text of Scripture, which is speaking of man, that intimates that a spirit within him, or of him, knows any thing when the man is dead. Observe another text which speaks of one of man's attributes. 1 Cor. 2 : 11.—"For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit, "TO pneuma," of man which is in him?" Of course the mind of man only knows what is in the man, who possesses the attribute of mind, and that man can reveal himself to another so that he will also know him. This same noun, pneuma, is translated spirit in both clauses of the verse, and applied to God as well as man, with the Greek sign of the neuter gender: "To Pneuma tou anthropou," genitive, "the spirit of man"—"To Pneuma tou Theou," genitive, "the spirit of God." Observe Zech. 12 : 1.—"And FORMETH the spirit of MAN within him." The same as in Gen. 2 : 7; Num. 16 : 22; Num. 27 : 16; Job 12 : 10; Eccl. 12 : 7; Isa. 57 : 16. As explanatory of the other texts quoted, we will give Job 12: 10 in full. Job is speaking of what the hand of the Lord hath wrought, and says: "In whose hand is the soul (margin, life) of every living thing, and the breath (ruach) of all mankind"—(margin, "of all flesh of man.") This "breath" is no attribute of the dust-man, but the breath of life breathed into him, after God had perfectly formed the man of the dust. When Adam had become man by being perfectly organised of dust, Zech. 12 : 1, "And formeth the spirit of man within him" was next done, as in Gen. 2 : 7. We understand the statement in Zech. 12 : 1, to express the origin of the spirit (ruach) or breath of man—i. e., the Lord formed it. He first created the wind (ruath.) (See margin.) Amos 4 : 13. And then, as in Gen. 2 : 7, formed in man the principle of vitality, denominated "the spirit," or "breath of life." This is in the neuter gender. The genitive case is here evidently employed to express the origin of the "breath of life," or "spirit of man," and not something which the man possesses. Note Prov. 20 : 27. Before examining this text, we will further remark on Zech. 12 : 1, that it is supposed by some that because it is said that the Lord FORMETH the spirit of man, therefore it must be a living, thinking entity. This would be good logic, if every thing that is formed was a living, thinking creature, and that nothing could be formed without the attributes of life and mind. But it appears to me that our bodies contain a variety of well formed organs, that have no independent life, and that never thought of any thing: as the stomach, lungs and liver. This is a point not to be assumed as true, that the spirit formed within man is a living intelligence, but to be proved that it is so. How many have assumed this point, and then supposing the assumption as sufficient proof of its truthfulness, they have proposed to discuss the question: "Whether the spirit of man lies unconscious in the grave, or somewhere else in death." But let us notice Prov. 20 : 27.—"The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord, searching all the inward parts of the belly." The Hebrew term here rendered "spirit" is (n'sha-mah) the same that is translated "breath" in Gen. 2 : 7 and Isa. 2 : 22. This is in the neuter gender also, and does not refer to any thing having independent, intelligent conscious life. We have now noticed, I believe, all of the texts where the phrase, "the spirit of man," is used, and in every instance, we find the term "spirit" in the neuter gender, which is never employed only by a figure of personification to denote any thing either conscious or intelligent. Observe one or two instances of the figurative use of the neuter gender. The noun faith is in the neuter gender. In the "Christian Lyre," p. 17, hymn 88, the poet says of faith:

"The want of sight she well supplies,
She makes the pearly gates appear;
Far into things unseen she pries,
And brings eternal glories near."

Here faith is a noun of the neuter gender; she is feminine. By personification it is used to denote faith. Again.

"Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet."

Morn, by a figure of personification, is designated by the feminine pronoun, her. Again.

"Pleasant is the sun when he spreads his orient beams."

Sun is in the neuter gender. By a figure of personification, the pronouns he and his, of the masculine gender, are used to designate it. We have been thus particular to notice the gender of the terms, Ruach, Pneuma, Spirit, that all may perceive that those who affirm the independent, living, conscious existence of the spirit of man when THE MAN is dead, have first of all to prove that it ever did, in any state or place, possess a CONSCIOUS EXISTENCE. We affirm, we believe on good scriptural authority, that the only conscious life being designated in the Bible by the term "MAN," except by a figure of speech, is the dust-man, and that between death and the resurrection all who die are unconscious, and after the resurrection of the wicked, they will experience the penalty of the soul that sinneth and die again, and then be found unconscious; that the Bible never intimates, only by a figure of speech, that the spirit represents any thing, either conscious or intelligent, as an independent, intelligent spirit, in man or of man, capable of enjoying happiness or misery out of man, between death and the resurrection, or at any other time.

The penalties of God's laws are not to be inflicted upon the spirits of men, but upon men themselves. The rewards of the Bible are not promised to the spirits of men, but men, responsible men of the dust of the ground, who are alone capable of experiencing them. Therefore, we repeat, let those who believe in the existence of the spirit of man, intelligently and consciously, first prove that there is such a thing in man or of man, and when this has been done, then the discussion of the question, Whether that thing is conscious in all conditions or not: as in man or out of man, will be in place. It will amount to nothing in point of proof to say, that, "as her soul was in departing;" because we believe now, that any one may lose all their blood which is the life, and which is here evidently meant by the term "soul;" or that "the spirit has left the man" or the body, as the man is sometimes termed; for we believe that "the breath of life" may do that at any time, and therefore the life may and then will cease; but prove that in any text of Scripture, which says, as in Lk. 8 : 55, "And her SPIRIT came again, and she arose straightway: and he (Jesus) commanded to give her meat." Prove that THIS SPIRIT is a living, conscious creature or thing, whether IN HER, or OUT of HER; and if we may aid in summing up the proof on either side, just please to notice, that the "spirit" is no part of the "maid" referred to by the pronoun, her," and "she," and the spirit had no meat given to it; but rather the maid, represented by the feminine pronoun her, received the meat, while the term "pneuma—spirit" is preceded by the sign of the neuter gender, to. The maid was dead, and the breath of life had left her, and when the breath of life came again, SHE, the maid, lived, and not the breath of life that entered into HER.

If it should be objected that this term, "spirit," must mean life instead of breath, it would avail nothing, as it would only make the term "spirit" point out the effect instead of the cause. The breath is the cause, and the effect is only the life which is dependent upon that cause for its manifestation. This breath, however, is not given to cause life in itself, but in the man into whose nostrils it is breathed. Life, then, would be an attribute of the man, and when the man dies, that attribute is suspended until the resurrection, when the man will live again. The Bible reveals no life for man, or any thing that pertains to him, between this life and eternal life, which is not given until Jesus Christ comes the second time, and raises the "good unto the resurrection of life." Between these two lives, man is dead, and "the DEAD KNOW NOT ANYTHING."

In 1 Sam. 30 : 12 and Judges 14 : 19 a declaration similar to the above quotation from Lk. 8 : 55 occurs: "His spirit came again to him." Here something is done "to him," which is in the dative case. This could not refer to a living, conscious spirit, independent of the man, or in the man, the Egyptian; and neither could the text in Judges, when speaking of Samson, refer to any such a thing. Samson was very thirsty. God had given him water, "and when he had drunk, his spirit came again, and he revived." Had his immortal spirit left him, and he still alive, and by his drinking a little water, did its coming back revive him? Well, I should certainly have thought that he would have revived rapidly. This would prove too much. That Samson and the immortal spirit of Samson could both live independent of, and separate from, each other at the same time. "O consistency, thou art a jewel!"

For the Crisis.

The Nature and Origin of Jesus.

BY WM. HOBBS.

No. 4.

The doctrine of the pre-existence seems to have been met by Paul in 1 Cor 15, in anticipation of its being preached, by his declaring that the second Adam (Christ) was not before the first Adam; and afterward, in his second epistle, his mind seems to have been burdened with the thought that false teachers should arise, who would seek to corrupt the Corinthian disciples from the simplicity that is in Christ. There may be mystery in respect to what the Scriptures teach concerning Christ, yet there is a simplicity in the theory when understood. Mysteries may be simple when understood, provided the mysteries are agreeable to truth and not contradictory. But the idea of simplicity entering into the doctrine of a pre-existent Jesus, is simply absurd. Consequently, what Paul wrote cannot apply to any but to those who hold to a theory of Christ which is destitute of the characteristics of simplicity. His words are as follows:—"Would to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly; and indeed bear with me. For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy; for I have espoused you to one husband, that I might present you as a chaste virgin to Christ. But I fear lest by any means as the serpent beguiled Eve, through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. For if he that cometh, preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with me."—2 Cor. 11 : 1—4.

What does the apostle mean by, "He that cometh"? The expression is definite, and must therefore allude to some particular character. John said, "Beloved, ye have heard that Antichrist should come;" and Paul said to the Thessalonians, "That day shall not come except there come a falling away (an apostasy) first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." That this is the character that he alludes to, as "he that cometh," is evident, because he had not spoken of any other definite character as to come. That the Papal Hierarchy is the man of sin, is admitted by Protestants; and the apostle intimates that that anti-christian character would preach another Jesus, that the apostles had not preached. Paul preached that Jesus Christ our Lord was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and was declared to be the son of God according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead, and that he was made of a woman. But what does the papacy teach? Why, that a pre-existent or another Jesus was put inside of that Jesus whom Paul said was made of the seed of David. The theology of the man of sin is one thing and the theology of the apostles is another. Their theology is that "there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time."

Paul, in Heb. 11 : 14, says, "Forasmuch then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he (Jesus) also himself likewise took part of the same." The children are partakers of flesh and blood by divine appointment, and as it is said that Jesus likewise partook with them of flesh and blood, it shows conclusively that his birth was not optional with himself. Hence the idea of another Jesus, who pre-existed outside of the man Christ Jesus, and afterward existed inside of him, is not to be inferred from this passage, any more than that the children pre-existed. For according to Paul he took humanity upon himself in the same manner that the children partook, that is, not by any agency of their own, but by Divine appointment.

The angel that was sent to John on the Isle of Patmos, in personating Christ, says, "I Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, the bright and the morning star."—Rev. 22 : 16. Which clearly expresses his origin as from the family of David. To find what is meant by his being the root of David, we must compare parallel passages. That it does not mean Christ as God, as some suppose, is evident from Rev. 5 : 5, where "the lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David," is represented as receiving a revelation from God. Again, the root of a tree belongs essentially to the tree; hence, as Jesus is called the root and the offspring of David, it shows conclusively that he sprang from that tree or family of David; David representing one of those kind of trees that shoot out branches from their roots, so that the root of the branch is the root of the original tree. With this agrees the prophesy of Isaiah: "There shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots: and the spirit of the LORD shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge, and of the fear of the LORD: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked."—Isa. 11 : 1—4.

The whole of this prophecy goes to prove that Jesus is the root and offspring of the tree of David. The root of David, because he sprung out from the roots of that tree, by being made of the seed of David. And yet there are those who ignore this, by a theory of a pre-existent Jesus, whom they think helped God create the world. Those who think so, rely on Col. 1 : 16, and other passages of like import, as evidence of that queer theory. And the 15th verse is also quoted to the same end, which reads thus, "Who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature . . . . for by him were all things created." That Paul's meaning is that he is the first-born of every creature, as the express image of the invisible God, is the apparent meaning. But lest this be denied, it may be best to let Paul explain his own phraseology. He says, in Rom. 8 : 29, "Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren." The Arian idea that he was the first created being makes Paul's logic rather lame; since, according to that view, he would have been the first-born, whether others were conformed to his image or not. Christ is the first-born, because in his birth he was begotten of God as no other being was; consequently, in his nature he is the image of God. And God foreordained, according to Paul, that others should be conformed to the image of his only begotten son, Jesus Christ, in order that he might be the first-born; and this being Paul's interpretation sufficiently refutes those who interpret it differently.

But it may be best to quote again from Paul in Rom. 8. He says there, in immediate connection with the verse already quoted, "Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified." This fact in regard to the purpose of God, that he predestinated some to be glorified, applies with still greater force to Jesus; and will serve to explain that prayer of Christ in John 17 : 5, where he prays to be glorified with the glory that he had predestinated to him. It serves also to throw light on the passage in Colossians, as showing the object of the Creator, or his purpose in the creation of all things, that he might gather together in one, all things in Christ, that is, under him as head. Col. 1 : 16,—"For in (en) him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created through (di) him and for (eis) him.

The theory of a pre-existent Jesus aiding the Creator, is altogether dependent on the meaning of the Greek prepositions, en, di and eis. And yet a slight acquaintance with the Greek is sufficient to show that these prepositions are extremely varied in their signification, and not to be relied on alone to prove important doctrines. For instance, creation is ascribed directly to God: "In the beginning God created the heavens and earth;"—hence, the Greek prepositions, in the above, are not to be so understood as to conflict with that great and prominent truth of the Bible, that God alone is the creator. Had the apostle designed to assert that Jesus created all things, it would have been more fully expressed by the omission of those prepositions; so their use is rather indicative of a different theory. The theory indicated is expressed by the translators in rendering eis, for,—all things were created through him, "and for him." If God created all things for him,—then, all things were created in him and through him, as an object of creation, in order that he might be the Lord and heir of all things. The Greek prepositions admit of this rendering, and it is the only theory that can be well maintained. And it agrees with what Paul says of Jesus, where he says, "One in a certain place testified, saying, What is man that thou art mindful of him?—or the son of man that thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels: thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thine hands."—Heb. 2 : 6, 7. See also v. 9. 1 Cor. 8 : 6,—"But to us there is one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him." It is not true that the Bible teaches, that Christ created all things, as much as it does that God created all, as some assert; neither does it teach that Christ was an agent in creating. Creation is ascribed directly to God, both in the Old and New Testament, but it is not so ascribed to Jesus anywhere.

And in the above quotations from Paul, it is distinctly stated that there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things. To assert, then, that there is another, who is equally the creator of all, amounts to asserting that there are two Gods. It is not to be admitted that Paul made two statements so self-contradictory as that. The Greek prepositions, ex and di, are essentially different in their significations. Ex here denotes origin, and is translated "of." So when Paul says,—"To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things," creation is unequivocally ascribed to one God alone, hence, what he afterwards asserts of Jesus is restricted in its meaning by the previous assertion.

But there are those who are not satisfied with Jesus unless he is made to suit their own notions of what he ought to be. They would ignore him as a man, as not being a sufficient Savior for them; forgetting that according to their own theory, they are saved by the "human nature" of Jesus. They admit that we are reconciled to God by the death of his Son, and yet will not admit that any part of him died except his "human nature;" for if they admit that the Son died, it would be fatal to the triune theory. But it is evident that their theory is no improvement of the character of Jesus. He, who as a man, is the only begotten Son of God, and in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, is superior to that theory that teaches the combination of one of the persons of a tri-equal trinity with human nature, or any other theory of another Jesus. To him, then, that hath loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, to him be glory and dominion, forever and ever. Amen.

The Antichristian Confederacy.

The above is the heading of an interesting work published in England, from which we make the following extracts:—

The system of infidelity, which is to constitute the last Apostasy, seems to be as follows:—It will be an artificial combination of christianity and idolatry—a system of man-worship made to run parallel with the worship of Christ. We have lately seen an ingenious physician murdering an unfortunate woman by means of poisonous drugs, given in combination with healing medicines, but in such proportions that the poison overpowered the antidote. The poison was administered for the real object of murder; the medicine was administered nominally as a cure, but in reality only as a disguise. We have, also, seen this miscreant suffered to escape, though convicted on the fullest evidence,—a feeble government not having courage enough to resist the uproar of an ignorant mob. While such perversion of all honesty and justice makes one long for the government of the Great King, who alone knows how to govern, it also reminds us of a still greater crime, about to be perpetrated on a far wider scale. The last Apostasy will be a similar combination of medicine and poison, but in such proportions that the poison shall overpower the antidote. The poison will be the reality—the medicine only a disguise. In the approaching Apostasy the name of Christ will be carefully preserved. The worship of God will be fully admitted; but the principle will be this:—"Heaven for heavenly things; earth for earthly things." "The divine God-spirit for heaven; the divine man-spirit for the earth." A broad line of demarkation will be drawn between earth and heaven; and as far as this line every one will be permitted to go, on the earthward side. You may confine yourself altogether to the earth; you may keep far within the line; you may worship only the earthly god; or you may stand on the line of demarkation, as upon common ground, and worship both the true God, in heaven, and the false god, on earth; but it will be a crime to pass the line, and to confine yourself to the true God alone. You may profess to look forward to a heavenly state after death; you may profess your belief in the atonement; you may expect what you please after you have quitted the earth; but as long as you remain on earth, you must pay tribute to Cæsar—you must give the god of earth the honor due unto his name. When you get to heaven, do as others do in heaven; but as long as you are on earth, you must do others do on earth. By this means the two religions will run parellel to each other, and a combination will be effected, which will constitute the "Strong Delusion." The lie of the last age will exceed, in subtlety, the lies of all former ages, and bear away the palm from Romanism. Popery was too despotic, and left no choice; but the last Apostasy will be liberal and complaisant. It will allow you to be as pious as you please, and to hold all the articles of the christian faith; it will only add a few articles of its own, and require you to believe them at the same time. It will allow you the old faith, on condition that you combine it with the new. You may worship God, but you must reverence Antichrist. You may believe in a Redeemer, provided you believe in the false prophet. And, to complete the system, a line of demarkation will be drawn, likewise, between the two forms of worship, as well as between the two religions themselves. You will be permitted to worship Christ, as a heavenly Redeemer, for obtaining spiritual blessings, provided you worship the "beast," as an earthly redeemer, for obtaining earthly blessings. The two systems of faith will be kept wholly distinct; they will not be permitted to cross, but will run parallel to each other; and you may hold one in your right hand, and the other in your left. A single condition will be enforced, namely—that you must not cross the line into the territories of heaven, so long as you are on earth; but must give the god of the earth the honor due unto his name, and adhere to the inviolable principle—"Earth for the earthlies; Heaven for the heavenlies."

To keep up this system of combination, the Devil will even go so far as to promote christianity, after a manner of his own. He is doing so, now, incessantly. He will build churches until the land groans under them. He will multiply church ministers until the streets are darkened with them. The progress of christianity will be the boast of the age—never before was there seen such a progress. So many "laborers in the vineyard;" so many gifts "cast into the treasury." But the vine is the vine of Sodom, and the grapes are the grapes of Gomorrah. The gifts cast into the treasury are the gifts of Pharisees and Sadducees. Churches are built to be given over to Tractarians. Ministers are ordained, who are either half Popish or half infidel. Congregations are drawn together to be poisoned with false doctrines; and the greater the progress, the greater is the destruction. To do nothing would be better than such activity in evil. The Devil is overturning christianity by means of christian machinery. He is destroying Christendom by the false preaching of Christ. That Tractarian and High Church doctrine leads directly to Apostasy, none can doubt. That the German neology, which has crept into our universities, leads to man-worship and idolatry, is equally certain—so that the more churches we build, the more wicked we become; and the more Christ is preached, in this modern fashion, the more rapidly we are getting ready for Antichrist.

And what is the evangelical party doing in this crisis of the Church? They, at least, are combating Apostasy! Whether they are doing any such thing you may judge for yourself. They are worshiping money, and conniving at blood. In their public meetings, the only moving power that is ever thought of is the power of men and money. Having, for decency's sake, mentioned the name of God, they turn off to the subject that lies nearest to their heart. The man, the preacher, the missionary, is their one idol; the money that pays him is the other. So entirely are these two dwelt upon, to the exclusion of the Holy Ghost, that a heathen, on quitting one of our meetings would say—"The Protestants have two gods: one is called 'Money,' and the other is called 'Association.'" These two gods have the power of ubiquity; one being in every man's pocket,—the other in every town of a reasonable size. In fact, we are now become like the ancient Normans. Odin was the god whom they worshiped, and Valhalla was their heaven; while they admitted of another God, "mightier than Odin, and another heaven, brighter than Valhalla." The Protestant world worships man and money; and wealth and influence are its real heaven; while it admits, for form's sake, of another God, greater than man, and of another heaven (somewhere), brighter than a guinea! And look how the evangelical world connives at blood. If a poor parishioner (exhausted by his miserable labors) should be affected by the smallest measure of strong liquor, or tempted to the smallest theft, neither law, nor gospel-minister will shew him the least mercy. But when the great men of the nation have led us into war, until we have become drunk with human blood—when we have robbed and pillaged the Hindoos and the Chinese—when we have made the name of Christian abhorred by half the world—when our national policy is that of violence, rapacity and outrage—not a word have the Evangelicals to say; not an effort have they made to check our crimes; not a prayer will they utter except against the wretched men whom we oppress; not a thanksgiving, except to thank God, as if he were an accomplice in our crimes. Can such evangelism as this stop the way against Antichrist? Can it stand in the gap against the judgments that are at hand? Cringing to the great,—enslaved by the world,—afraid of the popular outcry,—it is, itself, an instrument for promoting Apostasy, and one of the chief provocations which bring judgments upon the earth. Can you place any confidence in such a paper as the "Record," which calls an infidel statesman a "Man of God?" or in Lord Shaftesbury, who supports an ungodly Prime Minister, and who urges on the country to more infuriated revenge, by false and exaggerated statements? It is not such instruments as these which will check Apostasy. On the contrary, they are serving Antichrist in the most effectual manner possible. For they, and nearly all the evangelicals, are teaching men to reconcile evangelism with the world—the spirit of Satan with the spirit of God. Oh! how the enemy must triumph in this supreme victory—this Pharsalia of Antichrist. The last army of God upon earth—the once evangelicals—have given way before the apostate host; they have done worse than the Republicans did at Pharsalia: they have joined the army of the world, and are fighting for Cæsar with one hand, while they pretend to fight for the "good cause" with the other. Were it not that God always keeps up a remnant in Israel, there would not now be left one obstacle to the devil upon earth. And that remnant is hated and reviled by the "Religious" world even more than by the ungodly. The whole fabric of mankind is crumbling into ruin. It is breaking up beyond the power of re-construction. A government without courage; a public press that deifies man, and never mentions God; the worship of money; contempt of heaven; thirst for blood, and frenzy of revenge, which equal the worst passions of the darkest ages; a church divided into two sections—the Tractarians and Infidels, preaching false Christs; and the Evangelicals uniting the true Christ with all the idols of the age,—what can revive such deadness? What can re-construct such devastation? Nothing but the hand of God; first leaving no stone upon another by unparalleled judgments, and then raising up the ruins of the past, by a divine government of the future. "I will shake the heavens and the earth (saith the Lord), and the sea and the dry land. And I will shake all nations; and the DESIRE of all nations shall come."—(Haggai ii.)

Lest any one should be led away by false expectations of improvement, we will now give one or two examples of the promising state of the Italian mind; and let people judge for themselves whether we are to look forward to Protestantism or Atheism in the Italian peninsula. Last June, while the war went on, there was published in Italy a certain pamphlet, intended, no doubt, to express the general feeling of the Italian districts most concerned in the revolution. This pamphlet contains, amongst other edifying matter, the following prayer: "Our Father which art now in the field; hallowed be thy name, oh Victor Emanuel. Thy kingdom quickly come. Thy will be done on the Italian soil, as it is under the Italian heaven. Give us this day our daily liberty. Make our nationality respected, as we respect the nationality of others. Lead us to the enjoyment of peace, but deliver us from the Austrians. Amen." After this parody of the Lord's prayer, there follows a creed, still more blasphemous: "I believe in Napoleon the First, Almighty maker of the first Empire. I believe in Napoleon the Third, his nephew, our omnipotent Savior, begotten by the influence of Divine Providence; born for our salvation; suffered under Orleans; was insulted, caught, and buried in prison. He descended into Ham, and rose again from civil death, ascended to the French Republic, and sitteth on the throne of Napoleon his uncle, from whence he shall come to judge the quick Italians and the dead Austrians. I believe in the kingdom of Victor Emanuel; the communion of Italy; the salvation of exiles; the resurrection of Italy; and the life everlasting of our brotherly league. Amen." Then follows another "Lord's Prayer," for the use of the Italians still living under the Austrian yoke. It proceeds as follows: "Our Father who art in Vienna, forgotten be thy name. May thy kingdom be kept to the other side of the Alps. May thy will never be done in Italy or in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, which thy robbers have taken from us. Give us back the gold and silver as we will give back thy paper-money. Lead us not into despair; but deliver us from thy police, now and forever. Amen."

Such is the state of Italy, and of the Italian mind. You will now admit that the last Apostasy, so often described in the "Vials," has already begun. Man is directly and literally worshiped, and God is deliberately omitted or insulted. Seven years ago (in 1852) the "Vials" referred to this Apostasy, under the title of "The New Religion;" and we then gave a specimen of the Lord's Prayer, as addressed to Louis Napoleon himself at a public meeting in France, and received by him without (as far as appears) any expression of disapproval. These things are well deserving of notice in such times as the present. We expect Italy to improve, and we find it becoming atheistical. We cry out for liberty and a free press, and when both are granted we find things grow worse than ever. Every country of Europe, that has gained an atom of freedom, has converted that atom into poison; and Italy had no sooner liberated one hand from the chain, than she struck with that hand at the majesty of God. The free press of England is the "abomination of desolation." It publishes a few little books of the most effeminate "spirituality," and then scatters abroad the "London Journal," and one hundred other periodicals, by ten millions at a time,—all of them filled with ribaldry and trash—all of them making up the only reading of nine-tenths of the population. Weak men, like Lord Shaftesbury, corrupted by flattery, snatch greedily at every bait that the enemy holds out, and are caught and lauded, to serve as baits themselves, to catch thousands more. For, let it be observed, it is under the aspect of improvement that the devil is leading the world into direct Apostasy. Under the name of liberty and Protestantism, he is opening the high road to the most infamous impieties. Weak men are led away by the glitter on the surface! they urge the multitude to plunge into the cool, delightful stream, which proves to be as burning as that of the "veiled prophet of Khorassan,"—and so they perish in the last Apostasy.

Having given a specimen of Italian improvement, let us now look, for a moment, to the leading man of the age—the Emperor Napoleon. This man has, for some years, been gradually approximating to the assumption of Godhead. He permitted the Lord's Prayer to be addressed directly to himself, full seven years ago. Since then, he has been advancing by imperceptible degrees towards the same point. A few years ago, when some of the rivers of France had overflowed their banks, and inundated the country, he announced in the Moniteur that "from thenceforth the rivers of his empire should confine themselves to their bounds!"—in imitation of the Divine decree, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no further." And he has been permitted to carry out his assumption so well, that since that time we have never heard of any inundations in France—at least, of any on a great scale. When he took the command of his army, last May, he was a complete novice in military art. He had never commanded a brigade. He had never seen a shot fired. Yet, before he left Paris, he ordered every preparation to be made for celebrating two or three great victories in Notre Dame. He announced his victories before he had ever seen an enemy. This was acting completely in the style of a Deity, and yet, again, he was permitted to succeed. The victories came at the due time, and were as duly celebrated in Notre Dame. And now, at length, he has been exalted by Italian adulation to the rank of the second person of the Trinity—"I believe in Napoleon the Third, his nephew, our Savior." What means this daring assumption,—this arrogating to himself the attributes of God? What means this marvelous success? Herod was struck down for only listening to the blasphemy of others. Napoleon not only listens to blasphemy, but speaks with his own mouth the language of a God; and yet he permits in the very objects of his blasphemy. These things are indications of some strange event: of the approach of some new and portentious era. The same Divine Power which struck Herod with death, prospers the impiety of Napoleon the Third; as if the modern Herod were intended for some part in a more daring Apostasy, and in a wider persecution.

One thing is evident. The assumption of Divine attributes has already begun: it has begun in the person of one man, and of one man only. And it is received without censure by Protestantism, and with approbation by infidels. One vast stride more has been made towards the final Apostasy. The deification of man was the first step. It has been taken long ago, even by the Protestant world. But this first step, you observe, only brought Christendom within the broad amphitheatre of Apostasy. The mind was bewildered by so many gods, and it knew not where to fix its devotions. Now the Devil is concentrating his forces;—narrowing his field of operations, and bringing one insulated object before the eye, in order to set up one compact system of idolatry. In order that Apostasy should gain in intensity, by diminishing in its area. The worshiping of all mankind, as so many gods, is gathering itself up into a single point, and this we have ventured to call Anthropotheism, which is, in fact, "Man-worship," concentrated and intensified. The attributes of Deity, which have been claimed for all men, are now claimed for one man, on a grander scale, and with more intensity of force: and thus Christendom is no longer distracted in its idolatry, but knows precisely where to turn its head, and to find its idol. The men of Israel were taught by God to pray toward "the house that was called by his name." The Arabian apostate taught his disciples to pray towards Mecca. And Satan, having blotted out the little stars of "man-worship," points to the rising sun, and tells Christendom to concentrate its devotions, and to worship Imperial omnipotence. We are advancing rapidly towards complete "Anthropotheism." The system is nearly perfected. It began with offering up the Lord's Prayer to an Emperor, in 1852. It grew, more and more, with that Emperor's super-human fortunes, and will be completed in that dread day when he shall have accomplished the grand design of his life. And what is that design? No matter; we cannot but think that it will succeed, and that Protestantism, now all but idolatrous, will then become idolatrous altogether. For the accomplishment of that great design, the Emperor is preparing day and night,—while his wretched victim looks on, half-trembling, half-boasting, half-making-ready, and half-asleep!

Let it only be remembered that, in this new system of Anthropotheism, the worship of a God in heaven is neither objected to, nor even omitted. The two deities, the earthly and the heavenly, are to be worshiped together. One is to be worshiped for heavenly favors,—the other for earthly. The new Apostasy of Anthropotheism will, in fact, be a double system—half heavenly and half earthly; half good and half evil; and, therefore, wholly abominable, for "you cannot serve God and mammon." One powerful man, of unrivalled capacity, will be the god upon earth, as the representative of all mankind. All men being gods, one man will be worshiped as the epitome of all. To him men will direct their thoughts and their addresses, whenever earthly prosperity is desired. But if any one should have a superstitious weakness for things in heaven—if he should be so unreasonable as not to feel satisfied with worldly enjoyments, and gross, brutal happiness,—why, he may worship the God of the heavens, if so inclined. Every man may be as pious or as impious as he pleases, on the one condition that he worship the earthly god at the same time, and that he assume his mark, his name, or the number of his name, 666, and write one or all of them upon his hand or forehead.—(Rev. xiii.) With this proper concession to popular opinion, he may worship the true God as much as he pleases; but without this concession he shall neither buy, nor sell, nor even live!

Then will come that "Snare of Protestantism" so often spoken of in the "Vials." Those degraded Protestants, who chatter of Missionary zeal while they are shedding human blood without remorse; those distributors of Bibles, and destroyers of the East; those men who make God's truth a cloak for avarice, outrage and revenge!—what will be their end? "A strong delusion that they may believe a lie." They will mistake the man who destroys Popery for the best of Protestants; they will follow him as the best of men, and end in worshiping him, and destroying themselves. The man who overturns Popery will be the Man of Sin, himself, in his full developement! Let every one most especially beware of giving in his adherence, for an instant, to the man who shall destroy Popery, and set up for a true Protestant. But of the true people of God, who abhor the avarice, the hypocrisy, and the bloodshed, of Protestantism, of them it shall be said, in those divine words—"God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth. Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 15, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed;

OR,

How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 8.

Having looked over five Divisions and sixteen sections of "Doubting Castle," and found nothing when inspected in the light of truth to prove the conscious state of any part of man between death and the resurrection, we pass to Division 6, section 17. Here we found the following:

"The word spirit is used several times, in the Bible, in such a way as to lead to the belief that it separates from the body, and still exists at death. David—'Into thine hand I commit my spirit.' Is there any sense in saying, 'into thy hands I commit my breath?' Christ said virtually the same words on the cross. Stephen, when dying, used a similar expression. The whole sense of the passage, as it stands in the Greek Testament, is, 'And they stoned Stephen as he was calling upon God and saying, Lord Jesus, take to thyself my spirit.' Did not his breath go out into the air, just where a beast's breath goes? It could not then have been his breath that he referred to by the word spirit. (17.) Was it the principle of life? Then shall we say, when a man dies, the principle of life separates from him? What is the principle of life? Is it matter? (18) May not that living something be intelligent?" (19.)

17. After looking over some of the other sections which at first sight looked so much like truth, but which proved to be founded only in error; we could see nothing very formidable in the sixth division. In relation to its first apartment, or section seventeen, it was all plain when viewed in the light already employed to illuminate sections twelve and thirteen of Division IV. It is true that the spirit, or breath, separates from the man at death, and this is the reason why he dies. It must not be forgotten that ruach, the word here rendered spirit, is the same one that is rendered breath, when David says: "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, THEY DIE, and return to their dust."—Ps. 104: 29. But this spirit, or breath, is neuter gender, and never represented as a conscious entity, existing as such, when the man is dead. This breath or spirit exists after death just as it did before the creation of man; while he returns to dust as he was, to await a resurrection "at the last day." We find no proof in the Bible that the spirit, or breath, of each man is preserved by itself after the man dies; but, on the contrary, it is declared, when speaking of man and beast, that "they have all one breath." The word here rendered breath is the same that is rendered spirit, when David says, "Into thine hand I commit my spirit." When this is done, "the breath of life" is given up into the hands of the Lord, and the man dies. This breath is not a component part of man, for he was made perfect in all his parts before "the breath of life" was breathed, or blown, into his nostrils.

When Stephen was being stoned, in his suffering he asked the Lord to take his spirit or breath away, (not himself,) that he might die. "And when he had said this, he fell asleep. . . . And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him." Remember this spirit is always represented in the neuter gender, hence it was not Stephen. Stephen "fell asleep" in death, and was buried. We see no possibility to draw a conclusion that this spirit or breath is the man Stephen, existing in a conscious state when he is dead and buried.

18. "What is the principle of life? is it matter?" The Scriptures say nothing about the principle of life, but frequently speak of "the breath of life." The latter is a material agent; but principles are never material—never conscious or intelligent entities. If the position be taken that the spirit is only "the principle of life," the matter is forever settled, that it is not a being existing in a conscious state between death and the resurrection.

19. In the nineteenth section we find the question, "May not that living something be intelligent?" No proof has yet been found in the eighteen sections of "Doubting Castle," already examined, to show that any "living something" leaves man at death. "Man became a living soul," when "the breath of life" was breathed into his nostrils; and he is the "living something" which dies when the breath is taken away; but we find no intimation that some other "living something" lives on in consciousness, when the man is dead. The Bible declares that when a man is dead, his "love . . . . hatred . . . . envy," and "his thoughts" are "PERISHED." When this has taken place, it is absurd to suppose that he is still living and thinking.

As we can see no cause for remaining in "Doubting Castle" on account of what is in the sixth Division, we pass to the examination of Division 7. This is one of the most important parts of the "Castle." Great efforts have been made to make this as imposing as possible upon the pilgrims, who are so unfortunate as to be shut up in this old "Castle" of anti-Christ, where false doctrines are coined. If the managers succeed in establishing their errors in the minds of their victims, they then send them far and wide, with much honor and a good support, to propagate their fables, and thus allure others into the same awful situation; but we trust they will never thus make a tool of our dear brother B., who has often most faithfully warned others to beware of the perils in "Doubting Castle." Let earnest prayer be offered that when he escapes, he may be to that stronghold of error, like Luther exposing the Pope of Rome, fearless and bold, and as terrible to the enemies of truth, as the lion of the forest when his mighty roar makes every beast tremble at the sound.

The following is Bro. Burnham's description of this Division:

"The account of man's creation seems to favor the idea that the spirit is a separate part of man in death. 'And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.' A part of man is here called 'man.' (20) That which was formed of the 'dust of the ground'—the dust part—is called 'man' before it has any life! (21) May not the life part, which was not formed from the 'dust of the ground,' but was added afterward, also be called 'man' when it separates from the dust part, at death? Why not? (22) And as 'man' had no intelligence before he had life, so when he has not in his possession the life part, at death, he—the dust part—knows 'not anything!' And as the communicating to him life, conveyed intelligence to him also, may not the intelligence be contained in the life spirit of man, to be manifested through the medium of the brain: and therefore, when man dies, he has no purposes, plans, wisdom, work, or knowledge in relation to this world or as a wise man has it, 'no part in anything that is done UNDER THE SUN!' (23) Why are we not told that God breathed into the animals this 'breath of life?' It seems, so far as we have any account of the matter, that they lived without being 'breathed into.' (24.) This word, 'breathed into,' is a peculiar word. It is also rendered 'blew,' 'formed,' 'created,' 'made.' And God formed in man the breath of life. (25) What was this that was 'breathed into' man? Was it air? but there was air in him before! There is air in all creatures, whether they live or are dead. (26.) Was it 'life?' What is 'life?' Who knows what 'life' is? May not life be the germ power of all intelligence? In some conditions, may not 'life' be intelligent without a physical medium to manifest itself through? Is not 'life' intelligent in our Creator without a medium of manifestation?' (27)

20. It is true that the spirit, or "breath of life," is taken from man at death. In this first apartment of Division 7, section 20, is one of the boldest and most important assertions in the whole of "Doubting Castle;" and yet, one of the most false ever uttered by its defenders. It is as follows: "A part of man is here called man." No effort has been spared to cause all who enter this section to believe the foregoing assertion. It has been uttered with so much boldness and apparent confidence, by the directors of "Doubting Castle," that the oppressed and weary pilgrims have hardly dared to question its truth. But having found out that the whole institution is founded in error, so far as we have examined, we are resolved to believe nothing affirmed in "Doubting Castle," till it is proved by good evidence.

Come, reader, draw near, and let us look this assertion in the face. It is made, as you perceive, after quoting Gen. 2: 7, which reads as follows: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Following this is the statement—"A part of man is here called man." We inquire, which part? Please notice the confusion in the faces of "Doubting Castle" managers, as they endeavor to frame an answer. We inquire again, which part? Echo answers—"which part?"

That which "God formed . . . of the dust of the GROUND," he calls man, and has never called that man which he breathed into his nostrils. This breath, as before shown, is not a component part of man, any more than the steam is of the engine, or the wind of the ship. Man was made perfect in all his parts and named man, before "the breath of life" was breathed into his nostrils. There is nothing put into man after his creation but "the breath of life." This "breath," or spirit, is either man, or it is not. If it is, then the Lord called the wrong one man. Again, if that breath is man; then it follows, that wherever we find this breath, we have found a man. In Gen. 7: 15, we read, "They went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is "the breath of life." Did each of these animals have a man in it? But they all had the same breath as man; for, says the wise man, "They have all one breath." Thus we see that the assertion which declares that "a part of man . . . is called man," is utterly false, and compares well with the other statements posted up in "Doubting Castle."

21. We will glance at section twenty-one. Here it is truly stated, "That which was formed of the 'dust of the ground' . . . is called 'man' before it has any life." We find no fault with this proposition, except applying the neuter pronoun it in opposition to the masculine one, as used by the Lord. The object seemed to be to get the idea into the pilgrim's mind, that, the man formed was only a house for the man to live in.

22. In section twenty-two, the question is asked, if the "life part," or breath of life, which was added to man after he was created, may not be called "man" when it leaves him at death? This is a very strange question, and we think it would never be asked anywhere else than in "Doubting Castle." Suppose a noble ship was resting upon the calm bosom of the deep; and anon, a fresh breeze fills her sails, and she floats away pleasantly to her destined harbor. After she is safely anchored and sits still in her dock, what should we think of the man who should inquire, "May not the wind be called the ship after the sails are furled so that it can fill them no more?" The question is certainly as sensible, as to inquire if "the breath of life," in man's nostrils, may not be called man, after it has left him in the state of death.

In our next, we will continue the examination of the seventh Division.

"The Pope and the Congress."

The above heading is the title of a remarkable pamphlet published in France. It is believed that the sentiments of Napoleon III. are set forth in this work, which has caused great consternation in the Pope's dominions. Already an audible echo is heard from Archbishop Hughes, of New York. The papal waters are deeply troubled. The writer of the pamphlet says:

"The domination of Austria in Italy is at an end. This is the grand result of our campaign, consecrated by the peace of Villafranca. For Austria to return to Florence, to Parma, or to Bologna, it would be necessary to admit that it was she who vanquished us. . . . . . France, then, cannot intervene for the re-establishment of the temporal power of the Pope in the Romagna, and she cannot allow Austria to have recourse to force to compel the populations when she rejects its employment on her own account. . . . . What is to be done in the actual position of affairs to conciliate interests that appear irreconcilable?

Two extreme parties are opposed to each other—one wishes to deprive the Pope of everything, the other to give him all. They are two hypotheses equally inadmissible, and both, though radically contrary to each other, would have the same result for the Papacy."

State of Italy.

A terrible storm cloud is hanging over Italy. No bright future dawns upon the Vatican. "The mother of harlots" is, evidently, about to drink the fatal cup which will bring "death, and mourning, and famine," and utter burning with fire. The days of her drunken revelry, while gloating over the blood of saints, will soon be at an end. The sleeping martyrs are about to rise and sing in glory, while the smoke of their burning enemies rises from their funeral pile.

Says a correspondent of the London Times, writing under date of Rome, Dec. 3d, 1859:

"Everything in Italy points to total religious disorganization. Between the upper and middle classes, who believe, and the lower orders who understand absolutely nothing, I see no ground on which anything like a rational religious edifice may be speedily built. Give the Italians full tether and they will run far and wide. They will put down the Pope, sure enough; they will scare away the priests; there will be a sweeping, all-demolishing, leveling work. What new world may arise on the ruins of the old one only distant generations may see. In the meantime, if anything is positively clear to every fair observer, it is the fact that neither the State nor the Church of Rome admits of reform—that one cannot be in any manner interfered with apart from the other, and that nothing but sheer foreign force, or the imminent dread of it, can stay the hands of the Italians, who are already aiming their blows at their great hybrid internal foe, long before they can see how they are to settle accounts with their external enemies."

"I Sit a Queen."

The Catholic, of Jan. 7th, says:—

"It is amusing to read how Protestant publicists talk of the approaching overthrow of the Pope. One would think they ought to have better sense. In the first place, the temporal sovereignty of the Pope over his States, is not necessarily connected with his spiritual Headship of the Church. Take the first away from him, and he will still retain the second. Besides, these gentlemen ought to remember that several attempts have been made to expel the Pope from the Vatican; but that all have resulted in the triumph of the Pontiffs, and the destruction of their adversaries. They cannot yet be quite sure that Louis Napoleon will imitate his Uncle's policy in regard to the Holy See, and even were they sure, they ought to know that in this hypothesis, he will in inevitably meet with his Uncle's fate."

Bonaparte and Spiritualism.

The Spiritualists claim Bonaparte as one of their men, who is under the direction of the spirits. A short time since, we heard J. S. Loveland, formerly a Methodist preacher, but now a prominent Spiritualist lecturer, who is said to be inspired. In the course of his remarks he said, "Spiritualism is moving the man of destiny," referring to Bonaparte. In the notices posted up in Boston, Mr. Loveland announces his subject as follows:

"The prophecies of Daniel, contained in chapters 2nd, 3d, 7th, 11th, and 12th; and of John, in Revelation, chapters 15th, 17th, and 19th, traced to their fulfillment, conclusively proving, by historic data, Louis Napoleon to be the revived seventh head of the Apocalyptic vision, which was slain by the sword of military violence, and Spiritualism to be the little stone of Daniel, cut out of the mountain without hands, and filling the whole earth."

He stated that when Spiritualism is perfected, there will be "a general distribution of land;" "universal inspiration, for all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest," referring to communion with spirits; and then "universal joy, for there would be none to hurt or destroy in all the holy mountain." Then the people would "no more say, I am sick," for the earth would be regenerated when filled with Spiritualism.

For the Crisis.

The Grant and Clayton Discussion.

"The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable."—PAUL.

Dr. John Cumming, of London, England, says: "The greatest blessings have been achieved by Discussions; Error suffers in the ordeal—TRUTH NEVER DOES!! the dross only is consumed in the fire, while the gold comes out more brilliant, more precious, more pure." Again, he says: "Many deprecate controversy—they think it fitted for the battle field, not for the peaceful pastures of the gospel; but we think differently. In politics, excitement is the peril—in religion, stagnation is the peril. What we have to fear in religion is not life [activity,] but death [formality.] Give us LIFE—life with its excesses—rather than the silence, and with it the corruption of death."

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY OF IT!

[From the Auburn Daily Union of Jan. 19.]

"The discussion occupies one hundred and twenty closely printed pages. Both sides of the question are ably and skillfully conducted, and the result has been a work which will probably give more information to the seeker after truth than years of attendance at any one church where but one side of the question is heard. These discussions are of great utility and should be oftener undertaken, as it draws out the very strongest arguments in favor of the various beliefs, giving persons an opportunity to read the views of each, and thus settle into a belief which shall for ever remain firm."

[From the Seneca Co. Courier of Jan. 19.]

"This Discussion, which took place in this village in December last, between Elder W. W. Clayton, of Auburn, N. Y., and Elder M. Grant, of Boston, Mass., and excited a high degree of interest from the importance of the subject and the known ability of the disputants, has been published in book and pamphlet form, from phonographic reports taken at the time, and revised by the parties."

[From the Waterloo Observer of Jan. 25.]

"The controversy embodied in this pamphlet is not without interest, and will be very generally read."

[From the Cayuga Lake Recorder of Jan. 18.]

"Both these gentlemen are thorough biblical scholars and profound theologians, and the discussion is conducted with great ability and skill on both sides.

In this work, the searcher after truth has an opportunity of informing himself on these all-important subjects, such as could not probably be obtained through any other medium. The facts and arguments which pertain to either side of the question, are here brought out, and plainly arranged, enabling the reader to comprehend at once their bearing and import, thus aiding him to discriminately judge of the relative soundness of each gentleman's position, and giving all an opportunity to seek out the truth pertaining to these matters. The work should be in the hands of every inquirer after Truth."

[From the Seneca Falls Reveille of Dec. 10.]

"Both gentlemen quoted largely from Scripture and the ancient writers to sustain their respective positions. It is evident . . . . that Elder Grant is by far the ablest of the two in argument, and altogether the best Biblical scholar; we do not say this by way of prejudice to Elder Clayton, because our feelings, sympathy and education teach us to believe his position was the nearest right in the discussion. The Rev. gentlemen are both able speakers."

[From the Prophetic Expositor of Feb. 1st.]

"The two disputants being men of equal ability, as we suppose they are, as a matter of course Elder Grant has obtained a triumphant victory over his opponent, for the Bible, sound philosophy and matters of fact do not furnish a particle of positive evidence to sustain the immortal-soul hypothesis; it has nothing but inferential testimony, unlawfully drawn, for its foundation and support; while the opposite theory is sustained by an overwhelming amount of the most reliable POSITIVE EVIDENCE."

Let every one who loves the truth, and is willing to WORK in this glorious cause—every one who would hear the welcome applaudit, "Well done good and faithful servant," etc., get some of these books and scatter. Brethren, let your LIGHT SHINE!!

Yours, "bound for the Kingdom."

THOS. G. NEWMAN.

☞ If you find a man disposed to complain of the coldness of the world, be sure you will find that he has never brought any thing into the world to warm it, but is a personal lump of ice set in the midst of it. If you find a man who complains that the world is all base and hollow, tap him, and he will probably sound base and hollow. And so, in the other way, a kind man will probably find kindness about him.—Dr. Chapin.

What is duty? The demands of to-day.

Reasons for Dissenting

from the opinion that future punishment will consist in eternal life in misery.

1st. Because it is a violation of the penalty which God has annexed to the transgression of his holy law. This penalty is plainly and positively revealed to be, not eternal existence in misery, but DEATH. "In the day thou eatest thereof (i. e. of the forbidden fruit) thou shalt surely DIE," or, "dying, thou shalt DIE."—Gen. 2 : 17. "The soul that sinneth it shall DIE."—Ezek. 18 : 4. "The wages of sin is DEATH."—Rom. 6 : 23. "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth DEATH."—James 1 : 15. "They that commit such things are worthy of DEATH."—Rom. 1 : 32. "Why will ye die?"—Ezek. 18 : 31. "He that converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from DEATH."—James 5 : 20. "There is a sin unto DEATH."—1 John 5 : 16. "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire."—Rev. 20 : 15. "This is the SECOND DEATH;" v. 14; terminating existence forever, for there is no revelation of any revival therefrom.

The affixing of the term spiritual to the term death, as the penalty of the law, is confounding the penalty with the crime. Spiritual death is to be "dead in trespasses and sins." This is the sinner's guilt and distinct from the penalty. To say that the wages of sin is spiritual death, is to say that the wages of sin is sin. Who ever heard of the penalty of a law being expressed in figurative language?

2. Because God has plainly declared that "all the wicked will he destroy."—Ps. 145 : 20. That they "shall be punished (not with immortal wo, but) with everlasting destruction," etc.—2 Thess. 1 : 9. That they are "fitted to DESTRUCTION."—Rom. 9 : 22. That their way "leadeth to destruction."—Matt. 7 : 13. That they are "cast down into destruction."—Ps. 73 : 17; and that their END is destruction."—Phil. 3 : 13. For "they shall be destroyed forever."—Ps. 92 : 7. See also 1 Cor. 3 : 17; Rev. 11 : 18; Prov. 1 : 27, etc.

3. Because Jesus Christ, the faithful Witness of the Truth, plainly defines this destruction to be, not a destruction of happiness merely, but a destruction of SOUL and BODY in hell, (gehenna) Matt. 10 : 28. The passages quoted declare that the wicked themselves (and not merely something pertaining to them) shall be destroyed.

4. Because other terms, relating to this awful subject, harmonize with a literal death and destruction of being; denoting the same, and not eternal existence in torment. Such are the terms, perdition, lost, perish, coming to an "end." "He will burn up the chaff ("the children of the wicked one") with unquenchable fire." If the fire is not quenched, the chaff is utterly consumed and destroyed. "Their worm dieth not;" the inevitable consequence of which is, devouring to annihilation. "They shall be as though they had not been."—Obadiah 16.

5. Because the sacred scriptures, in presenting to us, in contrast, the future retributions of man's probationary state, plainly represent them as consisting, not in a happy and miserable immortality, but in life and death;—Rom. 6 : 23; life and destruction;—Matt. 7 : 13, 14; life and corruption;—Eph. 6 : 8; salvation and perdition, or being lost; glory and destruction.—Rom. 9 : 22, 23.

6. Because the opinion of man's natural immortality (which is the origin and basis of the common sentiment of endless agonizing torment) has no foundation in the word of God. This word of eternal truth declares that MAN (not an inferior part of man) is "mortal."—Job 4 : 17; 2 Chron. 14 : 11; margin.

There is not a single passage in divine revelation, which declares that man, in the general, is immortal, or has an immortal soul. 1 John 3 : 15; 5 : 2, and other passages, declare the contrary.

7. Because the Eternal Spirit of Truth has inseparably connected the immortality of sinful man, condemned to everlasting death, with his vital union to the Son of God, by a divine regeneration. 1 John 5 : 1.—"He that hath the Son hath life," and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life," i. e., eternal life.—1 John 5 : 2. "And this is the record, that God hath given us eternal life; and this life is in his Son."—1 John 5 : 11. "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6 : 23. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life."—John 3 : 36. "I (Jesus) am the life."—11 : 25; 14 : 6; 6 : 33; 35 : 48; 6 : 53; Col. 3 : 4, etc. Observe, the term in these passages is not happy life but life, denoting that none but believers on the Son of God have eternal conscious existence.

8. Because the utter destruction of impenitent sinners, after various degrees of actual suffering, apportioned to their different degrees of guilt, is a sufficient manifestation of God's holy opposition to sin; doing ample honor to his justice, and infinitely more compatible with his revealed character as "the Father of mercies." The wages (or true desert) of sin is (not eternal torment, but) DEATH."—Rom. 6 : 23; Rom. 1 : 32. Consequently, punishment so vastly greater than "death," as endless torment must be, would be more than justice requires. I question, moreover, whether the human intellect can conceive of a greater incongruity and contradiction, than to suppose that a Being who claims the character of "THE FATHER OF MERCIES," will hold his intelligent creatures in ceaseless torment and agonizing misery throughout the revolving and endless ages of eternity! Surely, it is no marvel, that theologians of reputed orthodoxy, have been compelled to confess themselves shocked and confounded by the serious contemplation of their own faith of a nature so horrible! Nor is it any more wonderful, that men and women who overlook the revealed doctrine of "everlasting destruction" in the "second death" of the wicked, should seek a refuge from a faith so monstrous, in the error of universal salvation. The ultimate salvation of the entire human race, although an error of deleterious tendency, inducing fatal presumption, must be acknowledged to be an error vastly less irreconcilable with the divine perfections than that of immortality in writhing torture.

9. Because the term, forever and ever, connected in Rev. 14 : 11 : 20 : 10, with torment, is, in innumerable instances, used in the sacred scripture to denote a limited period of duration; e. g. Gen. 17 : 13; Isa. 30 : 8. In Jonah 2 : 6, to a period of three days. In Rev. 14 : 11, this torment is connected with "day" and "night."

10. Because, if the fear of being cast into the lake of fire, Rev. 20 : 15, to be tormented for a shorter period than eternally, together with the loss of the eternal enjoyment of the blessed God, the infinite good, is not a sufficient motive to deter man from continuing in impenitence and unbelief, the fear of eternal torment itself would be unavailing.

Finally, I reject the popular sentiment of the eternal existence of the sin and misery of a portion of the human race, because it involves a failure of the plainly revealed glorious purpose of Jehovah, in the incarnate manifestation of his beloved Son.

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3 : 8. "Forasmuch, then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also, likewise, took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, even the devil."—Heb. 2 : 14. This counsel of our Father of mercies shall stand.

The devil and all his works shall be destroyed. Sin is to be "finished."—James 1 : 15. If sin and misery are to exist eternally, the works of the devil will never be destroyed. Blessed be the God of salvation, "the triumph of the wicked (whether of men or devils) is short." Its temporary exultation shall only serve to illustrate the glorious and eternal victory of Zion's King o'er all the powers of darkness, bringing in a greater revenue of praise to Him "who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will."

The discerning mind, unbiassed by human tradition, must perceive that in the sacred oracles there is no revelation of immortality as a natural attribute of man. Were this the fact, he could not have been threatened with death.—Gen. 2 : 17. An immortal being cannot die. When God created man, he suspended his life, or continued conscious existence, on his obedience to his Creator. Immortality is plainly revealed in the holy Word; but as an object to be sought after and obtained by faith in the Son of God, (John 3 : 36) and "patient continuance in well-doing."—Rom. 2 : 7. What prophet or apostle, "moved by the Holy Spirit," ever told men that they have immortal souls or deathless spirits? If we admit the sacred truth, that "the wages of sin is death," (Rom. 6; 23), how appropriate and forcible is the gracious appeal of our Father in Heaven to transgressors of his law, "Why will ye die?"—Ezek. 18; 31. An appeal which can never, with propriety, be addressed to an immortal being. In harmony with this truth, the terms, happy and miserable, blessed and cursed immortality, required by the popular theory, are never found in the sacred volume.

Are any of us speculating on this awful subject and withholding our hearts from our Maker, and our love from our neighbor? Let us agonize to enter into eternal life. The overwhelming conviction that God and heaven, and immortality with its inconceivable glories, are lost—ALL FOREVER LOST, by voluntarily preferring the world to God, will be the bitterest ingredient of remorse in the cup of agony of the expiring soul!—A Tract by H. Grew.

REASONING OF A NEWFOUNDLAND DOG.—A friend of mine, while shooting wild fowl with his brother, was attended by a sagacious dog of this breed. In getting near some reeds by the side of a river, they threw down their hats and crept to the edge of the water, where they fired at some birds. They soon afterwards sent the dog to bring their hats, one of which was smaller than the other. After several attempts to bring them both together in his mouth, the dog at last placed the smaller hat in the larger one, pressed it down with his foot, and thus was able to bring them both at the same time.—Jesse's "Anecdotes of Dogs."

☞ Every man stands surrounded by innumerable mysteries; and in the middle of them all, none is more mysterious than himself. Life is a mystery. Sea, moon, and stars are mysteries. What wonder then that there should be mysteries in God?

Correspondence.

From D. B. and M. S. Mansfield.

BRO. GRANT:—We are now engaged in a protracted meeting in this place. Have held meetings evenings for two weeks; the result is, ten intelligent believers have been added to the church. Two years ago we made arrangements to hold meetings here once a month, and have been able, by the blessing of God, to fill all our engagements. We organized a church with eight believers. The church has gradually increased to twenty members. Now the addition of ten new intelligent converts to their former number creates new joy in every heart. May the Lord have all the glory. Others are waiting an opportunity to be baptized. A deep interest is felt in every meeting. More weeping and humble prayer for the salvation of sinners than we have ever witnessed in any reformation before in Michigan. We rejoice to see our fellow men leave all for eternal life.

We would further say that our labors for over two years have been mostly confined to Buchanan, Dayton, and vicinities. Our present engagements here will be closed in March and April, after which we deem it duty to hold ourselves free to meet the calls of other chuches, as the Lord may direct. First, however, according to promise, and the Lord will, we shall visit some churches in Ill., Wisconsin and Iowa. We would like to hear from our brethren in northern Ill., southern Wisconsin and Iowa, about when and where they think best, as we will try to make about six weeks' tour. Let it be remembered that our traveling expenses in the cars are just double the amount of one person.

Dayton, Mich.

From Chas. Stevens.

BRO. GRANT:—I think I can safely say that the cause of truth is on the advance in this place. God has not forsaken old Exeter. Bro. Hiram Munger has been with us a few days laboring to good acceptance. It was apparent that the Spirit of Jesus was present to do its work. Last Sabbath the entire audience was moved to tears; but the people would not submit, as a general thing; those that did were blessed. We trust that four have truly been converted; one of these, a sailor, my wife's brother, who had been at sea for sixteen years. His mother and friends had given him up as lost—returned about this time—saw his condition and has become a true convert. Also our little son fifteen years of age. God must have all the glory for what he has done and is doing here. Also in Portsmouth, it is a time of much interest. Some there have recently found peace. Be encouraged, brethren, the day of final deliverance is near.

Exeter, Jan. 28th.

From Bro. R. Flower.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been here somewhere about six months, and have tried to find some Advent believer, but have not yet. And I see there are more copies of the Crisis than mine come to this office, and I suppose that they are taken by those who believe in the soon coming of our Lord; and I think that we ought to meet together, if there are but two or three, for we can claim the promise left on record for us.

If you will insert this, or part of this imperfect letter in the paper, perhaps some brother may see it, and we can get together and have meetings. I have attended other churches, but hear nothing about the Lord's coming at all, only the conversion of the whole world, and I do not think that will ever be, according to the words of Peter. May the Lord bless you, and give you a part in his kingdom.

Nashua, N. H.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Lincolnville, Me., on the 17th ult., Mrs. LUCY BLOOD, aged seventy-one.

By this stroke of the enemy death, we with others have been bereft of a kind and affectionate mother, whose loss we deeply feel. But while we sorrow, it is not without hope, for we believe that when He who is the saints' life shall appear, she will be raised to share immortality and eternal life in the kingdom of God. There may we meet her—

"No more separation to fear."

There's sadness in the home, mother,
That knew thy place on earth,
And broken is the band
That gathered round the hearth.

But all unbroken is the love
That knew a mother's care;
And should we gain that "better world,"
We hope to meet thee there.

Z. A. TEMPLE.

Died, in Marshfield, Vt., Dec 27th, 1859, CYNTHIA WINCH, aged seventy-seven years.

Her disease was consumption: and although a great sufferer, she patiently endured. She never was heard to murmur or complain, but would often say, "I long to depart and be with Christ; still am willing to wait all my appointed time, until my change comes." She was confined to her home for a long time, and has been gradually wasting away. Yet in the midst of it all she was led to look for strength to Him who is the Resurrection and the life. And so, resting upon the arm of Christ, she walked calmly down amid the shades of the dark valley, and feared no evil. She was a kind mother and a faithful companion. We mourn, but not as those who have no hope. We hope to meet her in the morning of the resurrection, when Jesus shall come to destroy the last enemy.

HANNAH B. WINCH.

Departed this life, in Brookfield, N. H., Nov. 12th, 1859, Bro. JACOB CHAMBERLAIN, aged fifty-two.

The subject of this notice experienced the pardon of his sins, and became reconciled to God through Christ, in 1842, and made a public profession of the same by baptism, and united with the Freewill Baptist church in Brookfield. When the speedy coming of the Lord was preached by Bro. Miller and others, he became interested in that glorious doctrine, and with the saints went forth with the joyful expectation of meeting the Heavenly Bridegroom. But time rolled on—the Lord did not come. The saints were disappointed and sad, while the world rejoiced. While many fell away, our brother was among those who still held on their way, and grew stronger; he maintained his integrity, and sustained a christian character. When the proclamation of the Lord's coming in 1854 was made, he was awakened by the soul-cheering sound, and rejoiced in prospect of speedy redemption. And although again disappointed, he still maintained his trust and confidence in God, until, as we humbly trust, he calmly fell asleep in Jesus.

Our brother enjoyed good health up to the time of his death. After partaking of some refreshment about six o'clock in the evening, he sat down in a rocking-chair, and after a few moments his wife, who was sitting at the table reading, heard him breathe unnaturally, when she looked around and spoke to him, but there was no answer. She stepped up to him and again spoke, but there was no reply. She ran to the window and called to her friends who lived in a house a few feet distant, but before they could get in, the spirit had taken its flight; he was still sitting in his chair as if asleep. Every effort possible was made to resuscitate him. A physician was called in, but all in vain. His race was run, his work was finished.

The funeral was attended by a large number of relatives and friends, and a discourse preached by the writer, founded on Isa. 57 : 1. May the Lord sanctify this sudden bereavement to the good of the afflicted companion, brothers and sister, and prepare them for that glorious home where death will never enter.

JOSEPH SPINNEY.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

FRANCE.

The commercial treaty between France and England was signed at Paris on the 23d ult. The terms were not authentically known, and it was reported that they would not be published until the English Chancellor of the Exchequer had submitted his Budget to Parliament, when the treaty would be simultaneously promulgated in the Paris Moniteur. Various rumors were afloat as to the provisions of the treaty. The Paris correspondent of the London Times learns, on good authority, that the English government has frankly carried out its principles of free trade. He also states that English coal will not be relieved of all duty but only of differential duty.

The Paris correspondent of the Spectator says that the treaty embraces the following objects. A complete and effective assimilation of the French and English flags in maritime intercourse, direct or indirect, between both countries and their respective colonies, and exoneration for both English and French ships from all tonnage dues in both English and French ports.

The Liverpool Post contains the following: "We are in a condition to affirm that the following statement is true: The Emperor of the French has written a second letter to the Pope, brief but emphatic. His Majesty is willing and anxious to remain as hitherto, the eldest son of the Church, and continue deferential to the Holy Father in all things spiritual, but if his holiness opposes his late proposition, let him remember Henry the Eighth.

The Pope having called for the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome, the Emperor in the same letter says they shall be withdrawn if his Holiness persists, but that he (the Emperor) will cause a month's notice to be given to all strangers resident in the Eternal city.

AUSTRIA.

VIENNA, Jan. 23. Powerful reinforcements and many guns have recently been sent to Venetia, and military men say that the artillery is intended for Verona, which is being strengthened in every possible way. A short time since an order was issued to sell a great number of horses belonging to the artillery and baggage train, but it has been revoked, as the Austrian Government suspects that an attempt is about to be made to wrest Venetia from its grasp.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times asserts that the Emperor Francis Joseph is so much excited that it would not create very great astonishment should he resolve to take up arms in defence of the Tuscan and Modenese branches of his house, and very strong delarations on the part of France and England may be necessary to prevent hostilities.

The political agitation in Pesth is so great that it is no longer an agreeable place of residence for persons who are disinclined to lay aside their "cylinders" and don the Hungarian cap and plume.

ROME.

A letter from Rome in the Journal des Debats, says that at Rome the Pope has only some dragoons and the Palatine Guard of a few hundred men. The German recruits only amount to 4000, and they are at Macerata. The Pope has, all together, about 8000 troops, of whom 2000 are riflemen and carbineers. Of the 8000, 4000 are Swiss, and at Perugia, and of the remaining 4000, 2000 are at Ancona, 1000 at Urboin, and 1000 at Pesaro.

Another letter from Rome states that the Pope, contrary to the opinion of his most violent advisers, has renounced the idea of publishing his reply to the letter from the Emperor of the French, and has stated that, in spite of the temporary dissent existing between himself and the Emperor, he cannot forget previous eminent services.

The following is an extract of a letter from Rome, in a London paper:—

"In Rome itself, strange to say, the Liberal party are not only dissatisfied with the Imperial decree which condemns them to 'prayer and the cultivation of ruins,' but they are likewise greatly incensed at the defection of the provinces which have so long obeyed the sway of their city. The triumph of the national cause is not only a blessing in which they are to have no share, but a consummation fraught with their own total ruin and dissolution. However handsomely the Catholic world may make amends to the Pope for the curtailment of his regal mantle, no liberality on its part will make up for the loss of importance and authority with which the crumbling metropolis is threatened.

Rome wishes not only to be free, but still to be a queen. The Romans yearn, doubtless to follow the fortunes of their brethren, but are selfish enough, if that is impossible, to wish, at all events, that their brethren may be forced to share their own lot, good or bad, as it may be. They wish either that the Pope should cease to be altogether a temporal sovereign, or that he may so reform and improve his temporal rule as to make it as endurable to the Romangese, Umbrians, etc., as it may be made to themselves."

[From the London Times, Jan. 18.]

The position of the Pope and his supporters has, in fact, become wholly untenable, and has in it much more of the ludicrous than the sublime. We are assured that the temporal power of the Pope is eternal at the moment when the greater part of it is gone, never to return; and the Emperor of the French is reviled for plundering that government which he, and he only, has preserved from plunder. A State cannot subsist by abuse alone. It is high time that Europe should be informed what is the policy which the Papacy means to adopt. Is the Pope anxious to be left to settle matters with his own subjects? Does he still wish for French support, or does he desire only to reign while his people shall be willing to be reigned over? He has lost the support of Austria; he clings to, while he repudiates the support of France. His own subjects he will not conciliate and cannot coerce. It is time all this had an end, but surely that end will not be obtained by withdrawing from the Vicar of Christ the only prop which saves him from immediate destruction.

Notices, &c.

Editorial Notice.

CORRECTION.—In the second column of "Doubting Castle," in the last No. of the Crisis, eighth line from the top, instead of "earth," read "Castle." The corrected sentence will then read: "We longed for the time to come when the old 'Castle' should share the fate of Babylon the great,"—"be utterly burned with fire."

Notice.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please to give the following note from Bro. Ladd, in favor of the Christian Lyre? You know that Bro. Ladd is one of our best singers, and also a good judge of music. His testimony, therefore, is valuable.

The first edition of the Lyre is now exhausted, and the second will be out in a few days.

J. V. H.

THE CHRISTIAN LYRE.—Bro. Himes:—The new tune book, "The Lyre," is a gem. I admire it more and more as an auxiliary to the worship of God. I hope it may be very generally introduced into our congregations, and am sure it cannot be too highly appreciated. I shall use my influence in its favor in preference to any collection I have ever seen. Yours in hope,

RANDL. E. LADD.

Springfield, Feb. 9th.

Notice.

To the preaching brethren I would say, there is no Advent meeting held in this place at the present time.

OPHIR HAYNES.

Roxbury, Mass.

Conferences

At New Durham, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 23d, to hold over the following Sunday. Brethren Billings, Otis and others are expected.

At Dover, commencing March 1st, Thursday evening, to continue over the following Sunday. Brethren Billings, Bishop and others are expected.

J. G. SMITH.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Providence permitting, we will commence a series of meetings at the Town Hall in Castleton, Vt., Friday evening, Feb. 17th, to continue every evening till the 26th, including the intervening Lord's days.

MILES GRANT.

The Lord willing, I will preach at New Boston, Mass., Thursday evening, Feb. 23d, and wherever the brethren in that vicinity may appoint over the following Sunday.

S. C. HANCOCK.

Providence permitting, I will preach at Exeter, N. H., Sabbath, Feb. 26th. Commence meetings at North Searsport, Me., March 2d, where Bro. Nichols may appoint. Will continue meetings for two or three weeks, as may be duty.

J. HEMENWAY.

The Lord willing, Bro. George Champlin will preach in East Boston on the last Sabbath in Feb., and the first in March.

I have arranged to be in Lowell on the above days.

Bro. Munger will notice this arrangement.

Bro. J. K. Bellows is requested to withdraw his appointment at East Boston.

J. S. WHITE.

Bro. Wm. Sutherland appoints to preach in Brimfield, Mass. .... Feb. 24th
Southbridge, Mass. .... Feb. 25th
Brick school-house (near Bro. Streeter's). Feb. 26th
Axe Factory .... Feb. 27th

Bro. J. W. Crabtree appoints to preach in Pleasant Valley, Ct. .... Sunday, Feb. 19th

I will preach as follows:—
Warner, N. H. .... Sunday, Feb. 19th
Auburn, N. H. .... Sunday, Feb. 26th
Lawrence, Mass. .... Feb. 28th
Exeter, N. H. .... Feb. 29th
Dover (Conference) .... March 1st
Worcester, Mass. .... Sunday, March 11th
Providence, R. I. .... Sunday, March 18th
Danielsonville, Conn. .... March 23d
and over the following Sunday
Warwick Plain, R. I. .... Sunday, March 31st

S. W. BISHOP.

F. H. Berick will preach in
Fair Haven, Ct. .... Feb. 19th

Bro. J. K. Bellows will meet with the brethren in North Fair Haven .... Feb. 19th
Long Plain, Mass. .... Feb. 21st and 23d
Westport .... Feb. 22d and 24th
Plymouth, Mass. .... Feb. 26th
Roxbury .... Feb. 28th and 29th
East Boston .... March 1st and 2d.
Lynn, (Dye House) .... March 4th

J. R. Cook will preach, if the Lord will, in
Ravenna, Portage Co. .... Feb. 17th and 19th
Ashtabula, Ashta. Co. .... Feb. 21st and 22d
Meadville, Pa. .... Feb. 24th and 26th
Blooming Valley .... Feb. 29th

Eld. M. Batchelor will preach in [illegible], Wilcox Corners, N. Y., Friday, Feb. 24th and continue over the following Sunday. Brethren [illegible] around are invited to attend.

APPOINTMENTS FOR DANIELSONVILLE, CT.
H. F. Carpenter .... Sunday, Feb. 19th
D. T. Taylor .... Sunday, Feb. 26th
A. Higgins of Palmer .... March 5th
Hiram Munger .... March 12th

In behalf of the Church,
H. F. CARPENTER.

Providence permitting, Eld. George Champlin will preach in Worcester, (Warren Hall) Sunday, ... Feb. 19th

Providence permitting, Eld. Daniel A. Jones will preach in
Bristol .... Feb. 19th
Eld. H. F. Carpenter .... March 4th

JOHN H. SUTLIFF.

The Lord willing, I will preach as follows:—
Pine Swamp, Ct. .... Feb. 18th
Pawling, N. Y. .... Feb. 21st

S. S. BRAZEE.

T. W. Piper appoints to preach in
Wolfborough, (Pine Hill) .... Feb. 19th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

J. H. Thomas.—You can obtain them by sending to A. D. Brock, 14 Bromfield street, Boston.

Chas. H. Sutton.—By sending to Benj. Wilson, Geneva, Ill. 30 cts. each.

H. Page.—The price of the Bibles is $2.50. We do not keep them, but could get one for you.

D. R. Mansfield.—We shall do so.

M. L. Pratt's P. O. address is Buttes des Morts, Wis.

J. S. White's P. O. address is East Boston, Mass.

Cash Receipts.

J F Wilcox 250, $1.50; I Gibson 74, $1.03; A F Servis 234, 62 cts; A G Case 243, 51 cts; G Wheeler 243, 34 cts; J B Mooney 260, $1.28; J M Muhlig 244, $4.00, Hach. Bailey, 5 copies, 255, $4.60; Capt. D Taylor, p. p. 255 $1.12.

Mrs. B Taylor 234, D B Boyce 243,—50 cts. each.

D Newton 241, I R Billings 255, G W Chisman 273, A Dodgson 248, G H Whitt 252, I Gilles 249, C Clark 241, E Merrick 245, Em. Ayres 260, M J Achorn 252, J G Munsey 241, J Canterbury 234, Wm. Payne 234, W Sprague 252, J Spenser 249, E R Wood 245, J C Works 256, I Closson 234, D Webster 234, Veritas 234, B F Nicholson 255, G W Bailey 234,—$1.00 each.

E Gibson 240, R Pike 285, H Austin 260, H Burridy 234, N Woodcock 260, Alv. Gage 260, Luc. Wood 266, Jesse Shackford 266,—$2.00 each.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

E G Colby 6 cts, T S Gildon 6 cts, H Pratt $1.00, J L Trats $4.00, G W Chisman $1.00, J Gilles 12 cts, I Gibson 97 c, S Marsh 12 c, H Williams 12 c, E H Jillson 54 cts, A G Case 30 cts, J Hall 9 cts, A F Servis $1.39, A N Bostwick 9 cts, G Wheeler 66 cts, C H Sutton $1.12, M G Dunham $3.00, B Perham 34 cts, Hach. Bailey $1.50, I K Bellows $1.00, A C Green $8.09.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

Discussion of the Doctrine of The State of the Dead and Punishment of the Wicked; between W. W. Clayton and M. Grant. Price 25 cts; postage 3 cts. Bound 40 cts; postage 9 cts. 1-4th off per dozen.

Human Destiny. A Discussion: Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all? By C. F. Hudson and Sylvanus Cobb. 478 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00 post paid.

The Nature of Faith, and the Evils of Sect. By the late W. H. Starr. With a Memoir and Notes by C. F. Hudson. 259 pp. 12mo. Price 60 cts. Postage 16 cts.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10 : 28, Gen 2 : 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuke as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 128 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, post paid $1.25.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Shepherd.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $5.00.

Life and [illegible] by [illegible]—postage 16 cents.

Words of Warning. [illegible] postage 1 ct.; $2.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. An excellent tract to show that the Scriptures, and upon the theological [illegible] day. Every one should have a copy. Price [illegible] per hundred,—6 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the [illegible]. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians, By H. Grew. Price 3 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 3 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

We have also on hand the following

PUBLICATIONS
OF
H. L. HASTINGS,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor; edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo 420 pp. $1 00
The Great Controversy between God and Man: its Origin, Progress, and End; by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 167 pp. 60
Reasons for My Hope, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 129 pp. Paper, 30 cts. Cloth 50
Forever with the Lord, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 60
Earth's Destiny, as revealed in Scripture, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 60
Tracts on Prophecy, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 50
Tracts on Immortality, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 50
Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith, by Robert Patterson. 12mo. 420 pp. 75
The Infidel's Fate, by a converted Infidel. Cloth gilt. 25
Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, by Wm Ramsey, D.D., edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 120 pp. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40
Pauline Theology; The Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment, as Taught by Paul by H. L. Hastings. 64 pp. Paper, 15
The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life, by H. L. Hastings. Paper, 87 pp. 10
Tracts of 24 Pages.—3 cts single; $1 for 1600 pages—by mail 1200 pp for $1.

The Church not in Darkness,	by H. L. H.	pages 24
The Three Worlds,	by H. L. H.	" 24
The Last Days,	by H. L. H.	" 24
Plain Truths,	by H. L. H.	" 28
Will all men be saved?	by H. L. H.	" 24
Voice of Warning	by D. T. Taylor	" 24
The New Heavens and Earth,	"	" 24
Ancient Landmarks, 6 Nos.,	"	" 24
Olive Leaves, 9 Nos.	by H. L. H. &c.	" 36
Important Questions, 9 Nos.	by H. L. H.	" 36
State of the Dead,	by John Milton	" 24
The Intermediate State,	by H. G.	" 24
Destiny of the Wicked	by H. L. H.	" 12
Future Punishment,	by H. G.	" 12
The Key of Truth,	by W. S.	" 12
Man's Future State		" 12
Letter on Dress	by Adoniram Judson	" 12
The Day of Judgment,	by St. Cyril	" 12
Outline of the Coast,	by A Voyager	" 8
The Night Cometh,	by John Adey	" 8
Gems, 9 Nos., poetry,	by H. L. H.	" 12
One Thing		" 8
The Coming and Kingdom of Christ,		" 4
The Duration of the Earth by A. Clarke		" 4
Hope and Duty of the Church, M. Henry		" 4
The Restitution,	by St. Cyril	" 4
A Warning Voice,	by Cotton Mather	" 4
Loving Christ's Appearing,	by Baxter	" 4
Little Children, Love one another		" 4
The One Resting Place,	by H. Bonar	" 4
My Friends	by H. L. H.	" 4
Abundant Grace	"	" 4
Wondrous Love	"	" 4
Go in Peace	"	" 4
Living Water	"	" 4
The Banner	Anonymous	" 4
The Blood of Christ	"	" 4
Are you a Christian?	by H. L. H.	" 4
Why not Now?	"	" 4
Are you Pardoned?	"	" 4
Are you Safe?	"	" 4
Are you Saved?	"	" 4
Do you Pray?	"	" 4
When Will He Come?	by J. C. Ryle	" 4
Statement of Account	by H. L. H.	" 4
Man in Death	By Bishop Law	" 4
Forty Questions on Immortality		" 4

SCRIPTURE SEARCHERS.

No 1 The Destiny of the Wicked		1
No 2. The State of the Dead		1
No 3 The Coming of Jesus		1
No 4. The Resurrection		1
No 5 Plain Truths		1
No. 6. The Judgment		1

POETRY.

Brother, Shall we Meet?	by H. L. H.	2
Sister, Shall we Meet?	"	2
Stand up for Jesus!	"	1
The Harvest is Past	"	1
Beyond!	"	1
At Rest!	"	1
We would see Jesus	by Josephine	1
A Little While	by J. C.	1

LEAFLETS FOR LETTERS.

Life Insurance, Envelope Size	H. L. H.	12
Home	"	12
Lost, Lost	"	4
Peace in Christ	"	4
Worth Knowing	"	4
All things are Yours	"	4
Now	"	4
Assurance	"	4
About God	"	4

THE foregoing Books and Pamphlets will be sent by mail, postage paid, upon the receipt of the amount of their respective prices. Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons who send $8, with the order, shall receive $12. worth of books at the retail prices. TRACTS are sent by mail, 1200 pages, on the receipt of a dollar. When sent by express, or at the expense of the buyer, 1600 pages will be sent for one dollar. Terms cash. Persons who desire to do good can obtain Four hundred tracts, of four pages each, for $1. These may be widely distributed and open the way for religious conversation. [illegible] they be a blessing to those around them. The poor can have any of these tracts sent to them free, by remitting stamps to pay the postage. Ministers can have specimen copies of the tracts and pamphlets sent free. All letters, orders, and remittances should be addressed to the Publisher,

H. L. HASTINGS, 43 Weybosset St., PROVIDENCE, R. I.

January, 1860.

* * These publications can be obtained in Boston of Miles Grant, 167 Hanover st.; New York, G. W. Young, 128 William st.; Philadelphia; A. F. Porter, 725 Erie st., and they may be ordered of the publisher through all Booksellers.

BIBLES of the British and Foreign Bible Society, [illegible] 25. Nonpareil, marginal references, [illegible] between verses, $1.20 to $2.10. Pearl, references between verses, $1.75. [illegible] to $1.75. Diamond, marginal references, [illegible] $1. Bindings, Roan, Calf and Morocco [illegible] the difference in prices.

Glad Tidings; or, Bible proof that [illegible] and sin are to end in the universe by a [illegible] destruction of wicked men and devils, [illegible] ment. [illegible] and arranged. [illegible] 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms; or, the kingdom of God, the [illegible] kingdom of the Devil. [illegible]

[illegible]

The Race, by Elder [illegible]

Voices at the Throne.

[illegible]
A low, sweet Sabbath song. No human ear
Caught the faint melody, no human eye
Beheld the upturned aspect, or the smile,
That wreathed her innocent lips, the while they
[illegible]
The oft-repeated burden of the hymn,
"Praise God," Praise God."

A Seraph by the Throne
In the full glory stood. With eager hand
He smote the golden harp-strings, till a flood
Of harmony on the celestial air
Welled forth unceasing. Then with a great voice
He sang, "Holy, Holy, evermore,
Lord God Almighty." And the eternal courts
Thrilled with the rapture, and the hierarchies—
Angel and rapt archangel throbbed and burned
With vehement adoration. Higher yet
Rose the majestic anthem, without pause,
Higher with rich magnificence of sound
To its full strength, and still the infinite heavens
Rang with the "Holy, Holy, evermore,"
Till trembling from excess of awe and love,
Each sceptered spirit sank before the throne
With a mute hallelujah. But even there,
While the ecstatic song was at its height,
Stole in another voice—a voice that seemed
To float, float upward from some world afar—
A meek and child-like voice—faint, but how sweet!
That blended with the seraph's rushing strain,
Even as a fountain's music with the roll
Of the reverberate thunder. Loving smiles
Lit up the beauty of each angel's face
At that new utterance, smiles of joy that grow
More joyous yet, as, ever and anon
Was heard the simple burden of the hymn,
"Praise God," "Praise God." And when the seraph's song
Had reached its close, and o'er the golden lyre
Silence hung brooding; when the eternal courts
Rang but with echoes of his chant sublime,
Still through the abyssmal space, that wandering voice
Came floating upward from its world afar,—
Still murmured sweet on the celestial air,
"Praise God," "Praise God."

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Leaves from the Note-Book of a Traveler.

No. 2.

Feb. 16.—On Monday morning, as I knelt to pray, feeling a deep sense of helplessness and unworthiness, all at once I had a view of Christ as my Advocate, so faith-inspiring that I believed it to be given me from above. I could commit my cause, with all of its difficulties to him, believing that he would deliver me out of them all. My faith rested on Christ implicitly. As I sat at my sewing, an hour or two after, my mind was so occupied with thoughts of Christ in his office of Advocate for the sinner, that I felt strongly moved to write them down. They are as follows:

THE ADVOCATE.

I had sinned. God's holy law was broken, and guilt weighed my spirit down to earth. My heart was filled with anguish. I thought of the Comforter, grieved and absent: I thought of peace once mine, now gone. Darkness had taken the place of light. How could I be delivered? Then I bethought me of the sinner's Advocate. My soul gathered hope and strength to itself, as it thought of that all-prevailing Intercessor.

Supposing I had violated an earthly law? Justice had marked me out, and a trembling criminal, I was summoned to trial. "How can I escape the penalty of that broken law? was the anxious inquiry of my heart. I hear of an advocate who has devised a plan by which all criminals who will commit their cause into his hands, may be delivered. Circulars, setting forth his eminent skill and success, are put into my hands. He was never known to lose a case! My heart thrills with hopeful expectation, but, suddenly the thought of my utter destitution flashes across my mind—my joy is dispelled, and I sink in sad despair. It may all be true, thought I, respecting the ability of the advocate to save from punishment those who commit their cause to him, but I have no means with which to avail myself of his valuable services. The rich may secure his aid, but for the poor there is no remedy.

While thus pondering in grief over my hopeless condition, a friend approaches me, and inquires respecting the cause of my sorrow. I at once proceed to tell him, but almost impatiently he interrupts me, and assures me that I have overlooked one very important part of the information contained in those circulars, and that which was precisely adapted to my condition. He takes one up, and points me to a paragraph at the close, in which this benevolent advocate offers his services to the poor gratuitously, and most cordially invites them to him freely, promising to turn none away, but to successfully plead the cause of all who will apply to him for help, irrespective of person, condition or crime. And now, as the glad tidings fall upon my burdened heart, and my faith takes hold upon the testimony before me, how lightened does it already become of its load! how quickly vanishes the dark cloud of despair! for I know that to me that invitation extends—to me that word of promise is given! No longer looking at my poverty, (for I am as welcome as the rich,) I hasten with rapid steps to the generous advocate, and casting myself at his feet, concealing not my guilt, but confessing my crime, and, pointing to the invitation and the promise, I claim their fulfillment. To my unspeakable joy, he presents my case to the judge, his plea in my behalf is successful, and giving me a pardon fully signed and sealed, I return fully acquitted [illegible]

But it is not an earthly law, but an high and holy, a divine law, that I have violated. No earthly advocate can here avail. But I have heard of a Divine Intercessor, the God-man, combining the attributes of Divinity, with the infirmities of humanity, in order thereby to be qualified to stand between God and man, and "lay his hand upon both." The guilty could not be pardoned without a propitiatory offering,—a sacrifice must be made that could "take away sin." The God-man offers himself as the atoning sacrifice. Upon him are laid the sins of the guilty, and for their expiation his blood is poured out. God, the Judge, looks upon that agony—he sees the travail of Christ's soul and is satisfied. The atonement is sufficient—the offering is acceptable, and Christ can now become the all-prevailing advocate between God and man.

Messengers are commissioned and anointed with the unction of the Holy Ghost, to go forth through all the world, to announce the glad tidings of salvation for the guilty—to proclaim the truth that for them an advocate was provided, who could "save to the uttermost" the most sin-polluted, and make them pure, and fit for a dwelling-place with God and angels. To all, the invitation is extended—"Ho, every one! he that hath no money, come! whosoever will, let him come!" "He that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out!"

In confirmation of this new, this strange announcement, the messengers are endued with power to raise the dead to life, to open blind eyes, and unstop deaf ears, and cause the lame to leap as an hart! Thousands who were as criminals condemned to die, were led to apply to this wonderful Advocate, and to their joy found themselves delivered from the penalty of the law, and a pardon signed and sealed in heaven, was given unto them. Then with a grateful and joyous heart they spread abroad the good news—they witnessed to the truth of the message given by God's appointed messengers, and wider, and wider still the tidings sped, until, from east to west, and from north to south, multitudes, innumerable as the stars of heaven, had been redeemed from sin and its penalty!

The glad tidings, confirmed by gifts, and signs, and miracles, and the testimony of thousands redeemed, fell upon mine ear. How could I doubt such evidence as this? It was sufficient! For me there was hope. With a confession of my guilt, with humiliation and submission, I committed my cause to him—my Advocate prevailed—he saved me, and enrolled my unworthy name among the witnesses! M. D. W.

For the Crisis.

Our Statistical Report.

PREPARED BY DANIEL T. TAYLOR.

No. 6.

I. Periodicals. The oldest and earliest pre-millennial journal I have been able to find printed in America, was issued by John Thomas, M. D., in 1834. Pre-millennial works had been previously printed by the score, and William Miller had the year before put forth his pamphlet—already noticed—at Brandon, Vt.; but Dr. Thomas first advocated in the year above mentioned, in a journal, "the restoration of the kingdom and throne of David in the Holy Land under the personal administration of Jesus and the saints, and the non-existence of an immortal soul in Adam and his posterity." These views were set forth in his "The Apostolic Advocate." After five years, in 1842–3 he issued the "Investigator" in twelve monthly numbers. Then in 1844, the "Herald of the Future Age," of which four volumes were printed. "The Herald of the Kingdom," is the title of his present prophetical journal, issued monthly, and now in its tenth year, its first number bearing date Jan. 1851. Its columns sustain the English Literalist view of the Age to come, the restoration of Israel and Judah to Palestine, probation during the thousand years, a mixed millennium, Sunday a legal rest-day but not divinely Sabbatical, and endless life only through Christ. I have noticed Dr. Thomas and his works in this report, as ably upholding the doctrine of our Lord's soon coming and personal reign, but perhaps ought to add that he would doubtless prefer to be regarded as independent and not identified with the Adventists.

"The Herald of the Kingdom and Age to come: A periodical devoted to the interpretation of the Law and Testimony, and to the defence of the faith once delivered to the saints," is an 8vo of 24 pp. monthly. New York. Issue 850 copies. (Post Office address of Dr. T. is Mott Haven, Westchester Co., N. Y.)

"The Signs of the Times of the second coming of Christ" 4to 8 pp. Boston, Mass., edited by Eld. Joshua V. Himes, was first printed Feb. 28th, 1840, but its first number in series dates March 20th, 1840. Its circulation in 1843 was very great. It was first enlarged at the beginning of Vol. XI., Feb. 11th, 1846, then a second time, Feb. 5th, 1848, when it reached its present size. With the second volume, its name was changed to "The Signs of the Times and Expositor of Prophecy." With the seventh, Feb. 14th, 1844, to "The Advent Herald and Signs of the Times Reporter." With Vol. X., Aug. 14th, 1845, to "The Advent Herald and Morning Watch," and with Vol. XI., to the Advent Herald," its present name. It was from the first a weekly, and has never been suspended. Up to last year Eld. Joshua V. Himes was editor and publisher, but it is now owned by "The American Millennial Association." Editor, Sylvester Bliss, 46 1-2 Kneeland St., Boston, Mass. The editor refuses to state the circulation, but supposed to be about 2100. It advocates the pre-millennial advent, a pure, unmixed, millennial age, no restoration of the Jews in mortality, eternal suffering, and the consciousness of the spirit in death, with the observance of the first day as the Sabbath. The present is Vol. XXI. It is the earliest journal issued by the Adventists, and has done much to spread throughout the world a knowledge of Christ's soon coming and kingdom. Over one hundred and thirty clergymen now read it weekly, over sixty of whom are of other denominations.

"The Bible Examiner" was first issued by Eld. George Storrs, in 1842, in various sizes as the occasion seemed to require, the largest being a folio. In 1848, it was changed to a 4to of 8 pp. and thus issued occasionally till 1847, when it became a regular monthly. In 1854 it was changed to a semi-monthly and continued thus till the close of 1857, when it was suspended. It is now revived for 1860 as an 8vo 32 pp. New York, box 4658. George Storrs editor, the present being Vol. XIII. Its circulation 1000. It advocates no immortality or endless life except through Jesus Christ alone, the speedy coming and personal reign on earth, the keeping of Sunday, but not as strictly Sabbatical by divine appointment. It is an independent Magazine and has ably discussed its main question and theme, viz: Immortality.

The "Voice of Truth and Glad Tidings of the Kingdom at hand," was first monthly, as a folio, Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 1st, 1844; editor, Eld. Joseph Marsh. During Vol. V. of the following year, it was changed to a 4to and was then printed weekly. With the first number of Vol. XV., June 29th, 1847, its name was changed to "The Advent Harbinger," then with the beginning of Vol. XVIII. to "The Advent Harbinger and Bible Advocate." It was afterwards enlarged and continued to be published till its name was changed to the "Prophetic Expositor and Bible Advocate," 8vo 32 pp., Rochester, N. Y.; Joseph Marsh, editor. Semi-monthy; (circulation supposed to be about 1500 though the editor refused to inform me.) It sustains the view of a mixed millennial age soon to come at the advent, literal life and death and the free view of Sunday, or no obligated sabbatical time. Some ten or twelve ministers take and read the paper. Has reached Vol. XXX.

"The Advent Review and Sabbath Herald" was first issued in Paris, Me., November, 1850, by Eld. James White. It was enlarged to its present size and the second Vol. commenced at Saratoga Spa., N. Y., Aug. 5th, 1851. Was established at Rochester, N. Y., May 6th, 1852, and removed to its present place, Dec. 4th. 1855. It is a 4to of 8 pp., issued weekly by a publishing Committee of three, at Battle Creek, Mich. Uriah Smith, resident editor. The present is Vol. XV. Circulation of the weekly, 2300. Of the "Youth's Instructor," a children's paper, monthly, 2000. It advocates a pre-millennial, personal, speedy advent and one thousand years reign with the Lord in Jerusalem above, with the subsequent eternal reign on the new earth; a literal first and second death, the perpetuity of the Decalogue with the strict sabbatical observance of the seventh day as the only holy time now binding.

"The World's Crisis," a folio weekly sheet was first issued in Lowell, Mass., about the first of Jan. 1854, Jonas Merriam, editor. It was removed to Boston in Feb. 1856, enlarged to its present size at No. 182, March 2d, 1859, at the beginning of Vol. IX. Eld. Miles Grant became its editor in May 1856. It is published under supervision of a committee of four, and its circulation is 2900: about 182 preachers are among its subscribers. Its columns are free, though devoted to the advocacy of the soon coming of the Lord and his millennial and endless reign on the renewed earth, exposition of prophecy, the unconscious condition of all the dead, and utter destruction of the finally unsaved. It maintains the observance of Sunday in harmony with the early church and great reformers, and on their grounds, being neither anti-sabbatical nor Puritanical. Its present Vol. is the X.

There remains to be noticed the "Time Messenger," printed occasionally at Newark, N. J., "by those looking for the immediate coming of Christ," and "The Gospel Banner and Millennial Advocate," etc., an 8vo of 16 pp. printed and published by Benjamin Wilson, Geneva, Ill.; a monthly, now having reached Vol. VI.

Those papers which have been published for any considerable time but are now discontinued, are, "The Midnight Cry and Morning Watch," "The Western Midnight Cry," "The Bible Advocate," "The Advent Watchman," The Christian Reformer and Signs of the Times," "The Truth Seeker," "The Cross and Crown," "The Lover of Zion," "The Monitor," "The Prophetic Messenger," The Monitor and Messenger," "The Gospel Standard," and some others. Of the various Magazines, Periodicals, Monthlies, Weeklies and occasional sheets issued since 1843, I have collected and counted nearly eighty varieties, all proclaiming Christ's near approach.

Some attention has been paid to the instruction of children, as is shown by the publication of "The Children's Advent Herald," "The Youth's Guide," "The Children's Friend," and "Youth's Instructor," this, I am sorry to say, being the only sheet that is now printed; although certain pages and columns in the "Advent Herald" and "World's Crisis" are devoted to reading for juvenile entertainment and instruction. A good weekly is needed in all our Sunday schools for the youth.

Our review of American Adventual papers would hardly be complete without a notice here of "The Theological and Literary Journal," a quarterly 8vo of 160—180 pp.; edited by Daniel Lord and published by Franklin Knight, 348 Broadway, N. Y. It was started in 1848, and that for Jan. 1860 is No. XLVII. Mr. Lord is not identified with the Adventists, he being, I think, a Congregationalist in church order, but his journal is devoted in part to the exposition of prophecy, the mixed millennial age view, and soon coming of the Lord to set up his everlasting kingdom.

On the supposition that the added years of the issue of all the adventual and prophetical periodicals printed in this country during the past twenty-five years, would amount continually to one hundred years of weekly papers, then at but three thousand per week, there have been printed of such papers within the last quarter of a century over fifteen millions.

For the Crisis.

Information Given.

BROTHERS HOWARD AND BROOKS:—I will now endeavor to bring before you additional light on what the primitive church held, concerning the state of man in death, until the third century. That I may do so the more clearly, I will quote more extensively from the writings of one of the most prominent and brilliant teachers of the second century. I refer to Justin Martyr, who flourished about A. D. 150. Justin Martyr was contemporary with Polycarp and Papias, both disciples of the apostle John. Justin Martyr held the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, and the new creation, just as we do. He did not hold and teach, the inherent immortality of the soul, or that the soul or spirit ascends to heaven at death, as is popularly taught; but he did hold and teach, that man is conscious in death, and that the soul after death, is in a peculiar place until the resurrection of the body. Now Justin must have known what was the faith of Polycarp, and that he received that faith from John the apostle. Justin must have held the same faith with Polycarp, of whom it is reported that on the occasion of his death, Polycarp said, "I shall this day stand, in spirit, before God."

Let us look at Justin Martyr's faith, as expressed in his own authentic writings. "I affirm that no soul perishes entirely, or is annihilated, for that would really be good and joyful news to the wicked. What then? why that the souls of the righteous are reserved in a place of happiness, and that of the wicked and unjust in a place of misery and torment, in expectation of that great day of judgment. So that those that shall be judged worthy to appear before God, shall not die any more; but those shall be punished so long as it shall please God to suffer them to exist, and to punish them. If you have conversed with some that . . . . say that there is no resurrection of the dead, but that the souls, as soon as they leave the body, are received up into heaven, take care that you do not receive them as christians. . . . . But I and all those christians that are truly orthodox in every respect, do know that there will be a resurrection of the body, and a thousand years in Jerusalem, when it is built again and adorned, and enlarged, as Ezekiel, and Esaias, and the rest of the prophets declare."

Such was the faith of Justin Martyr, who lived in the time of the disciples of the apostles of Christ. There are several very important points, in the above testimony, for us to consider.

1. Justin Martyr, in the above testimony, represented all the "orthodox" (that is, sound) christians of his time—the second century.

2. Justin represented the faith of the "Fathers," in this matter.

3. He did hold the plain, literal teachings of the Scriptures on other great questions, and why not on the question of the state of man in death?

4. He did not hold, as said before, the inherent immortality of the soul, or that a person is rewarded when he dies, but he did hold that the soul or spirit exists when the body is dead.

What shall I do with this testimony? I do not confine my faith to the writings of the "Fathers," by any means, but did not those teachers, who heard the apostles preach, and associated with their disciples, have a better opportunity to get a correct knowledge of what the Bible teaches on this subject than we do have? Is not their word entitled to some respect? Will it be disputed that the above teachings are the teachings of Justin Martyr? His works are extant and speak for themselves. Did not Polycarp, Justin Martyr, and their associates study the Bible as well as we do? Are there not some texts in the Bible that have never yet been cleared up, if the doctrine of unconsciousness in death is true? I do protest that there are a great many that are dark to me, if it is true that man is unconscious in death. I wait with all patience to see them properly digested. I love truth, but I must be sure that a thing is true before I say so.

Well, let us pray, study, and study and pray, and wait for light. "The meek will he teach his way." The ignorant are confident and dogmatical, but we will be modest on that which we may not be sure about.

Greeting, EDWIN BURNHAM.

Selections.

A Distrustful Spirit.

When a church-member of prominence and zeal, disposed to take a leading part in the prayer-meeting, is in the habit of expressing distrust in the apparently improving condition of the church, and in what seems to others and to the pastor to be cheering evidence of spiritual life, he places himself in an attitude in which he can neither do good nor get good. The intimations of his language are that he alone is in a right state, while the truth more nearly is, that he is the farthest from a right state. A more charitable brother has just ventured to express the hope that the church is more alive than it has been; the distrustful member can't let that flattering unction fall upon the church. He therefore utters his painful conviction that the church is rusting out in guilty inaction. At another time some one, who is himself diligently at work in the vineyard of the Lord, points out to the brethren and sisters a field of religious effort, and invites them to enlist in doing good; and the following prayers and remarks evince a willingness to engage in the work indicated; but the distrustful brother throws a chill over every heart, by saying that good feelings and good intentions and good prayers will not avail unless they go out and do something. He thinks the Lord will wait to see how much of all this is mere talk.

Now this distrustful brother is by no means the foremost in doing, nor the first in giving. He is an able man, however, and would be a very useful Christian if he were delivered of a distrustful spirit. I cannot think he is largely gifted with that charity which "believeth all things, and hopeth all things, and thinketh no evil."

There is another phase of the distrustful spirit, with which we occasionally meet, which is much worse. It is that which sees no good in a christian or in a church, unless it sees only good. The churches of the present day are not the body of Christ, because they do not honor him in every thing. The professors of religion, the great majority of them, are no better than so many people of the world. The current piety is a sham article. This critic belongs to the church, having joined it when he was less enlightened; but he seldom goes to the communion because so many make a mock of it; he does not attend the prayer meeting, because he hears so much mouthing there; he takes no part in the Sabbath school, because there is so much useless routine about it; he does not mingle in the social gatherings of the church, because there is so much aristocracy; he does not labor for the salvation of souls, because others make a parade of their good works. Yet this brother enjoys constant communion with God, takes great delight in reading the Scriptures, confidently believes that there will be a true church yet in the world, and thinks that meanwhile he is doing God service in keeping aloof from all the movements of the church, and in disparaging the saints of the most High God.

May the Lord have mercy on such evil-eyed men.—Oberlin Evangelist.

Excerpta.

Those whom we offend we can never benefit, as long as they are offended. We may talk to them and try as much as we please, but it is all useless. Our offence shields their conscience from our words. Men must feel that we feel for them—that we feel an interest in them—that we love them, before our words will make them feel. Hence, if we would do men any good, we must be very careful not to offend them.

No harsh treatment, no severity, no falsehoods which may be uttered by others, will ever justify us in using one harsh or unkind word. We are not to render railing for railing; but contrariwise, blessing. We must love our enemies, bless them that curse us, do good to them that hate us, and pray for them who despitefully use us and persecute us; that we may be the children of our Father in heaven. No unkindness received from others—no slanders or falsehoods which they may utter—no cruel treatment—should ever beget in us the rising feeling, or cause us hastily to feel or say "ye rebels."

An old writer has truthfully remarked, that we may say what we please if we speak through tears. Tender tones prevent severe truths from offending. Hence, when we are most tender, at heart, our words are most powerful. Hence one great reason why our words have so much more power during a revival than at other times. Our hearts are more tender then than they usually are—we feel more, and it is easy for the impenitent to see and feel that our hearts are interested in their behalf. They feel that our words are not mere lip-words, but heart-words.

Christians should always use respectful forms of salutation, whatever contempt and reproaches they may meet with from their opposers. The venom of other men's tongues should never reach our hearts and poison them, and then, through our hearts, poison our language. Peter was too near his Savior to be in danger from the venom of tongues. Nearness to Christ protects us from that venom, and distance from Christ leaves us perfectly exposed to it.

When we get near to Christ, it makes us tender, and it is then very hard to hurt our feelings. We are then more easily hurt through Christ than through ourselves. We feel indignities which are cast upon Christ; but even they excite in us pity, and lead us to pray for them rather than utter harsh, unkind words. The farther we get away from Christ, the more sensitive we are—the more touchy—the more easy it is to hurt our feelings—the more easy it is to exasperate us and cause us to render railing for railing, harsh, unkind words for unkind words, and to say severe, cutting things.

Gently I took that which ungently came,
And without scorn forgave:—Do thou the same.
A wrong done to thee think a cat's eye spark,
Thou wouldest not see, were not thine own heart dark.
Thine own keen sense of wrong that thirsts for sin,
Fear that—the spark self kindled from within,
Which blown upon will blind thee with its glare,
Or smother'd stifle thee with noisome air.
Clap on the extinguisher, pull up the blinds,
And soon the ventilated spirit finds
Its natural daylight. If a foe have kenn'd,
Or worse than foe, an alienated friend,
A rib of dry rot in thy ship's stout side,
Think it God's message, and in humble pride
With heart of oak replace it;—thine the gains—
Give him the rotten timber for his pains!

—Coleridge.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Public Speakers, care of Voice-organs, etc., etc.

Public speakers, singers, auctioneers, etc., often bring fatal diseases by the improper exercise of the vocal organs, and failing to protect them from cold immediately after. If a man speaks or sings in the air, or or even in a house, where there is a current of air passing him, there are two causes of danger in operation. It requires more effort to speak in the open air, or in a draft, as in the hall, or passage, or stairway of a building; that effort debilitates the voice-organs sooner than he is aware, and with that effort and debility there is unnatural heat, while the current of air is constantly conveying the heat away from the body, depriving it of its natural amount, leaving the speaker or singer in the end weakened, exhausted, and if not really chilled, soon becomes so after ceasing the exercise. In all public speaking there is considerable muscular exertion, and always mental and bodily fatigue—sometimes almost exhaustion. The body perspires freely; it is not unfrequently that the inner garment is wet with perspiration. In this condition the body is chilled by very slight exposures, a very little wind, especially if the person stands still, or rides on horseback, or in a carriage, where there is no opportunity of muscular motion, is sufficient to bring on disease. To neglect the following precautions after exercising the vocal organs in a company, congregation, or other collection of persons, either in a parlor, public building, or in the open air, is suicidal. As soon as the exercises cease, put on an additional garment, shawl, coat, cloak, or hat, and before leaving the building, especially in fire-time of year, bundle up well, put on gloves, close the mouth, pass out and walk on quickly. When the weather is decidedly cold, or damp, or windy, it is important to remain in the house five or ten minutes after the exercise, so as to allow the body to part with some of its heat, and the perspiration to subside or evaporate. The object of walking is to keep the blood in circulation. The mouth should be kept closed, so that the cold air shall not pass directly to the throat and voice-organs, but shall be sent through the nose and head around to the throat and lungs, thus allowing it to get a little warmed in its circuitous route, before it reaches the delicate organs of voice. Valuable lives and good men would be saved every year by attention to these things. If a person feels the necessity of talking as he passes homeward, or if he finds he can not walk fast enough to keep himself warm with the mouth closed, then hold a handkerchief in one hand and place it over the nose and open mouth, not very closely, but so as to leave a little chamber for the mingling of the cold air from without with the warm air just passed. It may surprise any one to notice how much longer he may be kept warm in walking this way than if he talked freely without the above application. We knew a small, frail-looking clergyman, one who preached every night for weeks, if not months, together, and often in the day, in winter, in a densely crowded assembly, and yet, with the above precaution, never had even the slightest hoarseness.

Many valuable men are prematurely disabled, especially in the West, and South-West, in consequence of having to ride a mile or two or twenty, immediately after preaching; they think it to be a necessity. As long as the world stands, and the human constitution is under its present system of laws, this can never be done with impunity, and besides, the assertion that it is "necessary," is impertinent and untrue. Impertinent, because it implies that the Almighty can not carry on the work of his kingdom without sacrificing his most efficient laborers. As to the "necessity" of it, it can not be necessary that a man should risk his life to be at any place an hour sooner or later.

The days of physical miracles have passed, and we may be very certain that the Almighty is not going to suspend a law of Nature to accommodate a preacher who is an hour behind his time. We can not exactly see the "necessity" for such a transaction. No law of Nature is a "little thing," nor is a violation of it "little." The theft of a pin, and the theft of a thousand dollars, are equally thefts. We many times do little things, subject ourselves to trifling exposures with impunity, but that does not justify us in repeating such a thing deliberately. The reason that harm did not follow in every single case was simply because the effect was counteracted by some contingency. A man takes a cold a dozen times, fifty or a hundred times, and it passes off without any striking consequences. The next time he takes a cold he expects it will pass off like the others, but sometimes it does not, it settles on the lungs, and he dies, yet he may have had worse colds before. Our highest wisdom and our only safety is in living up to the laws of our being all the time, habitually, and such are the persons who live to a good old age in health of body, and in that cheerfulness of spirit which is a natural fruit of habitual health.

For a zealous, warm-hearted, efficient minister of the Gospel to be laid on the shelf, to be incompetent for ministerial labor in the very prime of [illegible] usefulness, when the fields are already "white to the harvest," and the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," comes from every quarter, like the wail of perishing mortals, is a "burden hard to be borne," even when incapacitated by causes wholly beyond his control. Charles Sumner, in writing from Aix, says: "It is with a pang unspeakable that I find myself thus arrested in the labors of life, and in the duties of my position. This is harder to bear than the fire. I do not hear of friends engaged in active service without envy." If a laborer for his country thus feels when incapacitated by violence from another's hands, how much more keenly must a laborer for the great God feel, when he must remain idle, while he sees others "go in and possess the land." Charles Sumner felt it to be a torture greater than irons heated more than red hot, and applied to his naked flesh, with a view to his restoration, and that even in the service of an earthly master. But a torture how much more intense, must it be to a single-hearted minister of the Gospel, and aggravated to a deeper depth, if his incapacity is the result of his own carelessness!

Voice-organs. No experienced traveler or trainer of a race-horse starts his animal at full speed. He first walks, then trots, then gallops, as the animal thus holds out longer. All the muscles of all men and animals are under the same laws. It is by the movement of a variety of muscles about the throat that we speak. If then a person begins a song, or sermon, or harangue on a high key, he will begin to cough, and hem, and break down most rapidly; but if the same person begins in a low tone, in a conversational manner, and is at least eight or ten minutes in reaching the powers of his voice, he will speak much longer, and with scarcely appreciable fatigue. There is no need of commencing a sermon on a high key. A congregation instinctively adapts itself to the tone of the speaker, while their very effort at quietness favors their attention to the subject.

We should see daily much larger results from a preached gospel if ministers could begin their services in a low tone, gradually increasing it, and then warm up more in unison with the people, it being always understood that the speaker has first thoroughly mastered his subject, has a distinct object before his mind, his heart "bound up" in the accomplishment of the object, with a feeling of deep and affectionate responsibility, in case that object is not accomplished from short-comings of his own.

It is believed that an immeasurable amount of sickness, disease, and the weary suffering of weeks and months would be averted from multitudes every year, if the habitual precaution were taken in weather even moderately cold, to close the mouth and breathe through the nose on going into a cooler atmosphere, and walking briskly for a very few minutes, until the circulation has a little quickened, so as to get the blood started outwards, and gain momentum enough to resist the tendencies of the cold without, to drive it inward, and clog the machinery of life.

This is a very little thing to remember, and an act very easily performed; while the omission of it, especially in coming out of a crowded apartment, warm to perspiration, and passing directly into a cold, raw, chilly atmosphere, brings death to many.—Health and Disease.

Temperance Facts.

It is a fact that nine-tenths of the inmates of our poor-houses were brought there, directly or indirectly, by the use of ardent spirits.

It is a fact than three-fourths of all the convicts in prison were hard drinkers previous to the commission of the crimes for which they are imprisoned.

It is a fact that the greatest sufferers from disease, and those whose maladies are the most difficult to cure, are those who are addicted to the use of ardent spirits.

It is a fact that of all who commit suicide in this country, ninety-nine hundredths are the immediate or remote victims of ardent spirits.

It is a fact that in all families where the children are dirty, half-naked, and ill-fed; the rooms filthy and in disorder; the husband cross, discontented, and peevish, and the wives slattern, ill-tempered and quarrelsome; one, if not both the parents are drinkers of ardent spirits.

It is a fact that those who least frequently attend the worship of God in the sanctuary; most of those who, by their oaths, blasphemies, and horrid execrations, shock the ears of modest people, are spirit drinkers.

It is a fact that those who are most easily led to ridicule and profane sacred things, and to join in every kind of dissipation and profligacy, are spirit drinkers.

It a fact that of all that have died of the cholera in Europe and America, seventenths were spirit drinkers, and one-half decidedly intemperate.—Temp. Advocate.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year............$2.00
For a single copy 6 months............1.00
For a single copy 3 months............50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months...8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 4 months...12.00
Thirty copies to one address, 3 months..12..00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to pre-pay the postage [illegible] a year, in addition to the above [illegible] $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers [illegible] to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 232. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1860. VOL. X. NO. 25.

The World's Crisis

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING

AT

No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:

HENRY V. DAVIS, | MILES GRANT,
JOHN COUCH, | GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

The City of Gold.

"And the city was pure gold."—REV. 21: 18.

Full many a furlong over the Sea,
And afar in the dim futurity,
Enfolded in shade and obscurity,
Lies the City of Gold.

Oft at Even-tide, when the Sea is still,
And the calm waves chant like a woodland rill,
While my breast is filled with a nameless thrill,
I see the City of Gold.

And my heart will swell, as untired I gaze,
On the crimson light which around it plays,
And think of the peaceful and happy days
Of the blest in the City of Gold.

For though the departed in shrouds are bound,
And close in the burial-sheet are wound,
And laid by the living under the ground,
Far away from the City of Gold—

Yet a day will come, when a trumpet deep,
Shall waken to Judgment the souls that sleep,
For God, for each soul, doth a record keep,
In the City of Gold.

Oh! live so that when, from the burning skies,
The summons shall come for the dead to rise,
Refreshed and renewed, thou mayst ope thine eyes
On the City of Gold.

For God hath prepared an eternal rest,
For the ransomed whose names are enrolled with the blest,
And these shall sleep calmly on Christ's holy breast
In the City of Gold.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Man in Death is Unconscious.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 5.

PROP. III.—"And the MAN became a living soul." "Nephesh khaya"—living animal. Observe Gen. 1: 20, "creature that hath life," and verse 24. Gen. 2: 19; 9: 12, 15, 16; 1: 30.—"Wherein there is life."—KITTO, Vol. I., p. 59.

Having carefully examined the two preceding clauses of Gen. 2: 7, we will in this article attempt to make apparent the meaning of this clause of the verse. This affirms that the man is the living soul, and therefore let us observe two points which are urged as objections against the position which has been taken in the preceding articles.

First. In what does the personal identity of man inhere, or what is this conscious I?

In order to properly discuss this point, we will observe a few propositions, and contemplate man in five relations.

1. After being formed MAN of the dust of the ground, and before he lived.
2. After MAN lived by the breath of life being breathed into him, and his history during this period.
3. After the breath of life has left him, and he becomes as when he was first formed.
4. The recognition of MAN in death contemplated.
5. We will observe the Scripture account of the man after his resurrection.

Let us appeal to the word of God on these points, and determine in what the personal identity of MAN inheres or exists.

1. We will contemplate his identity after being formed a MAN of the dust of the ground, before he lived. It must be perfectly obvious to every one, that man's personal identity must necessarily inhere in the man himself, or that organization which is denominated MAN. The addition of life to the man, did not violate the justness of the application of the term man, by which the dust-organization was designated, to the organization thus designated by it. For the addition of the principle of life to the already existing unconscious man, was by no means the addition of another man, but merely a principle of life by which the dust-man became a living, conscious MAN. This addition is never denominated man in any place in the Bible, and therefore man's personal identity can never possibly inhere in it. As suggested in a previous article, this breath of life was never conferred upon man to constitute the breath a living entity, but to give life to the dust-man, and hence could not [illegible] which God designated by the term man. There is no way to avoid this conclusion.

2. We will observe man, and his history, after the breath of life caused life in the man.

The garden into which he was put, after breath was breathed into his nostrils, the law which he was required to keep, by the declaration that "the Lord God commanded THE MAN," and his destiny if he violated that law, demonstrate that man's personal identity existed in the dust-organization. This Law was not given to the breath of life which entered his nostrils, but to the man who was made alive by it, and who, from that period until now, has been the only subject of rewards and penalties; for rewards and penalties are in no instance affirmed of either that which entered man when first formed, or any thing denominated spirit, in any way related to man. The good reason for this is, because these terms are not employed to designate any thing in man more than an attribute of the man, or the principle of life by which the man lives. We affirm, then, without fear of successful contradiction, that from the time of Adam, the natural name of the dust-organization, also designated the man, God has addressed no penalty for crime, nor reward for virtue, to any thing but the living, conscious dust-man, and that every penalty or reward promised or threatened, has been invariably experienced by him, and not by any thing which does exist independently of the man, of dust-organization. This is so fully sustained by both the history of mankind composing earth's nations, and the church of God, even to Enoch and Elijah, that I need not hesitate to specify instances of its proof and truthfulness. Man's personal identity, then, during life, is in the dust-organization, which is only denominated man, and he is the only living conscious I. We will refer to the conscious I in another place.

3. We will contemplate MAN, after the breath of life has left him, and he is therefore as when he was first formed.

Is the term man, in the event of death, transferred to something that leaves the man at that time, or does the Bible still restrict it to the dust-organization? Let us seek an answer to this inquiry. The Bible shall test it. First, see Job 14: 1, 14, 10, 12, which please to read in the order laid down. "Man that is born of a woman, is of few days, and full of trouble. If a man die shall he live again? . . . But man dieth, and wasteth away, (i. e., man wasteth away,) yea, man giveth up the ghost, (i. e., expireth) and where is he? (man.) . . . What man gives up is not the man. So man lieth down, etc. Personal identity here, certainly exists in the dust-formed man. Num. 27: 8; 1 Cor. 15: 21.

4. Let us observe this same identity recognized in the condition of man in death. See Exod. 4: 19. "The men are dead which sought thy life." They are still acknowledged to be men. Job 1: 19. "And it fell upon the young men and they are dead;" i. e., dead young MEN, still men. Ps. 31: 12. "I am forgotten as a dead MAN out of mind." Identity is still confined to the dust organization, which is the man. Let us now come to the period of time when the dead men of God are to be called for, and observe the language employed to express their resurrection. Isa. 26: 19. "Thy dead MEN shall live, together with my dead BODY" (a term employed to designate the man, Isaiah,) shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." The part that sings is in the dust, and must wake up before it can sing; therefore it is the dust-man only who sings, and he too after being raised from the dead. There is no such transfer of the term "man" in the Scriptures, as we see employed in the support of that modern dogma of immortal-soulism, which obliges those who are pledged to defend it, to whiffle this term around, and apply it first to one imaginary entity, and then another, in order to save a sinking craft which is almost engulphed in the ocean of its own absurdities. No!. The man is of dust-organization, living by breathing; and when dead is still a man; and if he dies in Christ, he will in the resurrection be recognized as one of God's dead MEN, and raised as such in the first resurrection. The Scriptures, then, nowhere point out the personal identity to exist in any thing but the dust-man.

5. We will observe the Scripture account of the man after his resurrection from the dead. For the sake of brevity I will refer to the [illegible] to show that the [illegible] John 20: 14. "Jesus [illegible] from the dead." Jesus was the [illegible] of Mary [illegible] Matt. 1: 21. He told John on the Isle of Patmos that he had been dead. Rev. 1: 18. When he was raised from the dead he designated himself by the pronouns I and me. John 20: 17. He proved his personality, his real identity to Thomas, by the very evidence which he sought—John 20: 25–28—in his hands and side; and Jesus told his disciples, referring them to his hands and feet, saying, "Behold my hands and my feet," that he was not a phantom, but proved his personal identity by showing "them his hands and his feet." He did this to prove his declaration of his personal identity true, which reads: "It is I MYSELF." To what I did these hands and feet belong? Was it to "I" "the man Christ Jesus," or the spirit of "the man Christ Jesus?" See Lk. 24: 37–40. Very much more might be written upon this point, in proof that the personal identity of man cannot possibly exist in any thing except the dust-organization, for there is nothing else beside this called man. With the above position how very essential is the resurrection to secure God's final purpose. Amen.

Let us now observe the second point which is urged against the position which we have taken, and if possible ascertain its true relation to the question under consideration.

Secondly. In what sense is man created in the image of God? Gen. 1: 26, 27. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, and after our likeness. . . . So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him, male and female created he them." Gen. 5: 1, 2.—"In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him, male and female created he them, and blessed them, and called THEIR name ADAM, in the day when they were created." "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he MAN." Gen. Gen. 9: 6.—"For a man . . . is the image and glory of God." 1 Cor. 11: 7. It is very clear that the image of God applies to that which is properly denominated MAN, and if God created man in his image, it must have been at the time when he accomplished the work defined in Gen. 2: 7. It is supposed, however, that Eph. 4: 24, and Col. 3: 10, forbid this application of the term image, and teaches that it must have been employed to express the moral condition of the first man; and by some the quality of immortality, which, however, has never been proved. It is, however, obvious that the term image employed in these texts does not refer to the dust-man, as is apparent in Gen. 1: 15; but to the "new man," which is a figurative use of the word "man," as we have shown in a preceding article. It is only employed in these texts to define a character, exhibiting the qualities of the character of Christ in contrast with the character represented by the expression, "the old man." The acts associated with the term man in Genesis, forbid the idea that the apostle refers to the same thing.

Let us notice the text in Genesis again. Gen. 1: 26.—"And God said, Let us make man in our image and after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." Please read Gen. 1: 27–30 in connection with the above, and it will necessarily appear evident that God had reference to the creation of the dust-man. Again, observe the name of the man thus created in the image and likeness of God, as recorded in Gen. 5: 2. "And called their name ADAM." Now read Gen. 2: 7–25, and it will be impossible to avoid the conclusion that the literal man was made in the image of God. The "beasts of the field," and "every fowl of the air," and "every living creature" over which this man in the image of God had dominion, (Gen. 1: 26–30,) he also gave names to, as in Gen. 2: 19, 20, in which verses he is called by the same name as in Gen. 5: 2; i. e., "Adam—the man—dust of the ground." See the marginal reading of Gen. 2: 19, 7, 15. To this image-man, God also gave all the herbs and fruit trees upon all the face of the earth, for meat, Gen. 1: 29; and hence it is quite impossible for us to apply this term image to the character or quality of a being, for it evidently belongs to the man to whom God gave a law, by the observance of which he would constitute a character pleasing to God, and if not obedient to that law, he would become offensive to God, and experience the penalty.

Moral character is dependent upon the observance of moral principles. I cannot conceive of a moral character formed or created independently of the observance of moral law; and if such a character were an independent creation, how could a person, on account of its possession, be the recipient of rewards and penalties? We are not in the possession of a dying nature, as the posterity of Adam, because he did not sustain a character of independent creation, but because Adam violated the command in Gen. 2: 16, 17, after his creation was completed. In Heb. 1: 3, we are informed that Jesus was the express image of his (God's, see verse) person; and it is a fact that form is predicated of God. Phil. 2: 6. Men who have no kind of faith in the distinctive personality of God, being Pantheistic in their conceptions of him, i. e., who believe that God is in every stone, stick, tree, etc., will of course find it quite impossible to believe that God is a person, and has form, and such find but little difficulty in denying the distinctive personality of Jesus Christ, who is the express image of God, in order to make their theory appear plausible. The image of God in which man was created, must exist in the dust-organization which constitutes man, and in which Jesus was created. This image could not be true of an attribute of man, for an attribute of man is not the man, any more than an attribute of God is himself; and God did not say, Let us make an attribute of man, in the image and likeness of an attribute of ours. Some indeed reason on this point, as if they believed that God was only an attribute; and such, in fact, is just about the position of Trinitarians, who cannot possibly really make themselves believe that three distinctive personalities, called God, are only one person. This would not be a mystery, but an absurdity, in which the Bible never demands our faith.

There is one God, a person, and one Lord Jesus Christ, in the express image of his person, and who was also our sacrifice, for God sent him, "his Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh," etc., (Rom. 8: 3) which certainly affords proof that, Jesus being in God's image and our likeness, that we are in the image and likeness of God, which image was not lost by the Adamic transgression, as may be seen by reference to Gen. 9: 6, and 1 Cor. 11: 7.

Therefore, Adam being in the image of God, and his posterity being in his image, (Gen. 5: 3) constitutes the race of man in the image of God, and clearly exhibits the fact that the dust-organization is that in which the image of God exists. This term then in Gen. 1: 26 does not refer to qualities, attributes, or characters of man, but to man himself. Amen.

For the Crisis.

The Nature and Origin of Jesus.

BY WM. HOBBS.

No. 5.

Michael, the archangel, is not Jesus Christ. This proposition, to the unprejudiced and informed mind, will appear as self-evidently true. Paul declared repeatedly, in his epistle to the Hebrews, that Jesus was not of angel origin. He says, "Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee?"—Heb. 1: 4, 5. As he did not say so to either of the angels, and did to Christ, it follows that he is not the archangel Michael; since, if he was, Paul's words would be void of sense, as his words are in that interrogative form of speech, in which a question is asked, not to express a doubt, but to confidently assert the reverse of what is asked.

Archangel, is a word derived from the Greek term, archaggelos; and is a compound word, from arche, chief; and angelos, angel—the chief angel. This name, being the official name of Michael, denotes that he is one of the angels, as well as the chief of angels. Hence, when Paul asks, as in the above, and as in this instance, v. 13, "But unto which of the angels said he at any time, sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?" it is a clear assertion that Jesus is neither Uriel, or Gabriel, or Michael, or any other of the angels.

Michael being the chief angel, it does not follow that there are not archangels under him, any more than that because there was a chief priest among the Jews, that there were not "chief priests" at the same time. Because the plural is not used in the Bible, is no argument against there being archangels. Gabriel, when he appeared to Daniel, said, "The prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days; but, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes came to help me."—Dan. 10: 13. If Michael is "one of the chief princes," there must be other angels belonging to an order of chiefs, hence, archangels.

The standing up of Michael, mentioned in Dan. 12: 1, is no evidence that he is Christ, since according to Daniel's testimony, Michael was to stand up during time, but Jesus does not exercise his kingly authority until afterward. See Dan. 7: 13. The expression, "At that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people,"—explains itself, as to how he was to stand up. He was not only to stand up as the angelic protector of the church, during the time of trouble, but he did then, and had at other times, stood up for the deliverance of God's people. See John 5: 13, 15. Because the phrase, "stand up," is used to denote the succession of kings, it does not follow that it means so in this instance, as it is not said that he should "stand up after," or "stand up in his estate," as it is said there of the succession of one king after another; but it reads, "At that time shall Michael stand up." To find what is meant by "that time," we must examine further. Dan. 12: 1,—"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as was not since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."

Now, since our Savior spoke of a time of great tribulation, "such as was not since the beginning of the world to this same time, no nor ever shall be;" and since he spoke of that time of trouble as an event preceding his coming, as being caused by the "abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel;" and as there cannot be two times of great tribulation such as never was, and never shall be again, the tribulation spoken of by Daniel and Christ cannot be otherwise than identical. And since the duration of the abomination of desolation, which caused the time of trouble, from its commencement to the time Daniel was to stand in his lot was to be 1335 days (symbolic time,) and as Michael was to stand up during the time of trouble, the phrase, "at that time," must refer to that period of time, the 1335 days. And this view is confirmed by Rev. 12: 6—14, which represents Michael as standing up in defense of the true church against the dragonic power of Rome, at the commencement of the 1260 days.

Some argue that the phrase, "at that time," refers to the particular point of time mentioned in the last verse of chap. 11. "He shall come to his end and none shall help him;" and at that time Michael was to stand up. This is the strongest point in their argument, but as it reflects seriously on the reliability of Christ's words, we should seek for an interpretation that is not liable to such an objection.

One peculiarity of prophecy is, that a certain class of events are given, and then a contemporaneous class of events are mentioned afterwards. Thus in the eleventh chapter of Daniel, his vision is explained from its commencement to its close. Commencing at the 31st verse, the development of the man of sin, in setting up the abomination of desolation, is brought to view, and a brief history given of him, till he comes to his end; which, according to Paul, is to be at the coming of Christ. Consequently that is the extreme length of the vision to which the last verse brings us; hence, what is afterward spoken of is to be understood as speaking of events taking place contemporaneously with the rise, progress, and the end of the man of sin. And since the Revelator informs us that Michael was to stand up in defense of the true church that "brought forth the man child," Jesus of Nazareth,) at the commencement of the 1260 days, we have his authority for the standing up of Michael as contemporaneous with the rise of the Pope; and ending when Christ assumes his regal authority. And this view is confirmed by the reading of the septuagint of Dan. 12: 1—Kai en to kairo ekeino anastesetai Michael—and in that time Michael shall stand up. So this is no evidence of Michael being Christ.

Again, Paul, in Heb. 2: 5, says, "For unto the angels he hath not put in subjection the world to come whereof we speak." Next, he declares that the world to come is to be put in subjection to Jesus; so if Michael was Christ, this would be a self-contradiction. Plurality does not help the matter; for if the world to come is to be put in subjection to the chief angel, then it will be put in subjection to angels; else, the angels could not properly execute the authority of their chief. But our Christ takes precedence even of Michael, as Paul says, "When he bringeth the first-begotten into the world he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him." Consequently, we find that the angels were commissioned to honor the birth of the babe of Bethlehem. At that time, "the angel of the Lord," with "a multitude of the heavenly host," announced his birth to the shepherds, and sang in honor of his birth, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, good will toward men."—Luke 2: 8–14, [illegible] "Michael, the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee."—v. 9. This contention is alluded to in Zechariah, chap. 3, thus, "And he showed me Joshua, the high priest, standing before the angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him. And the Lord,—i. e., the angel of the Lord—said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee, Satan; even the Lord which hath chosen Jerusalem, rebuke thee." This Joshua was the high priest in the days of Zechariah. So then, according to Jude, Michael is the angel of the Lord; that is, this definite appellation is used to denote the chief angel.

Now, it was the angel of the Lord that appeared to Joseph, saying, Arise and take the young child (Jesus) and his mother, and flee into Egypt. And, at the resurrection of Jesus, we read that "the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and rolled away the stone from the door, (of the sepulchre,) and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment as white as snow; and for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men. And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye, for I know that ye seek Jesus, who was crucified. He is not here; for he is risen, as he said; Come, see the place where the Lord lay."—Matt. 28: 2—6. So we have the testimony of the angel of the Lord himself, that he is not Christ.

Second. The exclamation of Nebuchadnezzar is of no value to the theory of a pre-existent Jesus; since according to the song of the three children, it was the angel of the Lord that appeared unto them, in the midst of the fiery furnace. See their song in the Apocrypha, v. 22; which agrees with what Nebuchadnezzar said after their deliverance, after being enlightened by their song, and by the mighty display of God's power. He then said, "Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego, who hath sent his angel and delivered his servants that trusted in him." Consequently, it was not Jesus, who was born long after, to whom Nebuchadnezzar referred when he said, "Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and the form of the fourth is like the son of God."

It is not clear from the original what Nebuchadnezzar meant, whether he spoke under the influence of a sudden enlightenment, or whether he spoke idolatrously of the angel as like the son of a god, seeing that he was an idolater. But whatever he meant, his words agree with the facts in the case, as the angels are recognized in the Bible as the sons of God. Those who quote his words, must take his own explanation of them. He declared afterwards, that it was the angel of the Lord—God sent his angel and delivered his servants—and surely he ought to be allowed to explain himself.

According to Jude, the angel of the Lord is Michael, and that angel of the Lord at the tomb of the risen Christ, declared in effect that he was not Jesus; so it is a clear case, that Nebuchadnezzar's words had no reference to either the Arian, or Trinitarian theory. Therefore there is no reason why any one should labor under that egregious mistake, that Michael, the angel of the Lord, who appeared to the three worthies in the fiery furnace; and who appeared to Moses, and to Joshua, and others of the Israelites, was Jesus, who, Paul said, was made of the seed of David.

Some mistake the angel that appeared to Daniel, (chap. 10) for Christ. But that angel acknowledges Michael as his superior. See the last verse. He could have been no other than Gabriel, since it was Gabriel who was commissioned to make Daniel understand the vision. And the same angel said to Daniel, "There is none that holdeth with me in these things but Michael;" therefore it must have been Gabriel, who, in common with Michael, had understanding of that vision.

The supposition that John 12: 41, refers to Isa 6: 1—8, is another point to be noticed. Although there is some plausibility for the supposition, yet the facts in the case are against it. This is apparent by an examination of John's words. He, speaking of the unbelief of the Jews, says,—"Though he (Jesus) had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him; that the saying of Isaiah the prophet might be fulfilled, which he spake, —Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? Therefore they could not believe, because Isaiah had said again, He hath blinded their eyes and hardened their heart, that they should not see with their eyes, [illegible] and I should heal them."—John 12: 37–41. Here are two distinct quotations made by John from Isaiah, chap. 53, and chap. 6. Chapter 53 is a prophetic description of "the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow." A prophecy uttered something like fifty years after the vision mentioned in chap. 6. The question then is, to which of these quotations do John's words, in verse 41, apply? Evidently, to chap. 53, as he speaks of what Isaiah said "when he saw his glory and spake of him." And Isaiah spoke particularly of him, peri autou—about him, concerning him, in this chapter, but he does not allude to him in chap. 6. Hence, we are to understand John in the same way that we should have understood him, had he omitted the quotation from chap. 6, which is a quotation simply thrown in as corroborative of the first quotation. Isaiah saw the future glory of Christ, when he spoke of him in chap. 53, such a glory as Peter spoke of, when he testified that the prophets searched diligently what, or what manner of time the spirit of GOD did signify, when it testified beforehand of the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.—1 Pet. 1: 2.

For "spirit of God" in the above, the common version has it, "the spirit of Christ;" from which reading it is inferred that it was the conscious spirit of Christ that actuated the prophets to speak of him. But this does not necessarily follow, for a spirit that is Christ-like, is said to be the spirit of Christ, while it is not the veritable and personal spirit of Christ. Besides, there is evidence that the reading is not the correct one. First, because some of the Greek manuscripts read, "the spirit of God," instead of the spirit of Christ. Second, the sense of the passage does not seem to demand it; since it makes an unnecessary repetition of the name of Christ, when it would have been more natural to have substituted the pronoun his, instead of using the noun twice. Third, Peter declared expressly, in his second epistle, that the prophets spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit, (chap. 1: 21,) and none can dispute but that the Holy Spirt is the spirit of God.

The adoption of a reading into the received text that favors the pre-existence theory, to the exclusion of another reading that does not, is no evidence that the received reading is the genuine; from the fact that those who had a hand in the compilation of that text, were the known advocates of the theory in question, and were therefore biased towards any reading favorable to it. This bias shows itself in translations of passages, that they understood taught that unnatural hypothesis, where they have endeavored to make the translation express their views more fully than the original will warrant. For instance, they translate John 6: 62, thus, "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?" They were not satisfied with the word "ascend," which fully expresses the original, but they must append the word "up" to it. If there had been anything about the word ascend that is ambiguous, and if that word would have admitted of any such meaning as to ascend down, then it would have been necessary for them to append "up" to it; but as no such necessity existed, it shows a bigoted bias in favor of their theory.

The fact that different readings exist, favorable and unfavorable to the pre-existence theory, is evidence that there has been, at some time an intentional alteration of the copies of the manuscripts. And since the advocates of that theory include among them, some of the basest and most corrupt men that ever lived; men who have held that it is "right to lie for the good of the church," it is more reasonable to suppose that such men are the authors of the readings favorable to that theory, than it is to suppose that the opposite readings are not genuine; since there is none, of the latter class who have been base enough to alter the manuscripts. Besides, the control and the supervision of the manuscripts have been, in a great measure, under the authority of the advocates of the pre-existence theory; and hence, it was the more easy for them to alter the manuscripts, all things considered, than for any others.

Paul in his letter to the Corinthians, in speaking of the sins of the Israelites in the wilderness, is made to say, "Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents." Others of the Greek manuscripts read, [illegible] let us tempt God, [illegible] tempted, and were destroyed of serpents." The evidence of the latter reading being the correct one, is found in the account to which Paul refers, where it is said, "The people spake against God, and against Moses, Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in this wilderness? for there is no bread, neither is there any water; and our soul loatheth this light bread." [illegible] God.

For the Crisis.

On the Holy Spirit.

Before offering a single sentiment on this important subject, I lift my heart to my Father in heaven, that "the Spirit itself" (Rom. 8: 26) may enlighten and influence me to write that only which is in accordance with the truth of God. Beloved brethren! let us supplicate "an unction from the Holy One," that we may "know all things" relative to this precious theme.

The first revelation we have of the Holy Spirit is in Gen. 1: 2. It is there denominated "the Spirit of God." We find this term used about thirty times in the two Testaments. Our Father uses the term "MY Spirit" in various instances in addressing the children of men. See Gen. 6: 3; Prov. 1: 23; Isa. 30: 1; 42: 1; 44: 3; Acts 2: 17, 18; Matt. 12: 18, etc.

The relationship which the Holy Spirit bears to God, must be learned, not from the creeds and theories of fallible men, but from the Word which abideth forever.

What is the holy testimony? Is it that "the Holy Spirit," or Spirit of God," is a distinct person from God our Father? Did any man ever read in the sacred volume, that "the Holy Spirit is the third person in the adorable Trinity," or any declaration of equivalent import? Never. Nor did any prophet or apostle, or saint, or angel, ever worship the Holy Spirit, as a person distinct from the Father. The Bible does not contain a single command, or example, to justify such worship. Is it possible that there can be in the universe, an infinite, self-existent and independent person, who has never claimed the worship of intelligent creatures?

The relationship which the Holy Spirit bears to "the only true God," our "Father," (John 17: 1—3) is clearly indicated in the following passage of revealed truth. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so, the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."—1 Cor. 2: 11. Does any man infer from the term, "spirit of man," that man's spirit is a distinct person from man? Yet might we not as well make such an inference, as to infer from the term "Spirit of God," that his Spirit is a distinct person from God? The term "spirit of man" occurs in other passages.—Prov. 18: 14; 20: 27; Zech. 12: 1, etc.

Moreover, the terms used in reference to the Holy Spirit, in both Testaments, are irreconcilable with personality. God promises to "POUR OUT," and "SEND FORTH" his Spirit, clearly teaching us that his Spirit is not another person, but the development or manifestation of his influencing power, wisdom, love and renewing and sanctifying grace or favor. See Joel 2: 28; Prov. 1: 23; Acts 2: 18, 33; Isa. 44: 3; Ezek. 39: 29. Acts 8: 15, 16, 17, etc. Accordingly we find the terms, "Spirit of the Lord," and "Spirit of God," frequently used in the holy Word as synonymous with the power of God. See Judges 14: 6, 19; 15: 14; Micah 3: 8. Our blessed Lord is said to have "cast out devils by the Spirit of God," Matt. 12: 28, and to have done the same, "by the finger of God."—Luke 11: 20. The terms hand and finger being emblems of power. See Acts 1: 8.

Further proof that the Holy spirit is not a distinct person from the Father, is found in the holy Record, that it is the Spirit OF THE FATHER. Matt 10: 20.—"For it is not ye that speak; but the Spirit of your Father who speaketh in you." If the Holy Spirit is a distinct person from the Father, he must be a distinct spirit from the Father, and must perform his works by his own spirit, if infinite, and not by the spirit of another person. There can be but one infinite "eternal Spirit." This is as evident as that there can be but one infinite eternal God. Now as the Father is this "only true God" (John 17: 1—3; I Cor. 8: 6,) he must also be this one only "eternal Spirit."—Heb. 9: 14. Accordingly, we find the same works ascribed to God our Father and to the Holy Spirit. What God our Father does, he does by his Spirit. "God created the heaven and the earth." "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."—Gen. 1: 1, 2. "By his Spirit he garnished the heavens." So we are born or begotten of God (John 1: 13); which is being born or begotten of the Spirit.—John 3: 5. God our Father writes his law upon our hearts.—Heb. 8: 10. It is by "the Spirit of the living God."—2 Cor. 3: 3.—See also Acts 5: 3, 4.

To denote the perfection of the attributes of God, who "is a Spirit"—(John 4: 24); we read of "the seven spirits of God."—Rev. 5: 6, 1: 4. If these are distinct persons, there must be a triune Trinity.

We are commanded, "QUENCH not the Spirit,"—1 Thess 5: 19; i. e., the holy influences of God's Spirit with which he graciously favors us. Quench not a person, in the connection in which the command stands, is a sense totally inadmissible. We never read any such words, as quench not the Father, or the Son, who are persons. Neither do we ever read, the Father itself, as we read "the Spirit itself."—Rom. 8: 26. The personal pronoun is indeed applied to the Spirit of God, as it is to the spirit of man, and to wisdom, Prov. 8th chapter. Not so frequently, however, in the original, as in the English version; e. g., John 14: 17. Matt. [illegible]

[illegible] Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost," whosoever that needs may be.

The passage, 1 John 5: 7, is sometimes quoted in proof of the doctrine of the Trinity of persons in the Godhead. It neither declares the three to be three persons, or that the three are one God. Moreover, it is acknowledged to be an interpolation by learned Trinitarians.

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen." This precious, divine benediction, neither declares or implies that the three are persons, or that the three are one God. The holy desire of the apostle, that the saints may enjoy the love of God, and the communion of his Spirit, is no more proof that the Spirit of God is a distinct person from God our Father, than the communion of Paul's "spirit" with the church at Corinth, Acts 5: 3, 4, is proof of the apostle's spirit being a distinct person from himself. The Scriptural doxology contains no worship of the Holy Ghost in distinction from God our Father.—Rev. 5: 13.

H. O.

Phila., Dec. 24th, 1859.

For the Crisis.

A Christian Duty.

"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is."

That the worldling, and those who profess no attachment to divine things, should be so allured by the deceptive voice of pleasure, as to forget the assembling of themselves together, in accordance with the injunction of the Apostle, is not at all wonderful. But for those who profess to have been "translated out of the kingdom of darkness into that of God's dear Son," to be brought in contact with the glorious light of the gospel; in short, to have been born again, old things passing away and all things becoming new, to so far forget their obligation as to neglect the ordinances of God's house, is an anomaly to their profession. And yet how often is this the case! How often is the heart of the active and earnest christian made to mourn over the neglect and inattention of professed brethren and sisters in Christ! Instead of finding them in their places on all proper occasions, cheerfully bearing their portion of the burdens of Zion, and by their fervent wrestling prayers and godly exhortations, striving to win the heedless sinner from the error of his way; behold, they are absent! Some frivolous excuse has prevented their attendance at the house appointed for prayer, or the public ministration of the word; and thus the wheels of Zion are clogged, and Jesus is wounded in the "house of his friends," and the devoted and faithful servant of the Lord, with the humble few, who, by their fidelity to the cause of their divine Master, are endeavoring to stay up his hands, must move onward in sadness, not only burdened with the souls of poor, perishing sinners around them, but those, also, of their backsliding brethren.

O! if all those who profess to love the blessed Savior, and to look for his speedy appearing, would be at their post, would come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty foes without, what a phalanx would be presented to the world; what an amount of irresistible testimony to the unbelieving. Surely, then would Zion speedily become the praise of the whole earth, and christians, in the language of prophecy, such that one should put a thousand to flight and two ten thousand.

The Psalmist well understood the benefit to be derived from often mingling with the saints, when he exclaims, "Blessed are they who are in thy house; for they will be still praising thee." And as a result of that praise, he further informs us, "They go from strength to strength; every one of them in Zion appeareth before God." And is it not usually the case, that those who are the most habitual in their attendance at the house of God, are more careful to maintain a consistent and godly deportment elsewhere? Such persons are not so apt to forget that God has continued claims upon them, that their time, talents and labors, all belong to him, and have been laid upon the altar of sacrifice. Hence, they may not be removed with the sacrilegious touch of earthly desire, but at the call of duty must move onward in the conflict, however difficult or crossing to the flesh. But the shrinking and unstable believer, who is ever loitering in the way, and lingering in the race, has no abiding enjoyment, and brings no honor to his Master, or the blessed cause he has espoused.

O that such would awake as out of sleep, and bind their heavenly armor more closely around them, and commence with alacrity and delight to run the christian race, rejoicing in the performance of every known duty, and, with the Psalmist, exclaim, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord."

M. A. T.

Neal's Creek Ind.

☞ Many there are whose love to the saints is like Job's brooks, which in winter, when we have no need, overflow with tenders of service and shows of love; but when the season is hot and dry, and the poor thirsty traveler stands in most need of water to refresh him, then the brooks are quite dried up. But such as truly love, will always love.

☞ When God gives a mercy, he does not relinquish his own right in that mercy; [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 22, 1860.

General Conference in Boston.

It is proposed to hold a General Conference at Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing Tuesday evening, April 3d, at 7 o'clock, and continue every day and evening through the week and over the following Lord's day. We shall expect a large and good meeting. More anon.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 9.

23. We have examined twenty-two sections of "Doubting Castle," and now pass to the twenty-third, which is the fourth apartment of the seventh Division.

We here find another strange inquiry, that could have been framed, we think, in no other place than "Doubting Castle." We are surprised that its managers ever succeeded in gaining the attention of our brother sufficiently to get him to transcribe it; but we are aware that when one is before the adroit faculty in this old institution, they will almost make one believe that black is white. But to the question. It is in substance as follows: "As man had no intelligence before he had life, may not the intelligence be in 'the breath of life,' to be manifested through the brain? When we read this, we said to ourselves, this is the climax of "Doubting Castle" theology. It made us think of a sermon we heard in our boyhood. The minister said, "the soul is the breath." He then proceeded to show how it could be cultivated. This is our earliest recollection of preaching, and we then thought the man must be mistaken and we think so still. If the intelligence is in the breath, or spirit of life, it is not in the man, he being only a machine upon which the "life spirit" may operate. With this view it is not proper to say the man ever knew any thing, as he is only a medium for the operator; and further, it is foolish talk to say of that which never knew any thing, that it has no knowledge when dead. He who knows nothing when dead, did know something when alive. If the "life spirit" is the intelligent part, then it follows that this part is the one that knows nothing when dead. This view is fatal to the idea that the spirit is conscious between death and the resurrection.

Again, if "the life spirit," or breath, needs "the brain" in order to exhibit its intelligence, how will it manifest its wisdom when the brain is rotten in the grave? If this "life spirit," in man, can think and reason without a brain, why do we have such an organ? and why does a severe blow upon the head stop all the thinking? The truth in this matter is, no man, or any part of man, ever had a thought outside of his brain. This is the organ of thought; and, when speaking of man, David says: "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts PERISH," of "this world" and all other worlds; and hence Solomon says, man knows "not any thing," when dead.

If the "life spirit," or breath, at death, goes off with all the intelligence in man, and takes up its abode in the heathen, Jewish, Mohammedan, Catholic or Protestant hades, somewhere below the surface of the earth, then certainly it has a part, and its only part, in things which are "done UNDER THE SUN;" and yet, in hades, this same place, the Bible declares, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom;" consequently, it follows, that if the "life spirit," or breath, goes there, it knows no more when there, than a "dead man" who knows "NOT ANY THING."

In section twenty-third, we get a very good idea of "Doubting Castle" theology. It is all doubt, doubts, doubted, DOUBTING. O horrors! what a place in which to be confined! Dear Bro., storm the "Castle" and get out. You have a "key" that will unlock every door in the wretched old mansion. May the angel of the Lord serve you as he did Peter when in prison.

24. We will now advance to the next section. Here, we are met at once with another singular question. It is this: "Why are we not told that God breathed into the animals this 'breath of life?'" Then the remark follows, "It seems, so far as we have any account of the matter, that they lived without being 'breathed into.'"

If God did not breathe the breath of of life into the beasts, how came it in them? They breathed before man was created, and if this breath or "life spirit" is the real man, the intelligent agent; then it existed in the beasts first, as they were made first. It is positively affirmed in the Bible of man and beast, that "they have all one breath;" and we found the Scripture declaring of the beasts, "They went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life."—Gen. 7: 15. This confirms the statement of the wise man, that beasts have the same breath that is in man. In Gen. 7: 21–22, we read: "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died." Here we learn again, that beasts and men have the same "breath of life," and have it in the same place—the nostrils. The nostrils are not the locality for the intelligence of man or beast. We ask again, if God did not breathe "the breath of life" into the nostrils of the beasts, the same as he did into man, how came it in them? How came they all to have "ONE breath?"

25. We will now proceed to section twenty-five, where we find a bold assertion, which reads as follows:

"This word, 'breathed into,' is a peculiar word. It is also rendered 'blew,' 'formed,' 'created,' 'made.' And God formed in man the breath of life."

If we had not become pretty well acquainted with the crooks and turns, misquotations, misrepresentations, and false definitions of "Doubting Castle," we should have passed the foregoing proposition without mistrust; for we noticed the words formed, created and made, were marked with quotation marks, as if copied from some standard Hebrew Lexicon. But when we examined the lexicons and the Scriptures, we found, we do not say to our astonishment, for it was no more than we expected, that nah-phag'h, the word rendered breathed, in Gen. 2: 7, is in no case defined to mean formed, created, or made; and is not thus rendered ONCE in the whole Bible! Blew is a proper rendering of the word nah-phay'h. Gesenius defines it as follows: "To puff, to blow, to breathe. To blow upon any one, of the wind.—Ezk. 37: 9. 'Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.' To blow up a fire, to kindle up.—Ezk. 22: 21. 'Yea, I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof.' To blow away, to breathe out."

Roy defines it as follows: "He infused, breathed into, as life. Breathed out, expired, died. Blew, as with a pair of bellows."

Parkhurst defines it, "to breathe, blow with a blast of air."

The same word occurs in Job 20: 26.—"All darkness shall be hid in his secret places: a fire not blown shall consume him; it shall go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle." Again in Isa. 54: 16.—"Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy."

It will be noticed as we advance in the mazy windings of "Doubting Castle," that the departure from truthful simplicity is more and more apparent. The progress is downward into darkness; thus showing that its wages end in "blackness of darkness;" but with the light of truth in our hand, we will make a bold advance in the name of our great King, in order to rescue the despairing ones immured in this doleful old "Castle."

26. We will advance to the next section. This is intimately connected with the preceding. The question is here asked, "What was this that was breathed into man? Was it air?" Yes, certainly, "the breath of life." Nothing more nor less. It is said in "Doubting Castle," "there was air in him," and "in all creatures" "before" "the breath of life" was breathed or blown into them by the Creator, and after they are dead. Without an examination, this last statement might seem to be a plausible objection to the fact that only "the breath of life" was blown into the nostrils. The small quantity of air in the man, after his formation, was not sufficient to inflate his lungs and set all the parts of his wonderful mechanism in motion. In order to accomplish this, it required just the act mentioned in Gen. 2: 7; i. e., that the air, or "breath of life" should be blown, or forcibly injected into man's nostrils to inflate his lungs; then by the action of the internal organs, prepared for this purpose by the wisdom of our Creator, the act of inspiration and respiration continues till these organs are too weak to perform their functions any longer, when the man dies, for want of fresh air obtained by the process of breathing.

Analagous to this, we know there is air about the wind-mill when first erected; but it will not move till the air is blown upon it. So there is air about the ship in a calm; but it must wait till it is blown upon it, before it can sail out of the harbor. When the perfect clock stands upon the shelf, attraction is acting upon the pendulum, but it does not move till it receives a forcible impulse; then the attraction, in connection with the machinery, keeps it in motion till it runs down. The wind is not the ship; the attraction is not the clock; "the breath of life" is not the man; but when his physical strength is too weak to breathe, death immediately follows; and without a resurrection he lives no more.

27. We will now glance a few moments at section twenty-seven. This is a continuation of the preceding one. It is here asked, "Was it 'life' that was breathed into man?"—It was "the breath of life." It is then asked, "Who knows what 'life' is?"—Life is defined to be, "animated existence," "animated principle," "state of being alive." Again, it is inquired, "May not life be the germ power of all intelligence?"—Power is not a conscious entity.

The inquiry is next made, "In some conditions, may not 'life' be intelligent without a physical medium to manifest itself through?"—Never. How can a principle be intelligent? The principle of life, or "animated existence," is common to all living beings upon the earth; but is not the being, of whom it is only an attribute. There can be no intelligence without an organism, but principles are not organized bodies.

Again it is asked, "Is not 'life' intelligent in our Creator without a medium of manifestation?" The foregoing remarks are a sufficient answer to the last inquiry. After reading the last question, we wondered what would come next from "Doubting Castle." In our next we shall see.

Encouraging.

Our subscription list is gradually increasing. Twenty new subscribers were received in one day last week. Many thanks to our preaching Bro., and others, who are making noble efforts to scatter our family paper. Now is a good time to make further efforts, as we are about to commence a new volume. We intend to spare no pains to make the Crisis just such a paper as christians will love to read. By the help of the Lord, we hope to keep upon the "watch tower," and be able to herald, faithfully, the signs of the approaching King. The omens are thickening, and the light is growing brighter. Let all the wise keep awake, and the sleeping arouse at once.

Our Canada Pilgrimage.

We left our readers at Rutland, Vt., Jan. 24th. The same day, in company with Bro. J. Howell, we went to Burlington, thence to Waterbury, where we spent three evenings and Thursday afternoon in discussion with Mr. Eli Ballou, editor of the Christian Repository, published at Montpelier. We found an excellent home at Bro. Howdon's.

Friday, Jan. 27th, we left Waterbury for Danville, C. E., by the way of Montreal, where we spent the night. At Rouse's Point, we were inspected by one of the Queen's agents and marked passable. From this place to Montreal is a very level portion of country, like prairie land. We were disappointed in seeing so large a tract of level land in Canada. For some reason, we were looking for hills and mountains covered with very deep snow. The cars took us to the St. Lawrence river, and a four horse sleigh conveyed us across on the ice, a distance of a mile and a half, in the face of a cold wind mingled with snow. At 7 o'clock, P. M., we reached the "Montreal House," registered our name, and then went about the city by gas light, in a snow storm, to get some idea of the place. We soon came across the great Catholic Cathedral that will seat between six and seven thousand people. Seeing a light at the door, we ventured in, by winding ways, to this magnificent structure. The Catholic votaries were continually coming in to say their prayers to the Virgin Mary, or some other dead saint, dipping their finger in holy water and crossing themselves as they departed. We could but admire their devotion, blind as it is, while we abhorred their system of theology that taught them to pray to the souls of dead saints, requesting them to intercede in heaven in their behalf. Yet it is perfectly consistent, if dead men have souls that come back to this world to visit their friends, as the mass of Protestants believe, that we should ask them, as we did when they lived in this world, to pray for us. Why not? If they now visit our earth and return to Jesus in heaven, why may we not send messages by them?

This vast Cathedral is open all night for those who are the children of the "mother of harlots," whose destruction is now near at hand. Notwithstanding she says, "I sit a queen, and am no widow," her day of doom cannot be far off. We left this vast taper-lighted, gloomy building, thankful for the true gospel light, now shining so brilliantly to illumine the pilgrim's pathway to the coming kingdom.

Montreal is a very neat and well built city. The buildings are very fine, and remind one of State St., Boston. It stands upon an elevated island, on the banks of the noble St. Lawrence. It contains some eighty thousand inhabitants, being the largest city in the Canadas, and a place of very extensive business, for its size.

Saturday, 28th, at half past eight o'clock, we started for Danville, crossing the renowned Victoria Bridge, which is some two miles in length, and about sixty feet above the river. It is built of stone and iron, and surpasses every other bridge in the world. It is but a short time since its completion, and is one of the greatest triumphs of mechanic art.

After about four hours ride, we found ourselves very pleasantly situated at the house of Elder J. Porter, who is pastor of the church in this place. He has been very unfortunate, having lost one arm, and the thumb and fore finger of the other hand; and yet, with only three fingers, he writes a good hand, and works at the tin business [illegible] for good in the world. The church in D. has passed through some sore trials, but the Lord has been their helper. We have rarely found people more anxious to hear the word of life than in this place. Their commodious house was filled to its utmost capacity nearly every evening for fifteen successive nights, including three Lord's days. Some listened at the windows, out of doors, and others went away, not being able to endure the cold. A very deep impression has been made in community in favor of the truth. Our brethren came from twelve to sixty miles to the meeting, and we truly had refreshing times from the Lord. Four were converted and baptised. We closed our meetings with the sacrament of the Lord's supper, when between fifty and sixty gathered around the table of the Lord to commemorate the sufferings of our dear Savior. Several of these were from other churches. At the close of the sacrament, we vacated the seats, and thirteen came forward for prayers. It was a solemn and interesting season. Deep conviction is fastened on many minds, and there is an excellent prospect for the church in Danville. We left them rejoicing in the Lord, expecting soon to see the Savior in all his glory.

Given Up.

What is given up? The proposed discussion between the Editor and Eld. W. W. Clayton, of Auburn, N. Y. But you have had one discussion with him.—Yes. But during the debate, Dec. 5th to 8th, at Seneca Falls, now published, Eld. C. endeavored to confound soul and spirit, making them identical. We remarked, the soul is not the subject for discussion now. We then challenged him to discuss the immortality of the soul, naming the 17th of Jan. for the work to begin. No notice was taken of the challenge till several weeks after, when we received an acceptance. Our appointments were then made for Jan. 17th and we changed the time to Feb. 28th, which was accepted by Eld. C. Instead of sending a proposition in harmony with the challenge, confined to the soul, he sent the following: "Man as a fallen being is mortal in his entire nature—body, soul, and spirit—or in all the elements of his constitution."

We objected to this proposition, because, 1, we should be going over the same ground as before, on the spirit, which would not be interesting to the same audience. 2, The statement relative to the spirit was not debateable from our stand-point, as we do not consider the spirit in man's nostrils an living entity, and therefore not proper to say it is mortal. For these reasons, as he wished us to take the lead, we sent the following: "Resolved, That man does not possess an immortal soul that exists as a conscious entity between death and the resurrection." When we sent this resolution, it was not decided to go to Auburn, but the latter place had been named. For this reason, we sent the following, provided we went to A. instead of Seneca Falls. "Resolved, That man does not possess an immortal soul or spirit that exists as a conscious entity between death and the resurrection." As the audience that would assemble at Auburn did not hear the discussion on the spirit, at Seneca Falls, we felt glad to have the whole field open for inspection.

In addition to the foregoing resolution, Eld. C. sent the following, which we accepted: "The kingdom of God, or of God's dear Son, otherwise called in Scripture the kingdom of heaven, was set up or established before the death of the Apostles of Christ."

Eld. Clayton now refuses to discuss the resolution concerning the soul and spirit, Hence we suppose he has come to the wise conclusion, that the Bible will not sustain the opposite position.

If any other one wishes to take his place, he can have the privilege.

The friends will please break up the arrangements already made for our discussion at Auburn.

Landis and Polycarp.

Mr. Landis is a living author, intimately associated with "Doubting Castle," and Polycarp was one of the five "Apostolical Fathers." The other four are Barnabas, Clement, Hermas and Ignatius. We remarked, in one of our examinations of "Doubting Castle," that there was some talk of making Mr. Landis its next President. Mr. Landis says: "Polycarp, when perishing in the flames, declared that he should that day stand in spirit before God."

We will let Eusebius, the oldest church historian, tell what he did say. Polycarp's prayer reads as follows:—

"Father of the well-beloved and blessed Son Jesus Christ, through whom we have received the knowledge of thee. The God of angels and powers, and all creation, and of all the family of the righteous, that live before thee, I bless thee that thou hast thought me worthy of the present day and hour, to have a share in the number of the martyrs and in the cup of Christ, unto the resurrection of eternal life, both of the soul and body, in the incorruptible felicity of the Holy Spirit. Among whom may I be received in thy sight, this day, as a rich and acceptable sacrifice, [illegible] faithful and true God hast prepared, hast revealed and fulfilled. Wherefore, on this account, and for all things I praise thee, I bless thee, I glorify thee, through the eternal high priest, Jesus Christ, thy well-beloved Son. Through whom glory be to thee with him in the Holy Ghost, both now and forever. Amen."

The foregoing is the whole prayer; but we find no such expression as, "I shall this day stand, in spirit, before God." This, Mr. Landis put in his mouth, but we find no proof that Polycarp ever said it. Instead of this he says: "I bless thee that thou hast thought me worthy .... to have a share in the number of the martyrs .... among whom may I be received in thy sight this day, as a rich and acceptable sacrifice." And, next, he would "have a share in the number of the martyrs and in the cup of Christ, unto the RESURRECTION of eternal life, both of the soul and body." This shows most plainly that he believed the whole man to be mortal. How different the language of Polycarp, the last of the "Apostolical Fathers," from that of popular teachers at the present day.

"The Coming Man."

In the Spiritual Age of Jan. 7th, 1860, under the above heading we read the following:

"I believe that God always shows himself at the very moment when all that is human is proved to be insufficient—when man confesses that of himself he is nothing. THE WORLD IS IN THIS STATE AT PRESENT. I believe, therefore, in a Messiah not far distant from our epoch; but in this Messiah I do not see a Christ, who has nothing to add to the wisdom, the virtue and the truth that he has already taught us; but I expect one whom Christ has said should come after him."

Thus we see all classes are expecting, as at the first advent of Christ, that his coming is about to take place. Shakers, Swedenborgians, Spiritualists, and a large number in Protestant churches are looking for a spiritual coming of Christ, instead of the "SAME JESUS" which ascended to heaven. O how they have departed from "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." But this only shows our proximity to the great event of the literal coming of our Savior; for "in the last days" "they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned into fables." The cup of iniquity is evidently about full. Every one should stand prepared to welcome the coming King. The signs are plain and abundant which go to prove that Messiah will soon, VERY SOON, return to our earth in person and set up his everlasting kingdom. The Lord has given us timely warning, so that if we are not ready to meet him, it will be our own fault. How bitter the cup of anguish those must drink, who have seen the light and refused to walk therein. Let every one arise at once, trim his lamp, and prepare to meet the coming Bridegroom.

"Their Demand."

In the Spiritual Age, of Jan. 14th, 1860, a writer who is giving the future of Spritualism, says:

In due time, through the intervention of Spiritualism, these servants of Christ, duly invested with authority from him, will make their demand upon the proprietors of the earth's surface, to yield up their illegitimate rights thereto, cancel their deeds, and submit that God's earth never more be sold or held at a price, nor even the fulness thereof."

The writer says: "To effect this is the mission of Spiritualism." We think "their demand" will not affect many of the Lord's children, as most of them are poor in "this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him."—Jas. 2: 5. Thank the Lord, the time is at hand, when this world will change owners, and rulers. "Our better prospects are brightening." Cheer up, weary pilgrim, we are almost home.

For the Crisis.

Wilton Conference in Iowa.

This meeting was held near Sweetland, in Bro. J. Covell's neighborhood. The weather was very cold, hence the congregation was not large until Sunday. If I should judge from the attention given and the interest manifested, I should say, truth found a lodgement in some hearts, and its fruits would be manifest at no distant day. The brethren seemed to enjoy the meeting, and perhaps found some crumbs that strengthened them.

I saw evidences of the good effect of the preached word on those that are called "outsiders." One man said he had read hundreds of pages on Universalism to satisfy his mind, but one discourse on the end of the wicked got down into his pocket so deep that it brought out a dollar. You can judge how far it got into his heart these hard times. Others, probably, were not far behind him. Some I found on the "fence," but they were leaned so far over on the side of truth they will have to make a great effort to get back. I hope they will show themselves men and stand up for Jesus. I expected to have met Bro F. Douglass at this meeting, and we all felt greatly disappointed in not seeing him.

W. PRATT

☞ To venture upon sin in order to avoid danger, is to sink the ship for fear of [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Waiting for the Beloved.

"The day goeth away; the shadows of the evening are stretched out."—Bible.

For many years I have been expecting the return of Israel's once injured, afflicted and crucified King. When the silvery notes of the clarion of the trembling Low Hampton Farmer fell on my ear; that in all probability the 2300 days would end in 1843, and then Jesus the Conqueror would return; never music like that to my longing heart. Yet he tarried, and there the dates remained, to my mind, words of inspiration. Who dare say nay? In 1854 the gladly solemn sound broke again on my ear; then I caught the strain; to me, it was heavenly melody. Yet my Beloved tarried. Yet those dates remain, and they are to me, dear reader, so many arbitrary measurements of immaculate wisdom, for some specific purpose. But who can definitely tell when they commenced and when they will end? Although I will not undertake it, I will suggest persons that never will be able to do it. A person that ridicules the idea of knowing anything about it, never will; neither will one who is so very prudent as to be always apologizing for once having believed it, but will never be caught in such weakness again; he is not likely to care much about this part of inspiration. Dearly beloved, whether any one will ever be able, by the assisting grace of God, to say concerning those heavenly numerals, as Daniel, the dearly beloved of the Lord, did say concerning the seventy years of Israel's captivity (See Dan. 9 : 2), we must wait to see.

To my mind we are now living in such an exhausted condition of the prophecies, that everything is beginning to assume to my faith a positive definiteness that the Lord must of necessity come very soon. All the outlines of prophecy are complete; the signs in the sun, moon and stars are past; scoffers are bold, and with impunity ridicule the coming of the Just One. The churches are asleep, drugged by the opiates of a "good time coming;" rich, increased in goods, have need of nothing; nations have filled up the cup of national oppression, transgression, iniquity and sin; our own country has filled up the cup of her corruption and oppression, by legislating such oppressive enactments which crush the millions of poor, bleeding, fettered men, women and children in our southern Egypt. God has heard their wail; it has burdened his ear a long time; he has raised up men to plead their cause; the effect has been to rivet their fetters more intensely tight. Neither reason, mercy, humanity, Bible, God, nor anything, can move the hearts of these modern Pharaohs. This much is manifest; they have now had an opportunity to develop their character and fill up the cup of their iniquity. God will now very soon send an Emancipator. Old, monarchial nations filled their cups; God meted out judgement. Papacy filled up her cup; she is doomed, and is fast tottering to her fiery doom, to be consummated when Jesus comes.

The last earthly form of government is running her cup over, and her doom is graven on the page of Holy Writ. She is now foaming and seething like a boiling cauldron, and like ancient Egypt, God is plagueing them. The next step is not the Red Sea, but the lake of brimstone and fire.

O, solemn, sad indeed, the condition of the universal nations of the earth! All the elements are in sad condition. Truly, there is distress and perplexity. Reader, the judgment is definitely near. But oh, what a condition the so-called Adventists are in, with very, very few exceptions.

"The very Bride her portion
And calling hath forgot,
And seeks for ease and comfort,
Where thou, her Lord, art not."

Dear brethren, sisters, and preachers, awake, awake! The Judge is at the door. The dates must end somewhere here. I am expecting the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days will in all probability end this year. The heavenly Bridegroom is near! O, ye humble, despised ones, keep in the strait and narrow way a few days more, and we shall rest forever. Let us watch, pray, keep humble and loving. The night is far spent; the day is at hand. Jesus is coming in very deed, soon. Our eyes shall behold him with all his saints. Truly, my faith embraces the Lord very near.

S. S. BREWER.

South Glastenbury, Ct.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts.

One day, when Autumn came with so noiseless a step, and so pleasant a smile, that we scarcely realized his approach, they told me that Nellie was dead—the happy, sunny-hearted Nellie—playmate of my early childhood—companion of my riper years. Together we conned our first tasks at school, and step by step we walked together, sharing each other's joys and secret thoughts. As time passed, though we ceased to play beneath the "old birch tree"—hard by the "old brown school-house," where a merry group daily assembled—yet our hearts were just as warm and true, as in other days, and we frequently met in our social circles, or visited at home. As a circle of school-mates, we all loved her, and little thought she was so soon to close her eyes upon the loved scenes of home, and friends, even now in the joyous spring-time of existence. But she faded slowly, yet surely; consumption fed upon the youthful form of our Nellie. Daily we watched its fearful progress, which we might not arrest,—still we clung to hope, praying that the cup might pass by, until the light of hope went out. And though we knew she must die, our affections seemed to entwine themselves even more closely about her,—each day served but to endear her to us.

Gently she faded, without a murmur or a feeling of disquietude—when earthly hopes were highest, and earthly prospects brightest. Beautiful she looked, as she slept that last silent sleep—she who so soon was to have been a bride. We robed her in the grave's snowy vestments, placing a wreath of myrtle with white flowers around the fair young head of the bride of Death. Parents and friends, with sorrow too deep for language, gazed for the last time upon those loved features. Then we slowly bore her away, when the summer flowers were fading and the first breath of autumn swept over the plain.

But I believe she will come again from the land of the enemy, and dwell on the new earth, redeemed from sin and death; having upon her head a wreath of fadeless glory, and drinking from that crystal stream which proceeds out of the throne of God and the Lamb forever. O! with what effulgence her immortal robes will shine! as she plucks the fadeless flowers, and the rich clusters from the "Tree of Life"—and the Golden Harp, whose ineffable strains shall swell the glad anthem of unending praise. Will she not for a moment cease the rapturous melody if I—free and unfettered, with the song of deliverance upon my tongue—should be permitted to greet her, whom Death has torn so rudely from my grasp—that the love only budded on earth, may blossom throughout eternity.

Waves of sorrow o'er me roll, but I must not sink beneath them; for while acting a part in the "great drama of life," I must faithfully perform its missions, until the curtain falls which shall forever hide me from the curious crowd, and shut out from my gaze earth's sad, yet wondrously beautiful panorama.

We saw her fade in the morn of life
Like a rose of early bloom;
And when autumn zephyrs came,
We bore her to the tomb.

She faded when we loved her best,
But religion a beaming ray
Lit up her wasted features then,
As she gently passed away.

When she neared the silent river,
her friends upon the shore
Stood weeping and watching for
The pale, pale boatman's oar.

Adieu, she cried, I'm going now
Beyond the reach of pain;
In Eden, fair Eden restored,
Loved ones! meet me again.

T. M. H.

Indian Orchard, Mass., Jan. 6th, '60.

Correspondence.

From H. Munger.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord is reviving his work in Rye. The protracted meeting in this place has resulted in great good to the church. It brought them into working order, which had a blessed effect on sinners and backsliders. I stayed eight days with Bro. Timothy Cole, my old friend. We worked together in perfect unison. He tells me after the first of April he thinks to travel and hold protracted meetings where a door opens to do good. I think if his former Advent friends will give him a call they will find him the same Bro. Cole, still full of the gospel work. Please give him a call.

Rye, N. H.

From A. N. Seymour.

BRO. GRANT:—Through the manifold goodness of our heavenly Father we continue unto this present time, having strong confidence in the promises of God. We have thrust ourselves out into the vineyard of the soon-coming Lord, and have been publishing to the extent of our ability the glorious system of salvation as revealed in the book of God.

In Oct. last, we attended a conference in Genesee Co., Mich. Here is quite a strong and warm-hearted company of christians under the care of Brn. A. F. Servis and Adams, who are efficient and worthy ministers of the cross of Christ; and all are rejoicing in the hope of soon seeing the King in his beauty. Most of this company have been in the Sabbath question, but are now nearly free from its bewildering influence, and doing well for the cause of truth. A church was organized in the place, and a quarterly conference called the Genesee and Oakland quarterly conference. Bro. A. F. Servis was chosen Evangelist to travel in the bounds of the conference and preach the word of life. We hope the church will be willing to sacrifice with him in order that the truth may prevail among the people. Dear brethren, be faithful in this matter. If you can sustain both these brethren in the field, I shall look for a large harvest of souls as the result. Keep humble and work for God with all your hearts. Sow in tears and you shall reap in joy.

Soon after this meeting we went to Liberty Mills, Ind., the home of our dear Bro. and Sr. Watkins, where we were very kindly entertained over one week. Here we gave ten discourses and held some five social meetings. Had a good congregation, and excellent attention was paid to the word preached. Some were found inquiring the way. A church was organized of eleven members, and more stood ready to unite. Bro. James Watkins and Bro. Andrews were chosen officers. Brn. Andrews and Griffin preach to them regulalry, and the cause is doing well, as I have just learned. We were refreshed both spiritually and temporally while among them; and may the God who remembers all acts of mercy bestowed upon his ministers, remember that company of united, warm-hearted believers in the Lord Jesus Christ.

On our way home from Liberty Mills, we were requested by our dear Bro. and Sr. S. A. Chaplin and father at Pierceton, to preach two funeral discourses on the occasion of the death of Bro. Chaplin's mother and two sons, who died of the typhoid fever over one year since, of which you had an account from the pen of Sr. Willard at the time. We preached four times with them. Had a very pleasant interview with Bro. Chaplin's family and with Bro. and Sr. Willard, and others who came in to attend the meetings. We hope some good will result from those meetings, and that those grief-stricken hearts will be comforted by the cheering promises of God.

Jan. 4th, we left our humble home for the quarterly conference at Buchanan. The church in this place numbers some one hundred and twenty, having a comfortable house to worship in; and if they are as faithful, spiritual, self-sacrificing and union-loving as the gospel requires, they can but make a deep impression upon the community around. Their meetings are well attended, and considerable interest is displayed. At the last one we had the pleasure of attending, things seemed to open very favorably for a glorious reformation.

Brn. F. Miller, Jr., P. B. Morgan, D. R. Mansfield and wife, Bro. Lister, Mrs. Seymour and myself, were present to assist in the exercises of the conference. The church at Dayton was represented, numbering some eighteen members. D—— is five miles west of Buchanan; a protracted meeting is now being carried on by Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, and a good reformation is begun. Ten have been added to the church, and more are coming, as I learned last evening, Feb. 7, by Bro. M. The church at Decatur, thirty-five miles east of Buchanan, was represented as numbering some fifteen, with good prospects of additions. This is a newly organized church, and could some one preach to them, more might be brought to acknowledge the power of the gospel. May the Lord send by whom he will to water that small, growing church of God. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield were instrumental in raising up this church, and the one at Dayton, and many have been led to acknowledge the gospel in the place where they live and the region round about, by their effective labors. There were brethren in from Niles, South Bend, Union Mills, Bigelow's Mills, and other places, who take a deep interest in the cause. The number at the conference at Buchanan was about one hundred and seventy-five.

On Wednesday morning we left Buchanan for the next quarterly meeting in Laporte District, appointed at Kingsbury. In consequence of some mismanagement in reference to the meeting, our spirits were troubled, and we did not know but the meeting would prove a failure; but the trial of mind passed away, and the people turned out nobly. The last day of the conference was one of considerable interest. We should have continued the meeting if we had not engaged to be at Plymouth the following Tuesday evening. Bro. Mansfield was with us part of the time.

Bro. P. B. Morgan has been preaching at Kingsbury, Stilwell Prairie and Union Mills, for the year past, and the prospect is that he will continue another year. The church are unanimous in retaining him. His efforts have been blessed of God the past year. Some thirty have united with the church at Union Mills, twenty by baptism, and ten who have been reclaimed. He has organized a church on Stilwell Prairie, numbering some thirty or forty members, twenty by baptism. About sixty have identified themselves with the body of Christ within two or three months past in that section of country. The society at Stilwell are about to build them a church; some $600 have already been subscribed for that purpose. The church in this region have sacrificed much first and last for the promotion of truth, and yet they are doing, battling valiantly for the truth. May the Lord abundantly reward them for all their toil, not only here, but in the world to come with eternal glory.

On Tuesday evening, we commenced a series of meetings some five miles south of Plymouth. Here the truth has been preached for a number of years by various brethren; and there are about one hundred who cherish the faith in the community. We preached to them twelve times. The house was crowded to its utmost capacity. Some evenings the windows were raised, and quite a number stood out of doors at the windows in the cold, and listened to the word preached. Two manifested a desire to become christians, and one put on Christ in baptism. We had the pleasure of forming a very agreeable acquaintance with Eld. Barnhill and family.

Leaving this place we came to Gilead, Mich., where we stayed one week. Here the truth is getting hold of many minds, and the prospect is fair for the truth to spread. One put on Christ in baptism, and a number more will do so soon.

Feb. 7th, 1860.

From M. Greenough.

BRO. GRANT:—I write to inform my brethren and sisters that I am still trying to stem the current of opposition. I believe Jesus will come and will not tarry, and will change our vile bodies, and fashion them like his own glorious body, and we forever be with the Lord in the earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. I am laboring in the Temperance cause with my pen and with what talents God has endowed me. I humbly trust I have not labored in vain in the Lord.

I have written a lecture on Temperance. It will cost to get it printed from seventeen to twenty dollars. It will contain eighteen to twenty pages, pamphlet form. I would humbly ask my dear brothers and sisters, and all philanthropic persons to assist me getting the lecture printed. It ought to be in the hands of every family. I am poor as to this world's goods—have not money to have my lecture printed. Any one who feels free to promote the glory of God and do good to their fellow creatures, and cast in their mite to promote the temperance reform, I humbly trust God will recompense them at the resurrection of the just. I shall have the lecture printed as soon as I get the amount of ten dollars subscribed, and then sell books enough to pay the remainder for printing.

I will send one dozen tracts for one dollar free of postage, to one address. Single copies ten cents. Direct to Moses Greenough, North Edgecomb, Lincoln County, Maine.

Edgecomb, Feb. 12th, 1860.

From Sr. M. Mathews.

BRN. AND SRS.:—The long-wished for day has come. I have seen BRO. GRANT, our Editor. God has been pleased to bless his labors here. We feel truly that God will answer prayer. Then let us pray evermore. Backsliders have been reclaimed, the faithful few encouraged, and made strong in their holy faith. We feel bound to live Jesus, right out, Monday, Tuesday, Sunday and all. We want the Kingdom.

Our brother faithfully showed us the way to glory. It is a narrow way, and yet bright, joyful and heavenly; and we are desirous of traveling in that path, with Jesus for our Captain. Bless God, we believe our trials are most over, and that the reward will repay us well. O let us be faithful just a little longer. The crown is near. Jesus will soon come. How happy, when we stand around the great white throne praising our Creator, face to face, in the society of all the good of all ages, climes and nations! Let us attain unto this great salvation. Let us gain the Kingdom. It will pay us well to take up the cross and follow Jesus. Amen and amen.

Canada East.

For the Crisis.

The Origin of Christ.

"Our Lord sprang out of the tribe of Judah." But does that prove that he had no previous existence? Let the prophet of God answer this question: "But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of JUDAH, yet out of thee shall HE COME FORTH unto ME that is to be RULER in ISRAEL; whose GOINGS FORTH HAVE BEEN FROM OF OLD, from EVERLASTING." (Margin, FROM THE DAYS OF ETERNITY.)—Micah 5 : 2.

H. L. H.

For the Crisis.

"That the Spirit may be Saved."

"To deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."—1 Cor. 5 : 5.

This text is often quoted to prove that the spirit, abstractly considered, is to be saved; or, in other words, that the spirit, without the body, possesses consciousness, and is capable of being saved in that separate state. But this conclusion cannot be reasonably deduced from the text, for it does not read, "That the spirit may be saved at death," but, "in the day of the Lord Jesus;" and in that day the spirit and body are to exist in an undivided state, as our opponents admit; hence, the whole man is to be saved at one and the same time. If the spirit is not saved till the day of the Lord Jesus," it cannot be saved in a separate state, for body and spirit will then be together; hence, the text contains no proof of the separate existence of the spirit.

"Deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh,"—that is, that such an one may be chastised by wasting disease, and thus be brought to repentance. Anciently one was bound by Satan eighteen years, and Job was given over "to Satan for the destruction of the flesh," though in this case it was not done to produce repentance. Sickness, which is indirectly an agent of Satan, produces "the destruction of the flesh," and frequently arouses men to see their lost condition, and leads them to timely repentance, that they may "be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

The term "spirit," is here undoubtedly put by synecdoche to signify person, that is, a part is used as a synonym of the whole, as in other instances.

W. SHELDON.

Castle Rock, Dakota Co., Minn.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 4th inst.]

The London News says: "The stillness of patient expectation which has succeeded to the clang of arms in Northern Italy is not the stillness of sleep—the image of death. Rather is it the mysterious stillness of a city between two earthquakes, or the trembling stillness of the snow at that season of sudden change, when at night men shut the cruel winter out, and lo! in the morning all heaven and earth are exulting in the freshness of awakened spring."

The ratification of the new commercial treaty would be exchanged at Paris on the 4th.

Dr. Todd, the eminent physician and physiologist, was dead.

FRANCE.

It is now formally determined that no intervention shall take place in Italy, and that the people shall be left to their own devices. It is therefore agreed that the people of Central Italy shall dispose of themselves. Fresh elections are to be held, and the Assemblies resulting from popular choice are free to decree the annexation of their constituents to the Sardinian kingdom.

The French troops are to be withdrawn from Northern Italy and from Rome at an early opportunity. It is no secret that Austria, having regard to the Western allies, and her own serious difficulties, has given up all hope of retrieving her position and influence in Italy, and not only sheathes her sword, but puts it aside. An attempt will be made to induce her to grant reforms to Venetia, of which she is still left mistress.

The Post adds that the stubbornness of the Pope bids fair to deprive him of the whole of his temporalities. Naples groans under a heavier tyranny than ever, and the cries of Venice are loud enough to strike our ears, however we may shut them. The Italian question, then, being likely to take still larger proportions, our best, safest and most beneficent policy is that line of strict duty by which, this time last year, we might have prevented war, and by which we may now guarantee the peace of Europe. That line—No foreign interventions, but Italy for the Italians!

An affray occurred at Ancona, between the Papal Chasseurs and Artillerymen on one side, and the gens d'armes on the other. Three hundred of the former were said to be under arrest, of whom about forty were wounded.

The Mazzini party was said to be active at Rome.

AUSTRIA.

Kossuth had suddenly disappeared from London, and it was thought he had gone to Hungary.

And address of the Hungarian Protestant Association says the national movement will resemble an avalanche. Hungary will detach herself from Austria at the first opportunity.

Austria is said to be directing more troops towards the Tyrol, Venice, and Hungary.

The Globe's Paris correspondent says it was generally understood that France and England were about to make a joint summons to Austria to desist from sending troops into the marshes of Ancona, and to evacuate Venetia at the earliest period, and accept such indemnity as Italy is now ready to offer.

Married.

In Bridgeport, Ct., Dec. 24th, 1859, by Eld. Amos Benedict, Bro. EDWARD KELLY and Sr. M. J. OLMSTED.

Editorial Notices.

☞ We receive some communications that we cannot publish. Others we have which must necessarily be delayed. All cannot be first. Be patient, if your articles do not appear as soon as you expect.

And we would repeat here, what we have said before, we cannot return communications. We hope this will be understood; and a little reflection will show the reasonableness of the rule by which we would abide.

☞ We will fill orders for "Reasons for my Hope," as soon as we get our expected supply from the publisher, H. L. H. We have been waiting for them some time.

Notices, &c.

Notice.

The Advent brethren in Lynn (Dye house) wish to give notice through the Crisis, that we have removed our meeting into the City, and at present the desk is supplied by Bro. Whitney. By request of the brethren,

H. CHASE.

Conference.

There will be a Conference held at Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa., commencing Tuesday, at 1 P M., and continue over the following Sunday. Bro. J. B. Cook, of Rochester, will give a course of lectures on Bro. Stevenson's Chart. Bro Ongley, of Canada, will also be present and preach part of the time.

Come, brethren and sisters, come to the meeting. Provisions will be made for man and beast.

JOHN T. ONGLEY.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Daniel E. Jones will preach in Cheshire Street, Ct., Feb. 26th.

G. MORGAN.

APPOINTMENTS FOR E. KILLINGLY, CT.

Eld. Roberts............Feb. 25th
Eld. D. A. Jones............March 4th and 11th
Eld. H. Hopkins............March 18th
Eld. H. F. Carpenter............March 25th

Meetings commence at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Brethren wishing to correspond with the church at East Killingly, Ct., will direct their letters to Warren Taft.

J. HEMENWAY.

Providence permitting, I will preach at Exeter, N. H., Sabbath, Feb. 26th. Commence meetings at North Searsport, Me., March 2d, where Bro. Nichols may appoint. Will continue meetings for two or three weeks, as may be duty.

J. HEMENWAY.

The Lord willing, Bro. George Champlin will preach in East Boston on the last Sabbath in Feb., and the first in March.

I have arranged to be in Lowell on the above days.

Bro. Munger will notice this arrangement.

Bro. J. K. Bellows is requested to withdraw his appointment at East Boston.

J. S. WHITE.

I will preach as follows:—

Lawrence, Mass............Feb. 26th
Exeter, N. H............Feb. 29th
Dover (Conference)............March 1st
Worcester, Mass............Sunday, March 11th
Providence, R. I............Sunday, March 18th
Danielsonville, Conn............March 23d
and over the following Sunday
Warwick Plain, R. I............Sunday, March 31st

S. W. BISHOP.

Bro. J. K. Bellows will meet with the brethren in Plymouth, Mass............Feb. 26th
Lynn, (Dye House)............March 4th

J. B. Cook will preach, if the Lord will, in
Meadville, Pa............Feb. 24th and 26th
Blooming Valley............Feb. 29th

APPOINTMENTS FOR DANIELSONVILLE, CT.

D. T. Taylor............Sunday, Feb. 26th
A. Higgins of Palmer............March 5th
Hiram Munger............March 12th

In behalf of the Church,
H. F. CARPENTER.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

L. R. Gilman.—Think it was received and forwarded to H. L. H. We do not credit such in the paper.

W. S. O.—Received. Will do the best we can.

F. Burr.—Keep them. Forward their value, when received.

"An Invalid."—Cannot give you any information respecting the physician named.

Mrs. E. R. Lyon.—The treatment at "Our Home" is Hydropathic. The address—Danville, N. Y.

Cash Receipts.

J C Freeman 234, $1.28; M A Small 232, 75 cts; G Bangs 61 cts, M L Clark 33 copies, 260, $20.00; Eld. J Hemenway for E Killingly brn., 21 copies, 256, $16.75, D T Miller 260, $2.36, Mrs. M Lewis 248, 70 cts.

A Friend 243, C H Bradford 244, K Downs 243, E H Abbott 243, N Banning 243,—50 cents each.

Mrs. M A Wasgott 256, M M Miller 256, M Webster 234, S Weston 260, G Smith 256, C Railsback 256, H Holmes 260, D J Blake 245, J S Clarke 260, N Cargell 256, M Tewksbury 256, A Waterman 260, T Waters 234, I Quimby 241, E R Wormwood 252, S F Hubbard 252, F Bates, Jr., 260, C H Dagle 254, O Rawson 253, W J Hale 256, J C Lambert 234, J Herod 256,—$1.00 each.

Mrs. H White 281, Mrs. J C Gardner 264, J W Merrill 263, A Cudworth 260, Miss E M Morris 282, Dr. J Narramore 260, E P Robinson, I Atkins 234,—$2.00 each.

G W Stetson 253, D N Stocking 260,—$3.00 each.

Books and Tracts.

Eld. D S Lyons $2.00, D R Mansfield $6.00, R R York $1.72, H Fenn 36 cts, E Tyler 57 cts, E A Warren 9 cts, W Lewis $2.00, J E Healey $3.00, W L Stroud 80 cts, M Russel $6.36, I Quimby 28 cts, S F Hubbard 6 cts, Eld. J Porter $10 80, J Gregory 81 cts, A R White $1.00, A Sister $1.00, Eld. J. Hemenway 25 cts, H Page 39 cts, Eld. H F Carpenter $4.70, P Sawyer $1.00, G W Rathburn $1.00, W H Simmons $1.00, R Chase $1.56, Jos. Parry $6.00, S Whiting 6 cts.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

Discussion of the Doctrine of The State of the Dead and Punishment of the Wicked; between W. W. Clayton and M. Grant. Price 25 cts; postage 8 cts. Bound 40 cts; postage 9 cts. 1-4th off per dozen.

Human Destiny. A Discussion: Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all? By C. F. Hudson and Sylvanus Cobb. 478 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00 post paid.

The Nature of Faith, and the Evils of Sect. By the late W. H. Starr. With a Memoir and Notes by C. F. Hudson. 289 pp. 12mo. Price 50 cts. Postage 16 cts.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen. 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuke as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 8 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $2.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 6 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $1.25.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 3 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $2.00 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Sheppard.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price [illegible]

Life [illegible] Munger, including many singular circumstances, [illegible] ted by himself. This is a very interesting work and will be read with interest by all. Price 60 cts.—postage 10 cents.

Words of Warning, 8 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them [illegible] than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By Wm. Eliot B. SEYMOUR. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $3.00 per hundred,—6 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents [illegible]

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $2.00 per hundred; 3 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or, the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 3 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 8 cts.—postage 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms: or, the kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $6.00 per hundred, 90 cts. per dozen, 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. S. BROOKS, No. 8 Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Waite, Warwick, R. I.:—

The Harp, by Elder Himes; 200 Stories for Children; Satanic Delusion; Bible Hell; Great Controversy.

We have also on hand the following

PUBLICATIONS

of

H. L. HASTINGS,

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor; edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 420 pp. $1 00

The Great Controversy between God and Man: its Origin, Progress, and End; by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 167 pp. [illegible]

Reasons for My Hope, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 129 pp. Paper 30 cts. Cloth 50

Forever with the Lord, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing. 00

Earth's Destiny, as revealed in Scripture, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing. 00

Tracts on Prophecy, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 60

Tracts on Immortality, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 60

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith, by Robert Patterson. 12mo. 320 pp. 75

The Infidel's Fate, by a converted Infidel. Cloth gilt 25

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, by Wm. Ramsey, D. D., edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 120 pp. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth 40

Pauline Theology; The Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment, as Taught by Paul by H. L. Hastings. 84 pp. Paper, 15

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life, by H. L. Hastings. Paper. 67 pp. 10

Tracts of 24 Pages.—3 cts. single; $1 for 1600 pages—by mail 1200 pp. for $1

The Church not in Darkness,	by H. L. H.	pages	24
The Three Worlds,	by H. L. H.	"	24
The Last Days,	by H. L. H.	"	24
Plain Truths,	by H. L. H.	"	28
Will all men be saved?	by H. L. H.	"	24
Voice of Warning	by D. T. Taylor	"	36
The New Heavens and Earth,	"	"	24
Ancient Landmarks, 6 Nos.		"	24
Olive Leaves, 9 Nos.	by H. L. H. &c.	"	36
Important Questions, 9 Nos.	by H. L. H.	"	36
State of the Dead,	by John Milton	"	36
The Intermediate State,	by H. G.	"	24
Destiny of the Wicked	by H. L. R.	"	12
Future Punishment,	by H. G.	"	12
The Key of Truth,	by W. S.	"	17
Man's Future State	"	"	12
Letter on Dress	by Adoniram Judson	"	12
The Day of Judgment,	by St. Cyril	"	12
Outline of the Coast,	by A Voyager	"	8
The Night Cometh,	by John Adey	"	8
Gems, 9 Nos. poetry,	by H. L. H.	"	12
One Thing		"	8
The Coming and Kingdom of Christ,		"	4
The Duration of the Earth by A. Clarke		"	4
Hope and Duty of the Church, M. Henry		"	4
The Restitution,	by St. Cyril	"	4
A Warning Voice,	by Cotton Mather	"	4
Loving Christ's Appearing,	by Baxter	"	4
Little Children, Love one another		"	4
The One Resting Place,	by H. Bonar	"	4
My Friend,	by H. L. H.	"	4
Abundant Grace	"	"	4
Wondrous Love	"	"	4
Go in Peace	"	"	4
Living Water	"	"	4
The Banner	Anonymous	"	4
The Blood of Christ	"	"	4
Are you a Christian?	by H. L. H.	"	4
Why not Now?	"	"	4
Are you Pardoned?	"	"	4
Are you Safe?	"	"	4
Are you Saved?	"	"	4
Do you Pray?	"	"	4
When Will He Come?	by J. C. Ryle	"	4
Statement of Account	by H. L. H.	"	4
Man in Death	By Bishop Law	"	4
Forty Questions on Immortality		"	4

SCRIPTURE SEARCHERS.

No. 1. The Destiny of the Wicked	"	1
No. 2. The State of the Dead	"	1
No. 3. The Coming of Jesus	"	1
No. 4. The Resurrection	"	1
No. 5. Plain Truths	"	1
No. 6. The Judgment	"	1

POETRY.

Brother, Shall we Meet?	by H. L. H.	"	2
Sister, Shall we Meet?	"	"	2
Stand up for Jesus!	"	"	1
The Harvest is Past	"	"	1
Beyond!	"	"	1
At Rest!	"	"	1
We would see Jesus	by Josephine	"	1
A Little While	by J. G.	"	1

LEAFLETS FOR LETTERS.

Life Insurance, Envelope Size	H. L. H.	"	12
Home	"	"	[illegible]
Lost, Lost	"	"	[illegible]
Peace in Christ	"	"	[illegible]
Worth Knowing	"	"	[illegible]
All things are Yours	"	"	[illegible]
Now	"	"	[illegible]
Assurance	"	"	[illegible]
About God	"	"	[illegible]

THE foregoing Books and Pamphlets will be sent by mail, postage paid, upon the receipt of the amount of their respective prices. Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons who send $10, with the order, shall receive $12. worth of books at the retail prices. TRACTS are sent by mail, 1200 pages, on the receipt of a dollar. When sent by express, or, at the expense of the buyer, 1600 pages will be sent for one dollar. Terms cash. Persons who [illegible] can obtain Four hundred tracts, of four pages each, for $1. These may be widely distributed, and [illegible] the way for religious conversation. Persons may thus be a blessing to those around them. The poor can have any of these tracts sent to them free, by remitting stamps to pay the postage. Ministers can have specimen copies of the tracts and publications sent free. All letters, orders, and remittances should be addressed to the Publisher,

H. L. HASTINGS, 43 Weybosset St., Providence, R. I.

January, 1860.

☞ These publications can be obtained in Boston of Miles Grant, 167 Hanover st.; New York: G. W. Young, 138 William st.; Philadelphia: [illegible] Porter, 126 [illegible], and they can be ordered of the publisher through all booksellers.

[illegible] Bibles of the British and Foreign Bible Society, [illegible] references between the verses, $1.50 to $[illegible]; Nonpareil, marginal references, [illegible] between verses, $1.20 to $2.10. Pearl, references between verses, $1.75. [illegible] to $1.75. Diamond, [illegible], 75 cts. to $1. Bindings, Roan, Calf and Morocco; these make the difference in price.

Original Communications.

For the Crisis.

I'm Glad There's a Rest.

I'm glad there's a rest for the weary ones,
Who wander in bitterness now,
Who tread with the rugged and thorny way,
And sorrow's deep lines on their brow,
I'm glad there's a rest for that pilgrim band,
Where tears shall be seen never more,
Where trials and temptings, and cares are past,
And the days of their mourning are o'er.

I'm glad we shall meet our dear ones again,
Who sleep in the cold, silent tomb;
We laid them to rest while our tears fell fast,
But with shouting and gladness they'll come.
We'll meet them again in that deathless world,
No more of disease they complain;
The dwellers in that happy land say not,
"I am sick, I am weary of pain."

I'm glad there's a crown for the meek of earth,
A throne for the down-trodden one;
A home where the long-scattered saints shall meet,
The struggle—the conflict all done.
They'll part never more when they're gathered there,
Cruel death will no longer destroy;
But all shall be glad, and their songs unite
In anthems of triumph and joy.

I'm glad the long night, with its clouds and tears,
Is now swiftly wearing away;
And soon we'll discern the bright glowing beams
That herald the glorious day.
The signs we have passed, and the midnight watch—
We know soon the vision will speak;
A few faithful watchmen declare the truth,
A few to the prophecy seek.

Oh, hasten! dear Savior, we long to go,
Earth's pleasures no longer allure;
Our hearts have grown weary with hope deferred,
But patiently still we'll endure.
O! help us to stand with the armor on,
Nor faint when the rest is so near;
But with lamps brightly burning, to watch and wait
Till thou shalt in glory appear. S. M. H.
Portsmouth, N. H.

For the Crisis.

Our Statistical Report.

PREPARED BY DANIEL T. TAYLOR.

No. 7.

I. Church order, usage and forms. The American Adventists have no Archbishops, Bishops, or even presiding Elders. All our ministry are peers. All our churches are congregational in their form of government. Few with which I am acquainted, recognize any difference between Bishops, Elders, and Presbytery in the New Testament, save that the first and third implies office, and the other, age. All our ministers address each other by the title of Elder, or V. D. M. All our churches are independent and democratic in forms and usage. The Lord's Supper is attended to once a month, where churches are regularly established; in other places, not so often; in some places it is too much neglected. Many Conferences are organized; numerous church edifices are being erected; Sunday schools are attended to when there are enough to form them. Like all other christian bodies we have prayer and conference meetings, and in many places frequent class-meetings, as do the Methodists. These are found very beneficial to the spiritual welfare of the church. As the bee gathers sweet from every source, so do we truth from all other orders. In the freedom and joyousness of our worship, we are Methodistical, in our church government we are Congregational, in our practicing only immersion as the true form of baptism, we are like the Baptists, in dwelling much on the Advent, we resemble the Episcopalians and Moravians, in the denial of endless misery for lost men, we are negatively Universalists, in affirming utter destruction as many do we are very unlike the last named and nearer to many of the Christians, and some Unitarians. We have revivals, and practice the usual divine methods to promote them. We believe in the conversion of sinners to God, and strive by all means to accomplish this great good. We have articles of association, brotherly covenants and forms of unity, but in general no creed save the Bible.

II. Are we orthodox? So far as this means soundness in our religious faith we, of course, aim to be so, although often denied the term. I am not the apologist for every hobby or notion cherished by some among us, any more than I am for such hobbies and notions as are frequently entertained among other religious orders; but I have yet to learn that in general, as a body, we are either heterodox or heretical. Certainly we are not because we look for Christ, or because we immerse, or because we worship on Saturday or on Sunday. As to the question of man's natural immortality, which, in the main, we do not hold to, that is still at issue. If to deny the immortality of the soul is heresy, then was the early church and Martin Luther heretical. And heretics too are fast multiplying among every sect in America, for I know of clergymen and others, of the Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist, etc., etc., orders, who repudiate the view of man's immortality and hold to life only in Christ. But we will be patient under the charge, for the case is fast going to the jury and the Judge is at the door. So too of the unchristian charge of [illegible], which the American Tract Society has,—ignoring the sin of slavery—seen fit to lay at our doors. We deny the charge in every instance, and confident of having God's truth can afford to be generous and patient with all men. I stop not here for disputation. To my brethren, I would say, seek for soundness and a firm and healthy position on all great questions in dispute. Discriminate between theory and doctrine. Steadfastly defend only God's truth.

III. Are we evangelical? To be evangelical is simply to have "the faith that saves." I trust all who look for the Lord will see to it that we have that faith. Adventists all hold to regeneration of heart by the gospel and Spirit of God, so far as I know them. All believe in Christ as the only Savior from sin. None degrade him to the mere man or seek to rob him of his divinity, although all do not believe that "he is the very and eternal God," for a large class believe with the Christians in this respect who hold him to be the Son of God. But here as in other points we differ; some being Trinitarian in sentiment. Still all believe that Christ's name and blood is the only passport to immortal life in the soon-coming, eternal kingdom. Let us see to it, I repeat, that we have the faith that saves. Let us heartily believe the gospel.

IV. Union. I have prepared and written these articles from an unsectarian standpoint, and with a catholic and christian eye to the welfare of all parties. If in this I have failed, it is an error of the head, for my heart is right toward all in America who love the appearing of Jesus. Enough has been said to furnish an affirmative reply to the question—"Are we a people?" I think that with our five or six hundred preachers, fifty or sixty thousand church members, half dozen periodicals, and millions of publications, we are a people. And we are old enough and strong enough to make our mark on community for good, providing we have not done it already. To do so we ought firmly to rely on the great Head of the church, and furthermore be united in our work, as far as possible, and stop all bickerings, schisms, and foolish quarreling. This is the rock on which others have split—let us avoid it. Let the South cry disunion as much as she please, and let others do the quarreling; we have enough of world, devil, and backslidden christendom to fight, without fighting among ourselves. With our faith and hope we ought to be a loving, patient, and fraternal people.

The Lord cometh! is a war cry that should [illegible] us to be one. I do not hope for unity in doctrinal opinion or views on prophecy. With Charles Beecher, the only union I ever hope to arrive at this side the resurrection of the just is, the unity of thinking differently in love. With Dr. Cumming, I am of opinion that after all it is not our differences that create the trouble, but the unhappy way and spirit in which we hold these differences. This unhappy, bigoted, intolerant spirit is the bane of our success, the bitter in our cup of love. "Believe as I do, do as I do, or you are a heretic and will be damned," is the insane cry of too many who look for the Lord, as well as of too many who do not. Nor do I ignore the value and importance of truth while uttering my solemn protest against all excommunication for opinion's sake whether voluntary or involuntary. With Wesley, I believe we may live and die without the knowledge of very many truths and be welcomed by the angels to the city of God, but if we have not love what will it avail us? We shall soon see eye to eye. With Dr. Tyng, I believe there is a morning coming when all sects and all classes of Adventists will stand on a common platform, and with him I affirm that to the church of that morning I belong. I will be the partizan agent of no religious clique, but God's man for all—a minister at large. Meantime, we who have at least four sides to our house, should let brotherly love continue in the varied family within.

If we cannot agree to agree, then let us agree to disagree. Anyway let us agree and not fight. If two churches in one place cannot agree to worship as one, then let them be fraternal in their separation, and harmoniously apart, work for the one great cause, viz: the coming and kingdom of Jesus. If two papers in one place cannot agree in doctrinal views concerning God's word, let them still labor for this great cause, differing kindly and in love, never setting the bad example of a quarrel before the body at large. Cunning, unsanctified and ambitious editors have the power to do great mischief to the church. They are but men, they need our prayers, they should profit by kind and wise counsel, and in their responsible office should be men of purity and peace. There can be discussion without wrangling, unity without uniformity, and differing without hatred, if Christ be formed within.

We should avoid groundless jealousies, for they tend but to evil. Avoid sectarian tests as one would rank poison. Because I do not keep the seventh day as divinely holy, do not believe the thousand Apocalyptical years are in the past, do not believe the unrighteous will have no resurrection, do not believe there will be probation after Christ comes, do not hold to endless pain for lost men, etc., am I therefore to be disfellowshiped and unchristianized? Nay, verily—hands off! Neither because my honest brother does hold to these things may I cast him off, for christianity is not to be thus tested. If he be Christ's I accord him full liberty of opinion,—let him do so to me. I accord to him honesty,—let him not suspect me, for love thinketh no evil of a brother. Let all who look for the Lord [illegible] sectarianism, eschew all human tests, practice forbearance, exercise charity one with another, live holy lives, and see to it that the unsympathizing world, watching but for our ruin, is constrained to exclaim, as they look upon us, Behold, how these christians love one another!

Let none seek to be greatest; for the Lord cometh. Let none strive for the mastery; for the Lord cometh. Let none do the unchristian work of exciting prejudice against another because of a difference in belief to the injury of his influence; for the Lord cometh. The truly heretical and unsound will be duly discovered. I leave them with God, to plead for union and fraternity, so far as it is attainable in this poor, frail, human life. I plead for charity, where there is any chance to exercise it. I plead for concerted action on the great, first question—the Maranatha.

I would like to see five hundred ministers meet in solemn conference to prayerfully discuss this magnificent theme. It may never be, but state conferences could be held, and all in each state thus convene and with Maranatha for the motto, be one in purpose and in power. In union and love there is strength, in division and hatred there is weakness and ruin. None need surrender his manhood or prostrate the conscientious and intelligent sense of right to thus be one. One in the vast and noble effort to rouse a sleeping church and prepare a careless and wicked world to meet the Judge.

Thus much for united action. I could say more, but why need I? Are we wise? And shall not a word to the wise be sufficient? In all probability in less than eight years the Master will be here, and if we mar half the good we might do by unholily persisting in the evils I have here pointed out, how shall we answer for it at His bar? In the name of a common and erring humanity, in the name of the ever blessed and soon-coming King,—for the sake of an almost faithless christendom, for the sake of a perishing race of sinners, for the sake of the best cause under the sun, and by all that is good, and true, and eternal, I make this appeal!

Here ends my Report and my Task.

For the Crisis.

Dialogue between Brother Truman and Brother Unstable.

T. Well, Brother Unstable, I did not see you at our meeting last Sunday. Were you sick, or were you examining the weathercock, to see which way the popular wind blew?

U. Well, Brother Truman, I attended our Church last Sunday, and our minister preached a long sermon on the immortality of the soul, and the conscious state of the dead; and we had a long story about the spiritual reign of Christ on earth, when all the world would be converted, and all nations would become christians, just as we are now in these United States.

T. You must have had a rich feast, to have the Bible hashed up in this way to suit the perverted appetite of a degenerate age, who have turned away their ears from the truth, and are turned to fables. You do not believe in these heathen notions and human traditions that make the word of God of none effect. Why, then, do you still feed on husks, when you can enjoy the sincere milk of the word and grow thereby?

U. You are rather hard on me, Brother Truman, but I think I have a good reason for the course I pursue. I always come to hear Brother G—— preach when we have no service at our own place, and sometimes steal away from our own meetings; and I must say that these stolen waters are sweet, and I have no doubt they do me good. Yet I think I can do the most good just now by remaining where I am. Our people know my views and I may, by degrees, win them over to embrace the truth. You know "all things are lawful, but all things are not expedient."

T. Ah! Brother Unstable, I fear your precious doctrine of expediency will lead you into Doubting Castle, if you persist in following such a system. It is dangerous to trifle with God's sacred truth. He has given you to see that the popular preaching of the present day is contrary to God's word, dishonorable to his character as a Being of infinite mercy and love, and that it is utterly subversive of the christian's hope of eternal life by a resurrection from the dead, and the speedy coming of the Son of God to reign in person on the renovated earth.

How can you, then, by word or deed, or by your presence or purse, give any countenance or support to those whom you know are using every effort in their power to destroy and overthrow what you believe to be the truth of God?

U. Brother Truman, you are altogether too strenuous in this matter; you make mountains of mole-hills; and the ultra measures you recommend, by precept and example, would only widen the breach that exists in the present day between you and the popular churches. I want to harmonize matters a little, and see if something can not be done to soften the prejudices of the people against these unpopular truths; you know "Rome was not built in a day," and people must be humored and coaxed a little out of their prejudices and preconceived opinions.

T. Now, Brother Unstable, how long do you think it would take to convince the popular churches of their error, if all who believe as we do were to follow your example, and try to compromise matters, by having our interest divided between truth and error? To my mind, Christ does not want such advocates as these. He says no man can serve two masters; and he that is not with me, is against me. Do you think your brethren in the church, who know your real sentiments, (if you have had honesty enough to confess them,) think any more of you for the vacillating course you are taking? I think not. Most men love honesty in others if not in themselves; and a double-minded man can retain the confidence of no party, either in the world, or the church. Your brethren may flatter you a little, to keep you in good humor; but their love, depend upon it, is but skin deep, and perhaps you may live to see it as I have done; for I tried the experiment to my own satisfaction; and henceforth, by God's help, I make no compromise with the unfruitful works of darkness, but mean to espouse what I believe to be the cause of truth, and leave all consequences in the hands of Him who can make the wrath of man to praise Him.

U. All you say may be true, for all I know, if the cause were of so much importance as you would represent it. But I think, as I said before, you make too much of it. The doctrines of the final destruction of the wicked, the sleep of the dead till the resurrection, and the personal reign of Christ on the throne of David, are, I believe, clearly revealed in the Bible; and I have no doubt that many, by believing in them, have been strengthened and established in the truth of God's word. I have seen proof of this at your social meetings, and have myself experienced a saving power and influence there, that I have not been able to find amidst the cold and worldly professors of the present day.

But, after all, I do not consider these doctrines as absolutely necessary to salvation; many great and good men have lived and died without a knowledge of them, and will, I doubt not, at the resurrection of the just, enter the kingdom of God and obtain eternal life. Why, then, should we place so much stress on truths of no essential importance, and make the narrow way still more strait than God has made it?

T. Brother Unstable, somehow or other I do not like to hear people talk about "non-essential truths"—for this certainly implies non-essential errors, and I believe God's word gives no countenance to any doctrine or practice that is not true. We are told to buy the truth, and sell it not. Is there any truth of God's word that will cost more than it comes to? Will you point me out one? When we get off the track of truth, however small may be the deviation at first, it will eventually lead us to destruction. As for those who have never been enlightened to see the truths we have received, they will only be accountable for the light received. This is not the subject on hand.

In these last days, God has restored to us the light which has so long been obscured in a mist of darkness and superstition. Is it a matter of indifference to us whether we receive or reject it? Can you and I be safe in hiding away or burying in the earth a talent God has given us to profit withal?

Are we to dictate to the Savior what gifts we are to receive and what to reject? I believe the blessed truths God has revealed to us in these last days are in an especial manner fitted for the times in which we live; and if so, they are all important, and are of vital interest to the church and to the world. For instance; the unconscious state of the dead till the resurrection is the only doctrine that can effectually overthrow the popular errors of the day, that are leading such multitudes into all the wild theories of Spiritualism. It is revived at this time for this special purpose, and no man is safe and secure from falling into this fatal error, whose faith is not built on this adamantine rock, "the dead know not anything." The moment this truth is disputed, the door is opened for the whole system of Spiritualism, invocation of saints, purgatory and hell torments; and no man can shut it. The orthodox faith has no more power to overthrow Spiritualism, than if we should attempt to quench a fire by throwing alcohol on it; it only makes bad worse; "the fat is in the fire."

Those who, in these times of trial, shun to declare the whole counsel of God, are ashamed or afraid to confess the truth, and to spread the light God has given them, will, I fear, have a sad account to give when the Master comes, and we are all called upon to give an account of our stewardship. To whom much is given, much is required. Whatever may be the condemnation of others on whom the light of truth has now dawned, we shall be without excuse if the fear of man, and the love of popularity, or any other excuse, has sealed up our mouths, and closed our hands and our pockets, at the very time when God requires us to let our light shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father who is in heaven.

I fear that the same language that Christ applied to the Jews in his day, will be but too applicable to many in our day, "Woe unto thee, Chorazin, woe unto thee, Bethsaida; for if the mighty works which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes; it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment, than for you."

Brother Unstable, have you not some misgivings on this subject? Are you perfectly satisfied that you occupy a safe position? Is it one in which you will wish to be at the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven? I think not; may God help you, and all such as you, to come to a decision on this point; if the Lord be God, serve him; if Baal, then serve him. As for me, I wish to be on the safe side, and cost what it will, let the world despise and ridicule; let the church call me an heretic, or an infidel, and cast out my name as evil; it is my firm resolve, in the fear of God, to advocate these blessed truths, so long as he shall give me strength and reason to speak and act for him. Be it so that we are stigmatized as "weak-minded" and ignorant men—God hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the wise. And weak as we are, I have seen some strong men tremble under their tottering sectarian walls, when the ram's horns have sounded round their Jericho.

J. PARRY.

The Choir of Angels.

I.

Hear the glorious proclamation,
The glad tidings of salvation;
Hear the glorious proclamation
Of the Savior near.

CHORUS.

While the choir of angels,
While the choir of angels,
While the choir of angels
Shall be chanting through the air.

II.

Hark! the tidings onward rolling,
Jesus comes the world controlling;
Hark! the tidings onward rolling,
Jesus comes to reign.

III.

See the "sign" in heaven appearing,
And the blazing chariot nearing;
See the "sign" in heaven appearing,
And the Savior there.

IV.

See the earth in terror shaking,
And the dead to life awaking,
See the earth in terror shaking,
And the saints arise.

V.

Now on wings of light ascending,
With a shining host attending;
Now on wings of light ascending,
See them mount the skies.

VI.

See, the banner waves in glory,
While ten thousand tell the story,
See, the banner waves in glory,
And the saints are there.

VII.

They are saved from death forever,
Praise to Him who did deliver;
They are saved from death forever,
And to die no more.

Selections.

A Word to Christians.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: for there is no work . . in the grave whither thou goest."—ECCL. 9: 10.

When the Lord of glory ascended up on high, and led captivity captive, he gave "some apostles and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, and the edifying of the body of Christ," leaving to the world his word, which, accompanied by the powerful influences of his Spirit, would if properly used, prove strong to the destruction of sin. We feel confident then, in saying that God has so distributed the work of his church among its members, that every individual, without any exception, possesses influence and has a work to accomplish. We are apt, now that persecution against the saints has ceased, and the shame of the cross is forgotten, to discharge our religious duties by proxy. Churches are built and men set apart to minister, after the fashion of secular institutions, and we compose ourselves with the idea that Heaven can ask no more; we forget the personal influence we possess, and the power to accomplish good. Troubled and perplexed by the thousand and one petty differences in our midst; bound up by some hobby of a doctrine which we fairly ride to death; our understandings darkened by unbelief—our faith weak, and our hopes low and grovelling—we keep ourselves forever in misery, and neglect God's demand upon our time and talents.

In the formation of character around us, and the shaping and disposing of events, every, and especially every christian man, possesses influence. No matter how lowly or how poor; it may be the silent influence of a sanctified life, (and this should always exist) or it may be the influence of a pleasant expression of thought, power of mind—ability to write or speak. God distributes these gifts according to His wisdom. Brought by redeeming grace into close connection with the Father of spirits, every new-born child of God has a work given him to do. His is a work for eternity, and is followed either by the joy of heaven or the dark consequences of sin. His relation to Jesus has changed his relation to the world, for he belongs not to it. Old things pass away, and the fountain which washed him of his sins, removes his dimness of sight, reveals joy unspeakable and full of glory—and if really born again, inspires him with a heaven-born desire to work for Christ.

The high and glorious intelligences around God's throne are not inactive; he himself cannot be passive; he ever labors in goodness—his angels are "ministering spirits," and surely his servants here should not be idlers! We beseech our readers to look at this subject, as rational and God-loving persons should. Your work, dear friends, is given you by God; you are responsible for a faithful discharge of duty. The Book of Remembrance is not kept in vain; the last great day will reveal it all.

"Father, I have glorified thee on earth. I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do; and now I come to thee." So said our adorable Redeemer, ere he left the world of his suffering, and though we cannot approach his perfect diligence and fervent spirit, though we cannot copy his blessed example, we may at least, "show diligence, to the full assurance of hope unto the end." Brothers of a like precious faith—"the morning cometh and also the night"—the night of death-like silence and of rest. Work for Christ; labor for Christ; and then when earth's toils and sorrows shall cease, faith shall hear a voice from heaven saying, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

"Art is long and time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still, like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches to the grave.
Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

—Canada Evangelist.

The Bedouin Arabs.

The following extract from a letter, recently received by the Rev. Dr. Kirk, not only exhibits a remarkable answer to prayer, but mentions also an interesting undertaking of benevolence in behalf of a people who have not hitherto, to any considerable extent, received the attention of the Christian world. The author of it, Dr. Wortabet, is a native of Syria, a son of an Armenian Bishop, educated in this country, and recently a fellow laborer with the missionaries:—

"Do you remember the last evening I was in Boston, I took tea with you, and when I was leaving you made this remark, 'Wortabet, if God is going to own this work, you will find on your arrival in Syria, some hearts already touched and the way prepared.' Now, hitherto I had never heard so much as even an interest expressed in the Bedouin. They had been utterly neglected, even in thought. I fancied myself the first man who made the children of Ishmael the subject of special prayer before the throne of grace.

I came to England much perplexed. I did not expect to find any body sympathize with my views; but it was so. God had already prepared the ground. A couple of years ago, Miss Whately, daughter of the Archbishop of Dublin, traveled in the East, and took a lively interest in the Bedouin. On her return home she tried to interest the people of this country in this much neglected class. Observe, this was at the time when I was preparing myself for this very work. However, she did not succeed much.

About four months ago, two months before they heard of me, she and a very few friends had instituted a Saturday evening prayer meeting, that God would raise up somebody for this work. If you will tax your memory, you will find this was the VERY SATURDAY EVENING when I went to your house and you prayed to God, before we parted, that he would, in his good pleasure, own this work. What a coincidence! I came here, and it took two months before I could get a hearing before the British public. No sooner did I do so, than I received a letter from Miss Whately informing me of her interest in the Bedouin, and of the appeal she had made in behalf of the Arabs. It came out simultaneously with the appeal, though we were entirely unknown to each other. I entered into correspondence with her at once, went to Dublin, and talked with her and her venerable father. The result is that it is now determined to establish a hospital either at Damascus, Bagdad, Cairo, or Bassorah, for the benefit of the Bedouin, of which I shall be the superintendent. I send you an outline of the plan; and now money to the amount of £500 or £600 is being collected to try the experiment; and when I tell you that the Archbishop of Dublin is at the head of it, and his chaplain, the Rev. Dr. Woolsey, treasurer, you will certainly rejoice with me in thinking that God's hand is in it, and that the prayers you offered up in behalf of it have not been unheard by him who listens to every sigh of the human heart.

Don't Weep, but Work.

Two gardeners, who were neighbors, had their crops of early peas killed by the frost. One of them came to condole with the other. "Ah!" cried he, "how unfortunate! Do you know, neighbor, that I have done nothing but fret ever since? But bless me, you seem to have a fine, healthy crop coming on. What are these?

"These are what I sowed immediately after my loss."

"What! coming up already?" said the astonished fretter.

"Yes," replied the other, "while you were fretting, I was working."

Reading for Youth.

Mount Ararat.

"I should like to climb up mount Ararat, where my great, great, great-grandfather Noah stood and saw the earth looking so clean, just washed by the flood."

You would have hard work of it, my boy. Mount Ararat rises like a giant from a point where three great empires meet, Russia, Persia, and Turkey. It has three peaks. One, three thousand feet above the other, is called the Silver Crest, because it is covered with eternal snows. I do not think it was this which the ark rested on. In a valley on the north side of the mountain there was once a village, and higher up among the cliffs an old monastery. About fifteen years ago, Ararat was shaken by a terrible earthquake, when thundering down from its lofty heights, came huge masses of snow and ice and rocks, sweeping away the monastery, and swallowing up all traces of the little village.

The people around say nobody can climb the Silver Crest. Bold travelers from time to time have tried to do it; but it is quite doubtful whether any have succeeded until some Englishmen performed the feat last year. They started from a little village [illegible] miles from Ararat on horseback, armed with stout poles, hooked at one end and pointed with iron at the other. After crossing a plain, they began to climb up a valley, between great masses of volcanic rock. After three hours' travel, picking their way among the jagged stones, they came to a green strip of pasture land, dotted with tents of black goat's hair. A small tribe of Koordish shepherds lived there. The chief was glad to see the strangers. He roasted a fat sheep for them, and asked them to spend the night among his people.

Here some of the party gave out. The mighty sugar-loaf of ice, rising to the very clouds, looked hard enough to scale. Three determined to go. One of these, Major Stuart, toiled up the icy slope for three hours, when his strength gave out; he sat down on the frozen crust, and slid down in a few minutes what cost the labor of a forenoon to climb up! A famous slide that! The Koordish chief, who stood watching the travelers from below, was not at all surprised to see him. "They will all give up soon," he said.

But no; up they went, higher and higher, higher and higher, Major Stuart watching them with his spy-glass, and the more experienced eye of the Koord following all their movements. At last, eleven hours after starting, they reached the bleak top of Ararat, 17,000 feet above the level of the sea.

"God is great!" exclaimed the Koord. "What wonderful people these English are. A few of them come here, and without any difficulty walk to the top of that holy mountain, a thing that was never done by man before. Wonderful, wonderful!"

But Major Stuart was not to be outdone. He and another gentlemen set out again; two Koords went with them, carrying rugs, great-coats, and something to eat. The Koords would not go far; they were afraid to. They said the Almighty forbade people to go up the holy mountain; so they went back. The travelers passed a night on the route; they nestled in among the rocks, and covered themselves up with the rugs, and went to sleep in spite of the howling winds rattling among the ice and snow. They arose early, and set out before dawn. Oh what a sunrise did they behold! At nine o'clock they stuck a sword up to its hilt in the highest snow of Silver Crest.

I do not believe the little dove which brought the olive-branch to Noah flew up quite as high as this. Do you?—Child's Paper.

Table Manners.

A WORD TO OUR YOUNG READERS.

Young friends, good behavior at table is a crowning grace. Please observe the following rules:

1. Always be in time. The moment the signal is given, drop all, never wait to finish what you are doing, or delay till after the blessing.

"In silence take your seat,
And give God thanks before you eat."

2. Talk very little, keep quiet. Interrupt no one. Are you in want of any article of food, ask for it modestly and politely.

3. Observe the wants and movements of others at a single glance. Some young folks render themselves ridiculous and disgusting by making remarks while older persons are talking.

4. If need be, help others to any dish or article that stands nearest to you.

5. Eat slowly, masticate well your food Some ill-mannered voracious children and youth, devour their food like the pigs or a starved wolf! Awful!

6. Never complain, find fault, put on sour or morose looks, at table, or turn up your nose at food. Such habits are clownish, disgraceful. Be thankful to God for every article of nourishment bestowed.

7. Use your knife and fork easily, in a proper, gentlemanly manner.

8. Never rest your elbows on the table, nor lay your arm upon it, or make any disagreeable noises with your nose. Keep quiet.

9. Be careful that you drop or spill nothing. A beautiful white table cloth looks badly, soiled with liquids or things from your plate.

"The table cloth you must not spoil,
Nor with your food your fingers soil."

10. Keep your seat till all rise from the table. It is ill-manners for children or the younger members to rise up and leave the table before others are done. And what, if possible, is still more ungenteel, is lingering to finish your meal and keep others waiting.

"When told to rise, then you must put
Your chair away with noiseless foot,
And lift your heart to God above,
In praise for all his wondrous love."

Children, truly polite at table, are almost sure to be polite everywhere.—Golden Rule.

☞ Children should always speak with politeness and deference to their parents and friends. Some children are polite and civil everywhere else except at home; but there they are coarse and rude.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brs., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be [illegible] [illegible] cents to any other part of the United States.

[illegible] the above: i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 233. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 29, 1860. | VOL. X. NO. 26.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, | MILES GRANT,
JOHN COUCH, | GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For terms, see fourth page.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Lines.

We are nearing home, we're almost there,
The joys of heaven we soon shall share,
The City will soon descend, I know,
And the saints will home to glory go.
We'll bask in the light of perfect bliss,
'Mid joy and love, 'mid light and peace;
We'll walk beneath Life's spreading tree,
Which beareth fruit for you and me.
O that beautiful home!

There tears no more shall dim the eye,
Nor fondest hopes in ruin lie,
Nor walls of anguish greet the ear,
Nor shall we ever the lone grave fear;
And our friends gone down in the valley sad,
Shall awake and sing in accents glad,
All o'er the earth shall their echo ring,
Where, victory, grave, death, where thy sting?
O that beautiful home!

There on his throne reigns Jesus now,
While heaven and earth to his sceptre bow;
There God, the Father, will e'er abide,
And smile that Jesus is glorified;
Above, before, and on either hand,
Immortal men and angels stand;
From harps of gold and voices strong
Will arise the new, the conqueror's song.
O that beautiful home!

M. MATHEWS.

Hardwood Hill, Windsor, C. E.

For the Crisis.

The Nature and Origin of Jesus.

BY WM. HOBBS.

No. 6.

He is called in the Scriptures, our Savior; from the fact that he was the one appointed by God for the salvation of mankind. Our Savior recognised God as the originator of the plan of salvation. And throughout the Scriptures God is recognised as a Redeemer and Savior. He redeems us by his son; consequently, God is the author, and Christ is the medium of salvation. And so we read of "God our Savior," and also, of "Jesus Christ our Savior." But as God is the author of salvation, it is truly written that there is no Savior independent of God—"Beside me there is no Savior." Let it therefore be remembered, that God our Savior exalted the man Christ Jesus to be a Prince and a Savior. But there are those who use part of a curse, as argument against a human Savior, and say, "Cursed is man that trusteth in man." Yet Paul taught, that "since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead." And again, "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins."—Col. 1 : 14. See Isa. 53 : 1—5.—"Who hath believed our report? or to whom is the arm of Jehovah revealed? For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of dry ground; he hath no form nor comeliness, and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him: he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and by his stripes we are healed." Christ is repeatedly called "a man, the son of man," and "the man Christ Jesus." And that he is a man is evident: for, as Paul said, "Unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee." From this it is evident that he is neither God, nor an angel; and hence, he cannot be other than a man.

One of the objections against the proper manhood of Christ, is founded on what Paul said relative to the manner in which he received the gospel. Gal. 1 : 11 12.—"For I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me, is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." What Paul says here, in reference to the gospel which he preached, as not being after man, is in contrast with what he says in verses 6—8, relative to those who preached "another gospel;" which as if it had not God for its author, must have been after man. What he means by saying that he was not taught it of man, he explains by saying, "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his son in me, that I should preach him among the heathen, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me, but I went into Arabia, and returned again into Damascus."—vs. 15—17. The gospel which Paul preached was, according to his own words, revealed to him by God through the revelation of his Son to him; hence, he was not taught it of man, but by God. Neither was his gospel after man, as the gospel of Christ originated with God alone. But those who would have us believe that Paul meant to teach that Jesus was not a man, involve him in a plain contradiction; since he declared to the Corinthians, that "since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead; for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Since by man came death, it was necessary that a man without sin should die to redeem us from our sins, to complete the regenerating process in the human family; as through his death he can eradicate the evil propensities inherent in the fallen nature of man. He died through the effects of Adamic transgression, which resulted in the depravity of man's nature, and its consequent sins; and thus he died for our sins. And as death comes upon all unconditionally, so redemption from that penalty comes to all unconditionally. All will be made alive again, through the obedience, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Therefore those who do not obtain eternal life, but have to die "the second death," will die justly for their own sins in neglecting the offers of mercy.

When Peter and John were arraigned before the Jewish council for healing the lame man in the name of Jesus Christ, Peter said unto them, "If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man by what means he is made whole; be it known to you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand before you whole. This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." What Peter meant by the name, "Jesus of Nazareth," may be gathered from the record of his preaching on the day of Pentecost. He explains it thus: "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him, in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know."—Acts 2 : 22. This refutes both the Arian and Trinitarian theory. First, the Arian theory of a pre-existent Jesus, being the first created being, is refuted by the declaration that Jesus of Nazareth was a man. And, secondly, the Trinitarian is met by the same argument; and their theory that the miracles of Christ are evidence of his being an equal God with the Father, is refuted by the declaration that God did those miracles by him.

Another objection against the proper manhood of Christ, is founded on the opening of the seven-sealed book of the Apocalypse; where the angel proclaims to all, saying, "Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon."—Rev. 5 : 2, 3.—Those who emphasize the phrase "no man," must be reminded, in the first place, that the original is no one, instead of "no man." And secondly, that it is not said that one was never found able to open the book. And thirdly, that what is stated afterward, fully teaches that he who did open the book was a man; the man Christ Jesus.

The fact is revealed that there was a time, when there was no one in heaven, nor in earth, nor under the earth, who was worthy, until the crucified and risen Jesus appeared, and that he alone was found worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof. For John says, "And I wept much, because none was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders said unto me, Weep not; behold, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof."—Verses 4, 5. And the reason is given why he was worthy, in the song that was sung; saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to loose the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God, by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." The fact, that no one but the Lion of the tribe of Judah was found worthy, and that after his crucifixion, is evidence against the pre-existent theory; since a pre-existent Jesus could not belong to the tribe of Judah.

Jesus of Nazareth, then, is our Savior, in that he belongs to the human family. He is our Savior, in that he died for our sins, and was raised for our justification. But to be justified by him, we must be united to him by a spiritual union. "Marvel not," said he, "that I say unto you, ye must be born again." It is the spirit of man which must be renewed, as he said, "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh; that which is born of the spirit, is spirit." There are some truths that are self-evident, and one is a statement made by Paul, that the carnal mind is at enmity with God; it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." But if the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Spirit of God, it removes the enmity, and brings us into spiritual union with Christ. But how is this love to be obtained? Paul says, "The righteousness which is of faith saith on this wise, Say not in thine heart who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above:) or, who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thine heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."—Rom. 10 : 6—10.

Thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus. This implies a belief in him as the Son of God, and an obligation on our part to be subject to his authority. His authority is of God, not independent of him; for he acknowledges that all authority or power was given him, that is, delegated to him by the Almighty. And for this reason his authority is the more binding upon us; since to disobey Christ, is to disobey God, under whose authority he acts.

And believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead. The declaration that he had power to lay down his life, and power to take it again, does not teach that he raised himself; for in that case, it would follow, that as he had power to lay down his own life, therefore he killed himself; as much as it would follow that because he had power to receive his life again, that therefore he raised himself from the dead. The truth expressed is, that he had power to give up his life and to receive it again through the power of God who giveth all things. In conformity with this, the apostles declare repeatedly, that God raised him from the dead. And being raised bodily from the dead, he will never undergo any more change in his nature and bodily identity. And whoever teaches that he has, or will put off his spiritual, corporeal, and immortal body, denies the truth, that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever.

For the Crisis.

Justin Martyr.

There is a passage in Justin's Dialogue with the Jew Trypho, which is unhappily and sadly mistranslated by Mr. Browne, whose translation is most accessible and most frequently cited. The passage I have in mind was quoted by Dr. Litch in his Discussion with Eld. Grant, as appears in that book, p. 41.

I noticed this fact at the time, and regretted that the error was not corrected. It was again quoted in last week's Crisis, and is uncorrected. I will give the erroneous translation, and then the true one.

"I affirm that no soul perishes entirely, or is annihilated, for that would really be good and joyful news to the wicked. What then? Why, that the souls of the righteous are reserved in a place of happiness, and those of the wicked and unjust in a place of misery and torment, in expectation of that great day of judgment."—Chap. 4.

Would the reader suppose that the positive denial of annihilation is made solely by the translator? or that the words "misery" and "torment" are invented by him to express a mere adjective, "worse"? Hear what Justin did say. The passage occurs in a dialogue, and "C." gives the opinion to which Justin assents.

J. "This has the appearance of truth."

C. "Therefore they [souls] are not immortal."

J. "No, they are not, seeing it is evident that the world was created."

C. "However, I do not say that all souls will die; for that would be good news indeed to the bad. What then? Why, that the souls of the righteous remain in some better place, but the evil and wicked in a worse, waiting until the time of judgment. And so the former, being worthy to appear before God, shall not die any more; and the latter shall be punished so long as it shall please God that they exist and be punished."

The only excuse for the mistranslation of the first clause is an ambiguity that sometimes attaches to the Greek word pas, which may be rendered all or any. "Not any souls;" that is "no soul," etc. Such is the translator's argument. But in the present case, the ambiguity does not exist; for the plural number, the context, and the entire book, require the translation I have given; which is sustained by twenty authorities I have given in "Debt and Grace," p. 315; to which I may add the concession of Mr Hinton in his work written against the view we hold, "Athanasia," p. 446.

I may here remark that Justin probably had no final or settled opinion respecting the fate of the lost; hence, if one insists on particular expressions, he may be claimed as holding either opinion. But his later writings show the stronger inclination to that of the immortality of the saved alone. I therefore adopt Giesseler's statement: "Justin appears to regard it as possible that the souls of the ungodly will be at some time wholly annihilated."

I do not wish to enter into the discussions now going on in the Crisis. But may I not suggest that it is one thing to regard the souls of the dead as existing, or even as dreaming; but to regard the lost as immortal is an infinitely different thing? I would hardly think this suggestion needed, if I did not sometimes find those who seem to confound the two ideas. I can easily explain this confusion as growing out of old traditions and associations. But if you look at the matter for an instant, the idea that the separate existence of the soul demonstrates its future eternity, appears as a most groundless assumption. I am willing that such shallow thinkers and pretentious and dogmatic writers as Mr. Landis, should talk as if the argument were good, and should expressly argue the immortality of the soul from Matt. 10 : 28! But I think the readers of the Crisis can afford to be more considerate.

Let me, then, name two or three facts. The first man whom I can find holding that the soul dies with the body, so far from thinking that the "second death" kills, held the immortality of the lost in punishment; he was in fact the first very "orthodox man whom I find! This was Tatian.

Again; the first writer whom I find full of life in Christ only, and treating the matter most largely, held the separate existence of the soul, and that too in some active consciousness! This was Irenæus. And I could give other examples to the same purpose. I do not say that I deny the "sleep of the dead;" which, however true, is not a fundamental article of christian faith. Those who know my opinion here know that it is my own, and not that of Irenæus, nor of any other man. Nor, on the other hand, do I pronounce the materialist view a fundamental error, though that is not my own view.

What then? and why do I say any thing on this point? For this reason: I find the prominence given to "the sleep of the dead," —which is a negative statement of faith, and which deists might accept,—and to the non-existence of the soul apart from the body; this prominence given to that which is obviously not fundamental, I find a constant burden to our faith and bar to its acceptance with the community generally. I meet it daily when I travel; and when I read the books of our opponents I find them constantly making their assaults here. But both parties confess that these points are not vital or fundamental. These points are not the "great things" of God's justice or of man's destiny. Then comes in another very great evil. The attention of both parties is concentrated on things finite, temporary, or even on things obscure, and the questions about ETERNAL EVIL, and IMMORTAL LIFE in CHRIST ONLY, are hardly grasped or grappled with. I might say a good deal here, but I have named the matter on which I think that not talk, but reflection, is needed.

C. F. H.

For the Crisis.

Days of Peril.

We are all ready to acknowledge that these are perilous times. What are the perils which surround us? Paul tells us in his second epistle to Timothy, third chapter, why the last days were to be days of peril. "For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous." But perhaps you say, we who have fully known his doctrine, and what persecutions he endured, continue in the things which we have learned and been assured of. If so, watch thou in all things, make full proof of thy heirship. Be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless. But is there that growing up into Christ in all things, which we as children of the light should manifest? As time lingers, is the little flock secure from danger? Yes, surely, if we hide within the Rock of Ages; but as year after year passes, is there a growing consecration in us, or, a spirit of conformity to this ungodly world? Are we living in such a manner that those around us think that we are trying to serve God and mammon too? Do we think that what we are and have is our own, forgetting that we should be "good stewards of the manifold grace of God?" Do we not labor more eagerly for the meat that perishes than for that which endureth to everlasting life?

Are we not more studious to conform to the fashions and maxims of a sinful world, than becomes the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus! While we spend so much for what we might well do without, would it not be better for us to stop, and strive more earnestly to conform to the teachings and example of our "Elder Brother," who, in response to his mother's question," Why hast thou thus dealt with us?" answered, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Is this the burden of our hearts? Is this the business of our lives? Whether we eat, or drink, do we do all for the glory of God? Or have those perilous influences which surround us, crept in upon us to such an extent, that we are satisfied with the form of godliness? O, my brother, my sister, awake to righteousness and sin not. Will we "gird up the loins of our mind, and be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ?" Will we be workers in God's vineyard? Will we be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord?

The way has been long and rugged through which the church of God has come, and shall we, when the morning light is just breaking upon us, be found with our hands folded, our eyes closed, at ease in Zion, with the many dangers which surround our feet, and numberless perils upon every hand? In all these years since God commanded us to "come out from among them," if we had been found sitting at the feet of Jesus and learning of him, methinks the people which God is preparing for his kingdom would have been multiplied, perhaps even now been numbered, saved.

I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

S. A. ELMORE.

South Windsor, Ct.

For the Crisis.

Man in Death is Unconscious.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 6.

In consideration of the truthfulness of the above proposition, which has been discussed at length in the preceding articles, we now wish to propose, for the investigation of those who are sceptical upon the point, a few very important points, which, in order to prove the opposite of our proposition valid, MUST be proved. Therefore please to prove by the word of God:—

1. That the term "MAN" is appropriated to designate any other part of man besides his physical organism.

2. That the term "spirit" designates any thing which leaves the man in the event of death, except the breath of life. Commending the spirit or breath of life to God, is virtually commending life to God, as breath is the cause, and life the consequence of that cause.

3. That the term "spirit" is suggestive of any thing PRIMARILY pertaining to man, denoting any thing more than an attribute of man.

4. That at the death of the dust-man, a conscious life-spirit entity leaves him.

5. That the term "MAN" is ever once employed to designate such an ENTITY.

6. That the terms "Ruach, Pneuma, Spirit," are NOT INVARIABLY in the neuter gender, except by a figure of personification.

7. That the pronouns I, he, his, him, she and her, are ever once employed except by the above figure of speech, to designate the already defined entity; that is, the conscious life spirit entity.

8. That the pronoun "HE," if applied to a separate conscious life spirit entity, in Lk. 16 : 23, has any noun in the context instead of which it is employed. The noun man designates the one that is dead. Remember that "a pronoun is a word used instead of a noun, and has a DOUBLE relation." Instance:—Charles, he is. "He" sustains a relation to "Charles" and "is."

9. That this pronoun in Lk. 16 : 23, if thus applied, has any more than ONE relation as a pronoun, and that to the verb "LIFTED."

10. That this independent pronoun, that has only a single relation, can point out either the condition or destiny of man.

11. That as a pronoun has the gender, person and number, of its noun, that the terms, "ruach, pneuma, spirit," are ever in the masculine or feminine genders, except by a figure of personification.

12. That the residents in HADES, "hell," in Lk. 16 : 23, are not literally dead, without contradicting Rev. 20 : 13: "Death and (HADES,) hell (see margin,) delivered up the DEAD WHICH WERE IN THEM."

13. That they are, therefore, any more than in a parabolical sense alive, in the hades of Lk: 16 : 23.

14. That there is one scripture promise of anything, to a separate conscious life spirit entity of man, in the Word of God.

15. That the personal identity of man, can or does inhere in anything except that which is denominated in the Scriptures, "MAN."

16. That God made in his image anything not designated by the term "man," which is a part of him, and can consciously exist independently of him.

17. That the expression, "Man became a living soul," teaches the existence of a conscious soul, independently of "man."

18. That the term "death," in Gen. 2 : 17, announces a dual penalty: one against the dust-man, and the other against either the soul or spirit, as conscious life entities. These terms, soul and spirit, are never in the Bible employed to express the same thing. If then, they both designate conscious life entities, and every man has both, of course every man has two conscious life entities possessing at the same time one body. It is very essential that both of them should be very good-natured indeed. The consequences of a war between them would be TERRIBLE.

19. That if the conscious life thinking entity is expressed by the terms soul and spirit, and "cannot come in contact with matter," that the condition or destiny of such a soul or spirit can be in any sense affected by the actions of men possessing those entities; for physical life manifestations cannot be prompted by the soul or spirit under such circumstances.

20. That if the conscious life thinking entity is that which puts forth volition, and prompts the physical eye to see, tongue to speak, and indeed all physical action; by what law is the inoffensive instrument, the physical organism, punished with the death penalty, and this supposed conscious life thinking entity, by whose volition this work is done, released alive? Should a man shoot you, reader, with a bullet shot from a gun, would government hang the bullet or the gun and release the man through some invisible means, through which the head of the government could, and (so unavoidable would be his escape without his being seen) would see him pass, although others could not behold him?

21. That this supposed conscious life thinking entity, which, if there is such, is released, when the death penalty falls upon the literal, physical organism, will derive the least benefit from the resurrection of that organism from the said penalty, or blessing consequent upon it. There is nothing promised, remember, to any such an entity in the word of God.

22. That the event of life is the consequence of a re-union of the physical organism, with an independently conscious life spirit entity.

23. That such a re-union acknowledges any life in the man.

24. That this position does not deny the statement in Gen. 2 : 7.

25. That if life does not exist in the physical organism, the man, that the destruction of the man is extinction of life.

26. That if the death of the man is the separation of a conscious life spirit entity from the physical organism, that the second death is not the same.

27. That if the second death is so, that the separate conscious life spirit entity does not possess eternal life without Jesus Christ.

28. That this entity, on that principle, does not live forever in direct opposition to God's promise and purpose.

29. That evil will ever end.

30. That if evil never does end, that such a position or result does not contradict Ps. 7 : 9. "O let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end." Ps. 37 : 10, 35, 36-38.

31. That a doctrine, opposed to the preceding points to be proved by the word of God, came FROM HEAVEN. More anon.

For the Crisis.

The Father's Love.

"From heaven did the Lord behold the earth, to hear the groaning of the prisoners, to loose those that are appointed unto death."—Ps. 102: 19, 20.

O what condescension! The eternal One stoops to behold fallen, degraded man! But why does he behold? Is it that he may consider all their past rebellion and violence, that he may invent more fully means to wreak vengeance on those guilty ones? No; but to hear their groanings. Does he behold unmoved their sorrows, or with cold indifference hear their groans? Nay, verily; far be it from our God, who withheld not his only Son, even he beholds and heard their groans, that he might loose the prisoner appointed unto death. Listen! oh captive, bound by the great deceiver of humanity; the Lord of hosts beholds thee; that never changing One hears thy groans; yea, in the still hour of midnight, when other eyes are closed, other ears dull, he still beholds, still hears, still compassionates them. O lonely, troubled, fainting one, lift thine eye to Him who is ever mindful of thy tears, of thy deep-drawn sighs, and is mindful that he may loose thy burden and set thee free in all the liberty of the gospel of Christ! Notwithstanding past waywardness, he calls upon thee to trust him; he remembers thy frame that it is but dust. O trust him, regarding not iniquity in thy heart, and he will aid thee in bearing the thousand ills of life, and finally loose forever thy bands.

Fellow pilgrims, oft neglected in self-denials, groaning beneath the heavy burdens that others ought to help thee bear, God hears thy groans; God appreciates thy sacrifices; he never will desert thee. O, then, for his sake, for the sake of his cause, so dear to him, take courage to endure hardness soldier-like,—face the storms a little longer.

'T is the last storm that's gathering,
All wildly and dark,
O'er the rough billows tossing
Thy frail, trembling barque;
Temptations and trials will soon all be past,
O faint not, worn pilgrim, thou art bearing thy last!

JENNIE D. ROBERTS.

New Hartford, Conn.

For the Crisis.

The Standard of New Testament Piety.

What is the standard of New Testament piety to which we are called in this life?

This is certainly a question of no minor importance to all the human family, inasmuch as we are to be judged by the teachings of that sacred volume in the great day of God. Who shall answer this question, seeing that upon it hangs our eternal all? I certainly can consent to the opinion of none less than Christ. Turn to Matt. 5 : 48, which reads thus: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." And this is from the lips of Him who spake as never man spake.

What is it to be perfect as God is? 2 Peter 1 : 4.—"That by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." We are to be like God as respects quality, or purity, not quantity. We are not to be omniscient, or omnipotent; but holy. Heb. 12 : 14.—"Follow peace with all men, and holiness; without which no man shall see the Lord."

Paul tells us in Heb. 3 : 14, that we are to partake of Christ. Now, if we partake of Christ, are we not like Him? (God) Is he not perfect? If we are made partakers of his nature, and have on the righteousness of Christ, why are we not like him?

Does this make us Gods? By no means. Is one ray of light from the sun, the sun? Or one drop of water from the ocean, the ocean? Yet that light is pure as the sun, though but a small portion of it. The water is as pure as the ocean, and yet it is but a drop. So man may possess a ray of purity from the absolute God; but he is not absolutely, only relatively pure. God is absolute, to which nothing can be added; but additions may be made to man's perfections eternally, and still he is not God.

Man is perfect when he answers fully the end for which he was made.

I will illustrate this. If I have a watch, and that watch keeps perfect time, that watch is a perfect one; not that it is perfect in size, or in many other respects; but the design of the maker was to have it keep perfect time, neither lose or gain; it does so: it is perfect because it answers the end for which it was made.

Now God made man a perfect structure, and designed him to keep his law. He can be perfect in no other sense, than in keeping God's law while on probation.

So the standard of New Testament piety is, to come right up to the rule of Holy living, following the teachings of Jesus Christ. Let us go right about the work of conquering besetting sins in the name of Jesus of Nazareth,—leave off talking, and go to doing; for soon the night cometh when no man can work. May the Lord help us, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

A FRIEND OF TRUTH.

☞ A good man, who had seen much of the world, and is not tired of it, says: "The grand essentials to happiness in this life are, something to do, something to love, and something to hope for."

For the Crisis.

Reasons Why I CANNOT BELIEVE THAT THE SECOND ADVENT WILL BE DELAYED TILL 1866.

The argument supposed to bring the above named event, at the time stated, is predicated upon the following premises, viz:

1. That the power symbolized by the eleventh horn on the dreadful and terrible beast of Dan. 7th chapter was set up in A. D. 606. Is this position a right one? Let us consider a few facts. When this power comes up, three kings are plucked up before it. But there is a dispute about what is to be understood by the expression found in Dan. 7 : 8, which reads as follows: Before whom three of the first horns were plucked up by the roots." Some suppose that this language indicates that the three are to be plucked up before this power comes into existence. I have one very strong objection to this view, which is this: It ignores the plainest and most positive language of Scripture. There is no such thing as arriving at just conclusions, with respect to this prophecy, only as we abide most strictly by the explanation of the angel. Mark: if God has commissioned the heavenly messenger for the express purpose [illegible] explaining the vision, it follows as a [illegible] of course, that his explanation is [illegible] an any we can give. What then [illegible] angel? Hearken (Dan. 7 : 24): [illegible] ten horns out of this kingdom, [illegible] that shall arise: and another [illegible] after them; and he shall be di[ve]rse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings." The question is settled, then, by the most positive language, that these three kings, symbolized by the three horns, are plucked up by the power symbolized by the eleventh horn; consequently it can never be plucked until that power is fully established, and exists just as marked in the prophecy.

It is an almost universally admitted fact by Protestant expositors, that two of the three that were plucked up by this power were the Vandal kingdom in Africa, and the Gothic kingdom in Italy. No fact is more clearly stated in history than the following, viz: that the Vandals were plucked up in A. D. 534, and the Ostrogoths in Italy in A. D. 553. Thus we settle the question, that the power under consideration must have existed possessing all the features marked in the symbol, somewhere previous to A. D. 534; consequently it did not come up in A. D. 606.

II. The argument fixing the second coming of our Lord in 1866, attempts to make the 1260 days of the prophetic chart reach to the final judgment. This we think cannot possibly be correct for the following reasons:

1. During that entire period the church [was] to undergo a bloody persecution. See Rev. 13 : 5, where we are told that this power shall make war (margin) forty and two months. The character of this war is given in v. 7 where we read—"And it was given to him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds and tongues and nations." To assume that this war on the saints is to continue till the final judgment, we must shut our eyes against clearly revealed facts in prophecy, as well as the most positive declarations in the history of the past, and the state of things existing in every part of the old Roman empire at the present hour. The angel told Daniel that the persecution on the church, even in its diminished form (See Dan. 11 : 35), should only last till the time of the end. I have proved most conclusively in my tract on [illegible], that the time of the end begins somewhere before the end itself. Any theory, therefore, that would carry this war on the church down to the judgment of the great [day must] be wrong.

[2. D]uring this same 1260 days (years) [the ch]urch was to be in the wilderness. I [ask] in all candor, is the church in the wilderness now? Let the operations of missionary societies, and missionaries in every part of the world for the last forty-five years, answer the question.

3. During this same period of 1260 years, the witnesses were to prophesy, clothed in sackcloth, in consequence of the same war on the church already named. Are the witnesses in their sackcloth state now? The answer is easily given, and is found in the fact that for the last sixty years the Bible has gone into almost every nation under heaven; and a flood of divine light from its sacred pages has shone out [in] every part of the old Roman empire, and penetrated even into the obscure haunts [of] the last lingering footsteps of that gaunt, famine-stricken remnant of a once mighty system; which now attempts to support a weak semblance of ecclesiastic-civil rule in the Vatican at Rome. It probably needs no argument to prove that the sackcloth age of the church is passed. That age being passed, the period that marked its duration of course is ended. No fact is more clearly known by all men than this, that religious toleration is the order of the day. And it is just as well known by all acquainted with history that it has been the order of the day for nearly forty-five years in the past.

But lastly; the '66 argument throws [illegible] only [illegible] in the Bible [illegible] reveals [illegible] at the end of the [illegible] of the [illegible]. I [illegible] I believe with [illegible]

2300 days reach to the end, but I am most fully [illegible] the fact that it is not as clearly stated in the prophecy what is definitely [illegible] to occur at the end of that period, as at the end of the 1335. Mark: there is no connection that can be found between the 1290 and 1335 days with corresponding dates and events, carrying the termination of the latter period beyond the present year. So it appears to me.

Let all weigh the matter candidly and decide for themselves; for most surely we are living in an awful moment of time. The great luminaries in the church, for a few years in the past, have thrown us into a circle, the furthest limits of which end in about 1866. It is only safe then to be ready now. Remember, dear friends, that nothing short of gospel purity, and a life wholly conformed to the holy precepts contained in the law of Jesus Christ, will ever gain for us a home among the blessed. Oh! then, may we make it our first and chiefest business to secure a home in the better land. Amen. S. W. BISHOP.

Warner, N. H.

For the Crisis.

"To the Gate."

BRETHREN OF THE COMMON FAITH, GREETING:—We have come on some distance in our pilgrimage journey since we first took our Bible to see if these things were so. Twenty years have just passed since I felt my heart burn at the hearing of the proclamation of the return of Jesus to set up a kingdom on earth. Never can I forget the grateful emotions to my Creator for his mercy in calling my attention, through his servant, Bro. Miller, to examine my hope for future life. I found that I had no evidence of sins pardoned, no spirit bearing witness with my spirit that I was a joint heir with Christ, of an inheritance that must come to him one day, to be possessed by the faithful. I could not cry "Abba Father." Sin and sinners must be put away. What was I, who had been serving myself, loving the world, pride of life, covetous and envious? The storm gathering on the wicked, who could stand? I sought a shelter in Christ, and hope to abide under the shadow of the rock.

Many, since the first, have been the rough places; griefs and fears await us all the way; no rest here for the weary. Sometimes our frail bark has been driven by the wind of adversity almost to despair; then again the sun would shine out, and blessings have come unexpectedly. Sometimes it has seemed that all on board were asleep, drifting down the current, none to ply the oar,—the greatest effort would be needed to arouse the sleepers to action; even then some would contend about a non-essential to turn the mind from the point. Are we then ignorant of the enemy's devices?

We have now come to a period in our history when every soldier is wanted. The conflict deepens. We must not remain on the defensive, but sally out on the offensive. Let the battle be warm. Our enemies are strong. We must press the battle to the gate. One more onset before the Lord comes. In the strength of Israel's God, come forth! By Jehovah's power we drive them to the wall. Prove the strong arm, ye valiant men and women of God. Have ye sought him in vain? Nay, verily. Come, ye weak, and gird on the armor of God, and remember that the whole is not on, until "the praying with all prayer" engirdles you. Gideon would not have put to flight his foes if he had done as many now do. Let those go to their own homes that are fearful, but come up, ye that believe that God hears and answers prayer in our day. Prepare ye yourselves for the work of the Lord.

Shall we, then, in the coming Conference prove the Lord? Are we not too indifferent to others' interests? May they not love and praise the Lord and be saved as well as ourselves? Brethren, lay this to your hearts; examine and see if in all things we have not been talking more about the things Jesus is to bring when he comes, than doing the immediate requirements at his hand. Is it not a fact that sinners lose all when Jesus comes? Be they near and dear friends, or more remote, they are "somebody's child." Will any stand in the way of a soul's coming to Jesus, that their sins may be cleansed by the blood of the Lamb? May it be said at last if that one is lost, that none of us stood in the way? Let us pray that we find this gathering a powerful awakening conference for backsliders and sinners. Make it a warm time by the effectual, fervent prayer, taught by the Holy Spirit. Do not be turned away from the object by unbelief. Let the conflict sharpen; our foes are to be driven back. Israel's God is to prevail. Glory to God! Go into the vineyard, then, ye that enlisted to work. Soon you will be observed by the Master, who will call and say, How about those talents? Yours in hope, W. C. STONE.

☞ God loves to smile most upon his people when the world frowns most. When the world puts its iron chains upon their legs, then God puts his golden chains about their necks; when the world puts a bitter cup into their hands, then God drops some of his honey, some of his goodness and sweetness into it. When the world is ready to stone them, then God gives them the white stone; and when the world is [illegible] good names, then he gives them a new name, that none knows but [illegible]

The World's Crisis

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 29, 1860.

The Boston Conference.

We purpose to hold a General Conference at Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing Wednesday, April 4th, at 2 1-2 P. M., instead of 7 o'clock in the evening, as proposed in our first notice; and continuing through the week and over the following Lord's day.

We shall expect a large and glorious meeting. No pains will be spared on the part of the church in Boston, to make the conference pleasant and profitable to all. We are anxious to see the happy faces of Zion's pilgrims once more, and mingle our songs of praise to Him who is soon coming in glory to gather the faithful to their "happy Eden home."

Relief for the Distressed; OR, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 10.

We are now ready to explore the eighth Division of "Doubting Castle," and pull down the cobwebs of error hanging upon its walls. The first apartment of this Division is the twenty-eighth section that we have entered for examination. Bro. Burnham describes it as follows:

"Only once, in all the Bible, is the term spirit applied to the beasts; and then a mighty difference is made to appear between the spirit of beasts and the human spirit—the spirit of the beasts is said to go "downward to the earth," and the spirit of man to go "upward." But the term spirit is of the most common occurrence in relation to the existence of man, throughout the Scriptures. Why is this, if all there is to man, is, simply, body, breath, and thought? The animals have all that, in common with man! (28) Is it not importantly true, that "There is a SPIRIT in MAN, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding?" (29) Are we not sure that the animals are not morally sentient? (30) Will the morally sentient spirit of man cease to exist at death, equally with the spirit of the beast, which is not so? Why, then, if so, may not Christ as well have died for beasts as men? I confess the thought startles me!!!" (31)

28. This Division opens with another assertion, declaring that the term spirit is only once applied to beasts, when "a mighty difference" is made between the human spirit and the spirit of the beast; the latter "is said to 'go downward to the earth,' and the spirit of man to go upward.'" As nearly every assertion thus far found in "Doubting Castle" has been unsupported by the word of truth, we are disposed to give the foregoing a thorough examination before we give it credit. When we came to look at the facts in the case, we found that ruach, the word rendered spirit in Eccl. 3 : 21, is applied to beasts seven times instead of "once," as affirmed by the conductors of "Doubting Castle." "And they (the beasts) went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the (ruach,) breath of life."—Gen. 7 : 15. "It would be just as proper to render ruach, spirit, in this text, as in Eccl. 3 : 21; for it most evidently means precisely the same thing. But suppose the word was applied but "once" to beasts, that once would be sufficient to settle the point, unless it could be shown that it was misapplied. It is asserted that "a mighty difference" appears in Eccl. 3 : 21 between the spirit of the beast and the human spirit. Suppose we let one who was wiser than any in "Doubting Castle" settle this point. In the 19th ver. of the same chapter the whole matter is forever settled beyond all controversy. When speaking of men and beasts; says the wise man, "They have ALL ONE (ruach) BREATH." Here is the same word again that is rendered "spirit" in the 21st verse, referred to in "Doubting Castle," to prove that between man's spirit and a beast's, there exists a "mighty difference." Instead of the "mighty difference," as taught by the heathen philosophers, the Bible most positively declares that they are "ONE," and the same.

Let us turn to Eccl. 3 : 21 and read it.

"Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?"

In "Doubting Castle" we read concerning this verse: "The spirit of the beast is said to go 'downward to the earth;' and the spirit of the man to go 'upward.'" Is a question an affirmation? If I ask a man to perform an act, is it right for me to report on the strength of my question, he said he would do it?

It was believed by the heathen that the spirit of man existed as a conscious entity in a cavity in the earth; but the Scriptures declare that man and beast die alike, and all have "one breath," or spirit. David tells us how they die: "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their (ruach) breath, they die, and return to their dust."—Ps. 104 : 29. The word translated breath in the last passage is the same that is rendered spirit in Eccl. 3 : 21. We will give the Septuagint version of Eccl. 3 : 19-21. "As is the death of the one, so also the death of the other; and there is breath to all; and what has the [man] more than the beast? nothing; for all is vanity. All go to one place; all were formed of the [dust, and all will return to the dust.]" [illegible] "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" Where is the "mighty difference?"

It is said "the term spirit is of the most common occurrence in relation to the existence of man, throughout the Scriptures," but not so in relation to beasts. There is a very good reason for this; the Bible is addressed to man and not to the brute creation; hence but little is said of the latter; but enough to settle the point, that man and beast have the same spirit, or "breath of life."

We are glad to see one true admission by the conductors of "Doubting Castle;" which is, that beasts think, "in common with man." As we find nothing in the twenty-eighth section to favor the idea that the spirit of man exists as a conscious entity between death and the resurrection, we pass to the next.

29. Here we find the following question: "Is it not importantly true, that 'there is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding?'" Certainly. Observe, it does not read, "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth IT understanding, but "THEM." And while this spirit or breath is in them, they may have understanding, because the brain is active; but when it is taken away from man, "in that very day his thoughts perish." This question, we think, needs no further notice.

30. We now come to another inquiry: "Are we not sure that the animals are not morally sentient?" We think so. But what of that? The same is true of many men and all young children. Yet they have the spirit of life just as much as the minister in the pulpit.

31. We pass to the next inquiry: "Will the morally sentient spirit of man cease to exist at death, equally with the spirit of the beast, which is not so? Why then, if so, may not Christ as well have died for beasts as man?" Here we see the ingenuity of the managers of "Doubting Castle." After various and circuitous questions about the spirit, or "breath of life;" they finally assume as a fact, the point to be proved, and involved in the question; which is, that the spirit in man is a morally sentient entity, existing as such when the man is dead; while the same spirit, when in the beast is quite another thing. We have found it is all "one breath," or spirit, in all living creatures upon the earth. But if this spirit is the morally sentient part, instead of the man, who has it in his nostrils; then why are not all, young and old, learned and unlearned, equally morally sentient? This must be so, unless this spirit is dependent upon the action of the brain of man for all moral accountability. If the latter is true, and we see no possible way to avoid the conclusion, then it follows that the spirit in man is not "morally sentient;" but the man himself—the one whom God calls man—whom he made of the dust of the ground, and to whom all the moral laws of God are addressed. We have every reason to believe that the spirit, or breath of life," is just as perfect and active in the young child, as in the man; and as it is claimed that this comes from God, and must consequently be pure, why have not all the same moral character, if it is in the spirit? Again, as it has been clearly shown from the Scriptures that men and all animals have the same spirit; it would follow, according to "Doubting Castle" theology, that men and beasts all have the same moral character! "Why then, if so, may not Christ as well have died for beasts as men?" We "confess the thought startles us!!! But when we look at the matter in the light of Bible truth, and consider that the moral character is dependent upon a certain organism properly developed, all is plain. With this view, we see why the infant and the idiot have no moral character; the brain, the organ of thought, is not sufficiently developed. The beasts are not "morally sentient," because their brain is not organized with moral faculties. The old man, who becomes a second child, entirely helpless, like the infant; whose physical system has outlived his intellectual and moral faculties, ceases to be morally sentient, because the brain is not sufficiently active to render him accountable. The raving maniac, like a man dreaming, is not morally accountable, because he has lost the control of his mental powers. Yet, in all these cases, they have the same spirit of life that other men have, without which, neither man nor beast can live. Hence the unavoidable conclusion, that the moral character, or man's accountability, is in no way affected by the spirit or "breath of life" breathed into his nostrils. This spirit has no moral attributes before it is received by man and beast, while in them, or after its departure. It is no more a part of man than the steam is of the engine, the attraction of the clock, or the wind of the ship. As nothing but the "breath of life" was put into man after his creation, we find no proof in the Bible that any thing but "the breath of life" leaves him at death. Consequently, we find no proof yet, that man has a spirit that is conscious when he is dead.

☞ No one has a right to do as he [illegible]

Editorial Notices.

[illegible] Bro. Howe's report of our discussion with Mr. Ballou will appear in the next number. If [any] wish for extra copies, a few may be obtained.

☞ We have received No. 8 of the "Emphatic Diaglott," published by Benjamin Wilson, Geneva, Ill. It includes Luke from chap. 10 : 25 to 18 : 17. This valuable translation should be in the hands of every Bible reader. Price 20 cts. a number, or $2.00 for twelve Nos. The whole New Testament will be comprised in some twenty-seven Nos.

"A TRACT for the Times. The true source of Immortality." By R. V. Lyon, North Augusta, C. W. For sale by the author. We do not know the price—should think about 3 cts.

Close of the Volume.

This is the last number of Vol. X. We are rejoiced to be able to say, that hitherto the Lord has prospered us in endeavoring to scatter his truth over the world, for the purpose of persuading our fellow beings to prepare for the coming judgment.

We wish to say to the many who send us letters of encouragement, such epistles are to us like cool water to a thirsty soul. They are appreciated; but we forbear publishing them, lest some should think we are seeking the praise of men.

We shall endeavor to make the Crisis just such a paper as every christian needs in these last days. We consider our heading —"The World's Crisis"—in harmony with our position in this earth's history. The great day of the Lord is at hand. We request the prayers of our patrons, that we may be faithful in sounding the alarm to this last generation. Let every reader of the Crisis do all he can to extend its circulation. Now is the time to work. Let no effort be spared to benefit our fellow beings by throwing light in their pathway.

Come, Brn. and Srs., let us arouse from sleep, and engage anew in the vineyard of the Lord. The truth we hold so dear is rapidly spreading, but the enemy is all awake to smother it and hedge up its progress. Let our zeal be a match for theirs, and we shall see glorious results.

We will send a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, at Seneca Falls, post paid, for every new paying subscriber for one year; and a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit," for every new paying subscriber for six months.

We anticipate that the events of the coming year will be of very great interest. And a little effort on the part of each of our readers may be the means of arresting the attention of many careless ones, causing them to prepare to meet the Lord joyfully. Let none make excuses, but take hold of the work at once. Now, to-day, this evening, begin and PERSEVERE.

We hope all our present subscribers will remember the time has come to pay in advance for the next volume. It is much better for us, and far more pleasant for the subscribers, to pay in advance, than to adopt the credit system. We believe we have the most prompt class of paying subscribers of any religious paper. We feel confident that we enjoy the approbation of the Lord in publishing it, and our prayer is, that it may be continued no longer than it will be for his glory in sustaining the cause of truth. Brethren and sisters, let us have a place in your prayers, that we may have special wisdom for our responsible situation.

Omens.

The omens that indicate the second coming of Christ, as very near at hand, are constantly multiplying. We have recently received several numbers of a new work on prophecy, "Fulfilled and unfulfilled," by J. F. Bird, a defender of the Roman Catholic religion; in which he says, when speaking of Rev. 17: 17, where it is declared, "God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled;"—that "the words of God, probably, will be fulfilled between the 23d of October, 1864, and the 23d of April, 1868."

He further says: "By the late Italian war—the war of 1859—the same two Catholic powers [France and Austria] that altered, broke up, or joined the toes, have now repaired and arranged them again. Now, after the war in Italy, the Catholics have got all their kingdoms—all the toes—ready, all ready to be given up. The Italian war of 1859 was, as it were, for this very purpose. And it ceased suddenly when this object was accomplished. The Italian war raised up an additional and necessary kingdom—the kingdom of Venetia. . . . So that viewing the late Italian war of 1859 in a Scriptural point of view, the object of it was to get the toes of the statue— . . . . ten catholic kingdoms—ready for the beast."

The writer makes Mohammedanism the Little Horn, and says, "The Little Horn, will come to his end on the 23d of April 1868." He says the Savior will appear to do this work [illegible] his own language, "Jesus will [illegible] appearance [illegible] Hor[n] then will the Sanctuary be cleansed." He says, "We are [now in the] time of the end;" and the [illegible] ment" . . . . will close and finish in the year 1869."

He remarks, "The seventh head of the beast, the Little Horn, the man of sin, and Antichrist, are different names for one individual person; and this person is . . . . the seventh and last head of the beast, as he will be the riser up and head of the future heathen empire; by his being broken and destroyed, this beast will be destroyed. The beast which St. John says: was, and is not, and shall come up out of the bottomless pit, and go into destruction."

This writer thinks a bitter persecution is coming on the church at Rome, through the agency of the beast in Rev. 17th chap.; which will continue three and a half years, when the Roman Catholic church will be delivered by the second coming of Christ in 1868.

It is a remarkable fact that Catholics, Protestants, and Spiritualists, are all looking for the coming of Christ within the brief period of seven or eight years. The Spiritualists tell us Christ is now making his second advent in Spiritualism; and that soon the masses will believe it. That the majority of this last generation will turn Spiritualists, we will not dispute; but the Bible settles the point forever, that when Christ comes again, he will appear personally to reward his followers, and cut off his enemies. It seems certain that he will soon be seen "coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Our faith in this was never stronger than now. It is truly a "blessed hope."

Correspondence.

From J. A. Sober.

BRO. GRANT:—I have lately visited Gratiot County, partly on business matters, but did not forget to be "instant in season and out of season" in proclaiming the good news of the kingdom at hand.

Gratiot County is a newly settled portion of our state. It was settled mainly under what is termed "The Graduation Act," in 1854, and therefore is only about six years old. The people of that county have experienced not a little difficulty and hardship, in settling, it being mostly heavy timber land; but they have now obtained such a foot-hold that will enable them to live and go on with their improvements.

My meetings were held at Alma, a village located on Pine River and in the northwest part of the county. I hope and pray the seed sown there may spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

About the 10th of Jan., I left the north and directed my course to Salem, Washtenaw Co., one of the oldest districts of our State. My parents live there,—there I was mainly brought up and educated; there I first heard the proclamation of the Advent near and kindred truths. Thirteen years ago this present winter, Bro. and Sr. Seymour hung up their prophetic charts in our school-house in Salem. Well, I went, listened, reflected, and thoroughly investigated the points under discussion, and eventuated in my conclusions where I now am, and have been for the last thirteen years, believing the Advent near. I was quite young, it is true, but I grasped the truths proclaimed with an unyielding faith and strong reliance in God. I felt I had a duty to do in warning the world of the coming crisis now impending over the guilty nations; and for this purpose I am in the field of moral contest; the war is waged, and the battle must be fought. May the Lord give us grace to "fight the good fight of faith," and "preach the truth in love.

Having finished my visit in Salem, I returned home Jan. 28th, and at the request of Bro. Seymour, accompanied him to Kinderhook, Branch Co., to aid him in holding a series of meetings then in progress. Our meetings were well attended, and a good interest awakened in the community. Prejudice and sectarianism gave way before the light of truth. One soul was converted to the gospel and baptized in the hope of eternal life when Jesus comes. We hope others will follow in due time.

Cambria, Mich.

From W. Payne.

BRO. GRANT:—Thought I would like once more to drop a few lines for the Crisis; but must confess I feel too much like the men who would run and carry news to king David, but when ushered into his presence they were found destitute of the news they thought they possessed, and so the king had to tell them to stand by.

Truly it is better to be a lame learner than an unwise, hasty runner. Better come to the fountain and fill our earthen vessels with wisdom, than run off to our neighbors and empty out our folly. Better to be sensible of our poverty, than proud of our fancied wealth. Better humble ourselves to enter in honestly by the door, than climb up over the wall and be arrested as thieves and robbers. Better not to have known the way of life than to be found at last without a passport. Better, far better to bend [illegible] God's mercy, than [illegible] under his severe judgments. But best of all, to sit down low at the feet [of Jesus,] and learn of him who was meek [and lowly] of heart, and thus find rest for [the soul;] here alone is the best place that [can be] found. True wisdom can be derived from no other source; for in Christ Jesus are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. But not hidden so that they cannot be found by any; no, no; but like the precious gold that is hid away in the earth, which men will dig and suffer much and long to obtain, while thousands have walked over it and never spied the hidden treasure: so here; while the wise and prudent of this world stumble over redemption's gracious plan, the simple, humble, child of God, of no account in the eyes of the world, takes the mighty axe of faith and prayer, and digs, and digs, and daily finds these very hidden treasures by which he is becoming wise unto salvation. Oh how good it is, when the enlightening Spirit of the Lord shows us how very poor in and of ourselves we are, and [what] wealth we are heirs to, by virtue of our union with Christ our living Head!

Most men think they have eternal life abiding in them. But this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. Therefore, he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. I can but see the goodness and mercy of God in placing this eternal life out of our hands until we are placed out of the reach of sin and the devil. For my part, I am glad it has not been entrusted to my charge; for doubtless, I should be cheated out of it long before I get through this ensnaring world; but when I see how the Father has displayed his wisdom and his love in depositing for safe keeping that invaluable boon in his dear Son, my heart rejoices, and I can walk comfortably and confidently amid all the changing scenes, perplexities and temptations of the present sorrowing state, and look forward with blissful anticipation when the whole church complete in Christ, shall be presented with the priceless gift, the crown of life that fadeth not away!

Springfield, Mass.

From J. A. L.

BRO. GRANT:—I have lived here nearly a year, and have never heard anything said about the speedy coming of our Savior; but, on the contrary, ministers are teaching the conversion of the whole world prior to that event.

Considerable many tracts have been scattered here, but I am afraid they are not read as they ought to be. H. L. Hastings preached here one Sabbath, morning and evening, and succeeded in getting the church for preaching, in the evening. General satisfaction was given; and many have said they wished he would come again. His preaching brought tears to the eyes of some infidels. People appear to be willing to hear the truth, and I hope Bro. Hastings, or some one else, will soon come this way again.

Great good might be done in this place. When I first moved here, the subject was new; I commenced giving away tracts, but people were afraid of them at first; but I think if some of your ministers would come here and hold meetings, it would be the means of a greater awakening to truth. There is quite an interest already. I hope to see more done shortly.

I am the only subscriber for the Crisis in this place. I have made some effort to get subscriptions, but have not succeeded yet.

Kauppange, N. Y.

From H. T. Hart.

BRO. GRANT:—Truth is gaining ground. Some are taking a bold stand. To God be all the glory. I hope ere long to add still others to your list of subscribers. I mean, at least, that all who will shall have an opportunity to read mine. I believe it has been the instrument in the hands of God of imparting light to those that were in darkness. I feel to-night that I have enlisted under the blood-stained banner of Prince Immanuel, and I mean to be ready to do my Master's bidding. Although I have occupied thus far a defensive position, I feel like taking the offensive and pushing the battle to the enemy's gate; and if I am compelled to retreat, I hope to be able to spike my own guns so that they cannot be turned upon me. I feel that this is an important point to be considered in our spiritual warfare. There are too many that push the battle well for a season, and perhaps find themselves in the enemy's camp; but for want of proper care and attention, they lay down their arms just in time for the enemy to take them up and turn them against them.

May God help us to so run as not to weary, so fight as to win the crown. Let us see to it that the armor is buckled closely around us, that there be no loose joints wherein an arrow shot at a venture may find a lodging place.

Buckland, Ct.

☞ It is related of Rev. Dr. Doddridge, that on a certain occasion as he was passing along the streets of London, he was greatly discouraged and depressed in spirit; when from a cellar-way, which was open, he heard a voice embodying these words, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be." He regarded them as life from the dead; his spirit was refreshed; his soul strengthened; the clouds disappeared, and he went on his way rejoicing, because of this precious promise of the Bible thus unexpectedly wafted to his ears.

INDEX TO VOLUME X.

MISCELLANEOUS.

[illegible]

Take care of your reputation ... 40
The two-horned beast
Thanksgiving
The first thing
Travels West
Trust in God
The secret of happiness
True state of Protestantism
The judgment
Twilight musings
The Bible
Tears
The wages of sin is death
Thoughts for the times
The spiritual temple
Testimony
Theological difficulties contrasted
To those seeking the baptism of the spirit
Thoughts on the New Year
The righteous not forsaken
Thoughts
The origin of Christ
The Bedouin Arabs
The Father's love
Unfulfilled prophecy
Unappreciated talent
Vinegar
Woman's position in the church ... 1, 13, 16, 20
What must be done?
Wesleyan campmeeting
What is good preaching?
What will they say?
What can I do?
Warnings
Work for God
Watching and doing
What is spirit?
We love his appearing
Worship in singing
Why art thou cast down?
Waking for the beloved
You profess it

CORRESPONDENCE.

[illegible]

EDITORIAL.

A storm gathering
Affairs in Italy
A challenge
A new tract
An honest confession
Affairs in Europe
Albany
Bills
[illegible]

Relief for the distressed ... 66, 70, 74, 78, 82, 86, 90, 94, 98, 102
Reviews ... 74
Sheol ... 26, 30, 34
Sandy Hill ... 50
Seneca Falls ... 58
Stirring times ... 58
State of Europe ... 62
Strange progress ... 66
State of Italy ... 94
To our correspondents ... 2
The wonderful man ... 14
The Sandwich Islands ... 14
Tendency of Spiritualism ... 22
Trance speakers ... 22
The soul ... 22
The broad church ... 26
The suspense of faith ... 34
Theological hell ... 34
The state of Europe ... 38
The six thousand years ... 42
The crisis in Italy ... 42
The five hells ... 46
Theological poetry ... 50
Truth advancing ... 50
The "sick man" ... 50
Things as they are ... 54
The discussion ... 62
The Christian Lyre ... 66
The dawning year ... 70
The new hymn book ... 74
The Pope and the congress ... 94
The coming man ... 98
The demand ... 98
The Boston conference ... 102

Work for Christ ... 2
Wilbraham campmeeting ... 6, 10

POETRY.

All thy works praise Thee ... 1
A leaf from early christian experience ... 17
And the Lord turned, etc. ... 28
An evening prayer ... 32
A prayer meeting song ... 57
Awake! ye saints ... 73
A word of love ... 104
Be zealous ... 21
Be with us ... 4
Be ye patient ... 56
Be ye kind one to another ... 92
Bearing the cross ... 64
Christmas hymn ... 63
Clinging ... 92
Come! ... 104
Days of mourning ... 36
Death ... 44
" ... 52
Dignity of the ministry ... 60
Endure ... 13
Flowers ... 4
Good tidings ... 1
Haste not ... 4
Hymn of trust ... 44
Heavenly mansions ... 52
Internal evidence ... 21
Incompleteness ... 33
I'm sad and lonely ... 53
I know that my Redeemer liveth ... 76
I'm glad salvation's free ... 88
I'm glad there's a rest ... 100
Lines written on the fly leaf of a Bible ... 16
Lines ... 20
Longing for rest ... 41
Like Jesus ... 52
Lovest thou me? ... 56
Loss and gain ... 68
Lines ... 72
Lines for meditation ... 89
Live for something ... 93
Lines ... 101
My heart is fixed ... 5
Medicine ... 29
My fatherland ... 37
Musings ... 60
Musings ... 61
Not the earthly ... 33
Never say fail ... 61
On the death of C. W. Perkins ... 8
" " " J. H. Howard ... 12
Our rest ... 38
Poetical curiosity ... 12
Pathways in Palestine ... 68
Patience ... 80
Prayer ... 84
Praying in spirit ... 104
Kitchter's prayer in sickness ... 8
Resurrection of the just ... 9
Requiem ... 12
Retrospection ... 61
Speak low to me ... 20
Signs of the times ... 24
Song ... 48
Stanzas ... 48
Stand up for Jesus ... 69
The kingdom is at hand ... 4
The Lambs of Jesus ... 4
To the pilgrim ... 18
The soul waiting ... 16
" balm of Gilead ... 17
" servant is not above his Lord ... 20
" bell at sea ... 24
To H. M. Johnson ... 25
The far off land ... 29
Thoughts on hearing the tolling bell ... 37
Thy word is a lamp, etc. ... 40
The end of all things is at hand ... 44
To the heavy laden ... 49
The death of the flowers ... 49
The chief of sinners ... 53
To the watchman ... 64
The Deliverer ... 72
Thy will be done ... 76
Treasures of thought ... 77
The meeting place ... 80
The suffering way ... 84
To J—— ... 85
The Bible ... 89
The city of gold ... 97
The choir of angels ... 100
Voices at the throne ... 96
Voice of the flowers ... 72
We are voyagers ... 9
We're passing away ... 28
Who can give the christian rest? ... 40
Where your treasure is, etc. ... 45, 56
We are going, etc. ... 81
Where sorrow will be no more ... 92

HYGIENE.

A treatise on premature decay, etc. ... 72
About the feet ... 64
Babies and water ... 48
Beards ... 72
Baths ... 104
Care of the eyes ... 8
Change of clothing ... 40
Colds cured ... 48
Cure of croup ... 64
Colds ... 80
Diet—the ministry ... 40, 56
Danger of reading by twilight ... 88
Eating and sleeping ... 64
Extracts from the Chinese art of health ... 104
Food ... 8
From E. Macomber ... 48
Flowers in windows ... 56
Hygiene and the ministry ... 16, 24, 32
How to get sick ... 24
How to make sleep refreshing ... 32, 88
How to go to bed ... 72
H. Martineau on dress ... 88
How to burn coal ... 88
Is tobacco poisonous? ... 80
Method of extracting foreign bodies from eyes ... 64
"Our Home" ... 16
Public speakers, etc. ... 96
Suicidal women ... 56
Scrofula ... 80
Sunday pig dinners ... 88
The seeds of consumption ... 16
The feet in winter time ... 24
Too bad, too bad! ... 56
The glorious sunshine ... 64
Temperance facts ... 97
The causes of the early decay of Amer. youth ... 104
Useful medical hints ... 56

READING FOR YOUTH.

A mouse in the pantry ... 4
A child's confidence in her father ... 12
A boy's anger ... 92
Beautiful allegory ... 44
Coming to Jesus ... 20
Counsels to the young ... 28
Children, be prompt ... 68
Don't tattle ... 52
Faith ... 20
Facts for the young ... 60
Influence of kind words ... 20
Kind manners ... 84
Little children can do good ... 44
[illegible]

Manners ... 36
Mt. Ararat ... 100
Nothing finished ... 4
On prayer ... 12
Short sermons for little folks ... 28
Spare moments ... 52
The largest half for God ... 12
The lamb and the dove ... 20
The child king ... 36
The two rules, and how they worked ... 76
The secret ... 60, 68
Table manners ... 100

OBITUARY.

Phebe A Haskins 3, David M Beach 7, Naomi M Smith 7, Ellen Flint 7, Emma L Eccleston 11, Martha M Sinclair 11, Emily A Potter 19, Lydia Flood 19, Arietta M Tibbets 19, Corletta Field 23, Saml. Clark 23, Carrie E Chapman 23, Addie M Rice 23, Alice B Dennett 31, Jemima Frost 31, John Longstaff 31, Mary Gifford 31, Ellen E Parker 35, Betsey Mattison 39, Josiah Osborn 39, Martha Rice 43, Huldah Patten 47, Albert H Webb 47, Sanborn B Foss 47, C Stone 51, Lucretia S Wentworth 51, Carrie E Brayton 51, Elizabeth Twombly 51, J B Hazleton 51, Stephen G Chapman 55, Orange Walker 59, Mary E Munson 59, Caroline O. McCulloch 59, Chas. Harris 63, Maria E Lisler 67, David Briscoe 71, Elizabeth R Davis 71, Julia Anthony 75, Sarah S Flagg 75, Sarah E Tomlinson 79, Caroline Whewell 79, Justus Harlow 79, C Brown 87, Mary S Young 87, Harriet M Brazee 91, Peter Schneider 91, Chas. H Chilson 91, Harriet Chilson 91, Lucy Blood 95, Cynthia Winch 95, Jacob Chamberlin 95, Dea. John Smith 103, Mary Jane Wait 103, Emery Wait 103.

BOOK NOTICES.

A treatise on premature decay, etc. ... 54
Anti-tobacco Journal ... 70, 51
A Tract for the Times. The true source of Immortality ... 102
Bible Examiner ... 59
Debt and Grace ... 58
Englishman's Greek Concordance ... 7
Emphatic Diaglott ... 23, 64, 102
Fables of Infidelity ... 27
Home ... 7
Life ... 7
Life Insurance ... 7
Nature's first principles ... 26
Rich man and Lazarus ... 46
Soul and spirit ... 3
The Sabbath ... 15
" Golden Rule ... 26
" Christian Lyre ... 47, 55
" Household Magazine ... 70
" Time appointed ... 74
" Great Controversy ... 76
" Voice of the Church ... 78
" Destiny of the earth under its coming King ... 91
Will all men be saved? ... 7, 26

For the Crisis.

One Aspect not All.

We often hear one aspect of truth presented and insisted on, as if it were the whole. Hence, other aspects of truth are ignored. Portions, which would enlarge the view, elevate the character, and sanctify (or set apart) the "whole body, soul and spirit" to the highest sphere of christian service, are cut off from such. Their influence is so far circumscribed; and the Lord is dis-honored, nay, "wounded in the house of his friends!"

Where both Testaments, and many prophets and apostles speak of the land, of Israel, of Zion, of the Messiah's work as to the spiritual temple, (the temple taught by the Spirit, as that revealed in Holy Scripture) and of the kingdom, with the "reign" of the saints "one thousand years;" after Babylon and the beast, and the devil, shall have been hurled to the bottomless pit; we "cannot please God" by unbelief, nor *dis*belief.—Heb 11 : 6. "If thou wilt believe—only believe—(then) all things (seem and) are possible," that God has revealed. But to unbelief, no part—nothing is possible!

Abraham got his "more excellent name" by trusting God's word without a voucher. He believeth in God "who quickeneth the dead; and calleth those things that be not (nor ever had been) as though they were!"—Rom. 4 : 17. "The gospel preached afore to Abraham" (Gal. 3,) embraced all that pertains to the promised seed—to his personal agency, in his first and second advent, and to the results yet to be seen in the temple; the city; the church of the first born, as to their royal priesthood; the kingdom, and the land of promise. Nay, that gospel of the blessed God assures "the gate" (the post of honor and dominion) to Abraham's seed; and a blessing to "all the nations of the earth".—Gen. 22 : 14—18; Ps. 22 : 26—28; 72 : 10—20; Dan. 7 : 14; Rom. 15 : 8—12; Rev. 15 : 1—4; 20 : 3—8.

Israel, the kingdom of the ten tribes, and Judah, stand forth openly revealed in both the Old and New Testaments on to the end. God speaks of them by prophets and apostles, as blinded and dispersed during this dispensation.—Dan. 8; Rom. 11 : 25—27; Matt. 24. Then, to fulfill His oath-confirmed-covenant, He will restore them as one nation, in the land of Israel,—place His sanctuary in their midst, that the heathen, or nations, may know it.—Ezek. 37; Isa. 2 : 1—4; Micah 3 : 12 to 4 : 1—8; Matt. 12 : 17—20.

The Bride—the Lamb's wife—is yet distinct from Israel. The saints have a "more excellent name than they." They are the "many sons"—joint heirs of all things promised in HEAVEN as well as in earth! For this they "are vessels unto honor" and are being "brought to glory,"—the glory of the kingdom. They will be "kings and priests" perfected in all that pertains to an heavenly dominion.

There is both time and place for all that God has spoken; as to the church gathered during the gospel age; as to Israel and Judah, now dispersed and waiting through "the times of the Gentiles" to be gathered to the Redeemer, at his "return to Zion;" and as to the "all nations," in "the ends of the earth." "My counsel shall stand," saith the Lord. This counsel ought to stand, says every trustful, humble heart.

The girdle is the truth. If the loins of our minds are so girded, these things will come in their place; and not hang all at loose ends, crossing, contradicting and confusing us and others too.

No one part or aspect of truth in [illegible] can be the whole; but all and every part must be. Of course, all parts are "essential" to their place in perfecting the whole.

The seamless garment of Jesus, let no one rend. The all perfect "girdle," let none sever. The temple, city, land, kings, priests, and Jewish and Gentile subjects, are all parts of the one grand and glorious whole.

J. B. C.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Rutland, Vt., Jan. 25th, 1860, DEA. JOHN SMITH, in the seventy-ninth year of his age.

Bro. Smith was for thirty-four years a member of the Baptist church in this town, and for thirty-two years one of its deacons. In 1858 he heard preached, by Elder Grant, the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, eternal life only through Christ, the destruction of the wicked, and Christ's personal reign upon the earth soon to be realized: and although he had passed his three-score and ten, yet his mind, unshattered, embraced, to him, those new doctrines, and he could talk of them as clearly as though he had been trained in them from a child. Most of the time since he embraced these views, he has, in consequence of ill-health, been deprived of attending the prayer meeting: but he has had his Bible, which has constantly been his companion since his conversion; its truths were precious to him, and his faith was reduced to practice. His daily life and conversation, and his strict honesty in his dealings with the world, speak more than words can express; and as our pastor said at the funeral,—"To attempt to describe his christian character would be like painting the diamond."

Bro. Smith was a practical christian. He united with the Advent Church in this place about two years since. His sickness was short, he being able to attend family prayer until within a few days of his death. He said, "I shall not sleep long—I shall soon awake in youthful bloom, crowned with immortality."

His funeral was attended at the Advent Chapel; sermon by the pastor, Elder M. Batchelor, from 1 Thess. 4 : 13, from which was shown the grounds of our hope. A deep solemnity appeared in the congregation. The widow is comforted with the same hope which animated her husband, and expects soon to meet him in glory. W.

Rutland, Vt., Feb. 14, 1860.

Died, in Washington, Erie Co., Penn., Nov. 13th, of typhoid fever after an illness of about four weeks, MARY JANE WAIT, aged fifteen years.

Also, Nov. 19th, EMERY WAIT, aged eighteen years, with the same fever, of the most malignant kind.

These were the youngest daughter and son of Adin and Phebe Wait. It lacked four hours of one week between their deaths. Mary died on Saturday morn, half-past six; Emery, half-past two the next Saturday morn. Their funeral sermons were preached each Sabbath following their death, by Bro. Dean, formerly a Christian minister. Each ministered to the comfort and consolation of our grief-stricken parents, afflicted brothers and sisters, and to sympathizing friends and neighbors.

Expositor please copy. C. C. WAIT.

Notices, &c.

Read This!

We will send a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, at Seneca Falls, post paid, for every new paying subscriber for one year; and a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit," for every new paying subscriber for six months.

Notice.

BRO GRANT:—Permit me to say through the Crisis to the friends where I have held conferences and meetings; if there are any letters in the post offices in either place or places for me, will they have the kindness to see that they are remailed to Earlville, Illinois, at once, and oblige your humble servant and friend, WALTER PRATT.

☞ Bro. T. M. Latham's post office address is Lowell, Mass.

Bro. Latham has been a preacher of the gospel for several years; and has been supplying the Advent Church at Lowell a part of the time the past winter to good acceptance. He is now at liberty to go where the door may open. The brethren wishing his services may address him as above. J. S. WHITE.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. Hiram Munger will preach in Boston (Chapman Hall) .... Sunday, March 4th

J. B. Cook will preach in Edenboro, Pa. .... Sunday, March 4th

Eld. C. Goodrich will preach in
Northfield, Ct. .... Sunday, March 11th
South Farms, Ct. .... March 14th
Roxbury, (as Bro. Teeple may appoint) Sunday, March 18th
Brookfield .... March 21st
Pawlings, N. Y. .... Sunday, March 25th

Bro. J. W. Crabtree appoints to preach in Canton, St., Ct. .... Friday evening, March 2d
Unionville, Ct. .... Sunday, March 4th

Eld. H. F. Carpenter appoints to preach in Unionville, Ct., Tuesday evening .... March 6th, and as many of the following evenings as thought best. W. J. HALE.

J. K. Bellows will be in
Westport, Mass. .... March 6th—8th
Fairhaven .... March 11th

J. G. Smith will be in
Sandwich Centre .... March 11th
Meredith Village .... March 18th

APPOINTMENTS FOR E. KILLINGLY, CT.

Eld. D. A. Jones .... March 4th and 11th
Eld. H. Hopkins .... March 18th
Eld. H. F. Carpenter .... March 25th

Meetings commence at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Brethren wishing to correspond with the church at East Killingly, Ct., will direct their letters to Warren Taft. J. HEMENWAY.

I will preach as follows:—
Dover (Conference) .... March 1st
Worcester, Mass .... Sunday, March 11th
Providence, R. I. .... Sunday, March 18th
Danielsonville, Conn. .... March 23d and over the following Sunday
Warwick Plain, R. I. .... Sunday, March 31st
S. W. BISHOP.

APPOINTMENTS FOR DANIELSONVILLE, CT.

A. Higgins of Palmer .... March 5th
Hiram Munger .... March 12th
In behalf of the Church,
H. F. CARPENTER.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

L. P. J.—Your letter will be answered when the Editor returns.

J. W. Marden.—The terms are, three copies quarterly for one dollar. Address Geo. Trask, Fitchburg, Mass.

A. Arnold, E. Randolph.—Your paper is paid for to the end of this volume—one week more.

Eld. P. B. Morgan.—Money credited Feb. 5th.

W. W. Boyden.—By sending to Uriah Smith, Battle Creek, Mich.

C. B. Turner.—Yes. But we prefer to have the whole series at once.

H. V. Reed.—The price of the work would be some $18.00 or $20.00. We could obtain one for you.

Cash Receipts.

H M Kenfield 230, $1.15; M Broga 240, $1.22; J M Tozier 256, $4.40; R L Partridge 230, $1.50; R Wallace 256, 77 cents.

E R Knight 246, Mrs. C Button 256, Mrs. C Sober 234, H L Bradley 255, S F Rogers 255, J Haresign 234, T Chambers 260, E S Robbins 279, P Curtis 256, W Nichols 234, S Woodruff 253, M E Davis, Jr., 256, G S Hastings 260, A B Grant 260, E M Mudgett 233, E D Hutchinson 256, A Burnett 260, E Butterfield 260, E Mann 239, P E Armstrong 260, W H Jellison 256, J H Cox 227, G W Alley 201, S Ayres 256,—$1.00 each.

Ed. Allen 260, E Heath 234, B F Elliot 124, A Waggoner 252, M McDow 286, D McDow 282, P Tibbals 246, G D Barnes 240, C Severance 240, W Parsons 284, R. Boston 286,—$2.00 each.

Books and Tracts.

A P Allen 28 cts, Ed. Allen $1.00, J W Smith 18 cts, S F Rogers 10 cts, E P Censer 13 cts, G W Hurd 14 cts, M Broga 28 cts, T P Hedrick and J W Moran $3.00, A C Hand $1.25, J P Longee 57 cts, W Nichols 27 cts, J M Jenness 28 cts, G S Hastings 25 cts, J Kelsey, Jr., $2.25, R Knight 30 cts, D Parsons 6 cts, E J Marden $1.02, A W Sibley $2.27, J M Tozier 60 cts, B C Bancroft 51, W Stark 56 cts, A D Hearn 39 cts. Eld. J Billings $4.00, R Mann 24 cts, P E Armstrong $1.27, Eld. J B Fitch $2.07, D Dudley $1.06.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

Discussion of the Doctrine of The State of the Dead and Punishment of the Wicked; between W. W. Clayton and M. Grant. Price 25 cts; postage 3 cts. Bound 40 cts; postage 9 cts. 1-4th off per dozen.

Human Destiny. A Discussion: Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all? By C. F. Hudson and Sylvanus Cobb. 478 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00 post paid.

The Nature of Faith, and the Evils of Sect. By the late W. H. Starr. With a Memoir and Notes by C. F. Hudson. 289 pp. 12mo. Price 50 cts. Postage 16 cts.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen. 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid, $1.25.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Sheldon. [illegible] A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $5.00.

Life and [illegible] Munger, including many [illegible] connected with campmeetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work and will be read with interest by all. Price 50 cts—postage 10 cents.

Words of Warning. 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed: or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. MARY A. SEYMOUR. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $5.00 per hundred,—8 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Geneseo, N. Y. Price $1, postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single, or $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 3 cts.—postage 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms: or, the kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $6.00 per hundred, 90 cts. per dozen, 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. S. BROOKS, No. 8 Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Waite, Warwick, R. I.:—

The Harp, by Elder Himes; 200 Stories for Children; Satanic Delusion; Bible Hell; Great Controversy.

We have also on hand the following

PUBLICATIONS
of
H. L. HASTINGS,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor; edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 420 pp. $1 00
The Great Controversy between God and Man: its Origin, Progress, and End; by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 167 pp. [illegible]
Reasons for My Hope, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 123 pp. Paper, 30 cts. Cloth 50
Forever with the Lord, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 00
Earth's Destiny, as revealed in Scripture, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 00
Tracts on Prophecy, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 50
Tracts on Immortality, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 50
Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith, by Robert Patterson. 12mo. 320 pp. 75
The Infidel's Fate, by a converted Infidel. Cloth gilt, 25
Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, by Wm. Ramsey, D. D., edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 120 pp. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40
Pauline Theology; The Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment, as Taught by Paul, by H. L. Hastings. 84 pp. Paper, 15
The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life, by H. L. Hastings. Paper, 87 pp. 10
Tracts of 24 Pages,—3 cts. single; $1 for 1600 pages—by mail 1200 pp. for $1.

The Church not in Darkness,	by H. L. H.	pages.	24
The Three Worlds,	by H. L. H.	"	24
The Last Days,	by H. L. H.	"	24
Plain Truths,	by H. L. H.	"	24
Will all men be saved?	by H. L. H.	"	24
Voice of Warning	by D. T. Taylor	"	24
The New Heavens and Earth,	" "	"	24
Ancient Landmarks, 6 Nos.,		"	24
Olive Leaves, 9 Nos.	by H. L. H. &c.	"	36
Important Questions, 9 Nos.	by H. L. H.	"	36
State of the Dead,	by John Milton	"	24
The Intermediate State,	by H. G.	"	24
Destiny of the Wicked	by H. L. H.	"	12
Future Punishment,	by H. G.	"	12
The Key of Truth,	by W. S.	"	12
Man's Future State		"	12
Letter on Dress	by Adoniram Judson	"	12
The Day of Judgment,	by St. Cyril	"	12
Outline of the Coast,	by A Voyager	"	8
The Night Cometh,	by John Adey	"	8
Gems, 9 Nos., poetry,	by H. L. H.	"	12
One Thing		"	8
The Coming and Kingdom of Christ,		"	4
The Duration of the Earth	by A. Clarke	"	4
Hope and Duty of the Church,	M. Henry	"	4
The Restitution,	by St. Cyril	"	4
A Warning Voice,	by Cotton Mather	"	4
Loving Christ's Appearing,	by Baxter	"	4
Little Children, Love one another		"	4
The One Resting Place,	by H. Bonar	"	4
My Friend,	by H. L. H.	"	4
Abundant Grace		"	4
Woodrous Love		"	4
Go in Peace	"	"	4
Living Water	"	"	4
The Banner	Anonymous	"	4
The Blood of Christ		"	4
Are you a Christian?	by H. L. H.	"	4
Why not Now?	"	"	4
Are you Pardoned?	"	"	4
Are you Safe?	"	"	4
Are you Saved?	"	"	4
Do you Pray?	"	"	4
When Will He Come?	by J. C. Ryle	"	1
Statement of Account	by H. L. H.	"	1
Man in Death	By Bishop Law	"	4
Forty Questions on Immortality		"	4

SCRIPTURE BRANCHES.

No. 1. The Destiny of the Wicked	"	1
No. 2. The State of the Dead	"	1
No. 3. The Coming of Jesus	"	1
No. 4. The Resurrection	"	1
No. 5. Plain Truths	"	1
No. 6. The Judgment	"	1

POETRY.

Brother, Shall we Meet?	by H. L. H.	"	2
Sister, Shall we Meet?	"	"	2
Stand up for Jesus!	"	"	2
The Harvest is Past	"	"	2
Beyond!	"	"	1
At Rest!	"	"	1
We would see Jesus	by Josephine	"	1
A Little While	by J. C.	"	1

LEAFLETS FOR LETTERS.

Life Insurance, Envelope Size	H. L. H.	"	12
Home	"	"	4
Lost, Lost	"	"	8
Peace in Christ	"	"	4
Worth Knowing	"	"	4
All things are Yours	"	"	4
Now	"	"	4
Assurance	"	"	4
About God	"	"	4

THE foregoing Books and Pamphlets will be sent by mail, postage paid, upon the receipt of the amount of their respective prices. Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons who send $8, with the order, shall receive $12. worth of books at the retail prices. TRACTS are sent by mail, 1200 pages, on the receipt of a dollar. When sent by express, or at the expense of the buyer, 1600 pages will be sent for one dollar. Terms cash. Persons who desire to do good can obtain Four hundred tracts, of four pages each, for $1. These may be widely distributed, and open the way for religious conversation. Persons may thus be a blessing to those around them. [illegible] can have any of these tracts sent to them free, by remitting stamps to pay the postage. [illegible] can have specimen copies of the tracts and pamphlets sent free. All letters, orders, and remittances should be addressed to the Publisher,

H. L. HASTINGS, 43 [illegible] St., PROVIDENCE, R. I.

January, 1860.

 These publications can be obtained in Boston of Miles Grant, 167 Hanover st.; New York: G. W. Young, 138 William st.; Philadelphia: A. W. Porter, [illegible]; and they can be ordered through publishers through all Booksellers.

[illegible] Bibles of the British and Foreign Bible Society [illegible] references between the verses, $1.50 to [illegible] marginal references [illegible] between verses, $2.00 to $2.10. [illegible] $1.75. [illegible] to $1.75. Diamond, marginal references, 75 cts to $3. Binding, Roan, Calf and Morocco; these make the difference in prices.

Original Contributions.

"And the Spirit and the Bride say, Come!"—Rev. xxii. 17.

Come, for all things now are ready,
  To the marriage supper come;
For the Bridegroom soon, invites thee
  To his glorious nuptial home.

Come to Eden's fairest verdure,
  On the bright celestial shore;
Come, partake of joys eternal,—
  Peace which lasts forevermore.

Come where streams of liquid crystal
  Glide along the verdant plains;
Come where glory, pure, celestial,
  From the Lamb's own presence reigns.

Come where all earth's ransomed children
  Walk enrobed in seamless white,
And among the holy angels
  Dwell with ever new delight.

Come where soft, enrapturing music
  Floats upon the balmy air,
Breathed from harps all bright and golden,
  Swept by angel fingers there.

Come where gloomy night is over,
  Lost in full and perfect day;
Where no pain, or grief, shall ever
  O'er the soul assert its sway.

Come where Death, forever vanquished,
  Lays his scythe at Jesus' feet,
And the grave's dark portals closing,
  Makes the victory complete.

Come where sorrow's billowy waters
  Shall enshroud thy form no more,
But endowed with life immortal,
  All thy trials shall be o'er.

Come where Jesus reigns forever
  On his Father's heavenly throne,
Who to him hath giv'n the kingdom
  And the glory for his own.

Come, for earthly life is fading,
  And these scenes are fleeting fast;
Come, secure thine heavenly treasure,
  Which forevermore shall last.

Listen, hear the Bridegroom calling—
  "Whosoever will may come!"
Oh, accept the invitation,
  Hasten to the heavenly Home!

S. V. Aldrich.

For the Crisis.

Leaves from the Note-Book of a Traveler.

No. 8.

April 89th.—Bonar says, "Truth, in itself, is cold." This is a correct sentiment. As the body without the spirit, and faith without works, so is truth without the life-giving influence of the Holy Ghost, and the fire of divine love. I have listened to many sermons and exhortations, theoretically true, yet "dry as last year's husks, and empty as last year's birds' nests."

I may believe that Jesus Christ will come again to earth, and reign in person on David's throne; but unless Christ live in me now, I have no evidence of reigning with him in glory. I may believe that there will be a restitution of all things back to their primeval condition, but without a restitution of my moral nature, I have no promise of enjoying its delights. I may believe that the body sown, in corruption, will rise in incorruption, but unless the Spirit of Him who raised Christ from the dead, dwell in me, I have no assurance of having a part in the resurrection of the just. I may have the perfect theory, yet be lacking the essential qualification for eternal life; but if I possess the inward witness that I am justified by the grace of God, that I have become a new creature in Christ Jesus, I know I shall be saved if I abide in Him.

Those therefore who strive first of all to convert men to certain theories, instead of laboring to have them saved from sin, do greatly err. And yet, notwithstanding the present salvation is the great essential, there are many who most severely condemn those as heterodox, who devote their time and efforts almost exclusively to promote the heart work, rather than the head work. "Such," say they, "are not helping to build up our cause—to enlarge our sect—to promulgate our principles." For what did Christ and his apostles most arduously labor? It was to save men from sin.

O, when will sectarianism come to an end, and christians cease to regard their church as the church, and believe that whosoever doeth the will of God, is a member of the one true and living church, united in Christ their head! When will there be as much rejoicing over a sinner's repentance, though he belong not to "our Zion," as there now is if one become identified with us? When will the truth be believed and acted upon, that the limits of our denomination is not the harvest field, but the world itself? The spirit which moved the disciples to forbid one from casting out devils because "he followeth not with us," finds a dwelling-place in too many hearts in this day. I would that partyism might die out, and sectarian hedges be plucked down, so that the flock could feed together in love. I [illegible] no other name than that of Christian—let me be named for my Master, and my union be with all of his disciples.

M. D. W.

☞ Applicatory knowledge is the sweetest knowledge; it receives the heart, it cheers the spirits, it rejoices the soul; it makes a man go singing to duties, and go singing to his grave, and singing to heaven. [illegible]

For the Crisis.

[illegible]

No. 2.

Truth seldom requires a very long argument to make it intelligible. God, by the Holy Ghost, has talked to man in a manner to meet his capacity. When inference is not the rule of interpretation, the doctrines of the Bible are easily seen.

John 6 : 33.—"For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." Verse 38.—"For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." Jesus affirms that he came down from heaven. Does he anywhere deny it? Do the apostles deny it? The one who came down from heaven was once there to come down. To say that he was not there as a being, but there only in name or purpose, is to assume a position which will require much time to prove, that the Bible means anything but mysticism.

Jesus said, "I lay down my life, that I might take it again." The I, that laid down his life, was a being, and the same being that lived again.

Rev. 1 : 18.—"I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore." Jesus was a being before he died, and a being while dead, and the same being when he lived again, though he had passed through the change from mortal to immortality. If, then, the passages, I lay down my life, and I was dead, prove that Jesus was a being before he laid down his life, and while he was dead, then the passage, "I came down from heaven," proves that he was there a being before he came down.

In leaving this world he passed through a great change, but his being was preserved. So Jesus, who was the Lord from heaven, as Paul says, (and he does not contradict himself), was in the beginning with God, and was God, passed through a great change when he became flesh, and so became poor that we through his poverty might become rich.

In his manifestation as man in the flesh, he of course was the second or last Adam, and not the first. As sure as he was the last Adam, so sure he took on him the seed of Abraham; and as surely did he exist as a being to do it. In view of this change, he said, "A body hast thou prepared me." Because sacrifice could not take away sins, he said, "Lo, I came to do thy will, oh God." When Jesus had finished the work God gave him to do, he went back where he was before. If he was not a being before he came down from heaven, I have no evidence that he is one now.

John 8 : 42.—"For I proceeded forth, and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me." John 16 : 28.—"I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world and go to the Father." It is evident that Jesus thought he was a being with the Father before he came here. If he did think so, and wished to tell us what he thought, we could not desire him to express it more plainly than he has. He made the Jews believe that he thought he was a being before he came into this world. And, when they took him up on his words, instead of denying it, he confirmed it by saying, "Before Abraham was I am."—John 8 : 56—58.

Paul, when showing the greatness of our Lord, in quoting from the Psalms 104 : 4, said, "But unto the Son he saith, thy throne, oh God, is for ever and ever." This is the view Isaiah had of him when he said that his name shall be called the mighty God, the everlasting Father. Neither did Isaiah, nor David, nor Paul, refrain from calling Christ God and Father, even for fear somebody would think there were two Gods. If God has called his Son God, we need not deny his pre-existence, for fear if we admit it, that we shall make him God, and so preach another Jesus. Paul continues his application of the prophecy, "And thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thine hands." This is said of the Son, who is called God. Paul here affirms of Jesus, that he laid the foundations of the earth and made the heavens by his hands. This is what John affirms in his 1st chapter.

The prophets, Christ, and the apostles, all affirm the pre-existence of our Savior, as noticed above. In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. [illegible] thinks Paul contradicted himself when he said of Christ, "Who is over all, God blessed forever."—Rom. 9 : 5. This is not "another Jesus;" but the same one, who was with the Father before the world was, and who, after having taken on him the seed of the woman, has gone back where he was before. This is the theology of the prophets, of Jesus, and of the apostles. Amen.

J. S. White.

Read Good Books only.—The character of the books which are read by the children of the school or the family, will leave its impress upon their minds. No teacher or parent should neglect to look upon this truth. Let those books be read which are pure in sentiment, and in [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Arrival at Earlville.

On my arrival at this place, I found a small package of letters from friends both east and west. Some of them were very cheering and some saddened my heart. The cheering ones related to the advancement of truth—prejudice giving way—souls turning to the Lord, and believers being confirmed and advanced in divine knowledge and grace. Also how our little penny preachers (tracts) creep round into houses, and lodge on the toilet or rough board shelf in the cabin, are read by the candid, tested by the sure word, convincing and cheering many hearts.

Those that saddened my heart were from those—ever true and faithful—calling for help, and begging me to come and sow the seed. One brother says, "We have got the ground all prepared by tracts—people inquiring who wish to hear on these things; now if you will only come and sow the seed, we will try and tend it ourselves." Others say, "We will do what we can to defray expenses; but do come and preach to us." One brother (Bible agent of Amer. Bible Society) has written me some rich letters—wonders the clergy are so blind, and people are so ignorant in Bible truths. He is rejoicing in the "blessed hope." Shall be glad to learn ere long that he is sounding the alarm.

Brethren, I will fill as many calls as I possibly can. Keep praying and working. Our Lord will help, and aid will come. One place I had visited, and a brother wrote me he had prayed a long time for God to send help—God heard prayer and help came, and he was satisfied his prayers had been answered. There is power in prayer. We have to do with the Almighty, and he can easily control influences, and order events.

Among other things, I found a bundle from Sr. C. of O., that came very acceptably. The Lord reward you. Well, Sr., I did not find a "Mary" readily, but I found "Phebe" who had them all completed, and I was wearing them in three days after I received the bundle. The Lord does provide, blessed be his name. Little do we know where our friends are, or from what source we shall receive aid in time of need. Who this Sr. C. is I have no knowledge—as I never saw her—only as I received a letter from her, with a remittance, once before. One thing is a great satisfaction, God knows, and I shall know when I get into the kingdom, if I ever get there. I hope this kind Phebe also will soon become a sister to the ancient "Phebe." Rom. 16: 1.

I believe I have answered all letters, and will fill calls as I have strength and time. However, I must try and get my family together as soon as I fill my engagements as a servant to the conference. I shall then either move East or bring my family West, as Providence may open the way. The Lord must direct; I cannot. The field is large, laborers few.

Friends can write me at Earlville, Ill. as usual, until further notice.

W. Pratt.

For the Crisis.

A Short Sermon.

BY M. CHANDLER.

"I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord."

Paul had a vision. In that vision the Lord appeared to him. When the Lord was revealed, he believed in him; hence he continues: "I knew a man in Christ about fourteen years ago, (whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven."

By living in Christ, we understand having faith in him, or believing in him. Hence, I understand Paul to say fourteen years before, when he believed in Christ, he knew a man, whether he appeared to him in a bodily form or not he could not tell, that man that he knew, was caught up to the third heavens, even into paradise. Of such an one, said Paul, I will glory. Question. What man did he know fourteen years previous? Answer. The Lord Jesus. He had been caught up to paradise to the throne of God. Question. When did Paul know him, or when was he revealed to Paul? Answer. When Paul was on his way to Damascus with letters to bring bound to Jerusalem men or women that believed in this way. As he drew near to Damascus, suddenly there shone around him a light from heaven. Question. Why could he not know whether Christ appeared bodily or not? Answer. Because he fell to the earth blind; but he heard a voice saying unto him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" "And Saul said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." Paul was astonished, but believed his word, and believing it he knew the man to be Jesus.

Some may question whether this second Epistle to the Corinthians was written about fourteen years after the conversion of Paul. I have seen the chronology given by seven different men. Their dates stand, thus: One gives thirteen years; three, fourteen; one, fifteen; two, seventeen. [illegible]

☞ He that never loathed himself [illegible] has not yet repented.

For the Crisis.

"Annihilation."

Bro. Grant:—The idea of annihilation, as a punishment, seems to some persons a horrible one. They say "eternal torment will be the punishment God will inflict upon the wicked for the sins committed in this life." "Annihilation," they say, "would be non-existence, and a nonentity cannot be punished." Let us look at the question calmly, a moment. Is annihilation, (extinction of being,) or, in other words, destruction, a punishment? "But," says the objector, "you cannot punish a nonentity." We do not say so; but we do say, an entity can be punished with destruction, and then an entity becomes a "nonentity."

As the doctrine of future punishment is a Bible one, we prefer to let the Bible settle the point. Did the objector ever read the account of Sodom and Gomorrah? He can find it in Gen. 19th chapter, and may read in verse 26, that Lot's wife became a pillar of salt for looking back upon her place of residence. Was she not punished for that act? Certainly she was. Is she now suffering pain or torment? is she not a "nonentity," so far as life and being are concerned? We think the punishment inflicted on that woman is a strong proof that an entity can be punished with "nonentity," and God be just as well as merciful in doing what he says by the mouth of his servant David he will do. Ps. 145 : 20.—"The Lord preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy." And we would say to all cavilers—"Remember Lot's wife!" Yours for the truth,

Chas. H. Sutton.

For the Crisis.

Bro. Grant:—Will you give the following lines a place in the "Crisis"? Perhaps they may afford pleasure to some reader. They were written by a former classmate at school, and as I glanced at them in a secular paper, my heart echoed their sentiment, and a thrill of pleasure accompanied the reflection that, though parted years ago in the halls of learning, we had met again in spirit. The same Hand had been over us and led us both to drink from the fount of God's love and hold sweet communion with him. There is much of the heart betrayed in these verses; may I, too, watch unto prayer!

Annette A. Webster.

East Boston, Jan. 28th, 1860.

Praying in Spirit.

BY HARRIET MCEWEN KIMBALL.

"But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."—Matt. 6: 6.

I need not leave the jostling world,
  Or wait till daily tasks are o'er,
To fold my palms in secret prayer
  Within the close-shut closet door.

There is a viewless, cloistered room,
  As high as Heaven, as fair as day,
Where, though my feet may join the throng,
  My soul can enter in and pray.

When I have banished wayward thoughts,
  Of sinful works the fruitful seed,
When folly wins my ear no more,
  The closet door is shut, indeed!

No human step approaching, breaks
  The blissful silence of the place;
No shadow steals across the light
  That falls from my Redeemer's face.

And never through those crystal walls
  The clash of life can pierce its way,
Nor ever can a human ear
  Drink in the spirit-words I say.

One hearkening, even, cannot know
  When I have crossed the threshold o'er,
For He alone who hears my prayer,
  Has heard the shutting of the door.

Selections.

Religious Influence of Nature.

The natural world is the poetry of God, and in its page may be read the sublime revelation of what we are, and what we are to be. The fall of the summer storm, the woodland blast and falling leaf, the withering flowers under October skies, the moaning of the wintry wind, and all the varying, evanescent scenes of nature, keep continually before the thoughtful mind the hour of death, and sanctify the life. As we behold an autumn sunset, that island of gold with silver and purple shores, far away in the blue abyss, we can almost picture to ourselves the glory of the scene, when, far over this cold and wildering maze, the land of immortality will rise upon the view. The flowers of spring as they appear, unfold the rainbow dyes of our own resurrection. As the tempest of summer uplifts its voice we may hear it speaking in solemn admonition of the dreadful scenes of the judgment day.

There is no place for prayer and meditation like that of the rural retreat. Nature inspires devotion. As we behold all her works delighting in the presence of the Lord, our hearts feel the influence and our thoughts are borne away in gratitude and praise to heaven. The grandeur of architectural art possesses no power to lift the soul on high like that of the mossy columns and the leafy arches of the woodland and forest, with their long dim aisles of evergreen and flowers. In the balmy twilight of spring, in the quiet evenings of summer, we may go forth and worship in a temple of God's own building. The rocks are its altars and the birds are its choir. The scene itself breathes a spirit of meditation and prayer. From the solemn and delightful sermons of nature we may there receive purifying influences for our earthly communion. There we may go and soothe the heart of sorrow and the mind of care. When wearied with the sorrows and cares of the journey of life, the great author of nature himself frequently sought its retreat. [illegible]

☞ Live not for self alone. Live to [illegible] for others.

You Profess It.

Do you live it, every day, every hour? Do others see it—witness it, acknowledge it? You profess holiness; do you breathe it, speak it, pray it? do you live holiness, walk holiness? Is holiness in you, over you, all about you? Does holiness beam forth in your life, in every thought, look, word, action?—shine? Do the words of your mouth and the meditations of your heart indicate the doctrine you profess? Do you abandon, now and forever, every appearance of evil? Is faith on faith working by love in you continually?

Nothing so surely and speedily brings this blessed doctrine of perfect love into disrepute, as the inconsistent walk of its professors. And what a hindrance are these stumbling blocks to those seeking the inner life, hungering and thirsting after this righteousness. Beloved, let us walk even as Christ walked. "Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

Patience in Life.

It is oftentimes the case that we find that our lot in life is peculiarly hard on account of the duties we have to perform. Sometimes it seems as though the rearing of our children is more than we know how to bear up under. When we think of the peculiarities of their disposition, the difficulties of their management, and our own peculiar allotments in life with reference to them, we feel, "Ah! no person ever had such trouble with their children as I have with mine." Does not Christ have to bear as much with his grown-up children, as you have to bear with your undeveloped children? There never was such a family borne on the heart of a man, as our Savior bore on his heart when he was in this world, and as he bears on his heart still. His arms were and are stretched around the world like an equator. He was and is a man of sorrow; and he was and is acquainted with grief, for our sake. And are we better than he, that we should claim exemption from these things, and shrink from them?

An Exegetical Curiosity.

Some inveterate curiosity-hunter, who has acquired expertness in discovering hidden meanings in old manuscripts, has just stumbled on what he thinks is a great scientific discovery in the book of Genesis. Some of our readers may be amused, if not instructed by it.

In Joseph's dream of the eleven stars making obeisance to him, it is said there is an allusion to the signs of the Zodiac—the eleven brethren answering to the eleven signs, and Joseph to the twelfth. [These signs were known in Chaldea, and afterwards in Egypt.] They are all, as every body knows, called by the names of animals, except one. The curiosity consists in the resemblance between the blessing of Jacob and his prophecies respecting his sons, as found in Genesis, 49th chapter, and the animals after whose names the constellations are called. The following table will illustrate the meaning. Any one who will keep in mind the pictures of the human figure usually found in our almanacs and the constellations around them, will understand the whole matter:

1. Reuben, "unstable as water:" Aquarius, a waterman.
2. Simeon and Levi "are brethren:" Gemini, or twins.
3. Judah, "a lion's whelp:" Leo, or lion.
4. Zebulon, "at the haven of the sea:" Cancer, or crab from the sea.
6. Ephraim, "a strong ass or beast of burden:" Taurus, an ox.
6. Dan, "an adder:" Scorpio, or scorpion.
7. Dan, "biteth the horse's heels:" Claws of a serpent changed into balances.
8. Gad, "a troop;" Pisces, a fish—Gad, reverse of dag.
9. Asher, "his head shall be fat:" Virgo, a woman with a stalk of wheat in her hand.
10. Naphtali, "a hind let loose:" Aries, a ram.
11. Joseph, "his bow abode in strength:" Sagittarius, an archer.
12. Benjamin, "ravin as a wolf:" Capricornus, formerly, reptile with a wolf's head.—Ex.

How a Rain Cloud Forms.

Professor Wise, describing his last balloon voyage, says: "We plainly saw that the southeast wind below, which drove us to the northwest at starting, had now supplied the atmosphere with moisture enough to make a growing rain cloud. Slowly, but interestingly, the vapor assumed a milky hue. Presently it assumed the appearance of a vascular cloud; then it spread out and bulged down in the middle, and soon it had the appearance of a great udder, with the water oozing through it, but more copiously at and round its protuberant center. It was an interesting phenomenon, and it seemed as though nature was unbosoming her mammal to give the earth some sustenance. I have noticed these udders and water-spouts before."

Religion a Life.

A week filled up with selfishness, and the Sabbath stuffed full of religious exercises, will make a good Pharisee, but a poor christian. There are many persons who think Sunday is a sponge with which to wipe out the sins of the week. Now God's altar stands from Sunday to Sunday, and the seventh day is no more for religion than any other. It is for holy rest. The whole seven are for religion, and one of them for that rest which is to be a foretaste and earnest of "the rest that remaineth for the people of God."

Self-Control.

It seems to me that all times are alike adapted for happiness, and that if we grow old as one should grow old, the last days of life must be happiest of all. Each stage of life is but the preparation for the next one. It is the treasure-house in which are collected all the pleasures that are to make the future time happy. The child has indeed but few troubles, but they are as great to him as larger ones [illegible] cloudless days of childhood [illegible] to be always a [illegible]

He stopped for a moment and then [illegible] I think he was right. There is progress in everything—in our means of happiness and in our capacity for enjoyment. Then let us not look back upon the time-wrinkled face of the past only with feelings of regret. Give me the present, glowing and full of life, and the future glorious with bright visions. I would rather look forward than back; rather spend the golden hours in working out present happiness than in vain regrets for the past. It is but the helm with which to steer our outward course. The future lies before us. It is the steep and rugged mountain up which lies our way. It is not genius or fortune that paves the way to eminence, but earnestness, self-control, wisdom. These are in our hands; let us use them, and when at the sunset of life we turn to look back on our path, and see it stretching far down before us peacefully, happily, we may lay ourselves down to rest.—Thackeray.

A Word of Love.

A nameless man amid a crowd
  That thronged the daily mart,
Let fall a word of hope and love,
  Unstudied, from the heart.

A whisper on the tumult thrown—
  A transitory breath—
It raised a brother from the dust,
  It saved a soul from death.

O, gem! O, fount! O, word of love!
  O, thought at random cast!
Ye were but little at the first,
  But mighty at the last.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

The Causes of the Early Decay of American Youth.

[Extracts from Dr. Stone's Treatise.]

"Such is the perversity of mankind, such their vanity and innate desire to make all appear perfect and spotless without, that they study every artifice to smother within, that which, if they were to confess, their better reason and conscience tells them would betray a weakness, a lack of self-control, or a knowledge of the beautiful and the pure. Parents will frequently try to deceive and mislead a physician where they have discovered a weakness in their offspring, which they conceal from motives of pride; still requiring the physician to do what is impossible he can do without rightly knowing the true conditions of the case. How long will mankind allow their vanity to embarrass the development of truth and duty, upon the execution of which not only hangs their future, but their present happiness? Truly, the fate of a physician is a hard one, when he is required to look, as by the power of magic or divination, into the secret chambers of the soul, and control, by the power of drug-giving, a perverted judgment and lust, that nothing but a strict conformity to the majestic requirements of virtue, chastity, and true godliness can do.

But again: often so little is known by parents when, how and why such disastrous manifestations of physical ruin and devastation are being made, that were he to attempt to bring this to their comprehension, he would find it a hopeless task.

In one word, this may be explained in this way: the habits of the present generation of children and youth are so very different from the younger days of their parents, as to existing artificial excitements, serving to develop and bring into premature action those latent fires or passions of nature, that it cannot be realized by parents that such can be the case in their children.

We were lately consulted by a worthy lady in case of a daughter of fourteen years, whose health of body was greatly impaired by a daily occurrence of fits and spasms, not only prostrating her bodily health, but her naturally intelligent and precocious intellect, which was already yielding to their frequent and more alarming occurrence. We were fully persuaded from proper and due examination of physical marks which were unmistakable, that masturbation was the entire cause of the epilepsy, and we endeavored to communicate the facts to the mother as a matter of duty, as well as foundation for success in the treatment to be adopted. But we were compelled to give up the task after learning she had never heard of, nor did she appear to possess the least idea of such a phenomena; knowing, too, that had we persisted in acquainting her, our pecuniary interests must suffer from the offence that would be produced. This case, after several months of proper care, watching, and anxious prescribing for, on our part, is still progressing to a melancholy termination, and all because neither mother nor daughter can be reached by reason.

A case nearly allied to this, of a most melancholy nature, we were called to witness while on a professional tour in Providence, R. I., not long since. Our advice was earnestly sought by a mother—a lady from Connecticut, respecting her daughter of sixteen years of age, who had been under Allopathic treatment for several months, and was pronounced by the physicians, and very justly, in confirmed consumption. We accompanied her to the boarding-place of the daughter, and was seated in the parlor. The daughter on being led into the room, instantly manifested one of the most evident and melancholy spectacles [illegible] that ever fell to our lot to [illegible] turned aside and fell [illegible] flood of tears before she was seated. We were struck with her peculiar appearance; her countenance was haggard, sickly, and bespoke one whose soul, mind and body had been perfectly sunk into complete dissolution, with all the congenial elements that form the angelic features of the nobler and gentler sympathies of females. Our girl of sixteen years, born of healthy parents, without taint of scrofula or consumption, was about to bid farewell to the scenes of earth, before she had even expanded into womanhood, from complete exhaustion of the vital energies by masturbation. What a sad spectacle! Some time elapsed before she could be calmed sufficiently to examine the true condition of the chest and lungs. Her powers of locomotion were almost extinct; she had a bad cough; her nervous system was in a most exalted condition of excitability; her nights were restless, and disturbed, as we learned, and no doubt to our mind, by dreams of the most lascivious character. Yet with all the prominent and self-evident, almost anomalous features and symptoms of the one evil that had so prematurely shipwrecked her only daughter, when we took the mother into the adjoining room to confer with her respecting its nature and cause, she pretended the greatest ignorance! In three weeks from that day her daughter was carried to the tomb.

We mention these as being fair and true specimens of what physicians would and might expect to meet with, for conscientiously imparting the truth. Parents must learn, in humility of heart, to conceive and acknowledge this great truth, that their children may, equally with others, be imperfect, and need the early lessons of wisdom and correct instruction to guide aright the unfoldment of their conflicting passions and natures, or else the little barks will be foundered before they anticipate any danger nigh. True humility of the soul is the safest anchor amid all the storms and conflicts of this life.

Extracts from the Chinese Art of Health.

Let hunger regulate your food, and never eat too much at once; excessive eating tires the stomach and produces many diseases.

Never think of drinking unless you are thirsty, and then merely quench your thirst; too much drink corrupts the blood and may cause dropsy.

Take an early breakfast, and do not go out of doors fasting, particularly when the air is hot or foul.

Let your breakfast be moderate; do not overload your stomach with meats in the morning.

About noon eat a hearty meal of plain, wholesome food, and let it be neither too pungent or too salt.

Beware of pungent food; it burns the palate, the stomach, and the bowels.

Avoid too much salted food; it injures the blood, and causes an unnatural thirst for too much liquids, which drown the stomach.

Some food is very improper; it produces crudities, acidity, colics and indigestion.

Eat meat only when it is hot; when cold it is of heavy digestion.

Eat slowly and chew your food well. To eat in a hurry is to eat like a dog or a wolf.

Seldom gratify your appetite to its full extent, for you may overload your stomach, and thus impair its digestive powers.

Eat no meats of hard digestion, and be careful to avoid those that are half raw or not well cooked.

Very fat meat, and that which is dressed with much pepper and spices, is more injurious than nourishing.

Baths.—Horace Mann once said, "Just so fast as physical education advances, public baths will be provided; not for luxury alone, but for the higher objects of health, without which there can be no luxury. Physical education is thus cleansing mankind from the impurities of the body."

We consider every bathing establishment, properly arranged and conducted, a great benefit to the community. If there was more bathing, there would be much more cleanliness, and consequently more health. The community need 'line upon line' on this subject.

Where a man takes a full morning bath, nine million mouths are opened to thank him; for every pore of his skin has separate cause to be gratified for his daily ablution.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..........$2.00
For a single copy 6 months..........1.00
For a single copy 3 months..........50
Five copies to one address for 6 months....4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months....8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months....15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months....22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 6 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 234. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 1860. | VOL. XI. NO. 1.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY T. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

FOR TERMS, SEE FOURTH PAGE.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

"The City of Gold."

In the city of gold I claim a home,
When the trials of earth are o'er;
With the angel harpers I shall stand
On that fair, celestial shore.

I shall quaff from the crystal stream that flows
Amid flowers that never shall fade;
I shall pluck rich fruit from the tree of life,
And repose 'neath its peaceful shade.

I shall meet all the saints and prophets there,
And the martyrs who bled for the truth;
And the dear ones who sleep in the charnel-house now,
All glowing in eternal youth.

I'm a pilgrim now through the world's wide waste,
Not for me earth's pleasures bloom;
And my raiments are worn and stained with dust,
As in loneliness onward I roam.

I am weary of earth, and I fain would go
To my home in the city of gold;
For I long to rest from my wanderings there,
And share in its glories untold.

Now my hope grows bright, for I know full well
That my pilgrimage soon will be o'er;
And the light of the morning is breaking now—
I shall rest in a few days more.

Now I'll weep no more that my path is rough,
And its thorns I can patiently bear;
The bright city of gold breaks full on my view,
And I know I am almost there.

S. H. H.

Portsmouth, N. H.

For the Crisis.

REPORT OF THE DISCUSSION

held at Waterbury, Vt., Jan. 24th to Jan. 27th, 1860, between Eld. Miles Grant, Editor of the "World's Crisis," and Mr. Eli Ballou, Editor of the "Christian Repository."

QUESTION.—"Do the Scriptures teach that any part of the human race will be destroyed after they are raised from natural or physical death?"

Eld. Grant being on the affirmative of the question, opened and closed the discussion. In his opening speech Eld. Grant suggested the following propositions: Will any part of mankind be any less susceptible of destruction after the resurrection, than before? If so, why? and what event will destroy that susceptibility? He requested his opponent to point this out, after having presented the fact that the loss of such a susceptibility was only conditional. This point Mr. Ballou did not notice. He then invited attention to four points.

1. Will the wicked be punished? and in proof quoted Prov. 11: 21.—"Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished."

2. Where will they be punished? See Prov. 11: 31.—"The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth."—Matt. 5: 5; 2 Pet. 3: 13; Rev. 21: 1.—Promise to Abraham. In these points they were agreed, but not on the following:—

3. When will they be punished?

4. How will they be punished?

In proof of the time when they will be punished, he urged 2 Pet. 2: 9 and 3: 7, 2 Tim. 4: 1, Heb. 9: 27, and then suggested the following proposition: The existence of the wicked TERMINATES in the event that results in the new earth, which is to be the abode of the meek. Proof.—Ps. 37: 9-11, 18, 29, 38, 22, 34; Prov. 2: 21, 22. [Time expired.]

Mr. Ballou in reply, on opening his speech, very freely expressed the views of Eld. Grant respecting the sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked, as some expressed their conviction, for the purpose of raising prejudice against him; but be this as it might, it was not very relevant to the point at issue. He then stated that he understood that his opponent believed that all were raised at once; and Mr. Ballou laid considerable stress upon the expression, which he made himself, of the wicked being tortured into non-existence. Mr. Ballou then said, why will God call the wicked to life to torture as above? He agreed that the wicked should be punished; i. e., every one should be punished, for, said he, all are wicked, and quoted Ps. 62: 12. Both judgment and punishment are in the earth and in hades. In the earth, i. e., the Adamic nature. He affirmed that the promise of Abraham was not literal, but spiritual in part, and part literal. The gospel is spiritual, and if spiritual, all will be blessed. He then quoted 1 Pet. 4: 17, and applied it to temporal judgment,—i. e., the expression, "Judgment must first begin at the house of God," etc., destruction of Jerusalem, day of Christ's judgment, and affirmed that the second coming of Christ was about forty years after his first coming, and then was the judgment. Quoted Heb. 9: 27, and applied it to the Jewish priesthood, and referred to Matt. 10: 23 to prove that Jesus had come the second time, because he said that, "ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of man be come." Reference was then made to Matt. 24: 28, 31-35; and the conclusion was drawn that the term "generation" applied to the generation living when the language was spoken; i. e., that generation. Mark 8: 38 was quoted to show that Jesus would be ashamed of those who were ashamed of him and his word, in his coming; also Lk. 9: 27, etc., applying it all to the gospel dispensation. Quoted John 20: 21, 22; Heb. 10: 36; 2 Tim. 4: 1; Jas. 5: 9; Rev. 22: 12; 1 Jno. 2: 24-27,—last time—1 John 4: 1-5; Rev. 1: 1-7; and then called in the testimony of several commentators, after saying that John lived until Jesus' second coming.

Mr. Ballou then suggested a general proposition: viz., "Wherever in the Scriptures the time of judgment is indicated, it is presented as present," but quoted no Scripture to prove it. He then affirmed his denial that any man will be destroyed after coming out of hades. [Time expired.]

Eld. Grant, in reply, remarked that he presumed that his opponent believed in the unconscious state of the dead by his refusing to discuss the question of the sleep of the dead, to which he (Eld. Grant) challenged him; and after affirming that he did not believe that all would be raised at one time, he denied that he, or those of like faith, believed that God would raise them (the wicked) to torture them. In reply to Mr. Ballou's statement, that all would be punished because all are wicked, Eld. Grant presented arguments to show that there was then no such thing as mercy or salvation. Then in reply to the statement that "in the earth" denoted the earthy or Adamic nature, Mr. Grant read the expression into a few texts; as, new earth did not mean earthy nature—"Behold a new earthy nature."

"In thee shall all nations be blessed." He then quoted Matt. 25: 32, "Gathered all nations," and asked, were all nations gathered at the destruction of Jerusalem? All were not in Titus' army! Judgment at the second coming of Christ. This was not at the destruction of Jerusalem.

In reply to Mr. Ballou on Heb. 9: 27, who applied it to Jewish high priests, Eld. G. showed that instead of dying once, as the text reads, if they were typical of Christ, and were sixty years old, they would die thirty times. Again, he showed that the Greek article "tois" never means these or those, but that it is the dative plural of the Greek article "ho" the, and signifies "the." In reply to the argument drawn from Matt. 10: 23, respecting Christ's coming before the disciples had gone over the cities of Israel, he compared it with Lk. 10: 1, to show that he referred to their going forth to publish his words in the region whither he himself would come, during his lifetime.

In reply to Matt. 24, he proved that the elect were scattered at the destruction of Jerusalem; but in the second coming of Christ they would be gathered; therefore, he did not come when Jerusalem was destroyed. In reply to the position taken on Rev. 1: 7, applied to the same point, he asked, did all the tribes of the earth mourn at the destruction of Jerusalem? showing that it affected none only such as were in it. Lk. 21: 21. Quoted Acts 1: 11. Did he then come in the clouds? On the term generation, he remarked that the events, and history of their developments, together with the grammatical construction of the sentences, proved that it applied to the period remote from the time in which Jesus spoke, and therefore the last generation of time, or this dispensation. John 21: 22 does not teach that Jesus came in his lifetime, but declared that if he pleased he could let John live till he did come. Referred to 2 Thess. 2: 1-3—the history of the man of sin, which did not arise until long after the destruction of Jerusalem—to prove that Jesus comes then. Then, to prove the unreasonableness of punishment in this life, Eld. Grant suggested the following proposition:

"If the punishment is remorse of conscience, [illegible] as the crime." Proof. Experience of self and all; and then quoted 1 Tim. 4: 2, to show the truth of the position, that men who were exceedingly wicked, having their conscience seared, would outstrip the penalty, and have no punishment at all. Referred to Sodomites and antediluvians. [Time expired.]

Mr. Ballou opened his speech by reference to a number of instances in which God punished men in this life; as Adam, Cain, Sodomites, and affirmed that punishments were temporal and corrective; and then said that the gospel kingdom was the gospel dispensation, and suggested a third coming of Christ. He says that Eusebius affirms that there was the appearance of a man at the destruction of Jerusalem, but he did not prove that this appearance of a man was the veritable person of Jesus Christ. He, however, challenged Mr. G. to show that he did not come there. He then offered some remarks in proof of punishment being temporal, and all here; and after a few more remarks upon the term judgment, to prove that it denotes a judgment in some texts, because the Greek article "ho" was not prefixed to it, he then at considerable length endeavored to prove a moral death, and that that was the penalty of the Edenic law. He endeavored next to prove that the signs preceded the destruction of Jerusalem, and remarked that in this life men are destroyed into hades, and then punished in hades. At this point he quoted freely from several commentators; but as the question read, "Do the Scriptures teach?" etc., we did not attempt to write down any thing quoted from them, and these references consumed his time.

2D EVENING. Mr. Grant opened the discussion by remarking, in reply to Mr. Ballou's quotations from commentaries, that the question read:—"Do the Scriptures teach?" etc., and that he should make no reply to anything quoted from commentaries. His opponent had affirmed that he had seen Christ, and he would like to have him tell how and when. If spiritually, to please define his meaning. He then challenged him to prove that Jesus came at the destruction of Jerusalem, as he had affirmed, literally, or in any other sense. This he did not attempt to prove literally, and the only sense which he attempted to prove that he did come, was in the Roman armies. Mr. G. then referred to the events spoken of in Matt. 24th, consecutively, until he came to the signs of his coming, showing that the first false Christ of any note, that arose, according to Buck's Theological Dict., was in the 2d century. His name was Caziba, changed to Barchocheba, alluding to the star foretold by Balaam. Therefore, as many false Christs did not arise before the destruction of Jerusalem,—Josephus gives only one, standard authors none, Jesus could not have come then. He next showed that until the fifth century, nation could not rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, which occurs after the false Christs begin to be developed, and these belonged this side of the destruction of Jerusalem, after the Roman kingdom ceased to be a unit government; it being divided in the 4th and 5th centuries into distinct kingdoms. Thus he marked the consecutive history of the church down to the persecution by the Papists, at which time the people of God were delivered up to be afflicted according to prophecy. He then asked did all the tribes of the earth mourn at Jerusalem's destruction? Quoted Matt. 24: 29, which says that AFTER the tribulation the sun shall be darkened; but for argument's sake, admitted that the tribulation was at the destruction of Jerusalem; and then as the Lord said the signs should come after the tribulation, which should precede his coming, that Christ could not have come at the destruction of Jerusalem, by his opponent's own mode of reasoning. He asked what these signs after the tribulation were for, if Christ came at the destruction of Jerusalem, as his opponent affirmed? Matt. 24: 30, 31. Jews only mourned, the Romans rejoiced. Did he come in power and great glory? Elect were scattered, and all the tribes of earth did not mourn. Holy angels did not come. All nations, Matt. 25: 31—34, not gathered there, and in reply to Mr. Ballou's quotation from Zech. 14: 1, to prove they did come there, he showed that God defended Jerusalem as there shown, and in the future he would do so, but not so at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. In Zech. all the saints would come. Did they at the destruction of Jerusalem? They fled. Again, was Jerusalem then and since safely inhabited? Not now, but trodden under foot.—Lk. 21: 24. Signs after this and not before; hence Jesus comes after this. Not one of these signs in the generation then living, but future. Acts 3: 20, 21. Not till the destruction of Jerusalem will the heavens receive the Lord, but until the restitution, after that period.—Rev 11: 15—18. He comes when the seventh angel sounds, then the kingdom comes; time to judge the dead and reward all the saints. Was it then?

He quoted 2 Thess. 2: 1, 2, to show that Christ could not come in that generation, for there must come a falling away first, and the man of sin be revealed, verse 8, and then destroyed at Christ's coming.

He then referred to Mr. Ballou's argument on Heb. 9: 27, that it meant after the appointment, and not after death. It is appointed unto men once to die, after this the funeral, showing that according to his argument, the funeral would come after appointment and before death. This appointment unto men once to die, and after this be buried, i. e., buried before death and after appointment; and other readings of a similar nature.

As before suggested, he showed that tois never signified these, but that tois was the dative plural of "ho," the article "the." [Time expired.]

Mr. Ballou opened by proposing some general principles.

1. His opponent's position was very absurd in saying that there is no punishment in this life or world. Mr. Grant said that he admitted that there were judgments in this world.

2. Mr. Ballou said that there was no proof that the kingdom, referring to the gospel, was not set up, and that he knew of no author who held with Mr. Grant on that question. In remarking on Dan. 7: 13, 14, he said that in the days of these kings, did not denote the divided state of the kingdom, and called the stone the gospel stone, affirming that it would spread.

3. That man put on the spiritual body at death; that the body was not raised. He then quoted Dr. Clarke and Bishop Newton to prove that the signs of Matt. 24, did occur before the destruction of Jerusalem. Said all nation denoted as extensive as the saints were hated, and affirmed that the kingdom of God was the gospel dispensation. When you shall see, i. e., those then living, shall see these signs; and that they took place, or the Savior did not tell the truth. Referred to Matt. 23: 36, this generation, compared it with Matt. 12: 41, this generation, to show that it applied to the time then present.

Quoted James 5: 9, Matt. 16: 27, 17: 1, etc., and applied all of the passages to this world, and again referred to Heb. 9: 27, 2 Thess. 1: 7—10, Lk. 17:—to prove that they who have done wrong died a natural death, and admitted that judgment was before punishment. He, in referring to Heb. 9: 27, repeated the argument previously offered, reading some remarks from some theological work. He next referred to Eccl. 9: 5, "Neither have they any more a reward," etc., and suggested that it did not refer to punishment, saying that not a particle of punishment is in the word; and then, after referring to Rev. 6: 7—12, souls under the altar, etc., remarked, I think that they were to be understood figuratively. Once more referred to 1 Pet. 4: 17:—"Judgment begin at the house of God," etc., and applied it to the destruction of the Jewish polity at the destruction of Jerusalem. Here he occupied quite a period in rehearsing some positions previously taken, and to which we have referred, endeavoring to enforce the idea that there could be no proof brought in favor of the affirmative of the proposition. [Time expired.]

Mr. Grant remarked that he did not say that none were punished here, and again admitted that there are judgments in this life. Referred to Sodom, Jerusalem, etc. In reply to the statement, that Dan. 2: 44, did not affirm that the kingdom was set up in the divided state of the kingdom, he read the text which declares it was set up after division, as the division first occurred. Read Dan. 2: 41—44,—set up in the toes of the feet, not when Christ was here, not at Jerusalem, but after this when the kingdom was divided. Here Mr. G. referred to some points which had been previously met, and which we have noticed. In proof that the kingdom was not set up, quoted Lk. 19: 11, with others, as, Isa. 9: 6, 7, Lk. 1: 31—33, Lk. 22: 28, 29, Matt. 8: 11, asking, did they sit down in the kingdom at the first advent? Compared Micah 4: 8, and Gen. 1: 26, Rev. 5: 9, remarking, not everybody—some not inherit the kingdom. Gal. 5: 19—26, not all inherit it. What? Not all inherit the gospel, if that is what it means? If mediatorial, not to have it, therefore, must mean something else.

Referred again to 1 Pet. 4: 17. For the sake of the argument admitted that the judgment referred to was on Jerusalem—close of Jewish dispensation; and remarked that all the dispensations have ended in wrath, with the destruction of a part. Why not this? and asked if the "house of God" referred to the Jewish church, at the destruction of Jerusalem; what will the end be in time, after that, of them who obey not the gospel? To answer which, he quoted Phil. 3: 18, 19.—"Whose end is destruction," not the destruction of the Jews. Mr. Ballou having stated in his previous remarks that it is absurd to say men are punished before judgment, said there could be no punishment or judgment after the men were raised out of hades. Mr. G. quoted the text in Rev. 20: 13, 14, showing that after they came out of hades the judgment would take place. The text reads that "Death and hades (the grave) delivered up the dead that were in them: and they were JUDGED every man according to their works." See verses 14, 15. [Time expired.]

Mr. Ballou remarked on a point that had been referred to in one of the previous speeches of his opponent, that "the man of sin" might have arisen in fourteen or fifteen years after the apostle wrote respecting it, and then Christ came at the time appointed, meaning destruction of Jerusalem. In reply to another, "Reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished," said the was not there; hence judge, reign over men in the gospel. Day of judgment, whole length of gospel dispensation; the kingdom of heaven which John Baptist preached at hand, and quoted Lk. 17: 21.—"Within you." 1 Cor. 18: 21—23, Rev. 20: 11, the last not literal, but refers to Jewish state; and denied that the dead men of these texts were raised from the dead. Lake of fire a sign of destruction, but not after resurrection. Quoted an author who says that it denotes excommunication. He again quoted quite lengthy extracts from different authors which occupied some time, and then made some further remarks to show that all tribes did mourn at the destruction of Jerusalem, which, however, was a repetition of previous remarks on that point.

THIRD DAY. Mr. Grant remarked that he would refer to some of his friend's statements respecting the kingdom of God; that nothing was said about a gospel kingdom; and on Lk. 17: 20, 21, showed that the Pharisees were the last persons in whom the kingdom of God could be, referring to Matt. 5: 20, and then quoted Prof. Whiting's suggestion that it denoted that the king is among you. The Lord never told his disciples that the kingdom was in them, and Daniel affirms that it will be under the whole heaven. He then showed that Rev. 20: 11, 12, referred to the judgment and that the dead were raised in order to stand before God, and quoted Rev. 20: 4, remarking that, if, as his opponent had said, the resurrection here spoken of was a moral one, then the death being moral the second death would be moral too; hence, that some would in the second death be morally unfit for redemption. Then respecting the text in Rev. 20: 13, he presented judgment and punishment after having come out of hades, a point, said he, which is FATAL to the theory of my opponent. He then quoted in proof of his position the following texts: Ps. 2: 8, 9, Rev. 2: 26, 27, Rev. 19: 18, 2 Pet. 2: 4—6, Rev. 21: 8, observing that if all overcome, why say, he that does overcome? He observed that the judgment of this world did not refer to Christ's judgment of the world, for in his first advent he did not come to judge. See John 3: 17, Acts 17: 31, Jno. 12: 47, Rom. 2: 16, 1 Cor. 4: 5, 2 Tim. 4: 1. [Time expired.]

Mr. Ballou opened his speech by making some remarks upon Rev. 20: 12, to prove that the dead denoted morally dead. To prove it in this instance he quoted a text from Corinthians, saying she is dead while she liveth. Let the dead bury the dead, etc. He then remarked that as long as they remained in this first resurrection state, all was right; but if they did not, they would die the second death. Then quoted the expressions, twice dead, die daily, after which, to show consciousness in hades, he quoted the parable of the rich man and Lazarus; and after a few remarks upon the kingdom, showing that it was to be sought, and that it was not meat and drink, but joy and peace in the Holy Ghost; he suggested that it was the mind that enters that kingdom, and no flesh and blood would be in it. Wicked not to enter that kingdom while wicked, and then endeavored to show a parallel between the expressions "end is destruction," and end of this life. At this point he repeated some remarks previously made upon Dan. 2: 44, affirming that there had been no Roman kingdom for one thousand years. Said that judge and reign were terms used interchangeably and synonymously in the Psalms, and that every King commences to reign when he commences to be king; affirming that the transfiguration was the vision of a fact; and then quoted John 17: 2, 3, remarking that to know God was the cause of eternal life.

On the word kolasis, translated punish*ment*, in Matt. 25: 46, he remarked that it denoted only a corrective punishment; at the same time offering proof that the word eternal was sometimes employed to express limited time. Quoted Hab. 3: 6, after which, he used some time in illustrating this sense of the text, by the fact that it was associated with other things that were necessarily limited. [Time expired.]

Mr. Grant remarked to some length on the death penalty in Gen. 2: 17, showing that the same term was employed in twenty other places in the Bible, as expressive of divine penalty, all of which denoted literal death; and as moral death, a state of sin, was in the intention to evil. Adam was in this state before he ate of the tree, and therefore the moral death could not be the penalty of the law for eating. It came before he ate. Contrasted the penalty defined by the Lord, and the counter statement of the Devil, and asked, who told the truth? Moral death would be only the crime, or that state which induced the crime. Showed that the Hebrew term "be" might be translated AFTER, and quoted Num. 28: 26, where it is translated both in and after, hence may properly read "after the day," etc. The preposition agreeing with the true sense of the text and context should be selected. "After" is in perfect harmony. On the text "Wages of sin is death," he asked, when do men get their wages, before or after they do the work? On the term hades remarked that it was a place of silence, corresponding with the word sheol. None saved unconditionally.—Matt. 24: 13, such as endure to the end, etc.

In reply to remarks on kolasis, he affirmed and showed that although it denoted sometimes corrective punishment, it also expressed the idea of "cutting off," and therefore denoted punishment for crime as penalty. This was true of Matt. 25: 46, where every sentence of the context shows that the idea is penalty and not corrective punishment of those referred to. The antithesis is life and cutting off; for life and punishment do not present an antithetical relation. In Gen. 8: 2, in the Greek it reads, "And the rain from heaven was (kolaso) cut off;" surely not punished. In our translation restrained is the word. Does it mean punished? He here illustrated the idea of penalty by hanging the murderer. Was it chastisement, correction, or actual punishment?

In reply to the suggestion that resurrection was moral, he affirmed that in the Bible, the term was never employed figuratively. Quoted Dan. 12: 2, Rev. 20: 6, John 5: 28, 29 to show two classes. These are the just already morally raised, according to my opponent's theory, before they died. Now after death raised again, some to life, some to damnation. Judgment after resurrection, hence future. [Time expired.]

Mr. Ballou. In reference to the death penalty of Gen. 2: 17, said that it was common to use the term with reference to moral death. Sin produces the state called moral death. Admitted that sin was in the intention to do wrong; and remarked that every result that a man came to, God made him for it.—Gal. 6: 7, 8. Then referred to a text in Hosea, which reads, "Oh Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself"—one in Ps., turned men to destruction, to prove that these words were used in a limited or figurative sense, remarking that the wicked character was destroyed; and that God did not create any man to strike him out of existence; saying also, that eventually all will overcome.

Man is not resurrected from this world, but hades. Said that the trump of God is the gospel trumpet, and no other. Literal resurrection always from hades, not mnemion. Hear his voice in the gospel and come forth. When we sin against light and knowledge we are condemned, and then declared that Jesus came at the destruction of Jerusalem, or else he told a lie; and then asked, was my friend there? Here he instituted a comparison between the words rendered destroy, etc., and said that the majority of instances of its application was on his side, and remarked that in reference to the meaning of these terms he and his opponent did not differ much. In reply to the remark that all would be struck out of existence, he remarked that he would rather prefer misery. Refers to Isa. 65 to show that death was in the future state. New earth and heavens described a state, not a place. 2 Cor. 5: 17; new creation, i. e., new state of things, or New Jerusalem—gospel dispensation. See Heb. 12: 22; then declaring that it was infidelity, Sadduceeism, to say that all men are blotted out of existence. Texts where olethros are used are fulfilled in this life, affirming that the body is not raised. Again refers to kolasis, and quotes Hudson, charging on his opponent that on this term he fails; and remarking on the term aion, affirmed that it applied to this age and Jewish. He remarked that the furnace of fire, Matt. 13, was in Jerusalem, and that judgment was during the gospel dispensation. Matt. 10: 28, hell, gehenna, not hades. Quotes Hudson and other authorities. Rom. 6: 23. He said the wages of sin is moral death; and then reasoned that there being so little difference in the characters of men, was sufficient reason to show that God would not destroy a part of mankind eternally.

Challenges proof that one text having gehenna in it applies after the resurrection; and after suggesting that all would be saved because God willed it, remarked that the term Adam denoted earthly nature, natural death, physical death; and that as he died a moral death, even so he will be made alive in Christ. After a few more remarks, he summed up his points, which I did not note down, as I was writing only the leading ideas as the disputants suggested them.

In this I have given all of Mr. Ballou's arguments; i. e., his leading arguments, and have thrown out one of Mr. Grant's speeches, not having time to write it out. Mr. Ballou's frequent quotation from other authors, which I did not write down, will explain why his speeches are reported shorter than Mr. Grant's, who confined himself to the Bible. Therefore in this I have embraced his leading points in the discussion on Thursday afternoon and evening, putting them together for the sake of brevity.

J. HOWELL.

Little Spots.

I have not wealth, or power, or skill,
To broadcast all around;
The world's wide field I may not till,
Nor sow its fallow ground;
But LITTLE SPOTS are here and there,
Which I may weed of grief or care.

For the Crisis.

The Nature and Origin of Jesus.

BY WM. HOBBS.

No. 7.

"My Father is greater than I." As all scripture inspired of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, etc., it is proper to use these words of Christ by way of reproof against those who teach that he is equal with God. From the very nature of Almighty power, it is utterly impossible for the Almighty to have any equal, since if he had an equal, he could not be Almighty. Those who teach that Christ is equal to him, not only limit the Almighty, and ignore the force of Christ's words, but also deny the force of the scripture which saith, "To whom will ye liken me? or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One." Against this it is replied, that Paul taught that Christ "thought it not robbery to be equal with God." Those who accept this as the teaching of Paul, must have singular ideas in respect to his language, since he afterward declares that God highly exalted him. So if he had been equal at one time, and was highly exalted afterward, he then would have been more than equal. This confusion is the result of an improper rendering of the Greek phrase which the translators have rendered "equal with God. This they have done not because there was any necessity for such a rendering, but because it was agreeable to their theory. This is apparent from the definition of isa, as defined in the Lexicon attached to the Greek Testament, "Isos, equal, like, Matt. 20: 12, Lk. 6: 34; neut. pl. isa, adverbially, like, as, Phil. 2: 6." So according to this definition, isa Theo, means like God, or Godlike.

To confess him to be an equal with God, is not a confession to the glory of God, or of Christ either; as it robs God of his glory as an Almighty Being, and contradicts Christ's own words: "My Father is greater than I," and, "My Father is greater than all."

We read, "All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father." This was addressed to those who openly rejected and dishonored him, and did not acknowledge him as the Son of God. And therefore, as the words are not addressed to those who acknowledged him as the Son of God, it is not to be understood in an extreme sense, as prompting his disciples to give him the honor that belongs to God. We honor God by acknowledging his attributes and works, and not by imputing to him any attribute or work which is not his. Even so we must honor the Son of God by an acknowledgement of his attributes and works. But if we attempt to apply the honors that belong to God, to Christ, by understanding his words so, we shall err.

It is said that the Jews understood him to claim equality with God, because he called God his Father. Whether they understood it or not, is immaterial, since he immediately refuted them by saying, "I can of mine own self do nothing;" and by his acknowledging all his powers and gifts to have been given him of the Father.—John 5:19, 30.

The translators of the Bible, have made Micah's prophecy of the future goings forth of the Messiah as a Ruler in Israel, by supplying the verb "have been," and by other alterations, to refer to the eternal past. The context declares that this ruler was to come out of Bethlehem; and so that is as far back as his "goings forth" can extend. And the probable beginning of his goings forth commenced at his baptism. According to the translation, Micah was wrong in saying this ruler should come out of Bethlehem; for if his goings forth had been of old, then he must have come into Bethlehem instead of originating there. And then, too, it would have been of some importance for him to have informed those to whom the prophecy was addressed, how long they were to have him for a ruler, instead of speaking of the past alone. The Septuagint translation teaches that his goings forth were to be from their beginning in the land where he was born, to everlasting, instead of from everlasting. As the context speaks of his coming out of Bethlehem, as a ruler his "goings forth" must have been subsequent to it; and hence, "the beginning" is the time when he began his functions as a ruler, after he came out of Bethlehem. So with that view, the passage may be rendered thus: "And his goings forth shall be from the beginning of days everlasting."

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."

For the Crisis.

Faithful unto Death.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

It is a blessed contemplation, when man indulges in the thought of a nobler life, a higher realization of perpetual existence,—a period when life shall be perpetuated by that priceless boon, that last, best gift of Heaven to man, immortality. Among a certain class of the human family, this question becomes of momentous importance; while they believe that future life depends on the state of moral and religious character. This sect of individuals, as an earnest of that inheritance, pray, "Let thy kingdom come."

But the great comprehensive truth that is written in letters of living light upon the face of nature, and on every christian heart, is this: "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him." When will man pause in life's pleasures, and behold inscribed in unmistakable characters on the countenance of his brother man—passing away? When will he stop amid the whirl and bustle of worldly interest, to contemplate the divine mandate—"Prepare to meet thy God?" When will he heed the omnipotent fiat—"Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return?" But a few more rolling suns,—a few more moons shall wax and wane,—a few more earthly crosses and losses,—a few more joys and sorrows, pains and griefs, and the clarion notes of the trump of God shall sound, and "time shall be no longer."

But the tarrying pilgrim o'er life's desert waste of waters, renews his youthful vigor, as the eagle flight of time hurries him towards his destined home. His little bark, that has so long struggled amid hidden reefs and sunken shoals, has almost cleared the last headland that intervenes between him and that long-looked for haven of rest. Already the white crests wreathe her prow,—her tapering spars bend to the breeze and with free, flowing sheets and fluttering pennon, on which is inscribed—"Faithful and True," she makes the last point that hides her from her destined haven. The existence of that port looms up in the horizon,—the lessening distance is accomplished,—she sails round the pier,—the night has worn away,—the voyage of life is over.

The virtue of the christian's hope is not to be fully realized in this life; for Christianity is a continued series of warfare; the journey is through a howling wilderness; while the fruits thereof are scorn, reproach, contempt and shame. But thank God, whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap; and if we have incurred exile; if our name has been cast out as evil; if we have been separated from the circle of Pharisaical society; if we have been reviled and reviled not again,—happy are we; for when the jasper walls of heaven re-echo back great voices as they cry: "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ;" our reward shall be great; and we shall be called the children of the Highest."

To the christian who has become wearied with a vexing world, and bowed down with grief under the dispensations of his God, let me say: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." To him who, with his sword and shield, has almost fought his way between the pearly portals, but has tired of the battle, and laid down his armor, let me say: Up! for the Lord is at hand. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." And to him who is crushed with the bitterness of bereavement, and is trembling beneath the chastisement of God's rod; let me say, Cheer up! "Be thou faithful unto death;" and an eternity of perennial joy, as unceasing as the mighty fall of everlasting; again that wheel their flight around God's throne, is yours! [illegible]

[illegible] the [illegible] our [illegible] been [illegible] beauty of our celestial home, [illegible] have [illegible] the course of that pure [illegible] whose waters make glad the city of our God: it is true we have never beheld the foundations of that golden city, whose crystal surface flashes back the light from the radiant throne; but, glory to God, there is joy among the angels that we are striving for its welcome. It will be Christ's heart that shall welcome us—Christ's arms that shall receive us; and amid the songs of angels, it shall be Christ who gives us a crown in the habitations of the immortal, on the banks of the river of life.

"There the sun shall no more be thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God, thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." C. G. Carrer.

Blackstone, Mass.

For the Crisis.

When at Amboy and Elizabeth.

After our Conference in Earlville, I called on the friends in Amboy. This is a flourishing city lying on the Central R. R. There are a few Brn. in this place looking for the coming kingdom, and their numbers are increasing. I had the pleasure of baptizing two—a man and his wife—who have recently obtained mercy through the blood of Christ. There are others that will go forward soon. The brethren are diligent, zealous, and devoted, which will always receive the divine favor. May our Lord add to their number those that will be saved in the coming gathering. I preached four sermons; then I had to attend the CONFERENCE IN JOE DAVIS CO.

The iron horse carried us through in five hours. Arrived in time to fill appointment, Jan. 18th. This meeting I continued twenty-one days. Preached in the time twenty-five sermons. There was much prejudice to contend with, and many hard sayings from a source whence we might have expected better things. I am often surprised to see the course that professed christendom pursue. They are certainly blind to their own interest, or they would readily see we are taking the only position that can fortify them from the destructive influences of spiritualism. But instead of their recognizing this great fact, they attribute to us some low, narrow, contracted, contemptible motive, and join hands with those that would be glad to see the Bible and christendom buried so deep that they would never have a resurrection. And they are blinded, apparently, by their zeal, to another important fact, that they are putting weapons into the hands of this class,—above mentioned,—which will wield them, ere long, with that power that will make christendom tremble.

There were some conversions, and a number reclaimed. The brethren were much engaged—held two prayer meetings daily—and took hold of the work manfully and labored with a zeal that reminded me of the past and better days.

I see no good reason why our brethren in that place may not hold regular meetings—and certainly their numbers are sufficient—they have a good preacher, Bro. Wadley, and I trust Eld. Pilcher will take hold with them, and by the blessing of God have a church that will be found ready and waiting for the return of the Nobleman.

There was one conversion worthy of notice. A young lady came forward, weighed down with guilt, knelt, and began to pray—"Lord, have mercy on me!" "I did not know I was so great a sinner." "I never saw my sins so before." "Is there mercy for me?" "Can such a wretch as I be saved?" "Have I sinned away the day of grace?" "I have never been very wicked, Lord, not so bad as many. Yet what an awful sinner I am. Do have mercy on me!" This cry, varying some in language, continued for three fourths of an hour, I should judge, until it seemed to melt the whole congregation. Yea, it was enough to melt the heart of a stone. At length, the cry turned to blessing the Lord for mercy and pardoned sins: "O Jesus, thou hast pardoned me." "Blessed Jesus! blessed Savior, how good thou art to hear my prayer!" "O Jesus, blessed be thy name!" This continued for quite a length of time, until all, I thought, must begin to feel that Jesus was indeed precious to the believer. Then an exhortation followed to all to come to Jesus: "Come, do come; the Lord has heard my prayer and will hear yours." This is the feeling of a soul in its first love. I thought of the exhortation in Rev. 2: 1—6, which might be applicable to us who have borne, and had patience, and for His name's sake had labored and had not fainted. "Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee because thou hast left thy first love. Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen and repent," etc.

Brethren and sisters, are we not guilty in this matter? Have we that love for our fellow men as formerly? Do we labor as faithfully as we should, to get men converted and ready for the coming kingdom? God has revealed to us great and precious truths; but have we not lost sight of the object, to some extent at least, for which these truths are given in this age? I fear we have, and our first love has departed; hence we do not see the result of labor that we could wish. If our brethren and sisters would pray more in secret, and invite the heavenly dove to return, I have no doubt, with the vast amount of truth we have, we could do more in the cause of God in saving men than all of christendom combined. At present, we are doing comparatively little to what we might do, if we would pray more and believe the promises of God. We all have learned one fact, that the Spirit of God alone can make us realize the lost condition of man and the coming judgment of God, and make us feel for our kindred and mankind as we should, and also realize "without (Christ) ye can do nothing."

I left the friends in good cheer, and turned my face southward. W. Pratt.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 7, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 11.

Having carefully examined eight Divisions of "Doubting Castle," to find proof that man has a conscious spirit that lives when he is dead; and, as yet, found none; we have become fully satisfied, that when we have searched it all through, we shall find that we have all the time been looking for truth where nothing but error is to be found. But for the sake of satisfying our Bro. Edwin and others, we will continue to tumble over the "Doubting Castle" rubbish. In the ninth Division, Bro. Burnham found the following:

"There is one important element in the parable of the Rich man and Lazarus that favors the idea that the spirit of man is conscious after death. The parable represents, that both were conscious while as yet the five brethren of the Rich Man were alive in this world! (32) Now it is a most important fact, that every single parable of our Lord, in the New Testament, is founded on a representation of that which has been, or that which is, or that which consistently can be. I do not know what the parable itself may mean—perhaps it does refer to the Jews and Gentiles—but I see that, whatever it does mean, such a real circumstance has been, or is now, or can consistently be; or else this is an entire and abrupt exception to the whole tenor of the Savior's teachings." (33)

32. The managers of "Doubting Castle" have used this parable so much to prove that man has a conscious spirit which lives when he is dead, that they have worn it nearly threadbare. It will soon need a new gloss from their painters and glaziers, or it will not serve their purpose much longer. When we were incarcerated in "Doubting Castle," great use was made of this parable to convince us that the poor man's spirit went to heaven, and the rich man's to hell torments as soon as they died. They set this forth with so much bold assurance, we supposed it must be so, and for a long time we dared not for a moment question their statements. But one day, while meditating on the subject, we thought, how unreasonable to have men go to their reward and punishment before the judgment; for we have read, "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished."—2 Pet. 2: 9. This settled the point that they were not now being punished. But if torment, instead of "death," is the punishment of the sinner, and he goes into torment between death and the resurrection, then it follows, he is not reserved "unto the day of judgment to be punished," but is now being punished. We learn from Rev. 11: 15, 18, that men are not judged till the seventh angel sounds; and neither rewarded nor punished till after the judgment. The text reads:

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."

Upon further examination we found there was not one word in the whole parable of the Rich man and Lazarus about either soul or spirit; hence we saw at once, that we could not rely upon this Scripture as evidence to prove that man has a spirit that will be conscious when he is dead and in hades—the grave.

It is true that "the parable represents, that both were conscious while as yet the five brethren of the Rich Man were alive in this world." Let this fact be remembered, and we shall soon see that the Rich Man did not die a literal death, and, consequently, was not placed in the literal hades; for if he had been, he would have been unconscious, as the Bible declares that in sheol, the Hebrew word corresponding with the Greek hades, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom."—Eccl. 9: 10. Then it follows, that the Rich Man was not in the literal hades; because he did devise a plan for the benefit of his five brethren in this world. He could not have devised this plan if he had been in the literal hades where there is no "knowledge."

Again, he could not have been in the literal hades, because he cried for help; and this he could not do without the organs of speech, which are buried when we bury dead men. And to settle the matter, David says, the wicked will "be silent" in sheol or hades; hence we arrive again at the certain conclusion that the Rich Man was neither literally dead, nor in the literal hades.

In Rev. 20: 13, we read: "The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell (hades) delivered the DEAD which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works." How can this Scripture be true if men are alive in the literal hades? We are told by the managers of "Doubting Castle" that only the soul or spirit goes to hades. Well, suppose this were true, instead of false; what follows? Why, as that which goes into hades is DEAD, the soul or spirit must be dead; and the Bible positively declares, "The DEAD know not any thing;" and more than this, sheol or hades is the very place where there is "no . . . knowledge nor wisdom."

We have now come again to the unavoidable conclusion that the Rich Man was not in the literal hades; because he is represented as being conscious, and devising plans to benefit men in this life; this he could not do, if literally dead.

33. We pass. In the next section, it is stated that all the parables of our Lord, in the New Testament, are "founded on a representation of that which has been, or that which is, or that which consistently can be."

We see the "Doubting Castle" faculty admit that the Rich Man is used parabolically to represent the Jews; and, consequently, cannot be taken as proof of a doctrine nowhere else expressed; and one, too, that is in plain opposition to other literal texts, as just shown; but as a last resort, they assert that the parables in the New Testament are "founded on a representation of that which has been," or may be. It is certain that all the parables in the Old Testament are not founded on fact. Read the following, found in Ezk. 17: 2–8.

"Son of man, put forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel; and say, thus saith the Lord God, a great eagle with great wings, long-winged, full of feathers, which had divers colors, came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar; he cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffic, he set it in a city of merchants. He took also of the seed of the land, and planted it in a fruitful field; he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree; and it grew and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned towards him, and the roots thereof were under him; so it became a vine and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs. There was also another great eagle, with great wings and many feathers; and, behold, this vine did bend her branches towards him, that he might water it by the furrows of his plantation."

It must be a very strange eagle that takes the branches off from the cedar and sets them out, causing them to grow "in a city of merchants;" and then takes the seed of the land to plant, raising vines which spread their branches towards himself! and more than this, the roots grow towards another great eagle! We think all can see that this parable is not founded in fact. It is used to illustrate the actions of two kings.

Take another, found in Judges 9: 8–15.

"The trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them, and they said unto the olive tree, reign thou over us. But the olive tree said unto them, should I leave my fatness, wherewith by me they honor God and man, and go to be promoted over trees? And the trees said to the fig-tree, come thou and reign over us. But the fig-tree said unto them, should I forsake my sweetness, and my good fruit, and go to be promoted over the trees? Then said the trees unto the vine, come thou and reign over us. And the vine said unto them, should I leave my wine, which cheereth God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees? Then said all the trees unto the bramble, come thou and reign over us. And the bramble said unto the trees, if in truth ye anoint me king over you, then come and put your trust in my shadow; and if not, let fire come out of the bramble, and devour the cedars of Lebanon."

Do trees talk, assemble together, and appoint kings? As parables in the Old Testament are not all founded on facts, how do we know that all are in the New? Bishop Lowth defines a parable as follows: "A parable is that kind of allegory which consists of a continued narrative of FICTITIOUS or accommodated events, applied to the illustration of some important truth."

As it is not an "important truth" that men are conscious in hades, this parable of the Rich Man cannot be used to "illustrate" and teach as true, that which the whole Bible declares to be false.

We come back to the statement which our Bro. B. found posted in this section of the "Castle;" to wit, that the parables of our Lord are "founded on a representation of that which has been." We find the Jews had a similar account in their Talmud, which Lightfoot renders as follows: "There was a good man and a wicked man that died. As for the good man, he had no funeral rites solemnized; but the wicked man had. Afterward, there was one who saw in his dream the good man walking in gardens, and led by pleasant springs; but the wicked man, with his tongue trickling, drop by drop, at the bank of a river, endeavoring to touch the water, but he could not." [Jerusalem Talmud, in Chagigah, fol. 77, col. 4.]

It appears that the Savior used this "representation of that which has been," found in a "dream" of "fictitious . . . events," recorded in the Jerusalem Talmud, to illustrate the then future history of the Jews in this life, consequent upon their rejecting Christ, and has nothing whatever to do with the intermediate state of the dead.

If our Lord has used this parable to teach that there is consciousness in the literal hades, then "this is an entire and abrupt exception to the whole tenor of the Savior's teaching," and in opposition to plain and positive Scripture, in both the Old and New Testament.

If the Faculty in "Doubting Castle" should endeavor to perplex our dear Bro. B. again on this parable, by saying that some of the Jews believed that men were conscious in hades; and, consequently, as the Savior used the word in connection with the "dream" from their Talmud, employed to illustrate the subsequent history of the Jews, he thereby endorsed their idea of it, because he did not stop and tell them again that there is "no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom" in hades; let him ask them why the Savior did not correct those who said, "Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets."—Matt. 16: 14. Says Dr. Clarke: "By this and other passages we learn, that the Pharisaic doctrine of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of souls, was pretty general; for it was upon this ground that they believed that the soul of the Baptist, or of Elijah, Jeremiah, or some of the prophets, had come to a new life in the body of Jesus." The Savior did not stop to correct the inquirer, but said, "Whom say ye that I am?"

Again, why did not the Savior correct those who inquired concerning a man "blind from his birth," "saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?" In this question is involved the doctrine of the transmigration of souls, as believed by the Pharisees. Yet we have no account of any correction of that error during that conversation; but he barely said, "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest in him."—John 2–3. The unconscious state of all in the literal hades had been so clearly stated in the Scriptures, that no further declaration could make it any stronger. All the Savior could do, was to say to his disciples, "BEWARE" "of the doctrines of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees." The Sadducees denied the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the dead. The Pharisees admitted the resurrection of the body, but taught the immortality of the soul, and its consciousness in hades. When the Savior instructed his disciples to "beware" of the doctrines of the Pharisees, he certainly did not mean the resurrection of the dead, for he taught that himself; but he would have them beware of the belief in the immortality of the soul and its conscious state in hades. Hence the inevitable conclusion, that hades in the parable is used in a parabolic sense, applied to the Jewish nation, and has no reference to the state of men after literal death.

In concluding our examination of this noted room in "Doubting Castle," where so many have been deceived and blinded by the learned Faculty of this institution of error, and handmaid of Papacy; let us take one more look at the parable, supposing it a historic account, and reading it in harmony with "Doubting Castle" theology. We will begin at the 22d verse of the 16th chapter of Luke: "And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died and was buried." All who claim that this is a history of what actually took place, must admit,—First, that Lazarus died, not his body, but Lazarus himself; and he that died was carried, not something else, for the record reads, "the beggar died, and was carried." If I say a man died in the street and was carried into the house, would any one suppose that I meant they carried his soul in and left his body in the street? Then why say in this case that the angels carried his soul and left his body, when it is expressly declared that the beggar that died was carried? If this is history, then whatever it takes to constitute Lazarus, died and was carried to Abraham's bosom. Second. "The rich man also died, and was buried." In this case, the one that died, is the one that was buried. If this is also a historic account, it follows that the Rich Man came to life after he was buried, and a flame burned in the grave. Whatever constituted the Rich Man died, otherwise it is not a true history; for there was nothing buried in hades only what died; hence, if there was any thing about him that did not die, it was not the Rich Man, and was not put in hades at all, but went to some other place. If this is a historic account, there was nothing tormented only what died and was buried; but no one can suffer in the grave unless buried alive.

But for argument's sake, we will take another view of the subject, and suppose that the man did not die—only his body or the house in which he lived, was buried in hell, (hades or, the grave) while his soul went into torment. Now let us read this Scripture in harmony with this [illegible]. Begin at verse 22. "And it came to pass that the [body of the] beggar died, and [the soul] was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; the [body of the] rich man also died, and [his soul] was buried. And in hell (hades, the grave,) he lifted up his eyes [of his soul] being in torments, and seeth [the soul of] Abraham afar off, and [the soul of] Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, father Abraham, [let thy soul] have mercy on me, and send [the soul of] Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his [soul's] finger in [literal] water, and cool my tongue" [of my soul.]

The foregoing paraphrase is in harmony with the theory, that only the body died; but we think all can see the absurdity of such an exposition. Even if we should adopt this paraphrase as truth, it completely overthrows the idea that man exists in a disembodied state between death and the resurrection; for he is represented as having eyes, fingers and tongue; but these organs do not exist and act independently of the rest of man's physical organism.

We can see no POSSIBLE way of harmonizing the Scriptures with "Doubting Castle" theology, which makes the hades in this parable represent the place of the literal dead, between death and the resurrection. If it is the literal hades, then the Bible declares that those who are in it are "DEAD," "silent," and without any knowledge.

New Volume.

This is the first number of Vol. XI. We hope to make our weekly visits even more interesting than ever to our dear brethren and sisters. It is pleasure to toil for those who appreciate our efforts. We verily believe we are associated with the best class of people in the world; if we did not, we would at once change our relation. We believe also, that we have the best hope—"that blessed hope"—and we are resolved in the strength of the Lord to hold fast, glorying in the cross of Christ, till the coming of the day of coronation. Though we are a despised company, we are a happy one, thank the Lord. Though would-be friends, proud professors, and fashionable worldlings, may sneer and frown, we feel like lifting up our heads and shouting glory. How blessed to suffer reproach for Christ's sake. Let us "stand up for Jesus" without a blushing shade upon the face. We should be ashamed of nothing but sin, and ignorance, when we might be informed.

Many of our readers have for several years been anxiously waiting and longing for the return of our Savior. Sometimes they have been almost discouraged, and said with the most earnest inquiry,—"O when will he come? Can you tell me? 'Watchman, what of the night?'"—We think we have the best of reasons for saying, "The morning cometh." Yes, lone pilgrim, the dawn of eternal day is brightening the distant horizon. The time is at hand, when the loved ones, sleeping, will awake to life eternal, and meet the friends they left in tears, when they said farewell. Mourning widow, be patient a few more days; thy dear companion will sleep but a little longer. He who has the keys of hades will soon appear to unlock the prison, and release the captives. While time shall last, we hope to make our weekly visits, comforting and strengthening to all who mourn, and encouraging to the weary and fainting.

We owe many thanks to our faithful and able contributors. Let us still be favored with your interesting productions. Remember you are addressing several thousand, and may be the instrument in the Lord's hands of doing great good, with little effort and expense. Baptize your articles with prayer, looking for special help from the Holy Spirit; let love beam from every line, condense the thoughts in as few words as possible, and then send them blazing through the world to illumine and cheer the homeward bound pilgrim.

We hope those who preach the gospel of the kingdom will write more. Come, Brn. in the ministry, send us some of your stirring thoughts. Scatter them as heaven does its blessings. Come, send us a few lines, and let the children of the Lord hear from you. If you have any good news to tell of the Savior's doings in your fields of labor, please communicate it. It will do others good. Do not withhold on this point, because some may have given too high a coloring to revival reports; or because you may be tempted to think some one will feel you are boasting. Tell of the Lord's doings for his glory. It is very encouraging to the desponding, care worn minister, to hear of successful labors in any part of the Lord's vineyard. It gives him a new impulse. If angels rejoice when a sinner repents, why should not we? But how can we, unless it be known? Come, tell us the good news, that we may have joy with you.

"Truth's Triumphs."

The above heading is the title of an old book written in A. D. 1676, by Thomas Tomkins. It is an English work, printed in London. From its pages we extract the following:

"The common opinion of the world is that all men's souls are immortal . . . The heathen philosophers were the first preachers of that doctrine."

Let this statement be remembered by all who read it. Is it not strange that God should reveal this doctrine to the heathen before he did to his children? And still more strange that he should never reveal it in his word to his people, but leave them to learn the doctrine of the heathen?

The writer goes on to say:

"The soul only is man, (say the Platonists) the body is but the case or cover to it, and Plato, with the Chaldean philosophers [illegible] made together, and afterwards sent into bodies, as into so many dark lanterns. Origen, a philosopher of christianity, in the time of the ten persecutions, was much taken with this Platonical notion, therefore saith he, according to the carriage of these naked spirits before they were embodied, there were prepared answerable mansions for them.

That such a soul that had walked with God acceptably was put into a fine prison and was clothed with an elegant and amiable body; but that soul that had provoked and displeased its Creator, was put into a darker dungeon, into a more obscure and uncomely body. . . .

This Origen is as dark in this doctrine as the heathen . . . . I find all professors in a manner in as great darkness as was Origen above said; for they will have the soul to be immortal, as well as he, and that every man's soul is made in heaven."

We are sometimes asked, "Why have not men seen the doctrine you preach before the present time?" They have seen it, and written volumes on the subject; but their writings have been under a ministerial curse, and been smothered like books in the Romish church, when condemned by the Pope.

The Bible writers wrote plainly that the whole man dies, and is dependent on a resurrection for a future life.

This writer truly says: "The soul's immortality" is "contrary to reason." In referring to the originators of this doctrine, he says: "The gods [demons] of the earth have raised up this principle in order to raise themselves."

He says, "bloody martial men," when they engage in war, are encouraged by the general to fight, who preaches to them the "doctrine of the soul's immortality," promising them glory in the spirit land for their brave deeds on the battle field.

In speaking of "The fruits of this false doctrine," as he denominates it, he relates a scene recorded by Josephus, in his book of the wars of the Jews; when a city was besieged by the Romans, and the inhabitants were advised by the chief governor to kill themselves rather than fall into the hands of the Gentiles, and so by this means "go immediately to heaven." After they had heard "an elegant oration of the soul's immortality" from their governor, "each soldier ran himself through with his own sword; the masters first killed their servants, then their children, then their wives, and lastly themselves." He speaks of another instance of a man, who, "Hearing an oration of the soul's immortality, threw himself down a rock, that he might kill death and run to the Elysian fields. The Turks uphold their war with this principle, and so are all other wars upheld thereby."

In speaking of what he calls "The heathen doctrine of the immortality of the soul," he says: "O! foolish man, how can you once be so sottish as to think that your soul is a soul without a body; you describe a thing that is not, nor never was; you may well be in the dark." He says, "It is the soul that walks, that talks, that eats and drinks, that sleeps, that wakes, that lives and dies." "The Creator never made souls without bodies, neither in heaven above, nor earth beneath." The one cannot be without the other; but life to one, life to both; death to one, death to both."

For the Crisis.

"Reasons for my Hope."

Just the book we have long needed. Many are ignorant of any evidence of Jesus' soon coming. They often inquire, asking a reason for such a "hope." Few believers, from want of memory or ability to teach, can give a clear, convincing reply; but could they have a neat little volume, fully meeting the question, to put into each inquirer's hand, much time would be saved, and unto many who "sit in darkness" on this point, light would spring up. Such a volume has been wanting till Bro. Hasting's issued his late work—"Reasons for my hope." This just meets the demand. It is well calculated to subdue prejudice, and fix in the mind of every reader the conviction that "these things are so." Every believer ought to circulate this widely. Now is the time to work. We intend to circulate in our little village one hundred at least of them. We have already scattered half that number. Many brethren have taken five copies each to supply their neighbors. Who can tell the income from one dollar invested in this way? Let us rejoice in the truth, let us make others glad also with light upon the "blessed hope." Let us assure our brother that we appreciate his labor in supplying us with such an able work—a work that can be read with profit by those well posted on prophecy, and with still more interest by those seeking truth. Some believers here have read it twice over. I ask one how he likes the "Reasons." "First rate," is the reply; and another answers by wanting several more copies. Let us cast our bread upon the waters—the day of return hasteth greatly. E. L. C.

Danielsonville, Ct., March 2nd.

For the Crisis.

Man in Death is Unconscious.

[illegible]

No. 7.

In concluding this series of articles on the unconsciousness of man in death, it may be proper for me to observe a few points, that are supposed to bear with some degree of weight upon the above question. It must be evident to every reflecting mind, that philosophical argument in favor of man's consciousness in death, cannot be of any weight only so far as it agrees with divine revelation. The proof upon every point by philosophy, is only arrived at by a process of reasoning, which may appear sound and, indeed, perfectly logical now, but which by the still clearer light of philosophical research, may appear as clearly and truly illogical at another time. Therefore, every conclusion to which we may come upon the above point from philosophy, should always be held subservient to the unfailing decision of divine revelation; for while any true, philosophical principle may perfectly harmonise with divine revelation, it must never fail to give to such a revelation the preference in deciding the truthfulness of any point primarily revealed in it. Therefore philosophy affords no proof of the consciousness of man in death, unless it positively accords with the statement of revelation upon that point, when especially such a revelation positively declares the unconsciousness of man in death. The positive revelation of a fact concerning any point, in a divine, and heaven-originated revelation, is itself a decision, yea, a logical decision respecting it, and if it should be above our reasoning faculties, it may, nevertheless, be perfectly in harmony with sound logic. From a revelation from God therefore, there is no appeal. In the Bible, man's unconsciousness in death is positively affirmed.—Ps. 146: 3, 4; Eccl. 9: 4—6, 10; Isa. 38: 18, 19; Ps. 6: 5; Ps. 115: 17.

Again, any idea entertained by the heathen world upon this point, can in no sense be reliable, and even though we might be entirely incapable of assigning a truly valid reason for the origin of any position assumed by them on the question of the immortality of the soul, as proving either the unconsciousness of man in death, or otherwise, the difficulty which might attend such an effort would, or even its impossibility could never justify the decision that such a sentiment must or might have had its origin from divine impression, or an inherent, heaven-originated conviction of its truthfulness. Then again, the Bible denies the heavenly origin of any such sentiment, by revealing the opposite of it as only true. This it certainly does by showing that life and immortality are not only brought to light through the gospel, but that the righteous are the only subjects of it, and the resurrection the only possible period for such a blessing to be conferred. Its teaching upon this point is perfectly plain. 2 Tim. 1: 10; 1 Cor. 15: 51—56. A benefit to be sought for.—Rom. 2: 6, 7.

During the period in which Jesus Christ prosecuted his mission among men, he might have declaimed against any such sentiment plainly, but from his course of instruction it is very apparent that he did not always take that course of correcting errors. The error of the immortality of the soul, as well as its transmigration, originated, according to Herodotus, in Egypt. How, we are not fully informed.

Rollin affirms that the Egyptian "priests held the second rank to kings" and upon the most sacred things relating to the mysteries of religion, they were consulted only, and their privileges are noticed in Gen. 47: 26. These "priests had the possession of the sacred books which contained at large the principles of government, as well as the mysteries of divine worship." The Egyptians pretend to be the first in the institution of festivals and processions in honor of the gods. Their demon worship was the cause of the continual wars carried on between their different cities. Whilst one people worshiped one species of animal as gods, their neighbors held the same animals in abomination. Their religion and government "were commonly involved in symbols and enigmas, which under these veils made truth more venerable, and excited more strongly the curiosity of men." "It is plain that the golden calf set up near Mount Sinai by the Israelites, was owing to their abode in Egypt, and an imitation of the god Apis; as well as those which were afterwards set up by Jeroboam (who had resided a considerable time in Egypt,) in the two extremities of the kingdom of Israel."—Rollin, Vol. 1, pp. 52, 53. Now from the above, it is fair to presume that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and its transmigration, might have originated with the priests of Egypt, or have been suggested by the demons that they worshiped. It was evidently handed down from one generation to another until the Pharisees embraced it after the Babylonish captivity, for the Jews, as Rollin suggests, adopted heathen idolatry in certainly no [illegible] [illegible] stood immediately connected with the development of his mission. Indeed, he did not attempt [illegible] to [illegible] his disciples.

Observe Matt. 16: 14. Said Dr. Clarke on this point:—"By this and other passages we learn, that the pharisaic doctrine of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of souls, was pretty general; for it was upon this ground that they believed that the soul of the Baptist, or of Elijah, Jeremiah, or some of the prophets had come to a new life in the body of Jesus." Now, reader, why did not Christ correct that error when conversing with Peter? Evidently because it was not the point at issue with him at that time, but rather by obtaining from them their confession, of his relation to God, to teach that upon such a revelation, his church was founded, thereby proving his relation to the same. Observe also John 9: 1, 2, 3.—"Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" Here is this same doctrine of the transmigration of souls suggested, as if this blind man could have sinned before he was born, and because of sin be born blind. Jesus made no formal correction of this, but the doctrine taught by him and his apostles, positively denies any such thing possible.

Again, it may be thought probable that the early christians had so much better opportunity for learning the truth on the point of man's condition in death, that their faith respecting it should have some weight in our minds. At the first view it might appear fair to presume that the disciples of those who were immediately connected with the apostles would entertain correct views upon doctrinal points, and matters of faith, but history does not exactly justify such a presumption. Observe a point.

Florinus was a disciple of Polycarp, and a presbyter of the church of Rome, having been first one of the emperor's officers in Asia. "Against Florinus, Irenæus, the Bishop of Lyons, wrote a letter, entitled, 'Of monarchy, or that God is not the author of evil;' and another piece called 'De Ogdoade,' that is, of the eighth; meaning perhaps the Eight Eons, or persons that composed the chimerical divinity of the Valentinians; for Florinus fell at last into that heresy." Note this. Here are some of the most egregious errors entertained by the disciple of Polycarp himself.

"The Montanists, a sect which sprung up in A. D. 171, pretended to divine inspiration, and Montanus gave out that the Holy Ghost had instructed him in several points which had not been revealed to the apostles. Priscilla and Maximilla, two enthusiastic women of Phrygia, presently became his disciples, and in a short time he had a great number of followers. . . . These sectaries made no alteration in the creed, they only held that the Holy Spirit made Montanus his organ for delivering a more perfect form of discipline than what was delivered by the apostles."—Art. Montanists, Buck's Theol. Dict. p. 389. Tertullian received their prophecies, and became a follower of Montanus.—Bower's Hist. of Popes, Vol. 1, p. 17.

Again, observe the "Cerdonians, a sect in the first century, who espoused most of the opinions of Simon Magus, and the Manicheans. They asserted two principles, good and bad. The first they called the Father of Jesus Christ; the latter, the creator of the world. They denied the incarnation and the resurrection, and rejected the books of the Old Testament." Error was very abundant in the first and second centuries on almost all religious subjects. See the account of the Alogians, Archonites, Cainites, Ebeonites, in Buck's Dict. pp. 18, 30, 70, 160. For the faith of the Valentinians above referred to, see Buck's Dict. p. 590; and it will be very apparent that the immediate disciples of those who were associated with the apostles, did not necessarily retain the truth. Even among those who believed the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, or its consciousness in death, we see no proof that they obtained it from apostolic instruction, and therefore the sentiment might as easily have been embraced from the teaching of others; and if the teaching of the apostles, as recorded in the New Testament, is to be taken as a criterion by which to judge of what they taught to the people, it is evident that not one of their disciples ever received the doctrine of man's consciousness in death, or the immortality of the soul from them, for they nowhere teach either.

With the utmost confidence, I confess my faith in the truthfulness of the declaration of the spirit of prophecy respecting Christ in Ps. 16: 10, 11.—"Thou wilt show me the path of life," which is quoted by the apostle Peter on an occasion when he would be very likely to apply scripture where it belonged.—Acts 2: 25–28. Here under the immediate influence of the baptism of the Spirit, he applies this to the resurrection of Christ. If then, "the path of life" runs through the resurrection, and glorification of the saints at that time, they certainly cannot possess it until then, otherwise it is not "the path of life," but the period of reunion, as some define it.

Obstinacy, let us strictly adhere to the truths of the Bible, and heartily confess the same, that in so doing we may confess Christ, and are long be confessed by him, before the Father and his holy angels. The christians may be confident in his faith, [illegible] [illegible] ing the scripture truth, that unfolds the divine purpose, and be modest in a faithful confidence of reason, without being either ignorant or dogmatical, unless the signification of the latter term is restricted, in expressing that of which one is positive, or certain; for the faith, or things taught in the scriptures, are always positively declared, before being illustrated, or referred to figuratively.

Such is the case with the penalty of Edenic law. "For in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." In this death all will perish forever without a resurrection. 1 Cor 15: 12—18, 19—22. Especially verse 18. "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" "Decayed, wasted away, destroyed."—See Web. Dict.

May God aid us all to faithfully and conscientiously trust in his word in this time of great, very great peril, that we may be found gathering with Jesus when he comes. To brethren in the ministry let me remark, that although our trials are great, let us trust in God. To go back is dangerous in the extreme. To preach the whole truth of the gospel is our constant duty, without a compromise of the same, for any consideration whatever.

A compromise of perceived scripture truth, is a compromise of the blessings it confers. May God save us in this "hour of temptation." In "a little while," Jesus will come, the kingdom will be set up, and if truly faithful, we, with all the beloved of God, will be at home. Amen.

For the Crisis.

Highways and Hedges.

I believe this is the time for going out into these places, instead of working the old, worn out fields over and over again, as it is too much the fashion now-a-days among us. I was convinced of this by coming to this place last Thursday, finding twenty-one young men all enjoying religion, and five or six young ladies, from my weak efforts here last fall, when I spent only five days. I sowed the seed in what was considered to be a hedge of thorns even by the preacher. On coming home one Friday evening was happily disappointed to see the seed had taken root and the work had started

Nine requested prayers the last evening, and I left for Portland, and heard nothing definite from here until I came back this week, when I was greeted with some twenty-five warm-hearted converts I never recollected seeing before. This took me down, as stout as I was, coming so unexpectedly. They all knew me, but I could only say, What has God done to this thorny hedge? I could hardly believe that God had given such increase to so little poor seed. Said one of the church members to me, "We were dead enough to bury when you came last fall." Another said, "I held you off because you was an Adventist, till God broke down my son; and that showed me that I was fighting God's work; I broke down and am there yet. Thank God! Another said, "I did not mean to get caught as my three brothers did, and so I laid on the floor under one of the back seats to hide from you. But oh! God took me in hand that night after you had gone, and I had my case to plead alone out in the barn before God." There were other similar accounts of the work of God. This cheered my heart to go into the hedges and work occasionally. This work has spread into the next neighborhood, and many have been converted there. I heard that six requested prayers here the 17th.

Sunday. Although stormy, a good congregation came out through snow drifts and storm, and four different preachers, to hear on the doctrine of life through Christ and on prophecy, which I had liberty in delivering with very little opposition. None seemed to be bitterly opposed, the converts all drank it down, and now love Christ's appearing. I found only two or three that got their corns trod on hard enough to growl out aloud, and they were bare-footed christians. I advised such to get shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, for these shoes do not pinch the feet, and will cure these kind of corns.

Wednesday 22d. The work increases. Last evening nineteen new cases were forward for prayers—some heads of families; a deep feeling prevails in town. Three meetings to-day and but little work done on the farms; seven different preachers out yesterday.

23d. A good number have come out clear and happy, and others are coming forward. The family where I board have all lately enlisted in the cause of God; four of them within four days. It did look blessed to see seven of them on their knees for the first time.

24th. The interest is increasing. Yesterday, although stormy, as it has been every day since I have been here, the people turned out; some came five miles on foot, and others on sleds drawn by oxen, bringing their dinner and staying all day and evening. A good number were converted, and in the evening some fifteen new cases, and some hard ones. The church has got to work for sinners.

Yesterday, after preaching, forty-two spoke in as many minutes. Last evening the interest was still increasing. There has not been a day to mind his tongue for [illegible] [illegible] run [illegible] I find the new wine of the kingdom will burst old rum bottles and jugs, and according to report, quite a number of rum jugs are in mourning for absent friends. I told the people they must not soak the seed in new rum. Bro. Hall, the former pastor, was rejected, I understand, for preaching against rum drinking which was practiced by many of the members. The old rum shop now stands within a few feet of the meeting-house; it was built and set in operation by the first pastor, a good old fashioned man that did not think it sin to sell spirits, until he had a dram, and then sold out to the deacon. Such an operation as this would lead to rum drinking in the church, they being anxious to trade with their own members and keep their money in the church. This old church rum shop does not go now, but it has left its effects behind on the inhabitants. Such a state of things was rather forbidding to a protracted meeting, and for a stranger; but so it was. The preacher that invited me said it was a Sodom, but he did not go into particulars; if he had, I should not have undertaken the job. I begin to see why there were such sore feet and heads about my preaching. Surely it can be called a thorny hedge; and nothing but the power of the Almighty God could ever revolutionise this place. The first pastor heard of the work, and came nine miles to see for himself. He staid five days and helped what he could; being infirm could do but little, but did not stand in the way. He enjoyed to see this work go after so long a drouth. Bro. Hall, who lives in this neighborhood, has taken hold with me and rendered much service, although some rejected him because he came out so strong on rum drinking; but God stands by him.

Saturday 25th.—Leave to-day for Portsmouth after nine days meeting. Some fifty different persons have started anew to serve God. I left the meeting last evening with eighteen new cases on their knees, pleading for mercy. The interest has not abated. One brother said some of the hardest cases in town were among the eighteen on Friday evening; but I was sick and had to leave as soon as I called them forward. I understand this morning that a number came out blessed. Two men and their wives resolved to serve God and came to the anxious seats together. One of the Selectmen of the town is among the best laborers since God's Spirit has melted him. His family have been blessed by it, and one man said, as I was coming away, "What has God done for Berwick! I cannot realize it yet." And another said, "This crooked people needed a crooked instrument to hit them." Consider the crooked work of God.—Eccl. 7: 13. I think Satan and his workmen will have a job to straighten things again in Berwick.

This work started as all others do when the church gets into working order, and it cannot before. The preacher can only preach the people up to their duty of the Cross; and then it will stop until the cross is taken up by those that have it. God lays the right cross on the right ones, and if they refuse to do that duty, they will stop the work and die themselves. No church need to expect a preacher to drive sinners over them; yet many block the wheels, then find fault with the preacher.

HIRAM MUNGER.

So. Berwick, Feb. 21st.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in North Attleboro, Mass., Oct. 23d, 1859, THOMAS TAYLOR, aged 28 years.

Bro. Taylor experienced religion some years since, and united with the Baptist Church at Allenton. Some three years ago his attention was called to the investigation of the hope of life only through Christ, which had the effect to stir up his mind and warm his love anew. We were witness to his inexpressible joy in discovering this new beauty and harmony in God's word. Ever after this he lived a consistent life, and died rejoicing in hope of a better resurrection.

He has left a wife and one child, brothers and sisters, to mourn the loss of a kind husband and an affectionate brother. May they all be ready to meet him at the sound of the last trump.

E. BELLOWS.

Departed this life, in Exeter, N. H., Feb. 15th, of disease of the heart, PHEBE JANE THURSTON, daughter of Nathaniel K. and Sarah Ann Thurston, aged fifteen years and four months.

The subject of this notice professed religion when but nine or ten years old; was baptized at the Exeter Tent meeting in 1854, by Eld. Elam Burnham. Although so young when she commenced to serve the Lord, she maintained her religion to the last. Her exhortation was heard in meeting in favor of the cause she loved so well, but she has been taken suddenly from the embraces of beloved parents, brothers and sisters; but we trust that she has sweetly fallen asleep in Jesus, to rest till the morning of the resurrection; then she will awake in immortal bloom, to share in the kingdom of God with all the ransomed ones.

The parents, brothers and sisters, are sorely afflicted by the loss of a beloved child and sister; but they do not sorrow as others that have no hope, for they believe that Jesus died and rose again; and even so them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. It is a comforting thought that our loved ones will surely live again, no more to die; they will be made like Jesus, and reign with him forever. [illegible]

May this affliction be sanctified to all the [illegible]

[illegible] Kennebunkport, preached a comforting discourse on the resurrection, Sunday, 19th, from Luke 20: 37, 38.

WM. M. INGALLS.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 15th ult.]

[illegible] AND ITALIAN QUESTION.

Le Nord says the reply of Austria to the English propositions for settlement of the Italian question had reached Paris. Count Rechberg states that Austria cannot retreat from the engagements at Villafranca and Zurich, and therefore cannot admit the de jure facts contrary to those engagements and the treaty between France and Austria. He observes that if the treaty of Zurich is respected in Venetia, why should it not also be respected in the Italian duchies? If the propositions of England are carried out, it is a great experiment that is about to be made in Central Italy. Austria will not oppose that experiment by force of arms, convinced that events will not fail soon to give support to the cause of right, and justify Austria.

ITALY.

The Tuscan Monitour announces that the Sardinian legation at Florence is shortly to be suppressed, and that the Tuscan government will correspond directly with the Ministry of the Interior and Foreign affairs at Turin.

Furloughs granted to the French soldiers at Rome had been suspended.

Battalions, comprised partly of foreigners and partly of Neapolitans, have been organised. Fifteen thousand Municipal Guards had been mobilised in the Abruzza.

Letters from Italy announce that political arrests and excesses of the Police were increasing. Women had been ravished and beaten by them; political prisoners had died under torture. Several magistrates had in vain protested against these barbarous acts.

A proclamation is in circulation exhorting the Sicilians to rise and reinstate Southern Italy with her former rights in Europe.

Private accounts from Naples state that a conspiracy had been discovered among a portion of the Neapolitan army, and had been traced to Piedmontese agency. Naples, it was said, would address a note to the Powers, complaining of these attempts.

DRESDEN.—The Dresden Journal asserts, in a letter of its Vienna correspondent, that France had requested the Pope to make proposals for settling the Italian question of the Romagna.

Married.

In Vernon, Vt., by Eld. William Sutherland, Dr. ORRIN P. ALLEN of Palmer, Mass., and Miss HATTIE L. M. GARVIN of Boston, Mass.

Notices, &c.

Editorial Notice.

TOWNSEND FEMALE SEMINARY.—We are happy to speak of this Institution as flourishing, and worthy the patronage of its many friends. For twenty years it has maintained its position, and its present prospects are flattering.

Mrs. Sarah H. Brown, Principal, is assisted by an able corps of teachers in the different departments.

The students board in the family of the Principal, where they find a home. Here parents may safely entrust the interests of their daughters, where, in the midst of educational advantages, christian privileges, and the genial influences of social life, are thrown around them, guarding them from the evil.

The next term of fifteen weeks, commences April 4th. We would say to friends who desire more particulars concerning the above, they can address Rev. F. G. Brown, West Townsend, Mass.

Notice.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will be in Augusta, at the brick school-house on Sand Hill, commencing March 29th, Thursday, 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. We shall expect all our ministers there to preach the word, to counsel and labor for the unity and upbuilding of the cause of Christ. Also, as many brethren and sisters as can consistently attend, to engage in the same work. Those who cannot come should pray God to bless this effort to the salvation of lost sinners. We cordially invite ministers and others from everywhere, to attend with us to work as above stated. Strangers coming to this meeting should call on Bro. Wm. A. Lovejoy, and David Moshier.

H. B. SEVEY, Chairman.
L. C. WELLCOME, Secretary.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Bro., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. D. T. Taylor will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall)......Sunday, March 11th

Eld. H. Munger will preach in Warehouse Point, (Chapel) Thursday evening, March 22d, and continue over the following Sunday.

S. P. BABCOCK.

Providence permitting, Eld. George Champlin will preach in Bristol, Ct., March 18th.

JOHN H. SUTLIFF.

Eld. W. S. Campbell will preach in
Lowell...........................Sunday, April 1st
Kennebunkport, Me...........................April 15th
East Boston, Mass...........................April 22d

Eld. H. Munger will preach in East Killingly, Ct., Friday evening, March 16th, and continue over the following Sunday.

Eld. Geo. Champlin will preach in Portsmouth, N. H., the second and third Sundays in April.

Eld. J. Hemenway will preach in Portsmouth, N. H., the first Sabbath in April.

Bro. Daniel A. Jones is expected to preach in Cheshire Street, Ct.....................March 18th

G. MORGAN.

Eld. C. Goodrich will preach in
Northfield, Ct...................Sunday, March 11th
South Farms, Ct...........................March 14th
Roxbury, (so Bro. Temple may appoint) Sunday, March 18th
Brookfield...........................March 21st
Pawlings, N. Y....................Sunday, March 25th

J. K. Bellows will be in [illegible]
[illegible]...........................March 11th

APPOINTMENTS FOR E. KILLINGLY, CT.
Eld. D. A. Jones...........................March 11th
Eld. H. F. Carpenter...........................March 18th
Meetings commence at 1o'clock, P. M.
Brethren wishing to correspond with the church at East Killingly, Ct., will direct their letters to Warren Taft.

J. HEMENWAY.

I will preach as follows:—
Worcester, Mass.....................Sunday, March 11th
Providence, R. I.....................Sunday, March 18th
Danielsonville, Conn...........................March 22d
and over the following Sunday
Warwick Plain, R. I.....................Sunday, March 31st

S. W. BISHOP.

J. G. Smith will be in
Sandwich Centre...........................March 11th
Meredith Village...........................March 18th

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

Eld. Geo. L. Teeple's P. O. address is North Salem, N. Y.

A. F. Lewis' P. O. address is Goodrich, Genesee Co., Mich.

C. O. Baker, Woolwich, Me.—All right; pays to 264.

J. G. Bush.—The books were sent. Send us your order and we will send again.

M. S. Chambers.—Paid to 268.

A. F. Servis.—Right. We will credit you 30 cts. on Crisis.

W. C. Peck.—Shall not be able to send you that No. of the paper.

Cash Receipts.

H Barnett 234, $1.10; J P Young 267, $2.50; G Henry for Gallinsville Bro., $5.00; D Austin 264, $1.75, P Foster 234, 25 cts; G Humphrey 228, 75 cts; A L Chamberlin 234, $1.20; A F Servis 232, 30 cts.

C P Thorn 246, J Parks 247, H Curtis 237,—50 cents each.

D H Warren 254, N Wheeler 264, E Barnes 260, A C Chandler 251, L Haskell 260, Rev. J Gierlow 247, Mrs. M Bland 260, S Porter 253, E H Case 260, D Haskins 260, N Mayo 259, Jed. Martin 260, Cromwell Chase 243, I T Randall 248, W Jackson 256, D J Smith 211, Mrs. N Moore 260, S Dow 213, W D Wood 244, L B Elder 236, J West 203, J M Dodge 260, O Clapp 260, D B Rogers 260, L Bing 234, W Daggett 4th, 260, R Taylor 262, R L Johnson 257, L C Johnson 260,—$1.00 each.

L D Woodward 234, E S Sherman 282, L Taylor 286, J Lowden 286, G Sutton 324, C H Sutton 290, R Plummer 260, E J Ackerman 250, L Rawson 246, A Hoffman 270, A W Low 260, M A Taylor 286, Jon. Wheeler 286, S F Mudgett 267, T Foote 266, S Bliss, 2 copies, 260, N Bedel 286,—$2.00 each.

Books and Tracts.

G Curtis, Jr., 18 cts, Rev. J Gierlow $4.00, J K Bellows $1.00, C H Smith 9 cts, J Sholey 25 cts, Eld. G L Teeple 50 cts, Eld. T Smith $4.00, F Shultz 37 cts, T W Wright $1.00, P S W Deyo $1.00, T Wheeler $1.00, H Bolles $3.60, A S Webster $1.00, N Silt $1.25, A Hoffman $3.36, Al. Spear $1.00, S Bliss $1.00, C G Carre 36 cts, Eld. H F Carpenter $10.90, J W Everson 30 cts, M S Chambers 25 cts.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

Discussion of the Doctrine of The State of the Dead and Punishment of the Wicked; between W. W. Clayton and M. Grant. Price 25 cts; postage 3 cts. Bound 40 cts; postage 9 cts. 1-4th off per dozen.

Human Destiny. A Discussion: Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all? By C. F. Hudson and Sylvanus Cobb. 478 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00 post paid.

The Nature of Faith, and the Evils of Sect. By the late W. H. Starr. With a Memoir and Notes by C. F. Hudson. 239 pp. 12mo. Price 50 cts. Postage 10 cts.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen. 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruahh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 5 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 5 cts.

The Rights of Wrong; or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single, 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 122 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $1.25.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Sheldon. [illegible] $2.00.

Life and Religious Experience of Elder [illegible] [illegible] and will be read with interest by all. Price 40 [illegible] postage 10 cents.

Words of Warning, [illegible] cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles. [illegible] than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Henry A. Sampson. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $5.00 per hundred,—6 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the young. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $2.00 per hundred; 3 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Canton, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are examined, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 3 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 2 cts., postage 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms: or, the kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $4.00 per hundred, 50 cts. per dozen, 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. B. BROOKS, No. 8 Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Waite, Warwick, R. I.:—

The Harp, by Elder Himes; 200 Stories for Children; Satanic Delusion; Bible, Hell, Grant Controversy.

We have also on hand the following

PUBLICATIONS

OF

H. L. HASTINGS,

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Voice of the Church on the coming of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor; edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 420 pp. $1 00

The Great Controversy between God and Man: its Origin, Progress, and End; by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 167 pp. [illegible]

Reasons for My Hope, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 129 pp. Paper 30 cts. Cloth 50

Forever with the Lord, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 00

Earth's Destiny, as revealed in Scripture, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 00

Tracts on Prophecy, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 50

Tracts on Immortality, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 50

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith, by Robert Patterson. 12mo. 320 pp. [illegible]

The Infidel's Fate, by a converted Infidel. Cloth gilt. [illegible]

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, by Wm Ramsey, D D., edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo 120 pp. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth. 40

Pauline Theology: The Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment, as Taught by Paul, by H. L. Hastings. 64 pp. Paper. 10

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life, by H. L. Hastings. Paper, 87 pp. [illegible]

Tracts of 24 Pages.—3 cts. single; $1 for 1600 pages by mail 1200 pp. for $1.

The Church not in Darkness,	by H. L. H. pages	24
The Three Worlds,	by H. L. H.	24
The Last Days,	by H. L. H.	24
Plain Truths,	by H. L. H.	28
Will all men be saved?	by H. L. H.	24
Voice of Warning	by D. T. Taylor	24
The New Heavens and Earth,	"	24
Ancient Landmarks, 6 Nos,	"	24
Olive Leaves, 9 Nos. by	H. L. H. &c.	[illegible]
Important Questions, 9 Nos.	by H. L. H.	[illegible]
State of the Dead,	by John Milton	24
The Intermediate State,	by H. G.	24
Destiny of the Wicked	by H. L. H.	[illegible]
Future Punishment,	by H. G.	12
The Key of Truth,	by W. S.	[illegible]
Man's Future State		12
Letter on Dress	by Adoniram Judson	12
The Day of Judgment,	by G. Cyrus	[illegible]
Outline of the Coast,	by A Voyager	8
The Night Cometh,	by John Adam	[illegible]
Gems, 9 Nos, poetry,	by H. L. H.	12
One Thing		[illegible]
The Coming and Kingdom of Christ,		4
The Duration of the Earth by A. Clarke		4
Hope and Duty of the Church, M. Henry		[illegible]
The Restitution.	by H. Cyrus	4
A Warning Voice,	by Cotton Mather	4
Loving Christ's Appearing,	by Baxter	4
Little Children, Love one another		4
The One Resting Place,	by H. Bonar	4
My Friend,	by H. L. H.	4
Abundant Grace		4
Wonderful Love		4
Go in Peace		4
Living Water		4
The Banner	Anonymous	4
The Blood of Christ		4
Are you a Christian?	by H. L. H.	4
Why not Now?		4
Are you Pardoned?		4
Are you Safe?		4
Are you Saved?		4
Do you Pray?		[illegible]
When Will He Come?	by J. C. Ryle	4
Statement of Account	by H. L. H.	[illegible]
Man in Death	By Bishop Law	[illegible]
Forty Questions on Immortality		[illegible]

SCRIPTURE CHARTS.

No. 1. The Destiny of the Wicked	[illegible]
No. 2. The State of the Dead	[illegible]
No. 3. The Coming of Jesus	[illegible]
No. 4. The Resurrection	[illegible]
No. 5. Plain Truths	[illegible]
No. 6. The Judgment	[illegible]

POETRY.

Brother, Shall we Meet?	by H. L. H.	[illegible]
Sister, Shall we Meet?		[illegible]
Stand up for Jesus!		[illegible]
The Harvest is Past		1
Beyond!		[illegible]
At Rest!		[illegible]
We would see Jesus	by Josephine	[illegible]
A Little While		[illegible]

LEAFLETS FOR LETTERS.

Life Insurance, Envelope Size H. L. H.; Home; Lost, Lost; Peace in Christ; Worth Knowing; All things are Yours; Now; Assurance; About God [illegible]

THE foregoing Books and Pamphlets will be sent by mail, postage paid, upon the receipt of the amount of their published prices. Orders with the cash solicited. Persons who send $5, with the order, shall receive $12 worth of tracts at the retail prices. Tracts are sent by mail, 1200 pages on the receipt of a dollar. When sent by express, or at the expense of the buyer, 1600 pages will be sent for one dollar. Terms cash. Persons who desire to do good can scatter Four Hundred tracts, of four pages each, for $1. These may be widely distributed, and prepare the way for religious efforts. [illegible] The poor can have any of these tracts sent to them free, by remitting stamps to pay the postage. [illegible] have specimen copies of the tracts and pamphlets sent free. All letters, orders, and remittances should be addressed to the Publisher,

H. L. HASTINGS, 43 Weybosset St., Providence, R. I.

[illegible] Germany, [illegible] These publications can be obtained of Miles Grant, 167 Hanover st., Boston; G. W. Young, 122 William st., N. Y.; [illegible] [illegible] and they will be obtained [illegible]

Bibles of the British and Foreign Bible Society, [illegible] references between the verses, $1.50 to $2.25. Nonpareil, [illegible] between verses, $1.25 to $2.10. Pearl, references between verses, $1.75. [illegible] [illegible] the difference in prices.

[illegible] Dedicated to Believers in the Literal Fulfilment of Prophecy.

Then let us haste to Zion's Hill, Ps. 48: 2.
Our [illegible] being;
And in the top thereof we'll rear Micah 4: 1.
The temple of our King. Mal. 3: 1.
The stick of Joseph, here henceforth shall be Ezek. 37: 16.
The Carmel of his rest, his blest security, Micah 7: 14.
We fear not our Sanballat foes, Neh. 6: 1.
Nor all the world beside;
The secret place of the Most High, Ps. 91.
[illegible] beside.
[illegible] beneath his wings, we'll banish every fear;
No [illegible] pestilential breath, nor war shall enter here.
In unity we here shall dwell, Ps. 133.
Delightsome to the Lord,
He shall command his blessing here,
Sure promise of his word.
Sweet unity and Love, the christian's guiding star,
Sure to attract his dazzling gaze, and lure him from afar.
The day-star now is rising bright, 2 Pet. 1: 19.
Our gathering tribes to bless
With light, until He comes to reign,
The Sun of Righteousness.
Then freed from trials, sin and pain, and over death victorious,
With [illegible] our coming, conquering King, enter his rest so glorious.

P. E. ARMSTRONG.

[illegible] Zion is on the sides of the south, and the text in question cannot apply to it. A learned Jew, a resident of Jerusalem, and writing recently from there, in describing the place, pronounces this text exceedingly obscure and irregular. See also Isa. 14: 13, where the fall of Babylon and that of [illegible] identified, the same sides of the north [illegible] of not applicable to old Zion which Babylon destroyed.

For the Crisis.

Leaves from the Note-Book of a Traveler.

No. 4.

May 7th. I enjoyed a blessed season in prayer yesterday morning, and indeed for two or three days past I have enjoyed more than ordinary communion with God. I have been greatly strengthened by secret prayer. O! there is such a sweet and heavenly influence shed down upon my heart while kneeling at the mercy-seat, that I love to be there. Praise the Lord, that he permits one so unworthy to talk with him so freely.

Precious closet! for years I have loved it, and when I have been unable from circumstances over which I had no control, to retire statedly for devotion, I missed it sadly. Were it only in the public assembly that I loved to worship God, were it there only I felt the hallowing influence of the Spirit, I should have cause to doubt the genuineness of my devotion. Here I can more perfectly test my inward state. In the social meeting, my feelings may have been affected by sympathy with another; I may have either caught the flame of joy from their altars, or I may have become pressed down in spirit beneath the weight of another's distress, or unbelief; but, when alone with Him who seeth in secret, if then my heart kindles with holy rapture, if my cup overflows with bliss, in answer to prayer, or if the dark cloud passes between my soul and God, I can trace it to none of these causes. If my soul then feels the holy fire, it must be from the sacred altar, and if darkness gather around me, it must be from something intimately connected with myself. If my most ardent supplications, my most fervent breathings after purity, my most intimate communings with Christ, are connected with my closet devotions, I believe that I may receive them as the genuine effects of the Spirit's influence upon my heart.

There may be selfish motives which lead ofttimes to the performance of outward duties, and the exhibition of a zealous spirit, but there can be none to lead us to secret meditation and prayer. I love my closet best, when my heart is bound the closest to Jesus. I cannot progress without much secret prayer. I know the words of the Savior are true, the open reward follows the secret retirement. The command, "When thou prayest, enter thy closet, and shut thy door about thee, and pray to thy Father," etc., is certainly the general rule to be observed in regard to our devotions, and how one can be a christian, and seldom retire alone for closet prayer, is more than I can understand. It does not say, "Enter the closet" of thy heart, and there silently pray, but the closet means a room, a place where the suppliant can be alone, and pour out his petitions, his tears, his sorrows, unheard except by Him who seeth in secret. There we can freely tell Jesus all our heart is suffering, and know that he is a sympathizing friend. We can confide to his ear a great many things we could not express in public prayer. Ofttimes when my spirit has been overwhelmed within me, have I fled to my closet, and there wept and prayed before the Lord, until he poured in the healing balm and bound up my broken heart.

Forever let my closet witness the deep breathings of my soul for purity; let it echo to the fervent petition for needful grace, and respond to the joy of answered prayer!

M. D. W.

[illegible]

The Last Witness.

[From Dr. Cumming's "Great Tribulation."]

A very sure but to the world unnoticed token of the arrival of the world's Saturday evening is the fulfilment of the prophecy that—

"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—MATT. 24: 14.

Translating these words literally from the Greek, they read thus: "And there shall be proclaimed as by a herald's voice or trumpet, this the Gospel of the kingdom . . . . in all the habitable globe . . . . for a witness"—that may be accompanied, as the word indicates, with martyrdom—"for a witness to all the nations;" or "unto all the Gentiles," as distinguished from the Jews, "and then the end shall come."

The Greek word for "Gospel," literally rendered "good news," is the same as our English, or rather Saxon word "God-spell;" the word "spell" meaning "news," and "God's-spell" meaning "God's news;" that is, the information that God has to tell us. Every time, therefore, we hear the Gospel, we hear news which God makes known to us. What are these news? If I were to state that there is an El Dorado discovered in Surrey, or a California in Kent, millions would rush from London across all its bridges in order to explore the mine, to collect the gold, and become suddenly rich. I have better news than these; but, unhappily, news not always and everywhere popular. The very fact of our hearts not being thrilled by their announcement is evidence of something cold, dead, insensible to what is the greatest glory, the richest happiness. The best and brightest things that ever vibrated on human ear, or thrilled human hearts, are these. Here is an epitome of the news: that there is for us orphans an everlasting home; for us exiles a country whose beauty and blessedness no tongue can tell, and no heart can conceive; for young men and women, weary in the shops, exhausted in the streets, sorrowful, depressed, dejected, a rest perfect, everlasting, and complete—the rest that remaineth for the people of God. To hundreds it comes as an old story. "Oh, how often," will it be said, "have we heard that!—it has been told us Sunday after Sunday; we have read it in our Bibles; we have been taught it in our schools, and we have committed it to memory from our catechisms."

This insensibility amid light is just the dreadful state of man's heart that we have to deal with. Familiarity with the message takes away its edge, and blunts its impressions. If the lost could only hear that there is a home, and a heaven, and a rest accessible to them; if the poor savages in Africa, and in Labrador, and in Greenland, and in China, could but learn or hear for the first time, and accept the message while they hear it, that this life's close is the commencement of a more glorious one, what a thrill of ecstasy would rush through every heart! Alas! the very exuberance of our blessings makes us insensible to them. This is one of the strangest phenomena, and yet one of the most common, that the more we are familiarized with mercies, the less we appreciate them. Were you a traveler in the distant desert, beneath a burning sky, and on a parched soil, weary, scorched, and parched with consuming thirst, oh, with what thankfulness would you welcome one sweet cold spring! you would value it infinitely more than all the wine that the richest and choicest cellars of the greatest and the noblest can furnish. But pure spring water is so common that we do not value it. Fresh air—perhaps in London somewhat corrupted—is so universal that we are insensible to its excellence. Our greatest blessings are scattered on the high road, and because they are so we neither appreciate nor are thankful for them. The greatest mercies, the brightest hopes, the noblest truths, the most thrilling prospects, that ever tongue told or ear heard, are those heard every Sunday; but they are so familiar that they pass from the ear into the air again, as the wind passes through a ruined archway, creating a murmur in its transit, and leaving, instead of an impression, the silence of death. That this world is not the end of us; that this body, with its aches, and its pains, and its fevers, and its sicknesses, and its weaknesses, is not our lasting tabernacle, as it now is; that there remaineth a rest for the people of God, an everlasting home, an inheritance of glory, a crown of joy that fadeth not away—is surely glad tidings. Oh, blessed revelation! oh, bright hope! The ancient heathen hoped that there was an Elysium, but he could not prove it; the Mahometan fancies, on the authority of his Koran, that there is an everlasting harem, where his sensual passions will be gratified to the utmost; but, as his conscience becomes pure and his mind enlightened, he grows sick of the sensuous prospect. But we have not to prove the existence of a heaven; it is not a corollary, nor an inference, nor a logical conclusion; it is a revelation from that God who dwells in it, and comes to us in all the certainty of an absolute and an indubitable truth. Has the thought of heaven ever cheered you? Has the prospect of a home ever made your fireside brighter, and your heart [illegible] emerging stars that begin to sparkle, [illegible] the quiet beauty of the moon as she mounts to her midnight throne? Have you ever thought, if not of the words, at least of the sentiments of the poet—

"There is a heaven o'er yonder skies,
A heaven where pleasure never dies;
A heaven I hope and long to see,
Where Christ prepares a place for me."

The amount of hold that truth has on man's conscience, the joy it creates, the impulse it gives, is the measure of your belief and reception of it. Thus, the very first news, good news, is of a home far beyond—a rest for the weary, when time shall be lost in eternity; a city that hath foundations; a better country, whose sun never sets, whose sky is never covered with a cloud, where the flowers are amaranthine, where the trees never lose their foliage, where all is beauty and blessedness, and the heart has its deepest feelings and its highest longings gratified to the utmost. Is not this good news? But some one says, "We know not the way; how do we get to this heaven?" Hear the good news: there is a way to this heaven. When man sinned, his sin, like a disruptive earthquake, rent this place we call the earth from that grand continent which we call home and heaven. In that tremendous chasm which disruptive sin dug between happy heaven and our poor, lost, stray, sinful earth, a broad, deep, moaning sea rises and beats against each strand continually. How can that chasm be crossed? Ask the infidel, and he will tell you you must take a leap in the dark; if you miss the opposite shore, you must perish. Ask the Romanist; he will tell you the church is the bridge that will carry you across. Ask the New Testament, ask the Son of God; and in his own majestic and emphatic accents, he replies, "I am the way; no man cometh to the Father, but by me." As God, he touches the opposite shores of the great continent of heaven; as man, he touches the opposite shore of the disrupted and broken-off island of time; as God-man, he unites the twain into one; reaching the very heights of God's throne; so that the most depressed, the most forsaken, and the most guilty sinner, has but to enter upon that better than Jacob's ladder, which will carry him from the lowest depths to which sin has sunk him to the greatest heights to which God's love can possibly raise him. Is not this good news? And this way is not a new one. It is in one sense the old way; it is in another sense always new. By a new and "living way," says the apostle; that word "new" is applied to all things that never lose their freshness. For instance, of some piece of music you can say, "It is always new;" and yet it was composed by Mozart or by Handel some forty, fifty, or a hundred years ago. You may say of this way, it is a new way; and yet it is an old one. It is old, because it was preached in Paradise; it is new, because it has all the freshness, from the deep interest attached to it, of a first and early discovery. This way has been trodden by many of your fathers, and your children have trod it, and have entered into the everlasting rest. And if you examine it, in one part of the road you will find riches; in another part you will find rank; in another part of it beauty; in another, crowns, and coronets, and purple robes, and great learning, and vast genius, and lofty attainments; in another part, the tear of the weeper not yet dried, the blood of martyrs, as if it only had been shed the other day; all these having cast off the world like a loose garment, and dropped it on the road, that they might tread more unembarrassed the path that leads to God, to glory, and to happiness; in other words, counting all but loss for the "excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord." You have not a way to strike out; no mountains to cleave, no rocks to blast, no vast hills to tunnel through, no deep vallies to raise to a level, no broad oceans to cross. It joins the Pacific of time with the great Atlantic of eternity, without the difficulties of a Panama 'mid the passage, to detain you for a single hour. What a blessed way! what good news! what glad tidings, that there is a heaven, a home, an everlasting rest, a joyful retreat. The way to it is so plain that carping scribes may miss it, critical divines may let it go, bitter sectarians may mistake it; but a wayfaring man, that is, an honest man, that wants to find out in the Bible the way to heaven, never can possibly err therein. It is a way, too, which has a chart ever directing you, the Spirit of God ever explaining it to you; and so crowded with those that beat it of all classes, ages, complexions, and colors, that no man goes alone to heaven. A great multitude, out of every nation, kindred, people and tongue, whose backs are on the world, and whose faces are Zionward and to God, goes with him.

(To be concluded.)

[From the New Bedford Standard, Feb 24.]

Singular Recovery of a Young Lady Given up to Die.

A most singular case of the recovery of a lady from a long and painful illness, recently transpired in Fairhaven, the particulars of which we have from the lips of the lady herself. Miss Louisa James, an intelligent and accomplished young lady of [illegible] years, the daughter of widow Mary Mitchell, residing on Rotch street, Fairhaven, has been ill for the greater part of [illegible] years, and for the last four months she has been confined to her bed. The physician pronounced her disease one of the heart and lungs, and though the best of medical aid was procured for her, she continued to fail rapidly, and at last it was announced that human skill could do nothing more for her. For the last two months she lost all control of her lower limbs, and it was with the greatest difficulty that she could be moved. She bore her intense sufferings with christian fortitude. She was reduced so low that her stomach refused the slightest nourishment. On Wednesday, the 8th inst., a female friend visited her, and in the course of a conversation remarked that the Rev. Joseph K. Bellows, of New York, of the Second Advent persuasion, to which the invalid belonged, was in town for the purpose of holding a series of meetings. Miss James earnestly desired to see him, and in the evening he called at her residence. She felt that should the Reverend gentleman pray for her she should recover, and after a short conversation she made such a request. The clergyman and the mother of the invalid knelt down, and a fervent and earnest prayer was offered up in her behalf. The mother informs us that before the minister prayed the body of her daughter was as cold and frigid as marble, and at the close of the exhortation she perspired freely. Miss James describes her sensations during the prayer as similar to those of a person receiving a galvanic shock. That night she passed comfortably, and in the morning she arose and dressed herself without assistance, and on the following Sabbath she attended church. She is now enjoying the best of health and relishes the heartiest food. She has written an article concerning her miraculous preservation, which will be published soon in some publication of the denomination of which she is a member.

My Shepherd.

Oh! had I an angel's harp and tongue,
And a heart like that for which I pray,
The praise which has long through heaven rung,
Should be sounded forth on earth to-day!
The Lord my Shepherd! who can make known
The love and pity that he hath shown?

When the ninety-and-nine were in the fold,
And I a poor wanderer far away,
In a region of sin and fears untold,
With every thought and wish astray,
The Lord my Shepherd, with tender care,
Sought me, and found me, even there!

He set my feet in his chosen road,
And then the waters of joy and peace
He on my weary soul bestowed,
And bade their measure still increase.
The Lord my Shepherd! alas! how far
Below his mercy my praises are!

For every day that has since gone by,
As well as the years that went before,
His love has followed my steps; but I
Have been a poor sinner, and no more!
Ready to rove and disobey,
And murmuring when he hedged my way.

The Lord my Shepherd! He is the same,
He doth not measure his love by mine;
True and unchangeable is his name—
His love and pity are all divine.
He doth remember when I forget,
And therefore I think he'll keep me yet.

I bless him now for that hedge of thorns;
Far better than flowers it was for me.
In every sorrow that I have borne,
I might, if I would, his goodness see.
The Lord my Shepherd! He hath done all,
My wandering heart to him to call.

He ever leadeth his little flock,
He gave his life their life to buy;
Their flowing fountain and shadowing rock,—
They cannot faint while he is nigh.
The Lord my Shepherd! oh! I will be Forever devoted unto thee!

Selections.

Immortality—Eternal Life.

BY WM. GLEN MONCRIEFF.

"To them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life."—ROM. 2: 7

The reader will please to observe that the passage before us constitutes part of a two-fold exhibition of the awards of the judgment day, or of the future destinies of men, accompanied with a statement of the grounds by which they are to be determined. "God will," says the 6th verse, "render to every man according to his works." Our subject of consideration refers to the holy and their transcendent destiny. "To them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, (God will render, v. 6th) eternal life;" and the following verses record the doom of the finally impenitent and rebellious. "But unto them that are contentious and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, (God will render) indignation and wrath," etc. By explaining the first, we will with sufficient clearness apprehend the meaning of both, and may we the while yield up our whole being to the teaching of infallible wisdom as it utters in our hearing its salutary lessons. For the sake of perspicuity, we shall divide our subject into two parts:

I. WHAT BLESSINGS ARE TO BE SOUGHT FOR, and

II. HOW THEY ARE TO BE OBTAINED.

I, THE BLESSINGS are glory, honor and immortality, summed up in the two concluding words, "eternal life." We even here take upon us the liberty of affirming that they are condensed into a focus by the phrase "eternal life," for that which is to be conferred must have been that which was sought for, so that it cannot be wrong; but on the contrary, most lawful, were we to express the substance and force of the text thus: "To them, who, etc., . . . seek for eternal life, God will render eternal life;" as we find it in a parallel verse, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life." This "glory, honor, and immortality," in a word, "eternal life," must be sought for, and sought for in the divinely specified course. We shall give our chief attention to the "immortality," and then shortly glance at the "glory and honor," which are to be sought for also, as accompaniments in the after state. The Greek word here translated "immortality," is aphtharsian, literally incorruption, from the verb phtheiro, to spoil, corrupt, [illegible] aphtharsia, of which aphtharsian, the word under notice, is the accusative case singular—means without corruption, or incorruption. The word occurs in one or other of its forms in the text we are now to quote; "This corruptible must put on incorruption."—aphtharsian—1 Cor. 15: 53, and also v. 54 of the same chapter. "Our Savior Jesus Christ, hath . . . brought life and immortality (aphtharsian) to light by his gospel."—1 Tim. 1: 10. "To an inheritance incorruptible"—aphtharton—1 Pet. 1: 4; also 1 Tim. 1: 17; and Rom. 1: 23. The proper word for immortality, deathlessness, is athanatos, and these two terms should have invariably been rendered by their proper English symbol, for there is a difference, we suggest, in their import. That which is mortal may not be corruptible, though certainly that which is corruptible in its constitution is mortal. The eternal God, being a pure, unorganised, self-existent spirit, is both immortal and incorruptible; and if there were in the universe as pure creature-spirits as immortal-soulists can imagine, they might be mortal, that is, the term of their duration in consciousness might be limited, though they would be incorruptible, or incapable of becoming rotten and loathsome, like "the earthly house of this tabernacle" in which we reside. In some sense, it is universally allowed that man as he is may be described by both of these terms—mortal and corruptible; the last necessarily, as formerly observed, including the first. In what sense, then, do we "mortal" and "corruptible" beings require to seek for incorruption? Or, what is the immortality or incorruption here spoken of? Let us examine some of the interpretations that we have seen advanced on different occasions, and by a little patience we may hope to discover the truth.

1st. It has been proposed to understand the term as meaning "sincerity," viewing it entirely as a metaphorical use of the Greek word aphtharsian. Of this usage we have unquestionably one example in Titus, 5: 7, "in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity"—aphtharsian. We find not the smallest reason to object to the rendering in Titus, for the term in that passage is employed figuratively, in other words, to designate a good state of mind; but it being used this way in one place, is surely no warrant for understanding it always in a figurative mode. Without a doubt it may be used figuratively and literally; it may denote the constitution of a being, or the state of mind and heart in him. In what manner is it employed in the verse engaging our attention? Now it is a fatal objection to the term as a figure in the text, that by so regarding it, we are compelled to confound an end with the means; it is by sincerity and other excellence that the "incorruption" is to be sought for. Can there be "patient continuance in well doing" without sincerity? The idea is preposterous and absurd in the extreme. Men are therefore not commanded to seek for future sincerity, but by present, sincere and persevering well-doing, to endeavor after the "incorruption," or incorruptible resurrected being.

2d. Another interpretation is similar to the above, but generalizes the moral excellence. It is not, say the propounders of this view, sincerity, but moral incorruptness in general that is to be sought for. We ask how can there be patient continuance in well-doing without spiritual integrity and virtue? The "incorruption" is a state of existence to be gained by present moral incorruptness, and none but those who cherish and manifest this character will reach the prize.

But, it may be said, if it is not incorrtion in the sense of a holy moral state of being, may it not be a final confirmation in such a state? To us it is sufficient to reply, that the text does not speak of confirmation in incorruption, but of incorruption itself, and we desire to have as holy an abhorrence of the custom of adding to God's words, as of taking from them. Moreover, the idea of confirmation in holiness, generally understood, is in itself, to our minds, as unphilosophical as it is unscriptural. That any free moral agent (and how could an agent be moral and unfree?) can be so placed in the universe as to make it an impossibility for him to sin, is in our eyes the climax of absurdity: indeed, if he could not sin, there would be no virtue, no moral excellence and loveliness in his submission to the divine requirements. We firmly believe that sinning will be absolutely unknown in the "new earth," wherein righteousness shall alone flourish in the richest luxuriance; but transgression will be absent only in the sense that the individuals will voluntarily obey the statutes of their King, and continue of choice to do so. This is all the perpetuation that we can imagine, and it is quite different from the common notion about sainted compulsory confirmation in righteousness; the twin-sister, by the way, of forced and not moral and voluntary conversions in time.

3d. Others view the word aphtharsian as adjectively qualifying the two preceding nouns "glory and honor," and read the verse in this manner, "who by patient continuance in well doing seek for immortal glory and honor," etc. And here we cannot adopt a better plan than to quote a few judicious sentences bearing exactly on this point, from the pen of our esteemed friend, Mr. Dobney:

"I still feel compelled to adhere to our English version of this text, which represents the righteous, by patient continuance in well doing, seeking for glory and honor and immortality, notwithstanding the Reviewer, with whom it is true are most expositors, says; The position of the word immortality, at the close of the sentence, requires it to be regarded, after the Greek idiom, as an adjective; so giving to the whole phrase the idea of immortal glory and honor." Now, I respectfully ask, what is the Greek idiom that requires this rendering? That the figure hendiadys is often used, I most cheerfully concede. But surely no one will affirm that when two or more nouns come together, the last must be construed adjectively; for how many texts occur to the mind in a moment which refuse submission to such a rule. Take, for instance, the phrase in v. 10 of the same chapter: 'But glory, honor, and peace to every man that worketh good;' no man renders it 'peaceful glory and honor;' and v. 4, 'Despisest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance, and long suffering?' [illegible] 'I am the resurrection, and the life,' does not mean 'I am the living resurrection.' So Christ is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, [illegible] a beautiful gradation and rise in the [illegible] suggested, till we come to the last magnificent result. 'He that prophesieth, speaketh unto men to edification and comfort.' 'There shall be weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth,' etc., etc.

"Now, since reason cannot prove man immortal, and since the general tenor of Scripture seems to make immortality contingent, it appears to me a somewhat arbitrary thing for expositors to affirm that the word immortality is used adjectively here; and I feel bound to retain it as our English version gives it, which represents immortality as a blessing to be sought for.—Future punishment, p. 215, London edition.

4th. Others would enforce upon us the idea that the "immortality" here spoken of is immortal happiness. We observe that this interpretation is guilty of adding to God's word, a course which we have always reprobated, and which will be condemned by every pious man who would reflect for a moment on the nature of the offence and its pernicious tendencies. In all truth if one shall add happiness to the "immortal," I know no reason why another might not prefer his addition, and append to the adjective, lawlessness, epicureanism, or anything that might suit his taste. The Bible was given us not to be enlarged by our apocryphal addition, but to be honestly interpreted, like any other document, for our guidance and salvation. But again, it is plain this interpretation is based on the popular notion of man's natural immortality, which is no where inculcated in the book of inspiration. We never saw one passage that made the slightest approach to such a dogma; and we can point to hundreds that give a flat contradiction to the reigning notion. This is the language of inspiration—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" "All the wicked will God destroy:" these and all such authoritative announcements concerning the doom of the unholy, settle the question in the clearest manner. Like many others, we once believed the pagan notion of human immortality, and had all the prejudice of early and theological training to contend with in our inquiry after the truth as to man's condition and prospects; nevertheless, a victory was gained by us, and we view man as a candidate for immortal being, and not already an heir to it.

5th. Another exposition we have become acquainted with is bodily incorruption, associated, however, in the teaching of its advancers with the doctrine of the soul's immortality. Now this is an approximation to what we esteem to be the truth, and we are always glad when we see our friends and brethren making an approach to the correct view of the great question on which we so widely differ from them. But let us examine this interpretation for a few moments. One thing we request the reader to observe, which necessarily results from the view in question is, that if corporeal incorruptibility must be sought for, none but the righteous will attain to it, either by a resurrection or transformation at the coming of our Lord. If so, the wicked will be raised corruptible, and therefore subject to corporeal dissolution, for that which is corruptible is mortal, a corruptible immortal thing being a contradiction in terms. Confessedly, then, the wicked will again be disembodied, even supposing their spirits may survive that event, as they are imagined to survive the first dissolution of their corruptible dwelling and live in a separate state till the hour of resurrection. In some literal sense, then, they will die "the second death," and that they will survive it, as disembodied souls, is an assertion that would need to be established by solid Scriptural arguments before it could be admitted by a considerable thinker. In harmony with the inferential truth now manifested, it is worthy of observation, that the Scriptures represent the righteous alone as coming forth from the tomb with incorruptible bodies; as, for instance, "it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption."—1 Cor. 15: 43; Comp. v. 48 and 57, 58.

But further, on what ground could any interpreter maintain that the souls of the resurrected corporeally corruptible wicked are destined to ceaseless being? With the question as to the possibility of consciousness surviving death, as is generally conceived to be the case, we intend not on this occasion to intermeddle; it is amply sufficient aim to take the popular opinion that our nature is compound, and argue with its maintainers the point of immortality as a property of the soul. Well, then, how can it be proven that the souls of the wicked are to exist forever? Have they immortal souls? Again, we press on the notice of opposing parties, and we affectionately entreat them to consider the fact, that the natural immortality of the soul is never taught in the Bible, and that immortality in no sense is ever ascribed to the wicked. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him who is able to destroy (and will destroy) both soul and body in hell." "Behold all they that are incensed against thee shall be ashamed and confounded, they shall be as nothing, and they that strive with thee shall perish."—Ezek. 18: 4; Matt. 10: 28; Isa. 41: 11, 12. Of course the argument would be even more powerful, unanswerable as it is, could it be proven that man is not a compound being, having a soul capable of disembodied existence, and that therefore death necessarily concludes his experience and consciousness entirely. On this inquiry, however, as previously stated, we do not at present enter, though we may suggest for the reader's consideration such things as these—the very idea of death, the fact that death is spoken of as a sleep, and more particularly such inspired statements as "the dead praise not the Lord," "the dead know not any thing."—Ps. 115: 17; Eccl. 9: 5, 6.—Bible Examiner.

(To be concluded.)

Reading for Youth.

"The Struggle and the Victory."

"Johnny," said a farmer to his little boy, "it is time for you to go to the pasture and drive home the cattle."

Johnny was playing ball, and the pasture was a long way off; but he was accustomed to obey, so off he started without a word as fast as his legs could carry him. [illegible] Johnny stood by the suffering creature [illegible] and thought to himself, "Now what shall I do? That was the finest cow father had, and it will have to be killed, and it will be a great loss to father. What shall I tell him?"

"Tell him," whispered the tempter, the same tempter who puts wicked thoughts into all our hearts, "tell him you found the bars down, and the creature lying here."

"No, I can't say that," said Johnny, "for that would be a lie."

"Tell him," whispered the tempter again, "that while you were driving the cows that big boy of farmer Brown's threw a stone and hurried that cow so that she fell."

"No, no," said Johnny; "I never told a lie, and I won't begin now. I'll tell father the truth. It was all my fault. I was in a hurry, and I frightened the poor creature, and she fell and broke her leg."

So having taken this right and brave resolve, Johnny ran home as if he was afraid the tempter would catch him, and he went straight to his father and told him the whole truth. And what did his father do? He laid his hand on Johnny's head and said, "My son, my dear son, I would rather lose every cow I own, than that my boy should tell me an untruth."

And Johnny, though very sorry for the mischief he had done, was much happier than if he had told a lie to screen himself, even if he had never been found out.—Amer. Messenger.

Good for Nothing.

A gentleman while addressing some children, took out his watch, and asked them what it was for.

"To keep time," the children answered.

"Well, suppose it won't keep time, and can't be made to keep time, what is it good for?"

"It's good for nothing," they replied.

He then took out a lead-pencil and asked what it was for.

"It is to mark with," was the answer.

"But suppose the lead is out and it won't mark, what is it good for?"

"It is good for nothing."

He then took out a pocket-knife, and asked what was its use.

"To whittle with," said some; "to cut," said others.

"Suppose it has no blade, then what is it good for?"

"Good for nothing."

"Then a watch, or pencil, or knife is good for nothing, unless it can do the thing for which it was made?"

"No, sir," the children all answered.

"Well, children, what is a boy or girl made for?"

The children hesitated.

"What is the answer to the question, 'What is the chief end of man?'" asked the gentleman.

"To glorify God, and enjoy him forever."

"Now, then, if a boy or girl does not do what he or she is made for, and glorify God, what is he or she good for?"

And the children all answered, without seeming to think how it would sound, "Good for nothing."

Well, if children are made to glorify God, and they don't do it, are they good for anything? that is, it is so much more important that they glorify God, and become prepared to enjoy him forever, than anything else, that if they fail to do this, it is as though they fail in everything. Without love to God, all other things are as nothing.

Valuable Secret.

"Sarah, I wish you would lend me your thimble, I can never find mine when I want it."

"Why can you not find it, Mary?"

"If you do not choose to lend me yours, I can borrow of somebody else."

"I am willing to lend it to you, Mary. Here it is."

"I knew you would let me have it."

"Why do you always come to me to borrow when you have lost anything, Mary?"

"Because you never lose your things, and always know where to find them."

"How do you suppose I always know where to find my things?"

"I am sure I cannot tell. If I knew, I might, perhaps, sometimes contrive to find my own."

"This is the secret. I have a place for everything, and after I have done using anything, it is my rule to put it away in its proper place."

"Yes, just as though your life depended on it!"

"My life does not depend on it, Mary, but my convenience does, very much."

"Well, I never can find time to put my things away."

"How much more time will it take to put a thing away, in its proper place, than it will to hunt after it, when it is lost?"

"Well, I'll never borrow of you again, you may depend on it!"

"Why? you are not affronted, Mary, I hope?"

"O, no, dear Sarah! I am ashamed, and am determined, now, to do as you do—to have a place for everything, and everything in its place."—Truth Seeker.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	[illegible]
For a single copy 3 months	[illegible]
Five copies to one address for 6 months	[illegible]
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	[illegible]
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	[illegible]
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	[illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for [illegible] months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Bros., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 235. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14, 1860. VOL. XI. NO. 2.

The World's Crisis is published every Wednesday Morning at No. 107 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

FOR TERMS, SEE FOURTH PAGE.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Joyful News!

Joyful news! our Lord is coming,
Soon his loving face we'll see;
Soon we'll dwell with him in glory,
Throughout all eternity.

Joyful news! rest for the weary,
Rest for every child of God;
An end to sorrow and to sighing,
In that happy, blest abode.

Joyful news! dear Lord, we thank thee,
Thank thee, that the time draws near,
When with all the fondly loved ones,
The welcome plaudit we shall hear.

Joyful news! Lo, "I come quickly!"
Yes, Lord Jesus, come now
Let us feel thy glorious presence,
Gaze upon thy radiant brow.

E——.

For the Crisis.

The Nature and Origin of Jesus.

BY WM. HOBBS.

A STONE OF STUMBLING.—No. 8.

By referring to 1 Pet. 2 : 6—8, it will be seen there are two classes that stumble at the word: the disobedient, and those who believe on Christ, to whom he is precious. The first thing to be believed is, that he is the son of God. So confident was the apostle John of the importance of this faith, that he wrote these words, "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the son of God?" But as there are some who, being disobedient, are appointed to stumble at the word of faith, there must be some occasion for them to stumble. The Bible abounds in figurative language, and in this they find occasion for stumbling, by taking language which is evidently figurative, and assuming it to be understood literally, when they themselves do not believe in the sentiments which are expressed by such construction put on certain passages. And they are not satisfied with stumbling at truths which are so expressed that they are "hard to be understood," but they must hew out to themselves stumbling blocks, which were not made for any such purpose by others than themselves. For instance: Paul wrote to the Corinthians of the riches of the liberality of the churches of Macedonia, and exhorted them to abound in the same grace; for said he, "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."—2 Cor. 8 : 2—9.

Long before Jesus was born, God promised to Abraham all the land wherein he was a stranger for an everlasting possession, to him and to his seed after him. Paul says that he said, "Not unto seeds, as of many, but of one, and thy seed, which is Christ." He was rich, then, by birth, as the heir of the world. By his birth he was the Son of God, and so inherited the righteousness of God; herein he possessed durable riches. He was the heir of eternal life, and so was infinitely rich. He became poor: first, by a voluntary surrender of these honors and privileges to which he was naturally entitled, and took upon himself the form of a servant, went about doing good, healing the sick, casting out devils, working those miracles by the power of God, and raising the dead; thereby establishing our faith in him as the son of God, that we by his voluntary poverty might become rich, by being made joint heirs to his inheritance by faith in him. Finally, he became poor by bearing our sins in his own body on the tree, that we might be made partakers of the riches of his grace.

—This view recognizes Jesus as rich by inheritance during his life, and that he became poor voluntarily; that he was both rich and poor at the same time. But lest any one should object to this, it may be proper to introduce a quotation to this end. Paul speaks of the ministers of Christ "as being poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things." 2 Cor. 6 : 10. If this was true of them, how much more so was it true of our Lord, who at one time during his [illegible] had not where to lay his head. And yet, was [illegible] rich that he was the heir of all things. This makes the words of Paul, "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor," appropriate, since it was something they did know.

The discourse of our Lord, about his being the bread of life, occurred thus: Some of those who had been fed with the loaves and fishes sought him the next day to get some information in regard to the process by which they might work the works of God, and thereby fill themselves with loaves and fishes. It seems they took ship and followed him to Capernaum, and finding him they said, "Rabbi, when camest thou hither?" Here please read John 6 : 25—33. Christ institutes a comparison between himself as the bread of life, and the manna which the Jews called the bread from heaven. And it is worthy of notice, that he not only speaks of himself as the bread that cometh down, but that came down. And how any one can found a theory of a personal, voluntary descent before he was born, on what clearly teaches a past, present, and future descent of the bread of life, is difficult to tell. Let it be understood, that this discourse was directed to those who sought Christ because they were filled with the miraculous food of the loaves and fishes, and is founded on their quotation concerning the manna, "He gave them bread from heaven to eat;" and that Christ uses that as a comparison,—that he was the bread of life in a higher sense than the manna; that he was "the bread from heaven," which, if a man eat thereof he should not taste death forever; while if they eat of the manna alone, they could not attain eternal life. And what he means by the bread from heaven, he explains by calling it "the bread of God:" from heaven in that sense. Thus he would associate with their ideas of eating and drinking, as the source of life and pleasure, a more important principle, a higher life, the eternal life of the soul, to be obtained through him as the bread of life. They were not to eat him literally, as their fathers did eat manna, but receive of his nature through faith in the word which he spake. Their request, "Evermore give us this bread," seems to be a misapprehension of his teachings, as he immediately after reproves them for unbelief. See vers. 34—40.

"How is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?" What is the obvious import of this language? Why that he was the bread of heaven to give life to all that believe, as the manna was the bread from heaven to sustain the present life. Christ, as to his nature and human personality, was as much the bread from heaven, as was the manna in the desert. And from the fact that we must partake of his nature to obtain eternal life, makes him in a peculiar sense the bread from heaven, the bread of God.

His declaration that the bread which came down from heaven, was his flesh and blood, settles the controversy, as to the obvious import of his words. And their objection, "How is it that he saith, I came down from heaven?" is thereby explained. And from the fact that it was not renewed, it shows that he gave them to understand, that his words had a certain figurative meaning. But there was another objection, "How can this man give us his flesh to eat?" And when he repeated to them, over and over, "Except ye eat the flesh, and drink the blood, of the Son of man, ye have no life in you;" and that this was "the bread which came down from heaven;" it is said, "Many, therefore, of his disciples, when they heard this said, This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" "When Jesus knew in himself that his disciples murmured at it, he said unto them, Doth this offend you? What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend where he was before?" —Vers. 60—62.

Their understanding of the eating of his flesh and drinking of his blood, of course, implied his death, and although his words, properly understood, do not necessarily imply this, yet there are other declarations connected with them that do. He therefore asks them, Doth this scandalize you? what, then, if ye see the Son of man ascend where he was before? What if he dies, as you think my words teach, and if you see him ascend again to where he was before he died, what then will you think of my words? This is the idea presented, as he immediately adds, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you they are spirit, and they are life."—v. 63. By this spirit we must receive of the nature of Christ's flesh and blood, as we receive of the flesh and blood of the first Adam. His flesh profiteth nothing, as simple flesh; but only as our flesh and blood become his, by being animated by his spiritual nature. Thus we become, as Paul says, "members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones."

As the nature of Christ is pure, lovely and loving, those who possess the spirit of hate, whose mouths are full of cursing and bitterness, whose feet are swift to shed blood, they receive not of the flesh and blood of Christ, but of the flesh and blood of the old Adam. In vain do the Catholics receive the bread wafer. That church is destitute of the spiritual nature of Christ. It is a church of murderers, red with the blood of slaughtered millions. For them to suppose that they can obtain eternal life by eating wheat wafers, and calling them the body and blood of Christ, is a delusion.

When Christ had concluded his discourse, it is said that "many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him." Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." There are several ways to stumble at this faith expressed by Peter. To regard Christ as an impostor is one way. To regard him as the Son of God only as all mankind are, is another way. To regard some other being of a pre-existent character, as being incarnated in him, is yet another.

In the latter class, the Trinitarians are included. Although there are some who are christians at heart, because of their having a living faith in the truths of the gospel, whose minds are more or less infected by this strange theory, yet this is no evidence in its favor. Love is the essential element of christianity; faith in Christ as the Son of God is the producing cause, and faith is based on evidence. The evidence of his being the Son of God by his peculiar birth, is believed by all Christians; and the power of this faith is not always neutralized by speculative theories. And hence, christians may have their minds infected with such theories without their being any part of their faith. To give credence to any theory which is not based on evidence, which does not commend itself to the conscience and reason of man, is not faith but presumption.

There are many who stumble at the word of faith, because their teachers stumble. Truly did Christ say, "If the blind lead the blind, they will both fall into the ditch." But let us present two examples, one wherein they stumble, and one wherein they do not, and yet there is no reason why they should stumble in the one case more than the other.

Jer. 23 : 5—6.—"Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute justice and judgment in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, Jehovah our righteousness." Here they make a grand stumble in supposing that the righteous Branch is Jehovah on account of the name whereby he is called. What does this blunder amount to? It amounts to this, that one Jehovah promised to raise unto David another Jehovah; and this, in connection with the fact, that there is but "one Jehovah and his name one," makes the blunder more apparent. But in the following they have as much cause to blunder, only in a different way:

Jer. 33 : 14—16.—"Behold, the days come saith the LORD, that I will perform the good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and unto the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; and this is the name whereby she shall be called, Jehovah, our righteousness." If they can commit so great a blunder, as to suppose that the righteous Branch is Jehovah, on account of the name whereby he is called, why do they not believe the same of Jerusalem, as the same name is applied to her? But why is his name called so? Because his righteousness is derived from Jehovah, as is implied in the promise of Jehovah, "I will cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up." And our righteousness being derived from Christ, both he and Jerusalem will acknowledge the truth that is written, "Your righteousness is of me saith Jehovah." This Christ did acknowledge when one said to him,—"Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" He replied, "Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is God." He is good as the origin of all good, while Christ's goodness is derived from Him. In accordance with this view Paul wrote, "But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God, is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption; that according as it is written, Let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord." The Lord here meant Jehovah, since it is a quotation of Jeremiah's words, (chap. 9 : 24,) and the word Lord is there printed in small capitals to show that it is Jehovah in the Hebrew, and to distinguish it from another Hebrew word, Adonai, also rendered Lord.

To remove all the points wherein they take occasion to stumble, requires some patience and charity. But truth must not suffer for lack of charity. "Charity rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;" for this reason the advocates of error must be rebuked, in love of the truth for the truth's sake. This must be done by argument, and not by dogmatical assertions that this man's teachings are of the adversary. That would be a short way of disposing of argument, but it is not a logical way, and perchance it might be a blasphemous way, if spoken of one who advocates the truth. "He that hath ears to bear, let him hear."

Act well your Part.

In brief, acquit thee boldly; play the man;
Look not on pleasures as they come, but go;
Defer not the least virtue. Life's poor span
Make not an ell, by trifling in thy woe.
If thou do ill, the joy fades, not the pains:
If well, the pain doth fade, the joy remains.

The Last Witness.

[From Dr. Cumming's "Great Tribulation."]

(Concluded.)

This good news, this Gospel, is not the discovery of a day: like a sweet stream, it broke forth from the Delectable Mountains in Paradise: it has often been hidden; it is now traceable not by its brawling waters, but by the belt of verdure which its streams create in their course. At times it is swollen to a majestic river, reflecting the sheen of great capitals, and the splendor of spires and towers that shine in retreating and dawning suns. Oftentimes this stream has been infected by the currents of superstition and of the world; but only that it might eliminate its waters from the impurity of them all. Oftentimes it has been resisted; but the result of all attempts to resist its majestic current has only been to swell its flood, and to carry it on to the infinite and endless main with a more majestic and irresistible career. It is the gospel that was preached in Paradise, that was believed by Abraham, that was gloried in by Isaiah, preached by Evangelists, written by Apostles, sealed by the blood of Christ, that was loved by Luther, gloried in by Calvin, enunciated with all its first freshness by Knox, and preached by Chalmers, and in thrilling eloquence proclaimed by Whitfield; the everlasting gospel, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. And this Gospel shall spread faster and farther every year. Wherever God's light shines its truth shall be heard; wherever God's heat is felt his love shall glow; wherever the winds of heaven whisper, there God's spirit shall breathe; wherever the flowers blossom, there his grace shall grow; wherever there are sinners wandering through the world, there shall be white-robed saints finding an everlasting home: and whenever death has carried off his victim, there the angel of the resurrection shall sit waiting for the rosy dawn of approaching day, and giving testimony prophetic of its approach, when the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised, and the living shall be changed; and the green vales of earth shall be covered with imperishable verdure, and the mountain peaks shall burn with rosy sunbeams that never fade; and islands of the earth shall blossom like Eden, and the continents of the world like heaven; and all height, and depth, and space, and time, shall bless God and be blessed in him.

Such are the good news—a heaven; such are the good news—a road to it; such are the encouragements to the belief of its universality and its spread. "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached." It is not merely a Gospel, good news, but a Gospel of something very specific—of a kingdom. This kingdom is composed first of moral and next of personal elements. "The kingdom of God," says the Apostle Paul, "is not meat nor drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy." Did all ministers, bishops, priests, and deacons, recollect this, we should quarrel much less. God's kingdom is not meat or drink, is not fasting or feasting; is not keeping Good Friday or not keeping it; is not observing Easter or or ignoring it; is not a surplice or a silk gown; is not ceremonial or form; it is something higher, far more precious: it is "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Who are the personal subjects of this kingdom? Men of every rank, and every clime; some living under republics, some under despotism, some under limited monarchy; some called Churchmen, some Dissenters, and not a few called Roman Catholics; for we cannot think that every Roman Catholic will be lost. It would be an awful thought. There is a virtue, a vitality in God's eternal truth that penetrates the eclipse of Babylon; and touches and transforms many a humble heart in it, not of it, looking for the kingdom and the glory of the Son of God. There are men of every rank, and class, and degree; of every sect, denomination, and party. Dare I exclude the poor, despised, persecuted, ill-treated, proscribed child of Israel and Abraham? No, no. Often have I cherished the thought—and if I cannot prove it, I will indulge the thought in itself so sweet—that many a Jew has seen and clung to, and held fast Christ the Savior, as revealed in Isaiah 53; while he did not receive him as proclaimed in the New Testament—the Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel. It is a delightful thought that the Gospel is not so cramped as we sometimes think. All those petty distinctions that men glory in and erect into shibboleths, depend upon it, we may live to be ashamed of in this world; and at the judgment seat of God we shall wonder how we made lines of demarkation where there should have been none; and how we were far quicker to mount the judgment seat and hurl anathemas, than to bow at the throne of grace, and implore grace and lasting blessings.

Now this kingdom, thus composed, shall overflow all kingdoms. Heathendom is gradually dying out over all the world! Livingstone, the indefatigable traveler, and excellent missionary of that noble Society, the London Missionary Society, has penetrated the depths, explored the rivers, and opened new channels of access to hitherto untrodden and unknown lands of Central Africa. Our ships have touched the Pole, and made the North-West Passage. China is every day opening up, it may be amid tears, and bloodshed, and at terrible expense; and God is ruling and overruling, where he does not employ, all means actually contributing to this end. If we look round again upon other forms of error, we shall find that Mahometanism is almost gone; the crescent wanes over all the earth. There is actually a bank established in Constantinople; what is still more remarkable, colonists are courted from France and from England to take up their abodes and residence in Constantinople. The Gospel may be preached where it could not be preached before; and as if to crown the last proof of the waning crescent—oh, terrible blow to the bigoted Moslem, the Sultan actually gave his arm to the lady of the representative of our sovereign in Constantinople; conducted her either to or from the ball, I forget which; a scene such as was never known in Constantinople or in Turkey for three hundred years. Its outbreak in India will prove its destruction. There is abundant evidence of the waning crescent—the drying up of the waters of the great river Euphrates, that the way of God's ancient people may be prepared. As to Romanism, I have no more belief that it will gain the ascendancy in our country than that Mahometanism will. Its top branches are all withering in the air; its trunk is rotten to its very core; its roots have lost all their vitality; and some morning we may waken and hear like glad music reverberating from earth to heaven, and from heaven to earth, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, is fallen." And shall we be sorry for it? Shall we grieve over it? If we dared to do so unmanly a thing, our sympathies would rush back to the dungeons of Naples, or to the oppressed of Austria, or revisit Smithfield, and the glens and grey moors of Scotland; and witnessing the bloodshed and the martyrdoms perpetrated by it in Christ's injured and desecrated name, they would come back to us armed with indignation, and instead of bidding us deplore the ruin, they would urge us to join with the anthem-peal that rings from heaven to earth: "Rejoice over her, ye angels and ye holy saints; for the oppressor of the brethren is gone; and there shall be in it the light of a candle and the voice of the bridegroom and of the harper no more at all." And then "the kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and endureth through all generations."

This Gospel—these glad tidings of a kingdom—we are told shall be preached to all the world as a witness. It shall be preached to all nations as a witness; not to convert all nations. Some of our christian brethren believe that the Millennium is to be the product of the present missionary agency; and that the preaching of the Gospel will end in the conversion of all nations. I do not see this; I believe that it is to bring a people out of the world to God, and to be a witness to all, not the conversion of all [illegible]. This prediction is all but fulfilled. The Bible has been translated into every spoken tongue, and the word of God is preached at this moment in earth's countless dialects. I appeal to the Bible Society, where you have a specimen of the Bible in every language spoken under heaven. This glorious Gospel has penetrated the long unvisited Crimea, and awakened accents that will never die on the margin of the Euxine and the Caspian Sea; it has been preached in the Kremlin, and proclaimed upon the steppes of Tartary; it has been heard on the banks of the Don and the Dnieper, by the barbarous and savage inhabitants that are there; on the Caucasus and amid the Ural mountains; over all the North and the North-Eastern nations of Europe. It has penetrated Pekin, it has been heard in Canton; and the roll of cannon and the reverberations of the war-drum, however much we may deplore them, will prove the pioneers of its march and its progress. This Gospel is not unknown in Persia; it has been heard amid the mountains of Afghanistan. The Thames, the Tiber, the Don, the Mississippi, the Euphrates, the Ganges, and the Nile, have reflected its glad sunshine, and re-echoed its grand truths. And perhaps we stand upon the very margin of an age that will witness all these floods and all their populations assembled together, and shouting with a voice that will swell to heaven and never cease on earth, "Hallelujah! the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

Spiritualism Abandoned by the Rev. T. L. Harris.

[From The London Advertiser.]

We venture to say that the cause of "Spiritualism" never received so heavy a blow since it first reared its hideous head in America, some eighteen or twenty years since, as it did yesterday morning in Edward street Institution, Portman square. The Rev. Mr. Harris, a Swedenborgian minister, who had embraced Spiritualism fifteen years ago, and who is allowed on all hands to be the ablest and most intellectual man in America that Spiritualism has ever been able to number among its disciples, has been in this country for some weeks, and had been announced to preach on Spiritualism yesterday morning. Notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather, nearly all the most intellectual Spiritualists in London and its neighborhood, amounting to between three and four hundred, assembled to hear what they doubtless expected would prove one of the ablest and most eloquent expositions of Spiritualism that had ever been delivered. We leave it to our readers to imagine what must have been their amazement, as well as mortification, when they found that instead of this, the reverend gentleman exposed the follies, immoralities, and disastrous consequences, spiritually and physically, of their system, with such a power of reasoning, force of eloquence, and earnestness of purpose, as have seldom been displayed by any orator in modern times. His triumphant exposure and withering denunciations of Spiritualism, as being the results of Satanic agency, fell like so many bombshells, bursting for nearly an hour, in rapid succession, among his audience. Probably we have been present, during the last quarter of a century, at more meetings of various kinds, and heard more of the leading public speakers of the day, than almost any one else that could be named; but we never before witnessed anything at all approaching to the effects which were produced yesterday by the arguments, eloquence, and oratory of the Rev. Mr. Harris. To say that his audience were startled, would be saying nothing. They were enchained, transfixed, utterly confounded, as he tore into ten thousand tatters their favorite system of rappings, table-jumpings, seances, circles, mediums, and so forth.

We went to the place from a sense of duty, expecting, as did all the three or four hundred Spiritualists who were present, that we should hear the most masterly vindication of Spiritualism that could be given; and hoping that having once heard its ablest defense, we should be the more fitted, as opportunity offered, to expose with greater success, the iniquities, the dangers, and the disastrous results, morally, socially, and physically, of this latest and most insidious form of Pantheism.

We will not attempt to describe, because we could not if we did, the mingled delight and surprise with which we found the task executed to our hands, by one of the master minds of the day. Mr. Harris held up to the eyes of his audience the system of Spiritualism as the most hideous and horrible thing which had ever come from the nether world. He said that he himself was a proof of the danger, mentally and physically, of cultivating the so-called science of Spiritualism. He mentioned that, only a few years ago, it had taken so absorbing a possession of his mind, and had obtained so complete a mastery [illegible] gave rigidity to [illegible] and a terrible, [illegible] countenance. He added that he had seen and known many others—excellent and amiable persons before they became Spiritualists—from whom the power which the demoniacal system had acquired over them had taken away their appetites, had unfitted them for the ordinary duties of life, crushed all their energies, mental and physical, deprived them of sleep at night, and caused their bodies to waste away, as if the victims of some fell disease which set all medical skill at defiance. Others [illegible] known and seen, whose [illegible] had become so cold and rigid as those of a marble statue, while the expression of their countenances was so horrible as more to resemble those of demons than of human beings. The Spiritualists of America, he further stated, are not only as a body Pantheists, rejecting alike the idea of the Scriptures as a Divine revelation, and of the existence of a God, but that they are gross sensualists and utterly immoral in their conduct in all the relations of life.

Mr. Harris added, that this was not only true of the Transatlantic Spiritualists as a body, but that it was true of every 999 out of 1,000 of their number. Thousands of persons had died in America during the fifteen years that he had been a Spiritualist, who had notoriously lived most immoral lives, and yet the spirits of every one of these persons affirmed that they were all perfectly happy. The Spiritualist literature of America, Mr. Harris also stated, was, with one or two exceptions in a thousand cases, Pantheistic, feeble, drivelling, nay, almost idiotic. The Spiritualists were utterly selfish, as well as sensual and grossly immoral. They were destitute of all human sympathies, and never were known to perform a single benevolent action. They fully believed that, in a future state, they would live the same licentious lives as they had done on earth. The American Spiritualists were in reality a body of Pagans, worshiping, like the ancient Pagans, obscene, and, in every respect, grossly licentious deities. And as regards the spirits with whom they held communication, they resembled the sorcerers, and demons who took possession of men and women in the days of Christ, and who are so frequently referred to in God's Word—that word which is the only sure foundation of our faith, and the only safe rule of our conduct.

There were a few Christian men who had been deluded into the adoption of the system, but only in a modified degree, and so long as their Spiritualism was kept in subjection by their christianity, the observations he had made did not apply to them. But these exceptions were so few as to be hardly worthy of notice. He begged to impress on the minds of his audience, that all that he had said of the system of Spiritualism—which he characterized as an infernal system—was the result of his own personal knowledge and experience. He mentioned some individual cases, of which he was an eye-witness, in which the demon of Spiritualism had obtained so entire a mastery over its victims, as to throw them down on platforms and other public places, just as the evil spirits did of which we read in the New Testament.

The marriage vow imposes no obligations in the views of Spiritualists. Husbands who had for years been so devotedly attached to their wives, that they have said nothing in the world but death itself could part them, have abandoned their wives, and formed criminal connection with other females, because the spirits have told them that there was a greater Spiritualist affinity between these husbands and certain other women, than between them and their lawful wives. Wives, too, the most devoted, and loving, and true to their husbands, that had ever contracted the marriage obligation, had left their husbands and children, and lived in open immorality with other men, because the spirits had told them that they ought to do so, on the ground of their being a greater Spiritualist sympathy between them and these men, than between them and their husbands.

For those who were the victims of this terrible delusion, Mr. Harris expressed the most profound compassion. It so completely subjugated them to its demoniacal power, that they could neither think or speak of anything else. The only way in which they could escape from the horrible tyranny which is exercised over them, was by having recourse to a Throne of Grace, preceded and accompanied by fervent prayer and unceasing watchfulness. In no other [illegible] of Spiritualism be achieved. [illegible]

The sermon of Mr. Harris [illegible] the most [illegible] we have ever heard [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 14, 1860.

[...] to warn his hearers of the dangers to their mental faculties and the physical frames here, as well as the guilt in the sight of God, and the consequent danger to their souls hereafter—of having anything to do with seances, circles, table-rapping, and those other transactions with spirits which were becoming so common in this country, and which had wrought such incalculable mischief to soul and body in America. He wished to impress upon them, as speaking with the eye of God upon him, and as conscious of his responsibility to the Great Supreme, that the only true Spiritualism was the spiritualism of the Scriptures—the spiritualism produced through the operation of the Holy Spirit—the spiritualism of the Apostles and first Christians—the spiritualism of Owen, and Baxter, and of the Puritans generally—the spiritualism of such men in the by-gone generations as Fletcher and Wesley—men whose spiritualism had, during their life, been the means of converting myriads of sinners, and whose holy example and writings—by which, and through their disciples, they being dead yet speak—had proved the means of converting many millions since their death.

Such is a very imperfect outline of one of the most remarkable discourses, considering all the circumstances under which it was delivered, which we have ever heard. Application was made to Mr. Harris by one of the very few who were present who were not Spiritualists, to publish the sermon, but, unfortunately, he had no notes of it. He added, however, the expression of a hope that, before he left England on his return to New York, he would be able to publish something similar to what he had that day preached.

For the Crisis.

Immateriality.

The idea of any spiritual existence, in the sense of the popular and mystical theory of immateriality, finds no warrant in the Scriptures; and were it not for the prejudice of early teaching and of theological training, probably there would be no such interpretation; but because of such training and such prejudice, the popular notion of an immaterial and immortal soul, or double entity of man, has become interwoven in all systems of (so called) christianity, as well as in Mohammedanism and Paganism—all originating from the teachings of Pagan philosophers, and (according to good authority) was not tolerated in the christian church until about the third century.

But does not the Bible speak of spiritual existence? True, the Bible does speak of a spiritual body, but not with the idea of a spiritual immateriality. Paul, in 1 Cor. 20th chapter, tells us about a spiritual BODY:—"IT is sown a natural BODY, IT is raised a spiritual BODY." The idea here conveyed of spirit is that of an organism, and the same organism sown in the earth, a natural body, is raised a spiritual body. One instance we have on record: our Lord Jesus Christ was sown a natural or Adamic body, he was raised a spiritual body, a real, living Christ, just as much so as before his crucifixion. He had flesh and bones after his resurrection, and a Christ with flesh and bones ascended to heaven where he now liveth; and when he comes the second time, we (if christians) will be like him, for we shall see him as he is.

But do not the disciples on one occasion speak as if they they thought they had seen a spirit? Yes. See Matt. 14: 26; Mark 6: 49,—on the occasion of Jesus walking on the water. But the original Greek word here translated spirit is "Phantasma," and simply means a phantom, an appearance, not any thing real; no, not even a real ghost. This word, phantasma, occurs but twice in the New Testament, and should have been literally translated phantom; then we should receive the true idea,—not of a reality, but of an appearance. In Matt. 14: 26, it is literally a phantom. We have all read of the legend of the phantom ship, called by sailors, "The flying Dutchman," and we have heard of the appearance of ships upon the clouds in certain conditions of the atmosphere. Here the idea is the same,—an appearance, a phantom. Any one who will look at the Englishman's Greek concordance, (word, spirit) will see that the original word is, as before stated, phantasma in both the places alluded to, and Matt. and Mark both relate the same incident.

But does not the Bible say, "God is a Spirit?" Yes, so it reads in our version; but mark, the word is is a supplied word, and is not in the original; it was put there by the translators, quite honestly, no doubt, because they had no other idea of God than the popular one of an immaterial spirit; but if the word is supplied, we have just as good a right as the translators had to supply a word, if that word is more in harmony with the general tenor of the Scriptures. Well, now, suppose we supply the word has in the place of is, the passage will then read, "God has a Spirit," and this accords harmoniously with the Scriptures—which represent the Divine Being as a person—and we know that He has a Spirit, because the Bible everywhere speaks of the Spirit of God, his Spirit, etc., as might be shown by numerous references and quotations, but this is not necessary, as the fact is familiar to the mind of every Bible reader. In the account of the creation in Genesis we read—"And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." We do not read, and God's spirit moved upon the face of the waters, but, "the Spirit of God moved," etc.; and this idea runs through all the Scriptures and gives us a constant idea of God as a personal being and having a Spirit.

But it is not necessary to resort to this method of supplying a word, when we read without any supplied word, "God a Spirit." Now, take Paul's idea of, a spirit in 1 Cor. 15; not the phantom of Matt. 14: 26, but the reality of Paul,—a spiritual body. You see the two are quite different; one, a reality, the other, a mere shadow. Go again to Paul in Heb. 1: 3, where, speaking of Christ, he says, "Who being the brightness of his (the Father's) glory, the express image of his person."—Christ here and elsewhere is presented to us just such a being as God is—expressly like him. Again, Phil. 2: 6:—"Who being in the form of God," etc. What is the idea here conveyed of the Divine Being? Why, a real, personal being, having a form; and in Gen. 1: 26, 27, we learn that man was made in the image and likeness of God; no such idea in all this of an immaterial being, everywhere present, filling all immensity, an idea which makes everything to be a part of God; and if so, must be imperishable, which we know is not true.

It is surprising to what an extent this idea of an immaterial spirit has poisoned the theology of these last days;—not only the theology, but the idea pervades every department of human knowledge, and is interwoven into all the ideas commonly held of God, of Christ, of good angels, of the Devil and of man. No wonder that Paul's prophetic eye, looking down to these days, should prompt him to warn the church against the "mystery of iniquity" which even in his day began to "work"; and down here in this nineteenth century, and close unto the end of this dispensation, we hear him warning the church against the "signs and lying wonders" "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness," which, "if possible, would deceive the very elect." It seems as if our Lord in Matt. 24: 24, and Paul in 2 Thess. 2: 10, would warn the last and Laodicean church against the Spiritualism by which the whole world is deceived. This mystery of iniquity, Spiritualism, in all its phases is evil and only evil; there is no good in it, whether it be seen in the 'rank Spiritualism of the "Rappers" (which is only orthodoxy gone to seed) or, in the views of Adventists, who so far spiritualize the idea of the existence of our Lord as to make it appear that he was a mere immaterial, unorganized being, without body or parts; for both views contain the same principle, and that is mysticism.

"We choose all substance,—what remains
The mystical sectarian gains:
All that each claims shall each possess,
Nor grudge each other's happiness.

An immaterial God they choose,
An immaterial heaven and hell,
For such a God we have no use,
In such a heaven we cannot dwell.

We claim the earth, the air and sky, Ps. 37: 11
And all the starry worlds on high; Matt. 5: 5.
Gold, silver, ore and precious stones, Rev. 21: 10 27.
And bodies made of flesh and bones. Luke 24: 39.
Our Lord, like us, can hear and see, Matt. 1: 15.
Feel, taste and smell eternally. Acts 10: 41.
Immortal brain through which to think,
Organs to speak, and eat and drink.
Luke 14: 42-43; Matt. 26: 29

Such is our Lord, our heaven, our all, Rev. 21: 3.
When once redeemed from Adam's fall
All things are ours, and we shall be
The Lord's to all eternity. 1 Cor. 3: 21.

Hartford, Ct. W. S. O.

[From the Canada Evangelist.]

"REASONS FOR MY HOPE," by H. L. HASTINGS.—This is a stirring book, just published, having for its design a scriptural explanation of the Christian's Hope, referring especially to the Hope of the Second Coming of Christ. It is written in a plain and pleasant style. The writer, we judge, is a man of some ability, and appears to be well versed in the scriptures. He first shows what is not his hope; second, what it is, and then gives reasons and evidences upon which he bases it. The views maintained by the author will not meet with universal approval, inasmuch as they will have to encounter the general opinion of "a good time coming." They can give offence to none, however, but will, we think, serve to remove objections sometimes held to that exposition of prophecy which places the Second Advent at no very remote period. The book is written in such a kind, christian spirit, that every reader must arise from its perusal better, and more informed on the subject of which it treats. It will doubtless have a large circulation both in the States and Canada. The minds of Christians are awakened, and inquiries abound on every hand as to what awaits the world. At such a time we may well adopt the closing paragraph of the work we are noticing:—"Beloved, while our hearts, drawn by Christian sympathy and united in a common faith and hope, shall invoke blessings upon ourselves, each other, and all the Israel of God, let us not forget also to pray 'thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;' and while we cheer our hearts with Jesus' last words to his church, 'Surely I come quickly,' let us gladden his soul by breathing back the responsive prayer, 'Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus.'"

For sale at this office. See advertised list of books and tracts.

Relief for the Distressed; Or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 12.

Having looked through nine Divisions of "Doubting Castle" for proof that man has a spirit entity which exists in a conscious state between death and the resurrection, and found none; we will follow the conductors into the next Division, No. 10.

We noticed there was an air of confidence expressed in their countenances, as we were passing to this division, which seemed to say, you will not get off this so easily.

We found, on entering, that this, and the one we had just left, were the most important rooms in "Doubting Castle." These were elegantly furnished, and served the purpose of parlors and chapels, being very extensive, in order to accommodate the vast number who came here to receive instruction from the "Doubting Castle" Faculty. As we gazed upon the magnificence here exhibited, and the dignified appearance of the D. D.'s, among the learned faculty, we could think of nothing so like it, as the Vatican at Rome, under the direction of the Rt. Rev. Dr. Inquisitor. We felt no wonder that timid, unsuspecting, unsophisticated, unlearned, and honest hearted pilgrims should be confused, and completely confounded when examined before such a body of men. Yet we did wonder that they should succeed in gaining the confidence of our dear Bro. B. As we watched their skill and success in filling these pilgrims' minds with doubts; we longed, more than ever, for the time to arrive when "Doubting Castle" should share the fate of the "Inquisition at Madrid," in 1809.

We will call upon Bro. Burnham to state what was said to him in this Division, which he does in the following language:

"The promise of our Redeemer to the thief on the cross, 'Verily, I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise'—seems to fix the matter that in some form—in spirit form—the thief would be with Christ that very day in paradise. (34) It has been, by some, contended that the text should read in a different form: Verily I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in paradise. But this will not do. The word 'to-day,' in the Greek, is 'semeron.' The word 'semeron' is from semera, a Greek noun, that means a day. The word 'semeron' here is an adverb of time, and not a particle of emphasis. The common place of the adverb in Greek prose is immediately before the word it modifies; but if an adverb is particularly emphatic, it may stand at the beginning or end of its sentence. How, then, shall we know what is the use of this adverb here? I reply, this same adverb is used thirteen times in the Greek New Testament, in the same form as here; and in every single case it is made to qualify the connected word or sentence, and is not once used as an emphatic particle! Unless, therefore, we do violence to the laws of language, we must connect this adverb with 'paradise,' and 'I say.' Thus—'Verily I say unto thee, in paradise thou shalt be this very day.' That gives us the sense of the passage according to the received laws of the Greek language. There is not a law of language known by which this simple adverb of time can be made to stand for an emphatic particle—as, now I tell you. I am willing you should present this criticism to any professor of Greek, and if he shows me I am mistaken I will be grateful." (35)

We saw very clearly from the appearance of those interested in sustaining "Doubting Castle," that this account of the thief on the cross was their Gibraltar rock, on which they mainly depended for the safety of their institution. We found we had truly reached the very heart of their fortifications; and that if they could not sustain this, there would be but little hope for what remained. When we were so unfortunate as to be in "Doubting Castle," its managers spared no effort to have this before our mind continually, and to keep all other Scripture from us that would assist in understanding it. They made no effort to harmonize it with other portions of the word of the Lord; and had we followed their advice, we should, no doubt, have been in the old "Castle" to-day, groping our way in doubt and darkness; but we most devoutly thank God for our happy deliverance from this stronghold of the enemy; and that he has now made all plain and harmonious throughout his word on this subject.

34. It is here asserted, "that in some form" the thief and the Savior would be "in paradise" "that very day." The first question that arises is, where is paradise? Is it in hades, heaven, or upon the earth? We will let the Scriptures settle this point.

We know that the first paradise, where Adam and his companion dwelt, was upon the earth, and a beautiful place. It is now desolate, but we have the promise of its "restitution" in the new earth. "The tree of life" was "in the midst of the garden;" but after Adam sinned, "God sent him forth from the garden of Eden," or paradise, "lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever."—Gen. 3: 22-23. Adam did not overcome the temptation, consequently, he lost his inheritance and life. But in the visions of the restitution, given by our Savior to John, upon the isle of Patmos. In chap. 2: 7, we read, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the PARADISE of God." This is not the old paradise, but the new one, we think, that shall exist when we have the new earth, and man's "Eden home" is restored. This passage settles one point, that "the tree of life" is in paradise. Now if we can find where "the tree of life" will be, we have found also the location of paradise, that man will enjoy "in the times of restitution."

In the 21st and 22d chapters of Revelation, we have a description of the "new heaven," the "new earth," and the "new Jerusalem," which is "the tabernacle of God." In the 22d chapter, where the angel of Jesus is describing the state of things in the "restitution," in the new earth, he says, "In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river was there 'the tree of life,' which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month." As "the tree of life" "is in the midst of the paradise of God," and at the same time in the new earth, it follows, as a consequence, that paradise is there. Like John, Paul was caught away in vision, and allowed to have a view of the coming paradise. We find no mention of any other paradise, since the days of Adam, but the one which will be in the kingdom of God, in the new earth.

One point, then, is settled; neither the Savior nor the thief entered paradise the day of the crucifixion; for the new earth with its paradise, and "tree of life" "in the midst," are not yet in existence.

Again, paradise in this text can not mean the heaven where God and the Savior now are; for, three days after the crucifixion, he said to Mary, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father."—John 20: 17. The me and I in this text represent the same personal identity, who said to the thief, thou shalt "be with me in paradise."

If heaven were the place denoted by paradise, and the thief went there the day of the crucifixion, he did not find Jesus there, as he did not ascend till forty days after his resurrection. The Savior was laid in Joseph's new tomb, which was not paradise, and even if it had been, the thief was not with him. Hades is not paradise—a delightful land—for there is no "knowledge, nor wisdom" there; for it is "a land of darkness, as darkness itself," as described by Job. Of necessity we must abandon the idea that the Savior and the thief went to paradise that day, or make the Bible contradict itself.

35. In this section it is stated, some read the text as follows: "Verily, I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in paradise;" and then it is added, "But this will not do." It is true, it "will not do" for "Doubting Castle" theology; but let us see if it will do for the sake of the truth and harmony of the Scriptures. The argument now turns on the position of the comma. If it is placed before to-day, then seemeron, the Greek adverb, rendered "to-day," will qualify shalt be; and the text would then affirm, that both went to paradise that day, which we have already found cannot be true. If we place the comma after "to-day," seemeron would qualify say, and be in harmony with the Bible. There are no pauses in the original, and the comma was not introduced till the sixteenth century. Griesbach, who is considered as the best authority, informs us that there is an uncertainty about the punctuation of this passage. The punctuation of the Bible is by uninspired men; hence different editions are differently punctuated. Let us take one or two examples. In Heb. 10: 12, we read, "But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever sat down on the right hand of God." If we put the comma after sins, as in many Bibles, the verse teaches that Christ is never coming back to this world, as he promised, but has sat down with the Father forever; but if we put it after forever, the passage harmonizes with all the rest of the Scriptures.

Again, in Matt. 19: 28, we read, "Jesus said unto them . . . . ye which have followed me in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones." If the comma is placed after regeneration, as in many Bibles, the passage teaches, according to the commonly received view of regeneration, that our Savior was a sinner and converted!! But if the comma be inserted after me, as in other copies of the Scriptures, then the truth is made plain. So in relation to Luke 23: 43: if the comma is placed after "to-day," the passage then harmonizes with the whole Bible. The thief said, "Remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." The kingdom of Christ is to be in the new earth; and paradise, as we have found, will also be there; with this view, the question of the thief, and the answer of the Savior, correspond. All is plain.

We do not wonder that the Faculty of "Doubting Castle" instructed our Bro. that it would not do to put the comma after "to-day;" for this simple change takes away the strong pillar of their "Castle," and [illegible] the existence of this Vatican edifice. It is entirely upturned when the translator, by his smaller and verbal, "shall thou be," or, "thou shalt be."

"Seemeron, rendered 'to-day,'" in this verse, is defined by Greenfield, "to-day, this day, now, at present." The word occurs forty-one times in the New Testament, and two hundred and eighteen in the Septuagint of the Old Testament.

We were told in "Doubting Castle" that "the common place of the adverb in Greek prose is immediately before the word it modifies." Let us see if this is true of seemeron. The word occurs in the whole Bible two hundred and fifty nine times. Of this number it is used twenty-four times adjectively, and fourteen times without the verb, leaving two hundred and twenty-one times to be used before or after the verb it qualifies. Of this number it FOLLOWS the verb one hundred and seventy times, thus corresponding with the example in Luke 23; 43, if we place the comma after "to-day," making seemeron qualify "say" instead of "shall be;" while it is placed before the verb it qualifies, only fifty-one times!

So we see that this stronghold of "Doubting Castle" is a very weak affair, and founded in error, like every other section we have examined.

We have time and space to notice but a few of the many examples in the Bible, where seemeron is used in the same relation as in Luke 23: 43, when the comma is placed after "to-day." Says Moses, "I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that ye shall soon utterly perish from off the Land."—Deut. 4: 26. "Understand therefore this day, that the Lord thy God is he which goeth over before thee."—Deut. 9: 3. "I testify against you this day, that ye shall surely perish." —Deut. 8: 19.

It is stated in a note in the "Improved Version" of the New Testament, that "this verse [Lk. 23: 43,] was wanting in the copies of Marcion and other reputed heretics; and in some of the older copies in the time of Origen; nor is it cited either by Justin, Irenæus or Tertullian; though the two former have quoted almost every text in Luke which relates to the crucifixion; and Tertullian wrote concerning the intermediate state."

When we look at the weakness of the foundations of "Doubting Castle," we wonder how its stockholders have managed to prop it up so long, and hide from inspection its hideous deformities. May the cry soon be heard, "Come out of her, my people."

Castleton.

Castleton, Vt., is a pleasant village seven miles from Poultney, and eleven from Rutland, containing a medical college and a seminary. It is a place somewhat noted for resisting any thing not considered orthodox. During our meetings at Poultney, a year since, some of the sober people of C. intimated that they were too well-informed to be led away as were the inhabitants of P.

The 17th of Feb., we commenced a series of meetings at the large and elegant Town Hall in Castleton, and have continued till this time, March 7th. Our congregations were large and attentive; and it soon became evident that the spirit of God was moving the hearts of the people. Several of the popular members of the churches, with their ministers, used what influence they had to keep the people away from our meetings; and succeeded, in many instances, by threats, commands, and sneering contempt, in keeping people in the road to destruction. Yet, there were many noble souls, who, like the ancient Bereans, searched the Scriptures to see if these things were so; became satisfied, and embraced the truth. About forty have been happily converted during the last two weeks, and many more are seeking. New testimonies are heard every evening, and the interest is still increasing. Eighteen have been baptized, and many more intend to follow their example next Lord's day. Thus far, this is the most interesting revival in which we have ever been engaged.

The young converts manifest great anxiety for their friends, laboring faithfully for their conversion, and their efforts are most signally blessed. One young lady arose before a large audience, walked some distance and embraced an unconverted father in the most affectionate manner; and, with streaming eyes, entreated him to be a christian. She continued pleading with him till he arose, with her arms still about his neck, and said "pray for me." That father has since been buried with Christ in baptism, and is now rejoicing in the Lord.

Drunkards have reformed, and been converted with their families, established family altars, and are truly happy in Jesus' love; and yet proud Pharisees look upon this blessed work with contempt. Truly, we have come to the time when men are "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." In about every place where we are called to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, the greatest obstacles to revivals with which we have to contend, are popular professors and a proud, time-serving ministry. This is one of the signs of the last days. It is very trying to see those turn against us, who should be the first to lend us their aid, and by their opposition keep anxious souls away from Christ. But we will try to bear it patiently till Jesus comes.

During the meetings, we have made prominent the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked, and have seen very happy results. Bro. O. S. Sherman, a wealthy and highly esteemed citizen, who has been converted during the past week, and resides in a pleasant home in his happy family, came into our room between one and two o'clock last Lord's day morning, and awoke us out of sleep, in order that we might participate in his great joy in the Lord. He had been accustomed to listen to the doctrine of eternal misery, but, like most others, could not harmonise it with the character of God. After he gave himself up to serve the Lord, and felt that his sins were forgiven, his mind was still exercised on this subject. After hearing the evidences that God, in justice and mercy, would destroy all the wicked, he commenced pleading with the Lord for a clear light on the subject; and while thus engaged at midnight's hour, the truth on this point was made very plain to his mind, and with the light came great joy, peace, and love for God; and he felt so anxious to publish the glad tidings, he hastened up stairs to tell us the joyful news; saying, "all is clear." "Now" said he, "I see what has kept me from being a christian. It was because I was required to believe in the doctrine of eternal misery, which did not look consistent with the character of our Heavenly Father. But all looks right now. O how lovely, the character of God now looks to me." When preaching in the morning, and remarking that the doctrine of eternal torment was calculated to keep people away from God, he arose and said with thrilling interest, "Yes, I am a witness to that." In the afternoon, he was buried with Christ in baptism, and in the evening came around the table of the Lord in company with some forty others to commemorate the death and suffering of our dear Savior. It was a heavenly season. The work is still onward. Pray for us.

"A Chance to do Good."

The Sunbeam of March 10th, has an editorial under the above heading, which reads as follows:

"We claim that the Revelations of Modern Spiritualism are as true and as sacred as the Bible.

If we are wrong in disseminating such a doctrine we are doing much evil. As we have been unable to find evidence that we are wrong, and as the clergy around us venerate the Bible, and not only despise the teachings of spirits, but proclaim that those works are of the Devil, therefore we offer ourself a sacrifice to the truth, if we have it not, and challenge any man to meet us in public discussion upon this question.

Here is an opportunity for some one to do a very great good, as our strength lies solely in the cause we advocate, therefore, if that is without foundation we can easily be disposed of. Let no man shrink from his duty."

As we are anxious "to do a very great good," we accept the challenge of Dr. C. D. Griswold, editor of the Sunbeam, published at Batavia, N. Y.; provided, we can agree on the time, place, and form of question for discussion.

In order to facilitate matters, we make the following propositions for Dr. Griswold's acceptance.

1. That the discussion be in Rochester, N. Y.

2. That it commence Tuesday evening, May 1st, and continue from two to four evenings, as may be thought best.

3. Each speech to occupy but thirty minutes.

4. That we discuss the following resolution: Resolved, That the Bible, facts, and philosophy teach that disembodied human spirits can and do communicate with their friends in this world. Dr. Griswold affirms. We deny.

For the Crisis.

Effect of Faith.

THE SICK RESTORED.

BELOVED BRN. AND SRS. IN THE LORD:—I feel it a duty I owe to the Lord, to write a few lines to you, hoping it may increase your faith. Yes, brethren and sisters, there is a God in Israel who will hear the prayers of his people. Praise the name of the Lord! If these lines should be seen by Bro. Hook, they may remind him of the time, six years since, when a few of us met together to claim the promise; and I, being one among them, was healed by the Lord in answer to the prayer of faith. He may wish to know if I have been troubled with that disease since. I have not; the Lord made me whole.

But since that time I have been led to think of what the Lord said to the man whom he healed. See John 5: 14.—"Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee." After the Lord had been so good to me, I forsook his counsel; pride took possession of my heart; I began to lose that interest I once felt for divine things. (Oh, it is a sad thing to grieve the Spirit of the Lord!) In order to awaken me, he visited me with sickness that brought me very low. The Dr. who attended me thought it impossible for me to recover. But praise the name of the Lord! there is a greater than man, even Jesus, the Son of God. For four months I have been on a bed of sickness, the last two of which I had not use of my limbs. I had to be moved, for I had not strength to move myself. But during this time I knew the Lord would heal me if I only had faith. I spoke to some on the subject, but still I could not get hold of the faith that was needed. A week ago last Wednesday a sister called to see me. She told me that Bro. J. K. Bellows was in the village, and was to preach. I felt a great desire to see him. I sent for him. I had never seen him before; but as soon as he came into the room where I was, I believed the Lord had sent him, and it would be the last opportunity I should have of the kind. It was very crossing for me to speak to him about it, more so than ever before. The tempter tried me every way; but the Lord gave me the victory. I spoke to the Bro. about it; he referred me to the fifth chapter in James, and read it, telling me at the time to send for some of the brethren, saying, "Let them read the chapter and do as it says"; and he believed the Lord would heal me. But I felt that he was the one the Lord had sent; and, praise the Lord, it was so; for when he prayed, the Lord sent his Spirit, and I was made whole; every disease left me, that had troubled me for more than a year; and I am now in perfect health.

It was Thursday afternoon I was healed, and the Sunday following I went to meeting. It is my earnest prayer that I may spend the remainder of my life in the service of my God, through his assistance. I ask your prayers in my behalf, for I feel very needy. O that I could tell the whole world what the Lord has done for me! I feel that I cannot praise him enough. Glory be to God!

Brethren and sisters, be faithful a little longer; for soon Jesus will come to give us immortality and eternal life. Yours in hope of soon seeing Jesus,

LOUISA JAMES.

Fairhaven, Mass., Feb. 21st, 1860.

For the Crisis.

The Anointed of God.—No. 1.

"Stand up for Jesus!"

"But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth unto me [that is] to be Ruler in Israel; whose goings forth [have been] from of old, from everlasting—[margin, from the days of eternity."] Micah 5: 2. Received version.

Would this make good sense to read it, "Whose goings forth SHALL BE OF OLD FROM the DAYS OF ETERNITY"?

"And thou, Bethlehem Ephrata,
[Art thou too] little to be among the leaders of Judah?
Out of thee shall come forth unto me
[One who] is to be a Ruler in Israel:
And his goings forth [have been] FROM OF OLD,
FROM THE days of HIDDEN AGES. Micah v. 2.

One going forth is spoken of as future, and another as past, which suits none but Christ."—BISHOP WILLIAM NEWCOME'S Improved version, with notes.

"And art thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, little to be [esteemed]
Among the thousands of Judah?
From thee shall issue [THE LEADER,]
Who shall rule my people, the Israel [of God]
(But his issuings are from OLD,
From days of ETERNITY.") Micah v. 2.
And thou, Bethlehem, territory of Judah,
Art by no means least among the captains of Judah;
From thee shall issue THE LEADER,
Who shall guide my people, the Israel [of God.] Matt. 2: 6.

—REV. WILLIAM HALES, D.D. "New Analysis of Chronology." Vol. II., Book 2, p. 461.

"And thou, Bethlehem, house of Ephratha, art few in number to be reckoned among the thousands of Juda; yet out of thee shall one come forth to me, to be a Ruler of Israel; and his goings forth WERE FROM THE BEGINNING, even from eternity. (Margin, from the days of the age.") Micah v. 2.—"The Septuagint version translated into English," by Sir L. C. L. Brenton, Bart.

"But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah,
Who art too small to be among the thousands of Judah,
Out of thee shall come forth for me a ruler of Israel,
Whose origin is from the ANCIENT AGE, FROM THE DAYS OF OLD!" Micah v. 2.

—A new translation of the Hebrew Prophets, by GEORGE R. NOYES.

"And thou, Bethlehem Ephrata, reputed little among the thousands of Judah, (yet) from thee hath HE gone forth of ME, having been the Ruler in Israel, and whose goings forth (were) OF OLD FROM THE DAYS OF ETERNITY." Micah v. 2.—"New Translation of Controverted Passages," etc., by ROBERT TOMLINSON, Esq. London, 1803.

"But thou Beth-lechem Ephratah, the least [though] thou be among the thousands of Judah, [yet] out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel, whose ORIGIN is from OLDEST TIMES, FROM MOST ANCIENT DAYS." Micah v. 2. "The Twenty-four Books of the Holy Scriptures, carefully translated according to the Massoretic Text, after the best Jewish authorities, by ISAAC LEESER," (a Jewish Rabbi.)

"And THOU, BETHLEHEM Ephrata, art a little one among the thousands of Judah: out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be the ruler in Israel: and his going forth (is) FROM THE BEGINNING, from THE DAYS OF ETERNITY." Micah v. 2.—Douay version.

"But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall be come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been OF OLD SINCE A LONG PERIOD."—Emendations of the Authorised version of the Old Testament, by SELIG NEWMAN, (a converted Jew.)

"Whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." The words do naturally import an original, distinct from the birth of Christ, mentioned in the foregoing sentence; which is here declared to be 'from all eternity,' for so the word mikkedem, (translated here 'from of old,' but rendered 'from everlasting,' Habak. 1: 12) and mime olam, 'from the days of eternity,' do plainly signify. (See Ps. 55: 19; 90: 2. Prov. 8: 23.)"—Commentary by WILLIAM LOWTH, B. D.

"Whose goings, etc. In every age, from the foundation of the world, there has been some manifestation of the Messiah. 'From everlasting.' 'From the days of all time;' from time as it came out of eternity."—DR. ADAM CLARKE'S Commentary, Mic. v. 2.

"I imagine the words refer to his going before our fathers in the wilderness, and in the sanctuary; as mentioned by the Psalmist; 68: 7, 24, 25: 'O God, when thou wentest forth before the people; when thou didst march through the wilderness the earth shook, the heavens also dropped at the presence of God, the God of Israel.' 'They have seen thy goings, oh God; even the goings of my God, my king, in the sanctuary, the singers went before, the minstrels followed after,' etc. Upon which the CHALDEE Paraphrase says: 'The house of Israel have seen the goings of thy majesty upon the sea, oh God.' So that the 'goings out from everlasting,' relate to the visible Jehovah's leading the Israelites of old through the Red Sea; and going before them in the wilderness, in a fire by night and a cloud by day; and tabernacling on the sanctuary in the cloud."—BENJAMIN BEN MORDECAI'S Apology to his friends for embracing Christianity. Letter 4, p. 499. London, 1784.

"Of old from everlasting," etc. Munster, Tigurina, the SYRIAC, ARABIC, and DRUSIUS render it, "Ante secula, ante mundum conditum—BEFORE THE AGES, BEFORE THE FOUNDATION OF THE WORLD."—Poole's Synopsis.

"Whose goings forth have been 'from of old, from everlasting.' Hebrew, mikkedem, mime, olam; rendered by the Septuagint ap arches ex hemeron aionos, and exactly in the same sense by the (Latin) Vulgate, 'ab initio, a diebus eternitatis,' 'from the beginning, from the days of eternity.' So these Hebrew expressions must of necessity signify in divers places of Scripture, being used to signify the eternity of God. See Ps. 55: 19; 90: 2. Prov. 8: 23. Hab. 1: 12. The words naturally import an original distinct from the birth of Christ mentioned in the foregoing sentence, which original is here declared to be from all eternity."—JOSEPH BENSON'S Commentary on Mic. 5: 2.

"Whose goings forth have been of old from everlasting; which is said of him, not because his extraction was from David, who lived many ages before him; for admitting he was in him, in his loins, as to his human nature, so long ago, yet his goings forth were not from thence: nor because he was prophesied of, and promised very early, as he was from the beginning of the world; but neither a prophecy nor a promise can be called goings forth; which was only foretold of, but not an actual being, etc., etc. . . The phrases are expressive of the eternity of his divine nature and person; so as the former part of the text sets forth his human birth, this, his divine generation, which, because of the excellency and ineffableness of it, is expressed in the plural number, goings forth. So Rabbi Eliezer, . . produces this to prove the name of Messiah before the world was, whose goings forth were from everlasting, when as yet the world was not created. PIRKE ELIEZER c. 3, fol. 2, 2."—An Exposition of the Books of the Prophets, by JOHN GILL, D. D., London, 1757.

I submit the above translations to the reader's judgment. I know not how many more might be obtained, as I have made no search outside of my own limited library, nor have I taken all I found that agree in the sentiment.

Here are translations ancient and modern, some by Jews, some by Gentiles, some Catholic, some Protestant, one, I think, by a Unitarian, some by Trinitarians, some by Jew and Gentile believers in Jesus of Nazareth, and one by a Jewish Rabbi who has no faith in Jesus as the Christ. I could add several other authorities, if needful, but it would be merely a repetition of similar ideas; and now I ask the candid reader to jugde if this "Ruler in Israel" had no existence previous to his birth in Bethlehem?

To put his GOINGS FORTH OF OLD FROM EVERLASTING in the future, and make it his future goings forth TO EVERLASTING, is, I think, a strong indication that theory is dearer and clearer to the mind than the inspired WORD OF God. The supplied words "have been" make no difference in the sense except to complete it; as to talk of future events as being "OF OLD" and "from the days of eternity" is, I suspect, to talk the idle nonsense of human misjudgment which the prophets of God do not make use of. Some of these versions omit the supplied words, but all convey the same idea, whether Jew, Gentile, Protestant, Catholic, Trinitarian or Unitarian. They all place the GOINGS FORTH, the EXISTENCE, the ORIGIN of this "RULER" "from of OLD," "from the days of eternity," or from past AGES, while his birth at Bethlehem was then yet in the future. This passage will need several more abortive efforts to "explain it away" before it will DEPART. It stands like a granite ROCK! Heaven and earth may, perhaps, be "explained away,"—God's word never!

It is easier and better to bend a theory to the Bible than the Bible to a theory. That doctrine is very suspicious, the defence and establishment of which consists mainly in the "explaining away" of passages of God's word which, if let alone, would crush it into ten thousand fragments. Who gave man authority to "explain away" God's WORD? To throw dust, and doubt, and mist, over it all? Let God be true and every man a liar.

I have no time or inclination for long arguments. I count them as a bore and an imposition upon newspaper readers. Truth can stand without much propping—error needs to be eternally tinkered, defended and guarded. Let us cling to the BIBLE "THY WORD IS TRUTH." Let us believe God. Let us obey him. Let us REVERENCE HIS WORD. H. L. HASTINGS.

Providence, R. I.

Correspondence.

From Wm. McCulloch.

BRO. GRANT:—The cause in this vicinity has been on the advance for the few months that are past, and there seems to be a general desire to hear upon the subjects of our hope: such as the coming of Christ, the restitution, and life and immortality through a resurrection from the dead. Since there is so great a desire to hear, and the field is so large, my prayer has been that the Lord would send more laborers into the vineyard. Dear brethren, the extent of these vast prairies is almost boundless, and only now and then a watchman to sound the mighty gospel trump to the thousands that throng these vast plains; and shall this people go to the judgment without hearing the blessed gospel of the kingdom? God forbid! Will not some of our eastern laborers heed a Macedonian cry, and come over and help us? Truly, the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

Our tracts are doing a great deal in the way of removing prejudice, but there is a strong necessity for having more laborers in word and doctrine, that whatever of truth may be sown in those little printed messengers may, by faithful watchmen, be gathered into a glorious harvest when the Master comes. We need the tracts; they are just what we want; and I trust they will accomplish the object for which they were intended.

I have alluded to the field as being large. Our Conference comprises the State of Illinois, and we have only two preachers (to my knowledge,) that are constantly engaged in the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom, viz: Brn. Chandler and Pratt; and they are required to travel its length and breadth, their appointments being, in many instances, hundreds of miles apart, thereby consuming a great deal of time and money to feed the flock of God; which, if there were more laborers, less means would be required to defray traveling expenses, and more would be benefited.

Had we ten more efficient preachers in this field, I have no doubt they would be better supported in a little while than the few now here; from the fact that almost everywhere we hold a few meetings some become interested and embrace the truth, and are willing to do all they can to advance it by contributing of their substance.

My dear brethren of the East, will it not please your heavenly Father to have some of you (his watchmen,) come, bearing the sword of the Spirit to this field? Our beloved Bro. Chandler is afflicted with sickness in his family, which must necessarily restrict his labors far away from home to some extent; and our dear Bro. Pratt may feel it duty to return East to his family, and we thereby be left, and the people come up to the judgment unprepared. God forbid that the work should cease so near that mighty day!

"Up! it is Jehovah's rally,
God's own arm hath need of thine."

Brethren, may we, whose lot it is to be situated in this western field, let our light so shine that others may take knowledge that we have been with Jesus, and that we look for and love his appearing.

La Moile, Bureau Co., Ill.

For the Crisis.

Eld. Grant's Tour in Canada East.

Our meetings, which commenced on last Lord's Day in Jan., and continued over the two following Sabbaths, have closed, and closed well. We had in that time twenty-one lectures, and almost as many prayer-meetings, including two love feasts. In the course of these meetings, several rose for prayer, four put on Christ in baptism; and the last evening we gathered round the long-spread table and had our "Supper" at the supper time, when many with an enlightened faith could look from the cross to the crown, and see Mount Zion rise above Mount Calvary. At the close of this thrice hallowed scene, upon invitation given, thirteen penitent persons came forward for prayers, in presence of many spectators who seemed loth to leave the house.

The extent of the impression made upon the public mind by these meetings, the great hereafter alone will tell; and could the Elder have remained about a week longer he might have seen the fruit of his anxious toil more effectually consummated,—but, if the Lord will, he is expected to return again in June, when it might be hoped that two months labor would not be lost upon these Townships; and sure I am that a comparative whisper of his return to Danville, would again fill every corner of our spacious building with living souls. One thing I must here remark, and that is, to daub with a mixture of modern theology, Eld. Grant came not as yet to Danville. That a man is not dead and alive at the same time! and that all the wicked will God destroy,—these divinely inspired truths were handled with heavenly skill, but with an unsparing hand. Never in these Townships was error in religious garb so completely stripped, and exposed to the public gaze, as upon this occasion. An auxiliary branch of the old "Castle" in this village, feels just now as though it were—but a few days since it felt a tremendous shock from all earthquake. And one of the sub-managers has been exhorting and entreating some of the subordinate elements in this concession to return to their former quietude and harmlessness.

These meetings have been so largely attended by some of every sect and party, and many belonging to neither, the truth has had a wide circulation, so that a general impression is made upon the public mind. The careless have been alarmed, seeing the purity and narrowness of the way to eternal life; the professor has been shaken in his baseless hope of going either to paradise or heaven at death; the ways of God to man, in regard to eternal pain, have been vindicated, and the infidel put to silence. The Pharisees went out and held a council how they might entangle him in his talk, but they have been forced to the old conclusion "that this people who know not the law are accursed." The church has been revived both in spirit and in number. Our prayer-meetings (two in the week) have become more interesting and active; we can now occupy more space, and extend a more healthy influence with our neighbors, who have heard for themselves; a large amount of doctrinal reproach, which has pressed heavily upon our shoulders for years having been rolled away.

A hint to our brethren scattered abroad: Eld Grant will be found exceedingly useful in extracting those sharp teeth, sometimes found in our churches, "which bite and devour one another:" and among the many blessings which may fall to his lot at the resurrection of the just, will be found, we believe, the blessing of the "peacemaker." And our prayer has been, and is now, that Eld Grant, as an able minister of the New Testament, may be spared to the churches as long as his ministerial labor is necessary, for we think he should not be confined to any one locality, but as an evangelical Bishop take an oversight in the wide field, where that oversight will be acceptable. I am sure it will be beneficial to the body scattered and peeled, as it is at this hour.

J. PORTER.

Danville, C. E., March 1st, 1860.

Married.

In Bristol, Ct., on the 5th inst., by Eld. H. F. Carpenter, Mr. ALLEN T. BUNNELL, of Plymouth, and Miss SARAH M. NORTON, of Bristol.

Obituary Notice.

Fell asleep in Jesus, on the 14th inst., Sister DELLAH LANGSTAFF, (wife of Brother John Langstaff late deceased.) at her dwelling in Corysville, Champaign Co., Ohio, aged sixty-one years.

Sister Langstaff was a mother in Israel, and, like her husband, who also sleeps in Jesus, was beloved of all her friends and neighbors, poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, looking for that blessed hope, eternal life, when the Life-Giver comes. Her house was always a home for the weary pilgrim, and a resting place for the ministers of Christ. Sister Langstaff, as will be remembered by many friends, like Mary, was early at the sepulchre, looking for her Master; and with many others rejoiced in hope of soon meeting her much desired friend. Disappointment gave no check to her faith, but onward still she moved, following the lamp of truth until she now sleeps in him in whom was all her hope; and of such it is said—"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth—yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them." Rev. 14: 13.

May her memory long live in the hearts of kindred spirits, and the truth, as faithfully defended by her, continue to cast its healthful rays upon the hearts of the bereaved son and daughters, until they shall embrace the same blessed hope in Christ Jesus, and follow the worthy example of their deceased parents, while life shall prolong their days on earth, and finally meet fond father and mother in the holy city, the New Jerusalem.

E. R. SOUTHWICK.

The Departed.

COMPOSED ON THE DEATH OF SR. LANGSTAFF.

BY M. LOUISA SOUTHWICK.

She went to her rest in the gloom
Of mid-winter's desolate scenes;
Beside her own dead they provided her room,
And lightly the snow-stars decline to the tomb,
Enwrapping their earthly remains.

'T was meet she should follow him there,
Where fond hearts are severed no more:
United in life, undivided in death,
'T was easy to part with the uncertain breath,
To join her beloved, "gone before."

At the sundown of life, as a bird
Its weary wings folds to repose,
She folded her garment of righteousness by,
And looking to Jesus with faith's fearless eye,
Her pilgrimage came to its close.

Yes, mourn for the lost, ye bereaved!
Your household so broken and sad;
At dayspring and twilight their absence is felt,
But most at the altar of prayer where ye knelt
To offer up incense to God.

But think ye, how quiet their lot,
Who sleep the calm sleep of the blest:
The lashes of sorrow, the fetters of care,
Temptation and trial disturb them not there,
So sweetly in Jesus they rest.

From the warfare of earth they are gone,
From sin, and all evil to come;
Tho' thunders of war through the universe roll,
No sound but the music of Gabriel's call,
Will pierce through their moss-covered home.

O, the terror, the grandeur, the joy,
Of the morn when our King will appear!
The trumpet's deep voice sinking far through the [illegible]
The nations all gathered, Death's prisoners free,
Redeemed and Redeemer meet there!

Tawawa, O.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

ITALY.

Rumors were current of a forthcoming address, the authorship of which is attributed to Victor Emmanuel himself, calling Naples and Sicily to insurrection.

FRANCE.

A report was current that a plot against the Emperor Napoleon had been discovered.

A MUNICH letter says: "The ministry has just given a proof of its liberal tendency, by appointing a Jew as director of the State Lunatic Asylum. The Government intends, it is said, to submit a bill to the chambers for the purpose of regulating the position of the Jews in conformity with the liberal spirit of the age. As a preliminary step, that edict of 1815 will be abolished which prohibits the introduction of foreign Jewish establishments into the kingdom, and orders that the Jewish families shall be progressively diminished in the localities where they exist."

[Per Niagara, from Liverpool, the 25th ult.]

THE ITALIAN QUESTION.

A Paris telegram confirms the statement that Russia and Prussia had joined in a proposal for a Conference of five great Powers.

Negotiations between the Powers, on the Italian question, it is said, were being actively carried on.

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Globe says the chances of war in the spring were becoming daily stronger. The accumulation of Austrian troops behind the Mincio and on the north banks of the Po, betoken desperate efforts.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times countenances the report that Napoleon is endeavoring to conciliate the Pope. Arrangements respecting the Romagna, likely to satisfy both parties, have been proposed, but the terms are not mentioned.

LATEST.

[By Telegraph to Queenstown.]

In relation to the alleged alliance between Austria and Russia, the Morning Chronicle publishes the following in its second edition: "Intelligence, just received from a sure source at Vienna is to the following effect: Russia has decided on renewing her old alliance with Austria. The treaty is on the eve of being signed, and will be carried to St. Petersburg by Prince Alexander of Hesse. We have excellent reasons for believing that its provisions will be found to be as follows: The most ample concessions as to all that regards the holy places at Jerusalem will be made by Austria to Russia; 2d, with a view to eventualities that have every probability of being realized, Austria agrees to conform her policy to that of Russia as to the Danubian provinces and Servia; 3d, as compensation for these concessions in the East on the Danube, Russia will guaranty to Austria the whole of her territory, including Hungary and Venetia, against insurrection and foreign foes."

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News fears it is but too true that at a Ministerial Council on Friday, presided over by the Emperor, which lasted four hours, a resolution was taken against Italian unity, on the pretext that Russia and Prussia objects to the annexation, which alone can satisfy the Italians. The French government, it is alleged, have resolved that the project of the annexation of Tuscany to Piedmont must be altogether abandoned. The people of Tuscany will be called upon to choose sovereigns, and there will be no objection to their choice falling upon the Duke of Genoa, Victor Emmanuel's nephew; 2d, the Duchies of Modena and Parma may be annexed to Piedmont, with the consent of the inhabitants; 3d, the question of the Romagna is revised, and will probably be submitted to a conference of the Powers, but still the idea of creating a separate State of the sovereignty of the Holy See, and the annexation, subject to that sovereignty, either to Piedmont or Tuscany, is not abandoned. Piedmont will be required to adhere to these proposals, under the threat of withdrawing the French army from Italy, and leaving her to the mercy of Austria.

THE AMERICAN COLLEGE, ROME.—"The Pope celebrated mass in person, and administered the sacrament to the scholars, who are mostly from the United States. After mass he made them an address, in which he could not refrain from launching forth angrily upon political topics. 'We have lost,' said he, 'the Legations, and now they seek to shake (crollare) our patrimony itself; but we shall have our revenge (abbiamo la nostra vendetta') No sooner had the word 'vendetta' passed his lips, than, recollecting that such a word was scarcely befitting the Vicar of Christ, he paused, and then continued, Si, la nostra vendetta, ma colla preghiera, (Yes, our revenge, but by prayers.') I understand the Diplomatic Corps breakfasted with the Pope yesterday, (Sunday,) and that he spoke to them very angrily upon what he calls the rough usage he is receiving. There are many rumors flying this morning, amongst others, that so far from the Emperor of the French withdrawing his troops, an additional 2,000 are on their way to Rome; that the Neapolitans have crossed the frontier to the Pope's assistance, in consequence of an advance made by the army of Central Italy."

Editorial Notices.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.—We learn that some of our readers do not understand whether we intend to give the present for new subscribers, to the one who obtains them, or the one who receives the paper. We would say, the gift is for the former. See notice.

Notice.

We have received a parcel of books and tracts, and should be glad if the person who forwarded it would furnish us with his name, and the purpose for which it was sent.

ILLUSTRATED BIBLE.—We have received No. 1 of Cassell's Illustrated Bible, published by Ross and Tousey, of New York. It has a neat appearance. It will be issued in parts, on the 1st and 15th of each month, until completed.

NOTICE.—The church in Hebron, N. Y., would like to procure the labors of some minister after the 1st of April, for half the time or more. Communications relative to the matter can be received at this office.

Notices, &c.

Conference.

The next meeting of the R. I. Conference will be in Peacedale, the last Wednesday in March. Brethren, come with hearts earnest for the work of the Lord.

JOSEPH D. BROWN, Clerk.

A Boy Lost.

A small boy by the name of John B. Howden, thirteen years of age, son of W. S. Howden, Waterbury, Vt., left home the 17th of January, and has not been heard of since.

General Conference in Boston.

A General Religious Conference will be held in Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing at half-past 2 o'clock, on Wednesday, the 4th of April, continuing each day and evening through the week and over the Lord's day.

The object and design of this meeting is not so much for the passing of resolutions or the transaction of ecclesiastical business, as for the advancement of pure christianity among us in true revival and reformation. What we as a body want and need, is not disputation or hobbies, but earnest, direct labor for the immediate promotion of the work of God in awakening the careless and indifferent, stirring up the luke-warm, and quickening into life and activity the too sluggish energies of the whole church in the personal work of preparation to meet the Master, who is before the door. In fact, we are too dull, too barren, and want more faith, zeal, love—more religion. And not only is it to be hoped that our meeting may prove a great means of grace to the waiting saints, but our hearts' desire is to see sinners converted to God, and thus made ready for the approaching great day of doom. Let those, then, who are asleep, awake and be strong. Let the righteous gird on their armor. Let sinful men be alarmed. All signs point to the speedy coming of the Lord, and it is high time that those who look for Him be up and doing with their might their last solemn work. Let earnest and faithful prayer go up to heaven for the success of this conference. Ministers of Christ, plead with Him for the spiritual interest of the meeting, and come to it in humility and faith, that our God who is now working among our churches in various places, may also pour his Spirit upon the worshipers at Chapman Hall. We invite our dear brethren and sisters from abroad to come. Come, all who can. Provision will be made by the friends for all needful entertainment.

D. T. TAYLOR.
M. GRANT.

GEO. T. ADAMS,
J. G. HAMBLIN, } Committee.
WM. O. STONE,

☞ Eld. A. Ross will preach at the dedication of the Union Hall in Palmer, Mass., Sunday, March 18th, and give several evening lectures during the week following.

O. P. ALLEN, Cor. Secretary.

Notice.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will be in Augusta, at the brick school-house on Sand Hill, commencing March 29th, Thursday, 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. We shall expect all our ministers there to preach the word, to counsel and labor for the unity and upbuilding of the cause of Christ. Also, as many brethren and sisters as can conveniently attend, to engage in the same work. Those who cannot come should pray God to bless this effort to the salvation of lost sinners. We cordially invite ministers and others from everywhere, to attend with us to work as above stated. Strangers coming to this meeting should call on Bro. Wm. A. Lovejoy, and David Moshier.

H. B. SEVEY, Chairman.
I. C. WELLCOME, Secretary.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. D. T. Taylor will preach in
Boston, (Chapman Hall) . . . . Sunday, March 18th

Providence permitting, I will preach in Albany, N. Y., Friday evening, March 16th.

Lord's day, 18th, commence a series of meetings in Danbury, Ct., to continue every evening through the week and over the following Lord's day.

MILES GRANT.

Bro. Geo. Champlin wishes to have his appointment at Bristol, Ct., on the 18th, withdrawn. He will have an appointment there at some other time, if the Lord will.

J. S. WHITE.

Providence permitting, I will preach in
East Boston . . . . April 3d
Attend the Conference . . . . . . April 4th
Portsmouth, N. H. . . . . April 5th
South Berwick . . . . April 6th
Commence a four days' meeting in East Barnstead, N. H., (Clarke meeting-house) . . . . April 7th
The third and fourth week in April not engaged.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Eld. A. Durfee will preach in
Foster, R. I., (Tabernacle) . . . . March 15th
Gloucester, R. I. . . . . March 16th
Foster, R. I. . . . . March 18th

H. C. HOPKINS.

Eld. Geo. Champlin will preach in
Southington, Ct. . . . . . April 13th, 14th, and 15th

D. W. Miller will preach in South Hawley . . . . March 23d
Savoy . . . . March 25th
Goshen . . . . April 1st

Eld. L. S. Ludington appoints to preach in Seltico, Ct. . . . . March 18th
Springfield, Mass. . . . . March 20th
Newfield, Ct. . . . . March 25th
Northfield, Ct., (Centre school-house) . . March 27th and 28th
(Bro. G. H., please meet me at Campville, Tuesday afternoon.)
Plymouth Hollow, Ct. . . . . April 1st
Meetings are held at Bro. Cornell's every Sunday, also on Wednesday evenings. Brethren, take notice.
Wallingford, Ct. . . . . April 8th

Eld. H. Munger will preach in Warehouse Point, (Chapel) Thursday evening, March 22d, and continue over the following Sunday.

S. P. BABCOCK.

Eld. W. S. Campbell will preach in
Lowell . . . . Sunday, April 1st
Kennebunkport, Me. . . . . April 15th
East Boston, Mass. . . . . April 22d

Eld. Geo. Champlin will preach in Portsmouth, N. H., the second and third Sundays in April.

Eld. J. Hemenway will preach in Portsmouth, N. H., the first Sabbath in April.

Eld. C. Goodrich will preach in
Brookfield . . . . March 21st
Pawlings, N. Y. . . . . . . Sunday, March 25th

APPOINTMENTS FOR E. KILLINGLY, CT.

Eld. H. F. Carpenter . . . . March 25th
Meetings commence at 1 o'clock, P. M.
Brethren wishing to correspond with the church at East Killingly, Ct., will direct their letters to Warren Taft.

J. HEMENWAY.

I will preach as follows:—
Danielsonville, Conn. . . . . . . March 22d
and over the following Sunday.
Warwick Plain, R. I. . . . . . Sunday, March 31st

S. W. BISHOP.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

I. J. Stedman,—We cannot say positively, but think the chart may be obtained of O. Hart, Concord, N. H.

We know of no special manufactory of them. We cannot give information relative to the "Great Chart" of which you speak. The chart, concerning which Bro. Hart may be able to give information, may be obtained, we think, for $3.00. Eld. J. V. Himes, Boston, Mass., has had a set of charts on the visions of Daniel and John. We do not know whether he has any for sale now. We think the price of his is $5.00.

Cash Receipts.

A B Howard 260, 90 cts; H W Norvell 260, $3.00; W A Morse 236, 54 cts; A R White 329, $4.00; Capt. E Mitchell 248, $5.00; H W Pray for Providence Brn. $10.00; S A Macomber 234, $1.12; H Bemis 275, $1.60; A G Jayne 256, $5.00; L Andrews 255, 66 cts; A A Tapper 236, p. pd., $2.86; Eld. Wolcott for Portsmouth Brn., $10.00.

M M Day 246, A P Hyde 228, S Young 247, Cey. Wilson 247, J N Russell 247, W Towl 247, Mrs. M M Davis 229, C Farrington 234,—50 cts. each.

G L White 260, Al. Hunt 260, J Ross 262, Mrs. S F Rogers 260, J Russell 260, A Fletcher 260, G L Rice 260, J B Richardson 234, Mrs. L M Plummer 260, Mrs. E Barnes 248, J B Dodge 257, P T Watson 234, E Sackett 265, D Vickery 259, M A Pote 260, Mrs. J A Smith 260, J Calder 252, M Young 260, H. Christenson 260, S C Perry 260, G Storer 261, H B Winch 260, D Randall 260, A S Richards 260, J M Stone 260, L Bristol 234, H Way 260, O Ormsbee 260, P Pfeil 260, V Vreeland 260, O K Gibbs 260, N Hoyt 260, N R Gould 260, C Nichols 260, O H Perry 260, B F Carpenter 260, H N Smith 260, E G Scott 234, S S Slocum 260, W Howard 260, G W Wiggin 260, H Bowns 222, C Haskins 260, A Andrews 277, C Flint 266, W E Harris 260, W Collier 234, P Blanchard 222, W Colbath 262, A Browning 260, S Blaisdell 260, E Flanders, Jr., 249, W F Collier 260, P Howard 260, C M Smith 256, G G Emery 234, W Rowarth 260, R Allen 260, W A Newton 236, C H Barrett 260, J Curtis 260, L Watrous 260, Mrs. G S Flint 262, H Wilson 260, M M Flint 260,—$1.00 each.

C Patnoe 273, A B Cook 278,—$1.50 each.

J Taylor 256, S A Bailey 286, J Larasey 286,—$1.50 each.

A C Jenkins 286, C W Richards 286, M Garland 234, J C Bastian 286, A Marshall 286, A Magbee 234, D Veasey 286, J Hutchins 260, J C Dennison 260, G Noble 286, J M Healey 233, G S Brewster 232, W H Bartch 286, H H Corbin 286, W Shaw 260, Z Whitney 268, N Thompson 286, L H Armstrong 286, H Haskins 286, Dr. A G W Smith 286, W H Albro 245, J Durgin 249,—$2.00 each.

Books and Tracts.

W A Morse 46 cts, Eld. M F Cornell 63 cts, S O Welch $2.00, A G Hudson $1.00, J S Heath $1.00, H P Chase $3.00, A G Jayne $2.00, L F D Cole 51 cts, W L Stroud $1.00, A C Judson 12 cts, J M Phillips $1.60, G W Stetson $1.00, W H Hendrick 55 cts, M A Harley 15 cts, H Bowns 12 cts, L Andrews 34 cts, E Conser 25 cts, W G Proctor $3.00, W Bassford $6.04, W A Fenn 25 cts, C Farrington 50 cts, A Crowse $1.00, J Bailey $2.00, D R Mansfield $10.00, D W Patterson $2.00, Eld. H. Grew 28 cts, S Whitney 13 cts, J Evans $1.00.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

Discussion of the Doctrine of The State of the Dead and Punishment of the Wicked; between W. W. Clayton and M. Grant. Price 25 cts; postage 3 cts. Bound 40 cts; postage 9 cts. 1-4th off per dozen.

Human Destiny. A Discussion: Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all? By C. F. Hudson and Sylvanus Cobb. 478 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00 post paid.

The Nature of Faith, and the Evils of Sect. By the late W. H. Starr. With a Memoir and Notes by C. F. Hudson. 259 pp. 12mo. Price 60 cts. Postage 14 cts.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuke as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 138 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $1.25.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; $1 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Sheldon.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $6.00.

[illegible] and will be read with interest by all. Price 60 cts.—postage 10 cents.

Words of Warning.—5 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them at lower rates than they can be bought in any other place in the city.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. [illegible] SEYMOUR. An excellent tract to [illegible] the Scriptures, and upon the theological [illegible] of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $3.00 per hundred,—5 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the reader. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Geneseo, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 5 cts.—postage 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms; or, the kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $6.00 per hundred, 90 cts. per dozen, 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. S. BROOKS, No. 8 Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Waite, Warwick, R. I.:—
The Harp, by Elder Himes; 200 Stories for Children; Satanic Delusion; Bible Hell; Great Controversy.

We have also on hand the following

PUBLICATIONS
OF
H. L. HASTINGS,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor: edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 420 pp. $1.00
The Great Controversy between God and Man: its Origin, Progress, and End; by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 161 pp. [illegible]
Reasons for My Hope, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 128 pp. Paper, 30cts. Cloth [illegible]
Forever with the Lord, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing.
Earth's Destiny, as revealed in Scripture, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing.
Tracts on Prophecy, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. [illegible]
Tracts on Immortality, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. [illegible]
Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith, by Robert Patterson. 12mo. 320 pp. [illegible]
The Infidel's Fate, by a converted Infidel. Cloth gilt. [illegible]
Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D., edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 120 pp. Paper, 25 cts.; Cloth, [illegible]
Pauline Theology: The Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment, as Taught by Paul, by H. L. Hastings. 84 pp. Paper, [illegible]
The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life, by H. L. Hastings. Paper, 87 pp. [illegible]
Tracts of 24 Pages.—3 cts single; $1 for 1600 pages—by mail 1200 pp. for $1.

The Church not in Darkness, by H. L. H. . . . 24
The Three Worlds, by H. L. H. . . . 24
The Last Days, by H. L. H. . . . [illegible]
Plain Truths, by H. L. H. . . . [illegible]
Will all men be saved? by H. L. H. . . . [illegible]
Voice of Warning, by D. T. Taylor . . . [illegible]
The New Heavens and Earth, . . . 24
Ancient Landmarks, 6 Nos. . . . [illegible]
Olive Leaves, 9 Nos. by H. L. H. . . . [illegible]
Important Questions, 9 Nos. by H. L. H. . . . [illegible]
State of the Dead, by John Milton . . . [illegible]
The Intermediate State, by H. L. H. . . . [illegible]
Destiny of the Wicked, by M. L. H. . . . [illegible]
Future Punishment, by H. G. . . . 12
The Key of Truth, by W. [illegible] . . . [illegible]
Man's Future State, . . . 12
Letter on Dress, by Adoniram Judson . . . 12
The Day of Judgment, by St. Cyril . . . 12
Outline of the Coast, by A Voyager . . . 8
The Night Cometh, by John Adey . . . [illegible]
Gems, 9 Nos. poetry, by H. L. H. . . . 12
One Thing . . . [illegible]
The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, . . . [illegible]
The Duration of the Earth by A. Clarke . . . 4
Hope and Duty of the Church, M. Henry . . . 4
The Restitution, by St. Cyril . . . 4
A Warning Voice, by Cotton Mather . . . [illegible]
Loving Christ's Appearing, by Bramer . . . [illegible]
Little Children, Love one another, . . . [illegible]
The One Resting Place, by H. Bonar . . . 4
My Friend, by H. L. H. . . . [illegible]
Abundant Grace, . . . [illegible]
Wondrous Love, . . . [illegible]
Go in Peace, . . . [illegible]
Living Water, . . . [illegible]
The Banner, Anonymous . . . [illegible]
The Blood of Christ, . . . [illegible]
Are you a Christian? by M. A. H. . . . [illegible]
Why not Now? . . . [illegible]
Are you Pardoned? . . . [illegible]
Are you Safe? . . . [illegible]
Are you Saved? . . . [illegible]
Do you Pray? . . . [illegible]
When Will He Come? by J. C. Ryle . . . 4
Statement of Account, by H. L. H. . . . [illegible]
Man in Death, By Bishop Law . . . 4
Forty Questions on Immortality . . . 4

SCRIPTURE SEARCHINGS.
No. 1. The Destiny of the Wicked . . . 1
No. 2. The State of the Dead . . . 1
No. 3. The Coming of Jesus . . . 1
No. 4. The Resurrection . . . 1
No. 5. Plain Truths . . . 1
No. 6. The Judgment . . . 1

POETRY.
Brother, Shall we Meet? by H. L. H. . . . 2
Sister, Shall we Meet? . . . 2
Stand up for Jesus! . . . [illegible]
The Harvest is Past . . . 1
Beyond! . . . 1
At Rest! . . . 1
We would see Jesus, by Josephine . . . 1
A Little While, by J. Gerrish . . . 1

LEAFLETS FOR LETTERS.
Life Insurance, Envelope Size, H. L. H. . . . 12
Home . . . [illegible]
Lost, Lost . . . 8
Peace in Christ . . . [illegible]
Worth Knowing . . . [illegible]
All things are Yours . . . [illegible]
Now! . . . [illegible]
Assurance . . . [illegible]
About God . . . [illegible]

THE foregoing Books and Pamphlets will be sent by mail, postage paid, upon the receipt of the amount of their respective prices. Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons who send $8, with the orders, shall receive $12 worth of books at the retail prices. TRACTS are sent by mail, 1200 pages, on the receipt of a dollar. When sent by express, or at the expense of the buyer, 1600 pages will be sent for one dollar. Terms cash. Persons who desire to do good can obtain Four hundred tracts, of four pages each, for $1. These may be widely distributed, and open the way for religious conversation. Persons may thus be a blessing to those around them. The poor can have any of these tracts sent to them free, by remitting stamps to pay the postage. Ministers can have specimen copies of the tracts and pamphlets sent free. All letters, orders, and remittances should be addressed to the Publisher,

H. L. HASTINGS, 43 Weybosset St., PROVIDENCE, R. I.

January, 1860.

☞ These publications can be obtained in Boston, of Miles Grant, 167 Hanover st.; New York, of G. W. Young, 138 William st.; Philadelphia, A. F. Porter, 725 Erie st., and they can be ordered of the publisher through all Booksellers.

Bibles of the British and Foreign Bible Society. [illegible] $1.50 to $2.00. Pearl, [illegible] to $1.75. Diamond, [illegible] $1. Bindings, Roan, Calf and Morocco; [illegible] the difference in prices.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

Old Familiar Strains.

I have come from the land of folly and sin,
Where each one seeks a laurel of honor to win;
All ... behind me to greet them no more
Till we meet when the times of the Gentiles are o'er;
To ... I must bid you an eternal farewell!

I have ... the ... of brethren professed,
... for not having faith like the rest,
... my person abhorred,
For loving the words of my soon coming Lord,—
Careless brethren, I must bid you an eternal farewell!

I have crossed the dark waters of blind unbelief,
Though the passage has cost me much sanctified grief;
Now I stand with apostles and prophets of old,
On a dear elevation more precious than gold:
To these trials I'll be bidding an eternal farewell!

Others ... before me, and others are nearing,
Who anxiously wait for the Savior's appearing:
How sweetly their songs of pilgrimage roll,
As they nearer approach to the heavenly goal:
... sorrows, glad I bid you an eternal farewell!

We are safe in the car of heavenly Truth,
... the counsel of age and the friendship of youth,
Rushing on to that land of pleasures so rare,
Our hearts leap to meet it—soon, soon we'll be there:
... sorrows, grief and sadness, an eternal farewell!

MARIA.

West Danville, C. E.

For the Crisis.

Light Ahead.

BRO. GRANT:—Please insert this in the Crisis, in answer to Bro. Graves' inquiry.

DEAR BRO. GRAVES:—Although a stranger, please to accept a line from the most unworthy of all the dear children. As I have been through the whole campaign of the Advent movement, I feel to sympathize with you. We are here subject to disappointment and trials; but, dear brother, our Father is at the helm, and will take care of his children; and more, there is light ahead. Bless his holy name; and as God lives, the righteous will see it.

The argument on the 2300 days is a powerful one, the best ever given; but I wish to suggest a few ideas lest you may despond. How does it read? "Unto 2300 days, and then the sanctuary shall be cleansed." Now it appears that it will take a little time to do it, especially if the sanctuary is the earth. Daniel speaks of a time of trouble; the prophets of the day of the Lord, etc. It looks to me as though the Revelation is the key to unlock the whole theory. Read Rev. 14: 6, 7, "Saying with a loud voice, fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." This is to be done after the two-horned beast is up, in the preceding chapter; which I think has a definite time, and a special work. If this be so, the seven vials must be future, for the first one is poured out on them that worship this beast which has the mark. Now if these vials are future, no wonder the angel says, "The hour of his judgment is come." This looks like Daniel's time of trouble.

One word on Daniel 2d chap. 40th verse.—"And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron." Is this iron kingdom the Roman, which is the same as the Roman Empire, which was to be divided? I think there is a connection between the ten kings in Daniel, represented by the toes, and the ten kings in Rev. 17 chapter, which I think most certainly shows the image of a kingdom, and the two-horned beast is the ruler. If the ten kings give their kingdoms to him he will have a kingdom, and it will be the same that Daniel was looking at when he was explaining the feet and toes. Two horns to the beast are the same as two feet to the image. Now these parts must all come together to form the image, in order that the image might be smitten.

Let us look for a moment at what is going on in Europe, at the man that all the world is wondering after, Louis Napoleon III. He, I think, is the eighth head, and of the seven, and will bring about the last form of the Roman government. The kings, I think, will agree to support Napoleon, and thereby make him a beast; for we think there must be a beast when the Lord comes, for his body is to be destroyed and given to the burning flames.

We will look at the two-horned beast in Rev. 13: 15.—"And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast," and caused as many as would not worship, to "be killed;" "And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." Let him that has wisdom "count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man," etc. We think this and other passages will show positively that it is one literal ruler. Paul speaks of the same power and calls it "the man of sin," and runs him down until he is destroyed by the breath of His mouth and the brightness of His coming. Daniel must be speaking of the same, in chap 11: 36, for there cannot be two at one time, and each above the other. Daniel calls him "the king," and says he shall prosper until the indignation be accomplished. And he shall have a strange God, (Spiritualism) whom his fathers knew not; and he also runs down and comes to his end, at the time that Michael stands up, "which standeth for the children of thy people."

We will now look at Rev. chap. 17.—"And there came one of the seven angels," saying, "I will show thee the judgment" of the woman "with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication." And he showed me "a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast . . . . having seven heads and ten horns." "And the angel said, . . . I will tell thee the mystery of the woman and of the beast," having "seven heads and ten horns." The angel then explains the symbols. He says they wondered when they beheld "the beast that was, and is, not, and yet is." This seems to represent the seventh head of the beast, which was to be wounded, and healed. We think the wound is healed, making an eighth head in the person of Louis Napoleon III. "The seven heads are seven mountains," literal mountains and not symbols; which mean the seven-hilled city, Rome. "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet, but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast."

"And the woman . . . . is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the (Roman) earth."

I think the 2300 days end, and the definite time of the two-horned beast begins, when the ten kings give their power to him.

EUNICE D. WARNER.

West Thompson, Conn.

For the Crisis.

Leaves from the Note-Book of a Traveler.

No. 5.

April 3d.—O how blessed it is be employed in the vineyard of the Lord! Far be it from me to pray, "Let me be excused;" I rather feel like asking, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" When I compare my limited capacity with the greatness of the work, I must confess that I feel straitened on every side, and often find myself exclaiming, "Oh that I had ability to meet this or that demand!" But I must be diligent in occupying the talents I possess. The servant who improved faithfully his two talents, received the approval of his Lord equally with the one who had occupied upon ten. I have no sympathy with the conduct of the slothful servant, who buried his talent because it was but one, instead of increasing it by activity. If I would have more, I must increase them by service. I do not believe in that sort of humility which says, "I have no talent, or if any a very poor one, and I can do no good, therefore I will do nothing." Every one has more or less talents, and they are good, and if not increased beyond their first bestowment, the sentence pronounced upon the unprofitable servant will be awarded their possessor.

Says one, "You talk and act just as though you thought your labors were necessary to the advancement of Christ's cause. Now I believe his work will go on whether we work or not." That is not my faith. God works by human instrumentalities. He says to every one who is called, "Go work in my vineyard." "The Lord hath need of thee." He wants no drones in his hive. A working christianity is the christianity of the gospel. Religion is good works. We are not only to believe, but do the truth.

The sentence pronounced on those upon the right hand of the Judge, is for what they have done, and not for what they have felt, or believed. It is for the "deeds done," the reward is given. Forever banished then be the thought from my heart, that whether I work or refrain, it will be all the same at last. "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead." The harvest is great; laborers are few. The last sands of probationary time are running out. Sinners are perishing. How then can I be idle? I have to sow in tears, it is true, but I hope to reap in joy. The rest is near. Home is almost reached. Soon I will exchange the armor, for the pure, white robe, and harp, and palm of victory. Then I will suffer no more heart-aches—no more pain. Jesus will wipe my tears away, no more to return. If I can only bring some sheaves and lay them at his feet, I shall be repaid for all my anguish here. I would not wear a starless crown!

M. D. W.

Selections.

Immortality—Eternal Life.

BY WM. GLEN MONCRIEFF.

"To them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life."—Rom. 2: 7

(Concluded.)

6th. Need we ask now what is the correct exposition of the word "incorruption?" It is that immortal existence in the future world, which Jesus has brought to light by his gospel, and which will be granted to all those who rightly seek for it here. Our present being is frail and decaying, and at the termination of our period of duration on earth, death consigns us to the grave, and that which was corruptible, wastes and dissolves in the dust. Dust we are and return to it again. Life closes for the time, and at the resurrection we shall awake either corruptible or incorruptible—deathless or to die. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Strictly speaking, no life can be designated corruptible, since the life, the vital force, though it may expire, cannot surely rot and dissipate like a carcass. But life may be in a corruptible or in an incorruptible being, and of course the constitution of the creature will determine the possible duration of the life. An animal being is constitutionally corruptible, and therefore will die; but even an incorruptible being is not necessarily immortal. He might die, if that should be the will of God, for what he makes he can as easily destroy. All that we can determine is that the incorruptible and therefore un-animal constitution is freed from subjection to all those influences which tend to reduce an organized animal being to destruction. Eternal life could only exist in beings organized as we are by a perpetual miracle counteracting the inherent tendencies to decay, and the outward forces that co-operate with and invigorate these tendencies; and the revelation in regard to the future state of the righteous shows us clearly that in their promised incorruptibility, there shall be no decaying tendencies such as those with which we are familiar, hence no perpetual miracle to prolong their being will be demanded. In some extraordinary cases the Almighty has even rendered for the time fleshly organization as enduring as if it had been immortal and incorruptible, as in the example of the three Hebrews who were cast into the fiery furnace and came forth uninjured; and it matters nothing whether we regard the miracle wrought upon them, or in the suspension of the destroying power of the flames in which they were enveloped. At last we see the righteous are to gain an incorruptible form and constitution, and this insinuation shows us how the life can be eternal, without a miracle, always however leaving them to be dependent on the Almighty-sustaining arm, but to endure by the laws of their being forever, as we by the laws of our present constitution only endure for a time, and in some cases that of the briefest duration.

"When Christ who is OUR LIFE shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." "Who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the work whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself." Such predictive announcements cast a blaze of light on the future events in the history of the victorious saints, and may well impart to the living righteous a joy and gratitude exceeding the utterance of angel's tongue. "Christ is our life," and he will infuse the quenchless vitality into his people when he summons them from the dust; and as he became like us when "the Word was made flesh," in the fullness of time we shall thus eventually become like him, now that he is glorified, and beyond the dominion of death. Now we have the animal being, and, if worthy, we enter at last in the higher condition of creature existence, that is, the spiritual, the climax of dependent being and duration. 1 Cor. 15: 35–46. Apparently such is the order of progression in the universe; and it is infinite mercy in God that invites our race to ascend from the lower to the higher through the new and mediatorial arrangement established in Jesus, after, in Eden, the original plan prescribed by Heaven was voluntarily despised and frustrated by the representative of the human family. Gen. 2: 4, 14, 22: John 6: 50; Rom. 6: 23.

This incorruptibility of existence is not merely to be sought for, but also the glories and honors to be assigned to the heirs of the everlasting kingdom. What these are can at present be but dimly understood, for they are subjects of revelation rather general and cloudy—though we admit the clouds are excessively brilliant—than of specific, clearly intelligible announcement. A few passages may be adduced to illustrate the point, but on them we do not purpose to enlarge: "Great is your reward in heaven—Thou shalt be ruler over ten cities—To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne—They shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy," etc. etc.

To those, then, who, in the appointed way, seek for glory, honor, and incorruption, God will render "eternal life," a phrase which here expresses immortality and all its associated grandeur and blessedness. Radically, no doubt, it simply expresses duration of conscious being, but as they who are to be continued in existence perpetually are the holy ones, and as they are to dwell in the midst of all that can delight the intellect and ravish the heart, we can conclude nothing but that the idea of blessedness and glory are embraced in the words "eternal life." Other passages speak clearly what we regard as thus presented impliedly, and delightful are the announcements to which we refer. They are such as these: "Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face—"Then shall I know even as I am known"—"In thy presence there is fullness of joy, at thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore," etc. etc. What a scene opens up to the eye of Faith as she looks forward to the appearing of the Redeemer! What splendid visions the new heavens and the new earth, to be tenanted by the blessed! What a contrast to the lot of the condemned, and the blackness of darkness with its unbroken reign!

II. We now proceed to consider THE MEANS whereby the glorious immortality is to be obtained—"By patient continuance in well doing."

"Well doing" includes a right state of heart and conduct towards God and men; having the mind in us that was in Jesus Christ; denying ourselves unto ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously and godly. It may be summed up thus: it is a lowly and continuous imitation of the Son of God. Philosophically speaking, it is to act through life under the guidance of a heaven-enlightened intellect; and impelled in our conduct by veneration, benevolence and justice, keeping our appetites and inferior sentiments under the dominion of these moral attributes of our nature. In this manner the holy religion teaches us to behave ourselves before our Father in heaven, and in our transactions with our brethren of mankind. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself." But christianity not merely inculcates this course of procedure as the only mode of life befitting us as responsible agents, and as the only one that can receive the Divine approbation, but it furnishes most powerful motives and supports to such conduct, and it is chiefly to these, that we would solicit the reader's attention. It is here that much of the popular christian teaching fails, and on no subject could a lack of information be more disparaging and deleterious. Men require not so much at this day to have the will of God explained to them, as to be enlightened concerning the fountains of divine strength, and stimulus provided for their gracious use. It is moral health and vital force that is needed, and the momentous inquiry arises, how are they to be obtained?

And here suffer us to make one remark of a general nature, that as the cure required for men is a moral one, only moral remedies are to be sought for. All physical influences to renew men are, in our judgment, nowhere promised in the Bible, nowhere in that volume ever said to be needed, or at any time employed, for the moral regeneration of the sons of men. Indeed, if they were necessary, it seems to us impossible for any human being in his senses to blame himself or his neighbor for being without them, and all that they are supposed to be capable of effecting. What influence but a moral one can act on mind? How can a moral agent be enlightened and swayed and bettered, except by motive, argument and persuasion, addressed to his understanding, conscience and heart. "My Spirit," said the Lord to Noah, the antediluvian preacher of righteousness, "My Spirit shall not always strive with men." Was this a physical exercise of omnipotence on the minds of the opposing sinners of that time? What! Almighty strength needing to strive with absolute weakness! Is not the very idea of Omnipotence having to strive to accomplish any physical result, a contradiction in terms? But Jehovah's Spirit was striving with these sinners, and the very language in the verse we are remarking upon, demonstrates that the result was not to be gained by an operation of physical power at all. He strove with them by the arguments of love and warning, and the end he had before him was to incline them from the road of sin and destruction. And still is He striving with human sinners, and especially with those who are under the sound of His gospel, which he has pronounced to be "the POWER OF GOD UNTO SALVATION TO EVERY ONE THAT BELIEVETH." It is moral power that is provided and employed, and it is vain to dream of conversion and sanctification from any other agency whatever; this doctrine alone harmonizes with sound views of what a moral agent is, and alone leaves each of us to feel himself culpable should he continue under the dominion of sin.

And now let us contemplate some of the quickening and sustaining moral forces that God employs with us, having a natural and delightful tendency to incline us to persevere in well doing, in hope of the kingdom that is incorruptible and superlatively glorious.

1. The Bible reveals the love of God for every sinner. Continually ought the Divine love to be exhibited in its two-fold aspects—the love of compassion and the love of approbation; and unless this is done, a most withering blast will be swept across the hearts of awakened sinners. God pities, compassionates every guilty child of man; and he loves the righteous because to a certain extent they reflect his moral likeness. There is immense compassion in the heart of God for each human being viewed as a sinner; and we have it gloriously manifest in John 3: 16.—"God so loved the world, (the sinful world of mankind) that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Here, then, is love in God for us prior to any love in us for him; and every man is urged to believe this, or to admit, as a truth, with all its cheering and consoling influence, into his heart. We have often met troubled inquirers who were on the brink of despair because they were ignorant of the Divine love for their souls, and imagined that they had to endeavor to kindle compassion toward them in the bosom of the Almighty, and were striving in various ways, such as by tears and prayers and penitence, to accomplish this end. No wonder, then, they were miserable, for the text we have just quoted from John, convinces us that the labor was in vain, and in fact, though they were unconscious of it, exceedingly dishonoring to Him that sitteth upon the throne. "We love him because he first loved us," 1 John 4: 19, is the language of New Testament saints, and of all scripturally enlightened piety. It is the fire in the hearth that warms us, not we that kindle and warm the burning coals. We do not require to awaken for ourselves love in the bosom of our Heavenly Parent; indeed, how could we effect any such result? It is, however, our unspeakable privilege to behold the compassion for each of us already in existence there, where it has lived from the first of days. O! most wonderful and transporting consideration! My sinful brother! behold thy God, and learn that he loves thee now, just as thou art, with an infinite and most enduring pity. This vast love induced him to send his "only begotten Son," to bear each of our sins "in his own body on the tree," that through him we might live forever. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." 1 John 4: 10. Think of the gift—how precious! how needful! how free! and no more doubt Heaven's unborn pity for you, though the vilest of the vile and the guiltiest of the guilty!

2d. The Bible reveals the love of Jesus for every sinner. "He tasted death for every man," and being a man I say, "He loved me and gave himself for me," and we entreat every sinful brother man immediately to adopt the same language with reference to himself. Not many days ago, we were conversing with a woman who had for long years been unhappy because she did not know if Jesus had any love for her, and very wretched she had often been. What was more astounding to us was the fact that she believed he had died for her, and yet she had never risen, and had never been taught by her minister—to whom she had frequently opened up her case—to ascend to the simple and self-evident conclusion that Jesus must have loved her, else he never would have become a sacrifice on Calvary for her sins, that she might be saved. By a little conversation we enabled her to discover that by the very fact of his dying for her, she was authorized to take up the exclamation of Paul and to say, "The Son of God loved me and gave himself for me." The view she obtained of a Savior who had loved her, and who was loving her still, dissipated her terrors, and, like the Ethiopian eunuch, she went from us on her way rejoicing. How soothing and morally powerful are the most scriptural words of Luther—"The Son of God loved me and gave himself for me. It was not I then that first loved the Son of God, and delivered myself for him. Who is that 'me?' Even I, wretched and damnable sinner, so dearly beloved by the Son of God, who gave himself for me." For Christ, when he cometh, is nothing else but joy and sweetness to a trembling and broken heart, as here Paul witnesseth, who setteth him out with this most sweet and comfortable title when he saith, "which loved me and gave himself for me." Read therefore with great vehemency these words "me" and "for me," and so inwardly practise with thyself, that thou with a sure faith mayest conceive and point this "me" in thy heart, and apply it unto thyself, not doubting but that thou art of the number of those to whom this "me" belongeth.—On Galatians 2: 20.

3. The Bible reveals that every sinner may now have forgiveness of all his sins, and know that they are remitted. Jesus, "who was wounded for our transgressions," has been exalted to give repentance unto Israel and the remission of sins. Jehovah now waits to be gracious to all who approach him in the name of his Son Jesus. Consider for a moment this text, "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John 1: 9. What could be more encouraging and blissful to one who knows that he has sinned against his Maker? In the name of Jesus, seek for mercy and it shall be granted. "We have redemption through his blood, and the forgiveness of sins." And how, some one may inquire, am I to know when God has pardoned my offences? We answer, fulfill the condition and take God at his word. "Ask and ye shall receive;" supplicate pardon in the name of Jesus, and when you have done so, believe that your request is bestowed. In no other way have you any warrant to expect the assurance of mercy, or to be sure that you have found it; and is not the promise of God enough—a solid and immovable basis for you to stand upon and to rejoice? Some trust in dreams and impressions, and look for voices and signs of diverse order, but these are cheating phantoms, and can only mock the suppliant and dishonor your God. "Ask and ye shall receive," is an intimation plain to every understanding, and the reader is invited to prove the faithfulness of his God, and to honor him by resting in his all-sufficient, written testimony. Having found mercy through the blood of the Lamb, the pardoned suppliant rejoices—his very being dilates with happiness—"Blessed is the man whose iniquity is forgiven, whose sin is covered." Possessing this mercy, the woman, who had been a sinner of no ordinary cast, "loved much," and in lowly gratitude washed the Savior's feet with her tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head; having the same precious boon, you will feel an impulse to honor the Redeemer, and to run in the way of his precepts. The Lord "taketh pleasure in them that hope in his mercy."

4th. The Bible reveals God as pledged to provide for the temporal necessities of his people. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. 6: 33. "He will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly." Ps. 84: 4. In serving God in a world like this, and in keeping a conscience void of offence, a man may often have occasion to risk his temporal resources, yea, as many have done, to resign them without any earthly prospect of providing for his necessities, and for those of others dependent on him. We have known individuals relinquish a business which their conscience, enlightened by Scripture, condemned; we have known others testify for truth, and suffer in consequence reduction from competence to what is commonly called poverty, and yet they were sustained in their trials, and provided for by a promise-keeping God. Thus he animated them to a "patient continuance in well doing," when temptations were strong to give up their integrity and loyalty to truth and heaven. They were not put to shame, and, confiding in God, what could disappoint their Bible-warranted expectations? He is faithful that promised:—"heaven and earth may fail, but Jehovah's word cannot." Backed by the divine promises, who may not be strong? Who may not set his face like a flint? Who may not fight the good fight and lay hold of eternal life?

5th. The hope of incorruptible being and celestial glory in the New Jerusalem, is a powerful motive to continue in well doing. In a little while the wicked shall not be—they will be consigned to the depths of perpetual oblivion; but the redeemed ones shall live and reign through eternal ages, beholding the unveiled wonders of Deity, and drinking at the fountains of perennial happiness. A little while and these trials will be over; a little while and the crown will be gained, the shadows will be fled, and then purest light and purest love!

By these and kindred moral and spiritual influences, the God of infinite love is now inclining men to enter on the path of holiness, and to hurry along it, strangers and pilgrims in the earth. Let us yield ourselves to them fully and at once, and we shall find a strength and a happiness with which the Christless are necessarily unacquainted. As we write, the warm sun of spring is shining sweetly on the face of creation; we hear the singing of birds, and can see the opening buds and flowers. The winter is over and gone, and the kindly influences of the stars of day, coming up from dispensing his bounty in more southern climes, are augmenting their energy, and the beauties and blessings of nature are evolving and preparing already on every hand. Fair and apt emblem of his moral condition, on whom the God of boundless, exhaustless love radiates his warming, quickening, beautifying rays through the great Mediator and Revealer. Come, then, within the full stream of the love-influence, and you will have a blessed consciousness of strength and fire imparted to your moral nature. This hiding of God, which is so common in our day, is blasting the world, and paralyzing the church, and ought to be deplored in tears and sighs and groans. The truth about the Divine compassion for men, and the destiny he wishes them to climb to through faith, suffering and obedience, ought to be proclaimed with a voice of thunder, and yet in tones winning as an angel's, till the slumbering, deluded tribes of man wake from their insensibility to the perception in Him of all that can ravish and invigorate and fortify a helpless creature. Love is Power and God is Love.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Bread made of Unbolted Meal most Wholesome.

Whether our bread is of domestic manufacture or made by the public baker, that which is made of superfine flour is always far less wholesome, in any and every situation of life, than that which is made of wheaten meal which contains all the natural properties of the grain. It is true that when much flesh is eaten with our bread, or when bread constitutes but a very small and unimportant portion of our food, the injurious effects of superfine flour bread are not always so immediately and distinctly perceived as in other cases. Nevertheless it is a general and invariable law of our nature, that all concentrated forms of food are unfriendly to the physiological or vital interests of our bodies. We have seen that a very large proportion of all the diseases and ailments in civic life are originated by causes which are introduced into the alimentary canal as articles of diet; and disturbance and derangement of function, obstructions, debility, and irritations, are amongst the most important elements of those diseases. And it is probably speaking within bounds to say that nine-tenths of the adults, and nearly as large a proportion of youth in civic life, are more or less afflicted with obstructions and disturbances in the stomach and bowels and other organs of the abdomen, the symptoms of which are either habitual costiveness or diarrhœa, or an alternation of both, or frequent and severe attacks of what are called bilious colics, etc.; and in children and youth, worms, fits, convulsions, etc. And I cannot but feel confident that the use of superfine flour bread is among the important causes of these and numerous other difficulties. I have indeed been surprised to observe that in the hundreds of cases of chronic diseases of every form and name, which have come to my knowledge within the last six or eight years, costiveness of the bowels has in almost every instance been among the first and most important symptoms. And I have never known this difficulty, even after an obstinate continuance of five, ten, twenty, or thirty years, fail to disappear in a short time after the coarse wheaten bread of a proper character has been substituted for that made of superfine flour.

Some physicians and other individuals, without properly examining the subject, have raised several objections against the coarse wheaten bread. It is said, in the first place, that bran is wholly indigestible, and therefore should never be taken into the human stomach. This objection betrays so much ignorance of the final causes and constitutional laws, clearly indicated by the anatomical structure and physiological economy of the alimentary organs, that it scarcely deserves the slightest notice. If the digestive organs of man were designed to receive nothing but digestible and nutrient substances, they would have been constructed and arranged very differently from what they are. As we have fully seen everything which nature provides for our sustenance consists of certain proportions of nutritious and innutritious matter; and a due proportion of innutritious matter in our food is as essential to the health and functional integrity of our alimentary organs, as a due proportion of nutritious matter is to the sustenance of the body.

Another objection is, that although bran may serve, like other mechanical irritants and excitants, for a while to relieve constipation, yet it soon wears out the excitability of the organs, and leaves them more inactive than before. Here, again, a false statement is urged by inexcusable ignorance; for it is not true that the bran acts in the manner supposed in this objection, nor are the effects here asserted ever produced by it.

A third objection is, that though the coarse wheaten bread may do very well for those who are troubled with constipation, by mechanically irritating and exciting the stomach and bowels, yet for that very reason it is wholly unfit and improper for those who are afflicted with chronic diarrhœa. Here is still another objection founded in ignorance of the true physiological and pathological principles which it involves. The truth is, that the coarse wheaten bread, under a proper general regimen, is as excellent and sure a remedy for chronic diarrhœa as for chronic constipation. I have seen cases of chronic diarrhœa of the most obstinate character, and which had baffled the highest medical skill and every mode of treatment for more than twenty years, yielding entirely under a proper general regimen in which this bread was the almost exclusive article of food, and not a particle of medicine was used. And, excepting in cases where the complaint was symptomatic of some incurable organic disease, I have never known such a mode of treatment to fail of wholly relieving diarrhœa, whether recent or chronic, although a very great number of cases have come under my notice. The mucilage of wheat bran is probably one of the most soothing substances in the vegetable kingdom, that can be applied to the mucous membrane of the stomach and bowels.

Coarse wheaten bread, then, by its adaptation to the anatomical structure and to the physiological properties and functional powers of our organs, serves to prevent and to remove the disorders and diseases of our bodies only by preventing and removing irritation and morbid action and condition, and thereby affording the system an opportunity of recovering its healthy and vigorous action and condition. And the thousands of individuals in our own country of every age, of both sexes, of all situations, conditions, and circumstances, who within the last eight years have been benefited by using the coarse wheaten bread instead of that made of superfine flour, are living witnesses of the virtues of that bread.

But the testimony in favor of coarse wheaten bread as an important article in the food of man, is by no means limited to our country nor to modern times. In all probability, as we have already seen, the first generations of our species who became acquainted with the art of making bread, continued for many centuries to employ all the substance of the grain, which they coarsely crushed in their rude mortars or mills. And ever since mankind began by artificial means to separate the bran from the flour, and to make bread from the latter, the more close and discerning observers among physicians and philanthropists have perceived and asserted that bread made of fine flour is decidedly less wholesome than that made of the unbolted wheat meal. Hippocrates, styled the father of medicine, who flourished more than two thousand years ago, and who depended far more on a correct diet and general regimen both for the prevention and removal of disease than he did on medicine, particularly commended the unbolted wheat-meal bread, 'for its salutary effects upon the bowels.'

It was a fact well understood by the ancients, that this bread was much more conducive to the general health and vigor of their bodies, and every way better adapted to nourish and sustain them, than that made of the fine flour. And accordingly their wrestlers and others who were trained for great bodily power, 'ate only the coarse wheaten bread, to preserve them in their strength of limbs.' The Spartans were famous for this kind of bread; and we learn from Pliny that the Romans, as a nation, at that period of their history when they were the most remarkable for bodily vigor and personal prowess and achievement, knew no other bread for three hundred years. The warlike and powerful nations which overran the Roman Empire, and finally spread over the greater part of Europe, used no other kind of bread than that which was made of the whole substance of the grain; and from the fall of the Roman Empire to the present day, a large proportion of the inhabitants of all Europe and the greater part of Asia, have rarely used any other kind of bread.—Dr. Graham.

Why Children Die.

The reason why children die, is because they are not taken care of. From the day of birth they are stuffed with food, and choked with physic, sloshed with water, suffocated in hot rooms, steamed in bed-clothes. So much for indoor. When permitted to breathe a breath of pure air once a week in summer, and once or twice during the colder months, only the nose is permitted to peer into daylight. A little later they are sent out with no clothing at all on the parts of the body which most need protection. Bare legs, bare arms, bare necks, girted middle, with an inverted umbrella to collect the air and chill the other parts of the body. A stout, strong man goes out in a cold day with gloves and overcoat, woolen stockings, and thick, double-soled boots, with cork between and rubbers over. The same day a child of three years old, an infant flesh, and blood, and bone, and constitution, goes out with shoes as thin as paper, cotton socks, legs uncovered to the knees, neck bare; an exposure which would disable the nurse, kill the mother outright, and make the father an invalid for weeks. And why? To harden them to a mode of dress, which they are never expected to practice. To accustom them to exposure which, a dozen years later, would be considered downright foolery. To rear children thus for the slaughter-pen, and then leave it to the Lord, is too bad. We don't think the Almighty had any hand in it. And to draw comfort from the presumption that he has an agency in the death of the child, is a profanation.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year............$1.00
For a single copy 6 months............1.00
For a single copy 3 months............50
Five copies to one address for 6 months...4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months...8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months...15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months...22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and address ... Grant, Boston, Mass.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; ... will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 236. BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1860. VOL. XI. NO. 3.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

FOR TERMS, SEE FOURTH PAGE.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

That Beautiful Land.

Altered from the "City of Light," by S. D. BERRY.

I.

A beautiful land by faith I see:
A land of rest—from sorrow free,
Where the saints in glory, free from strife,
Have at last obtained ETERNAL LIFE.

CHORUS.
Will you go to that beautiful land?

II.

That country is called the kingdom of God;
'Tis the "Eden of Love" on the earth restored;
And Jesus the King, who came from above,
By faith I see in that world of love.
CHO.—Will you go, etc.

III.

By faith I see there a city of light—
A city that knows no shades of night:
For the GLORY of God, e'er shining o'er,
Illumes the land from shore to shore.
CHO.—Will you go, etc.

IV.

By faith I see the throne of thrones,
And the city walls of precious stones,—
The living fount—the streets of gold,—
The gates of pearl I too behold.
CHO.—Will you go, etc.

V.

The river of LIFE I there do see,
And the golden fruit on LIFE'S fair TREE,—
While saints redeemed in glory stand,
And shout for joy in that heavenly land.
CHO.—Will you go, etc.

VI.

The ransomed throng, arrayed in white,
In rapture range the fields of light;
And while Redemption's song they sing,
The heaven's broad arches loudly ring.
CHO.—Will you go, etc.

VII.

By faith I'm there—in that heavenly home,
With the glorified saints forever to roam.
O, the home of the ransomed! bright and fair,
The Kingdom forever! I long to be there!
CHO.—I will go to that beautiful land,
I will go to that beautiful land,
I will go to that beautiful land.

Portsmouth, N. H.

For the Crisis.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 1.

TEXT.—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

This passage, perhaps very much more than any other, is supposed to teach the doctrine of conscious life in hades between the event of death and the resurrection of the dead at the coming of the Lord. Let us, dear reader, carefully examine this passage, which, in its development, will invite our attention to its preceding and succeeding context. Our first inquiry will be the following:

I. Is this a literal statement of facts, and therefore a literal history of one man, representing a class of men; or is it a parabolical representation? Believing it to be parabolical, we will present some reasons for such a faith.

1. It was "believed and taught" to be a parable "by such men as Lightfoot, Whitby, Wakefield, Theophylact, James Bate, Dr. Gill, and many others. Says Lightfoot: 'Whosoever believes this not to be a parable, but a true story, let him believe also those little friars, whose trade it is to show the monuments at Jerusalem to pilgrims, and point exactly to the place where the rich glutton stood. Most accurate keepers of antiquity indeed! who, after so many hundreds of years, such overthrows of Jerusalem, such devastations and changes, can rake out of the rubbish the place of so private a house, and such a one too that never had any being, but merely in parable. And that it was a parable, not only the consent of all expositors may assure us, but the thing itself speaks it. The main scope and design of it seems this, to hint the destruction of the unbelieving Jews.'

Whitby says: 'This is only a parable, and not a real history.'

Says Wakefield, an able translator: 'To them who regard the narration as a reality, it must stand as an unanswerable argument for the purgatory of the papists.'

Theophylact, an ancient christian writer, [illegible] Jewish people.' Although he applied it also to the concerns of the next life, he says: 'Lazarus was the Gentile people, poor in divine grace and wisdom, and lying before the gates; for it was not permitted to the Gentiles to enter the house itself, because they were considered a pollution.'

Dr. Gill makes a two-fold application of it, and says the death of the 'rich man' may be understood to represent 'the political and ecclesiastical death of the Jewish people.'

James Bate, M. A., Rector of Deptford, says; 'We will suppose, then, the rich man who fared so sumptuously, to be the Jew, so amply enriched with the heavenly treasure of divine revelation. The poor beggar who lay at his gate, in so miserable a plight, was the poor Gentile, now reduced to the last degree of want in regard to religious knowledge. . . The beggar dies, and is carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; that is, he is engrafted into the church of God. And the rich man also dies and is buried. He dies what we call a political death. His dispensation ceases. He is rejected from being any longer the peculiar Son of God. The people whom he parabolically represents are miserably destroyed by the Romans, and the wretched remains of them, driven into exile over the face of the earth, were vagabonds, with a kind of mark set upon them, like Cain, their prototype, for a like crime; and which mark may perhaps be their adherence to the law.'

There can be no doubt that the account of the 'rich man and Lazarus' is a parable. A manuscript of the seventh century commences it as follows: 'And he spake also another parable.' One of the tenth century reads: 'The Lord spake this parable.'" Observe, also, an extract from "Hudson on the Rich Man and Lazarus":

"A similar account is found in the Talmud, which was a body of Jewish tradition. Lightfoot renders it as follows: 'There was a good man and a wicked man that died. As for the good man, he had no funeral rites solemnized; but the wicked man had. Afterward there was one saw in his dream the good man walking in gardens, and led by pleasant springs; but the wicked man, with his tongue trickling, drop by drop, at the bank of a river, endeavoring to touch the water, but he could not.'—Jerusalem Talmud, in Chagigah, fol. 77, col. 4. With this compare the following, taken by Hammond from the Babylonian Talmud (ad cod. Berachoth): 'A king made a great feast, and invited all the strangers; and there came one poor man, and stood at his gates, and said unto them, Give me one bit or portion; and they considered him not. And he said, My lord, the king, of all the great feast thou hast made, is it hard for thee to give me one bit or fragment, among them?' And the title of this passage there, is, 'A parable of a king of flesh and blood.' Whitby and others have referred to the last passage.

These extracts are important as showing that there were different versions of the account, and thus incidentally confirming its parabolic character. They also show that it did not originate with Christ,—the Nazarene whom the Jews devoted to the cross; for then they would never have received and incorporated it among their traditions. I infer that Christ found the parable already existing, and made his own use of it."

2. In the sermon of James Saurin, pastor of the French church at Hague, on the text, Lk. 16: 27–31, a part of this parable, he says, that "some critics affirm that some ancient manuscripts introduce the passage with these words, JESUS SPAKE A PARABLE, SAYING, 'There was a certain rich man,' and so on:" and at the bottom of the page (Sau. Ser. vol. 1, p. 202) it reads, "See Dr. Mill's Greek Testament." Mr. Saurin was a thorough scholar, and seems to have died previous to May 20th, 1731, as may be seen by reference to a note on page 11, vol. 1. He began his ministry in Hague, A. D. 1705.

Since writing the above, I discover that he died on December 30th, 1730. The ancient manuscripts, to which he refers, must have been some manuscripts immediately connected with the history of the primitive church, and at the very latest the very first centuries. Mr. Saurin gives as his reason why it "cannot be taken in a strict literal sense,—first, that the rich man in hell could not converse with Abraham in heaven; secondly, or that it could be said that he discovered any tenderness for his brethren; thirdly, that there could be no communication between them; fourthly, the great gulph prevented it, (for he believed men were punished at death); fifthly, that death separates us from all the living, all objects of our passions, effaces them from our memories, and detaches them from our hearts." In another portion of this same sermon, entitled "THE SUFFICIENCY OF REVELATION," Mr. Saurin says: "A man of an ordinary capacity may easily perceive, in reading the Holy Scriptures, that the author of that book neither intended to teach us the worship of images, nor the invocation of saints, nor transubstantiation, nor purgatory." It is then certain that [illegible] for, if it is, purgatory is clearly taught, and this position Wakefield takes as above quoted.

3. If the record is to be understood literally, as interpreted, it then exhibits nothing else than a confused mass of inconsistencies and absurdities. Please read page sixth of tract on "Rich Man and Lazarus," by Eld. M. Grant, from which we have already made a selection, beginning at verse 22:

"'And it came to pass that the [body of the] beggar died, and [his soul] was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; the [body of the] rich man also died, and [his soul] was buried. And in hell, (hades, the grave,) he lifted up his eyes [of his soul] being in torments, and seeth [the soul of] Abraham afar off, and [the soul of] Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, father Abraham, [let thy soul] have mercy on me, and send [the soul of] Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his [soul's] finger in [literal] water, and cool my tongue' [of my soul.] The foregoing parable is in harmony with the theory that only the body died; but we think all can see the absurdity of such an exposition. Even if we should adopt this paraphrase as truth, it completely overthrows the idea that man exists in a disembodied state between death and the resurrection; for he is represented as having eyes, fingers and tongue, and these organs do not exist and act independently of the rest of man's physical organism; consequently, we have the whole material man existing and acting between death and the resurrection; then what will he do with this body when he is raised from the dead at the coming of the Lord?"

Who could possibly read this portion of Scripture, and believe it to express literal facts? Certainly such a manifest absurdity would very unfavorably reflect upon the intelligence of its author, and if found in any other book, would be considered a satisfactory reason for throwing the production aside, as unworthy of further notice. It cannot be a literal relation of literal facts and literal circumstances.

4. Because the account is not now called a parable, it is NO proof of its not being one, for Jesus spake sometimes in parables without calling what he said "a parable." See Matt. 13: 44–50, 53. Is it said that the words "like unto" indicate it? Then observe Matt. 15: 10–15, where they are not employed; and yet Peter called it "this parable." See Jesus' explanation, verses 17–20. Note also Matt. 20: 1–16; Lk. 12: 39–41. See Lk. 15: 8–32; and by the same logic with which any one would attempt to prove that the portion of Scripture under consideration is not a parable, we could prove that these are not; for in the beginning of this chapter, instead of saying, "And he spake these parables unto them," etc., he said; "And he spake this parable," which would confine it to only one instead of many, and that the very first one, for the tense is not applied to the others; the same of Lk. 16: 1–18. And indeed Jesus said in Matt. 13: 34, 35, when speaking to the same classes, as in Lk. 16,—"All these things spake Jesus unto them in parables; and without a parable spake he not unto them, . . . that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet," etc. Compare Mark 4: 33, 34, where Mark adds, "And when they were alone, he expounded all things to his disciples," that they might teach others; and also, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." Indeed, the beginning of the parable of the householder, which reads, "Hear another parable," etc., proves that a parable had preceded it. And where? Observe Matt. 21: 28–32; and this is to the point, for it begins just like the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. Matt. 21: 28.—"A certain man had two sons," etc. Lk. 16: 19.—"There was a certain rich man," etc. See Lk. 15: 11–32. Ergo, both are parables.

5. We believe it to be a parable because it is found in connection with a series of parables, all of which are exactly adapted to meet the objection urged against Jesus by the Pharisees and Scribes. See Lk. 15: 1, 2. The charge that the Pharisees and Scribes preferred against Jesus was, that "This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." To exhibit the propriety of his conduct, and clearly enforce the design of his mission, he took advantage of their suggestion. "And he spake unto them this parable." First, Lk. 15: 4–7. Second, Lk. 15: 7–10. Third, Lk. 15: 11–32. Fourth, Lk. 16: 1–8, 14. This last is to his disciples, but objected to by the Pharisees as in the quotation. Ver. 14. In the 15th verse he resumes his conversation with the Pharisees, and on the same subject, and in conclusion speaks to them the parable of "the rich man and Lazarus; not only still illustrative of the propriety of his conduct and design of his mission, but adding their relation to the mission which he came to prosecute. Then in Lk. 17: 1, 2, evidently referring to their offence, he instructs his disciples respecting the certainty of offences, and the destiny of those through whom they come.

6. [illegible] parable is, because to interpret it as a literal HISTORICAL account, appropriates the term "MAN," which in the Bible is employed to denote the physical organism, to a supposed conscious life spirit entity, without a single precedent for doing so, in a single Scripture text. That this instance cannot establish such a precedent is evident, from the fact that this man is described by his apparel and fare. See verse 19. He is a rich man. He is a man clothed in purple and fine linen, and his daily fare is sumptuous, a description not exactly applicable to a supposed conscious spirit entity, but which is perfectly appropriate in parabolical representation. A conscious life spirit entity in or of man, is not to be assumed merely, but to be proved.

7. To interpret our text, and therefore the record of which it forms a part, literally, destroys the syntax of it, and therefore cannot be true. "A pronoun is a word used instead of a noun, and has a double relation." Example: John, he is. Here "he" has a relation to John, and to what is affirmed of him. Let us apply this to our text: "The rich man also died, and was buried, and in hell HE lifted up HIS eyes, being in torments," etc. This is interpreted as follows: "The rich man also died"—physical organism. "The rich man was buried"—physical organism. "And in hell HE," the conscious life spirit entity, "lifted up HIS eyes, being in torments," etc. Now where in this record is the noun which designates this conscious life spirit entity, and instead of which this pronoun "HE" is used. It is not "man," for "the rich MAN ALSO DIED." With the common interpretation, the pronoun HE has only a single relation; i. e., to the participle "lifted," and has nothing else to which to sustain a relation. That pronoun "HE" must be rather lonesome, employed instead of nothing. A very independent pronoun "HE" indeed. Well, reader, do find a noun for it. I think that "he" must be used instead of the word "man."

For the Crisis.

"Common Interest System."

To the brethren scattered abroad, who are looking for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of our great God and Savior, Jesus Christ:

I have with regret felt myself compelled to write a few hints in advance of a work I have before me, deeply interesting and consoling to the class of believers above named. And in doing so, I do not offer them in a dictatorial and uncharitable spirit, as a refutation of anything heretofore written, but in a spirit of meekness and forbearance, yet in defence of a principle which I conceive to have been coeval with the christian church, and in its purest state sanctioned and defended from imposture by the spirit and power of the God of Truth, who is the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever. I do not say that the common interest system (as it is termed) was always necessary and practicable from the earliest stage of the christian church, down through its long, dreary dispersion and suffering to the present time, but I do contend that the spirit of that system of brotherhood was not only advocated but commanded by the Savior himself, and preached by every apostle that has written in his name. The broadest sense alluded to above was the selling out of lands and tenements and giving the whole proceeds, without reservation, into the hands of the apostles to be distributed at their discretion, the head of which was Peter, who was especially delegated by Christ to fill that position, and show to the Jewish nation the power and spirit of a new dispensation plainly predicted by their own prophets, and now presented to their bewildered gaze a perfect church, without spot or wrinkle, held together, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but by the bond of faith, love and fraternity; despising the riches and honors of a world-corrupted church, and providing for the wants of the flesh, a secondary consideration to things pertaining to eternal life and furtherance of the cause that lay nearest their heart; and being imbued deeply with the Holy Spirit, selfishness, pride of life and love of the world, vanished like a fitful dream, and they were filled with an unbounded love to God and man. And I would here remark, that like cause is sure to produce like effect; and wherever there is a love of money, there is a love of the world, pride of life or selfishness attending it, which unfits the possessor for anything higher than animal life, and a consequent lack of that Spirit which raised up Christ from the dead, and which quickens to immortal life those only in whom it dwells.

It seems, then, that after that unprecedented display of the Spirit of God, the first impulse of the church was a unanimous sacrifice of self and worldly interest, [illegible] Spirit of God in the person of Peter was a swift witness against worldly policy. "And of the rest durst no man join himself to them."—Acts 5: 13. Who are the "rest" here spoken of? Not honest believers, for they were the more added; it, as a natural consequence, strengthened and confirmed them the more in their faith; who then is here named? I answer, a set of lookers on who longed for the peace of mind they saw in the bright faces of those who had given up all for Jesus; but a little worldly wealth which God had given them, they had not faith enough to part with and trust the future to Him who gave it; and seeing that deception was death, no marvel that they stood aloof, while honest believers, who possessed a little of this world's goods, and willingly drank in that spirit of love, did not stop to think or consider whether the new arrangement might not fall through and they be reduced to the level of other poor members of like precious faith. No, I doubt not they were glad they had wherewith to give, knowing that promise, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and had confidence in the providence of God, who feeds the birds of the air and clothes the flowers of the field.

To enumerate and discuss all the texts bearing on the subject of the church's mutual interest would make this article much more lengthy than I designed it to be; but a few of the many are enough to establish a principle, which is the very life of christianity; we will notice first, Luke 3: 10: "And the people asked him saying, what shall we do then? He answereth and saith unto them, he that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none, and he that hath meat, let him do likewise." Here is the doctrine of the forerunner of Christ. Turn now to Luke 13: 32, and see what the Master himself says on the subject. Speaking in direct reference to his coming he says, "Fear not, little flock: for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Sell that you have; and give alms" etc. And after warning them to be on their watch in regard to his coming, and in answer to the question of Peter, "Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us or even to all?" he says, "Who, then, is that faithful and wise steward, whom his Lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season?" Paul enforces the same law of love in Acts 20: 35, "They that are able should labor to support the weak." James also seemed to anticipate a system of unity in the last days, and warns the brotherhood, "Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold, the Judge standeth before the door." And also says, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord," etc. Turn now to 1 Peter 4: 9, 10. He says, "Use hospitality one to another without grudging. As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God."

In conclusion, brethren, let us have faith enough to believe that the church militant of Christ will end as it began—a unit. A common interest, in the strictest sense of love and purity, she will have a locality, and around her will gather the good, the tried, the pure, the true, the meek and lowly followers of the Lamb, the hundred and forty and four thousand redeemed from among men, undefiled with the harlots of Babel, the first fruits of those which pass not over Jordan, and gathering together the more as they see the day approaching of their Lord's return. A loud, united cry of "Come, Lord Jesus"! shall arise from this sanctified host; and when that glad hour arrives, the Savior, quickly laying aside his priestly robes and decked in the regal splendors of a king, shall hasten to his affianced, mystic bride of the house of Joseph (whose prophetic inheritance is the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills,) and unite again the kingdom of Israel and Judah, which now shall reach from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, and shall reign until the arch destroyer is destroyed, and a new earth changes the scene, the metropolis of which is the heavenly Jerusalem, of which the living God is the light thereof.

Ere Jesus comes the bride will have made herself ready, and stand out to an astonished world "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." Sectarianism* will have sunk beneath the vengeance of an insulted God, and his church shall show her character in bold relief; for then will be but Christ and Anti-Christ. Then let our watchword be,—Faith, Love, and Fraternity,—and show to the enemy an undivided front; and though they may not believe, yet their hearts will fail them, as did the Canaanites before the advancing hosts of Israel. Your brother in patient waiting for the kingdom.

P. E. ARMSTRONG.

Celesta, Sullivan Co., Pa.

*Lest I should be thought severe and uncharitable, I have thought necessary to make some explanation in reference to the term sectarianism. I do not wish to be understood to denounce to the wrath to come, all adherents to each particular sect. Far be it, for I presume there can be found the meek and humble christian in every sect, who weeps over the torn and distracted state of the church, and prays for unity of faith and love. But I do protest against the system of written creeds [illegible]

For the Crisis.

The Nature and Origin of Jesus.

BY WM. HOBBS.

JESUS THE MEDIATOR.—No 9.

In the Epistle of Paul to Timothy (chap. 2: 5) we read, "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." This statement is made in connection with an exhortation, that supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty. "For this (says he) is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior: who will have all men to be saved, and come unto the knowledge of the truth." Then comes in the statement, "For there is one God, (identifying him as the one spoken of as "God our Savior,") and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus;" which is a clear assertion that the mediator is not the one God. So if that one God was composed of three persons, as Trinitarians teach, or of a greater number of persons, the mediator cannot be reckoned as one of them.

About all who have any belief in Jesus, admit his manhood. Even Trinitarians profess to believe that he is "very God and very man." By "very God," they mean that he is the second person of their theoretical trinity. So it is not proper to say that they believe in the divinity of Christ; as one of three co-eternal and coequal persons should be called a divinity, to be grammatically proper. That they believe that he is also "very man," is admitted on their own confession. It must also be admitted, that their theory makes him to be anything to suit their extraordinary logic. "He spake that of his human nature," and "he spake this of his divine nature," are expressions used as their patent, presto-change logic requires.

Their theoretical Jesus is resolved into two; one being very man, we recognize as our Lord Jesus Christ. The other being, according to their theory, of a pre-existent character, distinct from the very man, of whose nature and origin they know nothing, must be regarded, so far as their theory is concerned, as "another Jesus." This theoretical Jesus they represent as offering his mediatorial services in our behalf, when Adam sinned; as requesting the Father to accept of him as a sacrifice for our sins; and then to give efficiency to his services, they teach that he became incarnate in our Lord Jesus Christ. But our mediator does not need any such doctors of divinities to improve his character as mediator. For neither that, nor the Arian theory, is in harmony with the declaration of Paul, concerning the commencement of his mediatorial character. He says, "The word of the oath, WHICH WAS SINCE THE LAW, maketh the son priest, who is consecrated forevermore.—Heb. 7: 28. And again, "Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest, but he that said unto him, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee."—Heb. 5: 5. Paul declared his efficiency, by saying, "He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God through him, seeing that he ever liveth to make intercession for them." How is he able? Hear: "He that gave them me is greater than all, and no one is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand."

His Father's love to fallen man,
His love for his Anointed One,
Constrains him, as love only can,
To hear his Mediator Son.

The absolute unity of God is so clearly taught in the Scriptures, that it is not creditable to the understanding of any one, who believes in the inspiration of the original, to believe otherwise. The fact that He is declared to be the Almighty, is conclusive proof the He is only one Being, or person. But if "the three persons," of the theoretical trinity, were almighty, independent of one another, there would be three Almighties. As this cannot be possible, from the very nature of almighty power, they would be finite persons, separately considered; and being "co-equal," any quantity of such finite persons cannot make the Almighty God. But our God is Almighty, and therefore, trinity is not God. Christ said, "I and my Father are one," but not I and my Father are one God; [illegible] for if they two were one God, "the third person" cannot be included. But a more serious objection would be a denial of the unity of God. If repeated declarations, by the voice of inspiration, that "God is one," do not prove that he is only one, how can it be proved that there is not a plurality of persons in each of the three? What if some heretic should arise and teach that each of the three persons can be resolved into three, and so on, ad infinitum? how could it be disproved? However, God is one; the teachings of all kinds of heretics to the contrary do not affect the fact. What Christ meant, his whole life illustrated. He was in unity with Him, who alone is God. He prayed in the garden of Gethsemane: "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me, nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done." Again, he prayed for his disciples, "That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."—John 16: 21. If any one can understand how his disciples became one with the Father and Son, he can see that the same kind of a unity existed between him and God, and that his words teach that alone.

Paul declared that "all things are of God, who hath reconciled us unto himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given unto us the ministry of reconciliation, to wit, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." But the evangelical teachers of "another gospel," teach that God was Christ, reconciling himself unto the world. "My God is reconciled," say they. The question is, who is right, they or Paul? for they are evidently at issue. Was God in Christ, or is he God of himself? That God was manifested in him, as much as an Infinite Being could be manifested in human form, cannot be disputed by scripture logic.

In 1 John 5: 20, we read, "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, in his Son, Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." Advantage is taken of the phrase, "This is the true God," because it can be made to refer grammatically to the Son, as well as to the Father. But as grammer is faulty, we should give an interpretation in accordance with a writer's meaning, as otherwise expressed, and not give a contradictory interpretation to one's words, because the grammar will admit of it. John's record, that Jesus declared that the Father is "the only true God," shows that he had reference to HIM, and not his Son, as the true God. For it cannot be that he meant Christ, as he could not teach so contradictory a thing as that the true God was the Son of the only true God. But he uses the phrase as explanatory of whom he meant by "HIM THAT IS TRUE," that is, God the Father, as he immediately speaks of Jesus Christ as "his Son." "The words, 'This is the true God,' may grammatically refer to Christ, or to Him that is true. We refer it, of course, to God the Father, who is the chief subject of discourse. In which construction we have the authority of Erasmus, Grotius, Rosenmuller, and others. The language of Grotius is as follows: 'This is the true God; namely, he and none else whom Jesus had declared to be the object of worship. The pronoun outos, this, not unfrequently relates to a remote antecedent, as in Acts 8: 19; 10: 6.'"—Discourse on the Unity of God.—Eliot, p. 77.

The Greek preposition en, in, has a variety of meanings; such as in, by, through, etc. etc. And so some give the following sensible translation of John's words: And we are in him that is true, through his Son Jesus Christ. So the words, this is the true God, can only be spoken of Him, whose Son Christ is declared to be. The name of God applied to Christ is, as was said before, to denote the manifestation of the Divine Presence in him, and by no means proves that he is God of himself. In proof, the following judicious remarks on Isa 9: 6, are here introduced:

"Nothing is more common in the Bible than such descriptive names as the following. An altar was called by Jacob, 'El-Elohe-Israel,'—God, the God of Israel; another by Moses, 'Jehovah-Nissi,'—Jehovah, my banner. The place where God provided the ram instead of Isaac, is called 'Jehovah-Jireh,' God will see or provide. In the same manner, the names of many distinguished persons in the Old Testament, if translated into English, have similar meanings, and, without a knowledge of the Hebrew custom, would convey very false ideas. Elias means, my God, and you will remember that when our Savior on the cross, cried out, Eli, Eli, etc. [illegible] strength of God,' or 'the strong God,' and it is worthy of remark that the Hebrew words comprising the name are identically the same as those in the text (Isa. [illegible] 6) before us, are translated 'the mighty God.'" —Greg. Ans.—Eliot p. 61.

The Romish church believes in trinity. The Jews with a better faith, believe in the unity of God, as taught in the Law of God, as given by Moses. Their confession is something like this:—"I believe with true and perfect faith, that the Creator, (whose name be blessed,) is one; and such a unity in Him as can be found in none other." If they would believe in Jesus of Nazareth as the Son of God, their confession with such a belief would be evangelical. O, that they were wise for themselves, instead of being confirmed in their unbelief by the triune theology of the "evangelical" teachings of "another gospel." Paul expressed his earnest feelings for them thus: "I speak the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience bearing me witness in the Holy Spirit, that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish myself accursed from Christ, for my brethren, my kinsmen, according to the flesh: who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the giving of the Law, and the service, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh, Christ came, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen."—Rom. 2: 1—5.

The expression, as concerning the flesh, is not to be understood as denying the evidence that "our Lord sprang out of Judah." Had that been the object of Paul, to distinguish between the origin of a pre-existent Christ, and the origin of the real Christ of Nazareth, he should have said, of whom, as concerning his flesh, Christ came. If he had said so, it might be argued that he is a double being of two distinct origins, first, as the Arian, or else as the Trinitarian pre-existent Jesus; and secondly, as the Christ of Nazareth,—of the tribe of Judah. That Paul did not intend to convey any meaning of that kind, is evident from the fact that he speaks of himself, and the Israelites as his kinsmen, according to the flesh. So one might as well argue that Paul had a pre-existent origin as that Jesus of Nazareth had; for the expression proves as much in the one case as the other.

John 8: 58.—"Before Abraham was I Am." This is relied on to prove that the Son is God of himself. But neither Arians, nor Trinitarians, receive these words according to their strict, literal sense. If they did, they would be forced to believe that his human personality existed before Abraham. As they put such a construction on the words as shall agree with their several theories, we may be allowed to follow their example, so far as the truth will admit of it. That he did not speak these words of himself, but of the word ("and the word was God") manifest in him, is apparent from the general tenor of his discourses to the Jews; and also from his declaration, "I seek not my own glory." It was the living word of God in him that he spake of: "If any man keep my word he shall not taste death forever."

Those who object to this, because he spake in the first person, must be reminded that this form of speech is of frequent occurrence in the Bible; by which, one speaking the words of God personated Him in the first person. Moses said, "See now, that I, even I am he; and there is no God with me," yet we understand that he spake not of himself but of God. The angel that appeared to John, in the Apocalyptic vision, personated Christ and said, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." See Rev. 22: 9—13. In like manner we understand Christ as personating the great I Am; who was manifested in him, by his word and Spirit. For if it be understood of Christ personally as the Son, it conflicts with the Divine record: "Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee." Hence, we may logically conclude that "There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus."

For the Crisis.

Conference at Earlville, Ill.

This gathering was a profitable one, I have no doubt. There was not much business to be done, hence, the more time for preaching and social worship. The brethren came in from the adjoining towns, and evidently they came with a mind to work. The opposing influences and opposition had kept their armor bright; and, although they have but few privileges, and are scattered, and find the moral atmosphere far below freezing point, they have kept sufficient fire in their own bosoms to keep in comfortable working order. Neither do they appear to be disheartened or willing to yield the field to the enemy—death or victory seemed to be the motto.

Our meeting was held in the Methodist meeting-house. The gathering was not large until Sunday. Bro. McCulloch, formerly of North Adams, Mass., was present and assisted in preaching the word. Eld. Mynard, the Methodist preacher, was present and took part in our meetings, and seemed to enjoy them much. He was very friendly, even gave up his appointment that we might have the house. He said the low state of christendom and laments over it.

As to the preaching, I cannot say, for I did the most of it myself, and I guess it was not very good—not half as good as it ought to have been. The people were interested, and the brethren comforted. Our prayer-meetings were excellent—our love feast, cheering. The baptism—four baptized—was solemn, mingled with joyful hope of the resurrection of the saints, of which baptism is a figure—"Planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." The communion was one of those seasons that should long be remembered. I cannot say how many came round the table, yet as well as I could judge there were near one hundred—other denominations united with us. This is as it should be. Eld. Mynard set a good example. May all christians do likewise.

At this meeting, I met Bro. D. S. Clark and wife, formerly from my native place, who started for the kingdom some time before myself and frequently urged me to go along. After I started, I soon embraced the Advent views, life and death not excepted, and my good brethren, Bro. Clark among the rest, supposed I had got switched off the main track, and finding they could not get me back, they let me go. Some fifteen years have passed, and I greet my old friend some twelve hundred miles west of our former place of meeting, with his heart fired with the same truth, full of zeal, doing all he can to enlighten others. He laments that he held back so long and did not examine these things before. He is not the only one that regrets the loss of sharing these truths so long. O that people would be wise for themselves and get ready for the glorious kingdom of our Lord!

WALTER PRATT.

For the Crisis.

Saving Faith.

"For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness."—Rom. 10: 10.

It has been gratifying to see some thoughts advanced in the Crisis, of late, upon the necessity of heart work in order to a genuine hope of eternal life. In these days, particularly, when "many run to and fro, and knowledge is increased," too much stress can hardly be laid upon a subject of such vital importance. There is a vast amount of theoretical faith abroad in the land. For a few years past, enlarged views have been taken of Bible truth. And many there are, who can talk loudly and long in favor of important doctrines, yet when addressed upon the subjects of communion with God,—his "love shed abroad in the heart,"—the "peace which passeth understanding,"—and so on, they are mute. They seem to be strangers to the true elements of godliness, while, perhaps, they denounce some humble christians for not seeing certain doctrines, as they do.

We affirm, then, that a person may have a great deal of head religion, and be as zealous in its behalf as a Saul of Tarsus, and yet be wholly unfitted for the kingdom of God. For the genuine hope of the gospel leads its subjects to purification,—1 John 3: 3. To a spirit of entire consecration.—Luke 14: 33; and to love—not those only who love us—but that love which is willing to make sacrifices for the good of others.—James 1: 27.

Now it is the witness within, and the practical religion accompanying it, that constitutes an acceptance with God. And such alone is saving faith. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." And the fruits of this Spirit are not strife, discord, censoriousness, backbiting, covetousness, and so on; but, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."

While then we seek to have correct views obtain among men, let us contend more earnestly for that "faith which works by love, and purifies the heart"—for it is this which constitutes a genuine basis for the hope of eternal life.

A. C. J.

Lockport, N. Y.

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

BRO. GRANT:—Feb. 2d. I commenced a meeting of days within the bounds of the Strawberry Point Church, in a neighborhood which we might well call the by-ways and hedges. There had been but two or three sermons preached there before I went. I delivered about twenty discourses. Buried seven with Christ in baptism, and ten united with the church; more will soon join.

One year ago last October, we started with eleven. The number who love the Lord's appearing has increased to over twenty. This last added ten, with those that are revived and have taken new courage, make the future prospects brighter. May the Lord be praised for his goodness to the children of men.

One thing I witnessed in this meeting, is not very common. Some of those that came out went directly to those that they had wronged in word and in deed, and made reconciliation. Brethren, this does not look like excitement. I would rather have one man start right and stand to it, than many start in an excitement, then soon fall away. The meeting closed on Sunday evening, the 19th, by surrounding the table and commemorating the Lord's suffering and death. May the Lord bless the seed sown in the West.

PETER S. W. DARO.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 21, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed;

OR,

How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 18.

We have now looked over ten Divisions of "Doubting Castle," in search for proof that man has a spirit that exists in a conscious state between death and the resurrection; but find nothing yet that will bear investigation by the clear light of the Bible; and we have no expectation of meeting with any thing founded in truth, that will sustain the doctrines taught by the managers of this old institution of error, where a great number have been led astray from the road that leads to life.

We will pass to examine the next Division. Here we are told,

"Paul, the apostle, speaks of being 'out of the body.' Why does he write such a sentence if there can be no such thing? No matter what state he was in when he was caught up to paradise—but why does he say, 'out of the body,' if, neither dead or alive, men can be, in any sense, 'out of the body?'" (36)

36. As this all took place while Paul was alive, it proves nothing concerning consciousness when a man is dead. Death and life are opposite states; hence, any proof that a man is conscious when alive, is no evidence that he will be when dead.

We were asked in "Doubting Castle," what Paul meant by saying he did not know whether he was "in the body" or "out of the body," when he saw the vision? We have only to examine the Scriptures, and all is made plain. Ektos, the word rendered "out of," occurs again in 1 Cor. 6: 18, and is rendered "without." "Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body." Does he mean that men do all their sinning in a disembodied state, except in the case specified? That when they sin, like truant boys, their souls slip slily out of their bodies, and go off to meet with other disembodied souls, to have a riotous time in midnight carousings?

It is evident that the simple meaning of Paul's language is, that when he was caught away, or "carried away," as rendered by Wakefield, and saw in vision the paradise of the new earth, he did not know whether he was carried bodily, or whether he only saw it mentally, as we behold things in dreams. Sometimes the prophets have been taken bodily to see that which they have been called to describe, and at others, only mentally. Ezekiel says, "He put forth the form of a hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem."—Ezk. 8: 3. The me that was carried could not have been an "immaterial," "disembodied," "intangible," "uncompounded" soul, with neither "exterior nor interior;" for such an one could have no "lock" of hair by which to be carried.

Again, he says, "Afterward the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea, to them of the captivity."—Ezk. 11: 24. Says John, "He carried me away in the spirit," or in spirit, "to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God."—Rev. 21: 10. These examples show that sometimes the person is taken bodily from one place to another, to behold things seen in vision; while at other times he sees them mentally, as in dreams; and when Paul had the vision of paradise, he could not tell in which condition he was situated; but as all this transpired when he was alive, it affords no proof that man has a spirit that lives when he is dead.

Let us pass now to the twelfth Division, and section thirty-seven. Here we find the following:

"Paul, the apostle, speaks of being 'absent from the body.' What was absent from the body? Whatever was absent from the body was also 'present with the Lord.'" (37.)

37. In answer to the question, "What was absent from the body?" Paul answers, "we are . . . willing . . . to be." Does we stand for Paul? Observe, it does not read, we are absent from our bodies, in the plural number; but "the body," in the singular. The passage shows that several constitute but one body. Paul evidently uses figures in the first part of the chapter, when he speaks of being "clothed" and "unclothed," and "clothed upon with our house," etc.; and it is certain that he often uses body in a figurative sense, meaning a company of christians. Let him explain his own language. He says, "So we, being many, are one body in Christ."—Rom. 12: 5. To the Corinthians he says, "Now ye are the body of Christ."—1 Cor. 12: 27. To the Ephesians he writes, "That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, of the same body."—Eph. 3: 6. Again he says, "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—Eph. 4: 11–12. In Eph. 1: 22–23, we read, "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body." "He is the head of the body, the church."—Col. 1: 18. "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church."—Col. 1: 24.

Paul tells the Corinthians, "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." This shows that Paul's only hope of future life was through the resurrection of the dead. When speaking of his trials and persecutions, he says, "What advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?" If he had believed that he had a spirit that would go to glory and be happy when he was dead, there would be great advantage, provided the dead never rise.

From the foregoing considerations, it appears certain that Paul did not mean, when speaking of being "absent from the body," that he expected, or desired, to be absent from himself. Paul, and those whom he was addressing, did not feel as the mass of professors do at the present day, afraid to see Jesus; but were "willing," and even longing for the time to come, when they could be with Christ in his coming kingdom; but we find nothing to show that they expected to be with him before he returns in the clouds of heaven; or as Paul expresses it; "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 16–17.

As we can find no evidence of an immortal spirit in this Division, we pass on to the thirteenth. Here we find the following:

"The same apostle speaks of 'abiding in the flesh.' Something then might cease to abide in the flesh." (38.)

Yes, Paul might cease to abide in the flesh, or cease to live. Wakefield renders the passage—"To continue in this life;" i. e., to continue alive, "is more needful for you." If he died, or ceased to abide in the flesh, the church would suffer loss.

As there is no shade of proof in this Division in favor of conscious existence between death and the resurrection, we pass to Division fourteen. Here we read the following:

"What does the same apostle mean by being 'unclothed' and 'naked,' a condition not so much to be desired as 'clothed upon' in the resurrection? It seems, then, that man can be unclothed—disembodied. Please trace that word 'unclothed' in the Greek"!!! (39.)

39. If by "unclothed," Paul means a "disembodied" state, he does not consider it so good a condition as to live here in this world; for he says, "not . . . that we would be unclothed." It is very evident Paul has no reference whatever to a "disembodied" state. He says, we are "earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." Does he intend to teach us that there are bodies in the heavens for souls to move into when they die? What disposition, then, shall be made of the body which is to be raised from the dead, and "be fashioned like unto his (Christ's) glorious body?" In this case, there would be two bodies to one soul; one from heaven, and the other from the earth! Such theology belongs in "Doubting Castle," and should be repudiated by every lover of truth. The "being clothed" and "unclothed" is with reference to "our house which is from heaven." The Savior says, "In my Father's house [not body] are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you."—John 14: 2.

Paul is evidently comparing the present tabernacle arrangement in this world, which is only temporary, or "temporal," as he says, with the tabernacle of God, which is eternal. John saw in vision this last mentioned tabernacle, "the holy city," "coming down from God, out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." He then says, "I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, behold, the tabernacle of God is with men."

While we remain in the present temporary tabernacle arrangement, we are mortal, subject to pains and groans; hence Paul and his brethren were "earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven;" and when that should take place, "mortality" would "be swallowed up of life."

Wakefield renders this: "For we know, that if this tent, wherein we dwell, which is fixed on the ground, be taken to pieces, we have a divine building, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For indeed, in this tent, we sigh with an earnest desire of clothing ourselves with that heavenly habitation."

As the present world is but a temporary, tent-like arrangement, that must be taken down, and give place to the new earth, with its "great" and "holy city," called the "house," "tabernacle," or "building of God;" Paul and his brethren longed for the change to come, when they would have an abiding home, or "house, not made with hands." Abraham "looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."—Heb. 11: 10. He was not looking for a body to live in, when he died, but for a city, that had been prepared in heaven, but a city, the same, we think, that Paul so earnestly desired.

The Scripture under examination, like others presented in "Doubting Castle," appears to afford no proof that man has a spirit that exists in a conscious, "disembodied" state, between death and the resurrection.

The Revival in Castleton.

The Lord is doing a great work in Castleton. Our last report extended to March 7th; the present to the 15th inst. During the last eight days, the truth has been spreading rapidly, and many have found peace in believing. We have several new witnesses every evening, who come out with a clear evidence, and are very joyful in the Lord.

There is very little excitement upon the surface of our meetings; all seem to be acting deliberately, like sober, earnest men, who enter into the work for life. All are astonished at the plainness and simplicity of the word of the Lord; and wonder why they have not seen these things before. They now see that it is impossible to harmonize the Bible with the popular theology of the day. They also see the wide difference between the mass of the popular professors, who are opposing this good work, in company with their ministers, and Bible christianity; but the young converts have concluded, that though they may be only "the common people," Jesus is ready to accept them; and is not so proud but that he will take them into his family, and adopt them as his sons and daughters; making them his joint heirs in the world to come. They feel thankful that, though they be "poor," and unable to follow the silly fashions of the day, and adorn themselves, in opposition to the Bible, with "gold," "pearls," and "costly array," as do those professors who look down upon them with sneering contempt; they have learned that "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit . . . . is in the sight of God of great price;" and that God hath "chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him."

There are many around us, who remind us of a class of people in the days of our Savior to whom he said; "Ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves; neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." Some have been a few times, become interested, and even converted; when their friends, (?) who were members of the church, would forbid them from attending any more. Well, thank the Lord that we belong to the "sect . . . . every where spoken against."

A young and interesting French lady was converted in our meetings, whose friends were Roman Catholics. She was first turned out of doors, and afterwards seized and shut up, her clothes being locked up. When the tidings came to us last Lord's day morning, that her screams were heard by the neighbors, while in her lonely situation, many an earnest prayer was offered for her delivery. When we assembled in the evening, we were greatly rejoiced to meet her smiling face, beaming with christian joy and love. She had managed to escape in a sad plight to one of the neighbors, where she was provided with clothing, and came, like Peter, after he was delivered from prison, directly to the prayer meeting. To-day she was buried in baptism in company with seventeen others, and is happy in the Lord.

Yesterday, the 14th inst., we went to Poultney and had an interesting meeting; at the close of which, eight were buried with Christ in baptism, and were greatly comforted. The faithful labors of Bro. Howell have been much blessed during the short period he has been in P. Others will embrace the next opportunity for baptism.

Forty-two have been baptized in Castleton during the last few days, and several others are now waiting for the next opportunity. Fifty-three have united in church fellowship and chosen their elders, and many more are about to join. Eighteen went forward for prayers this last evening of the present series of meetings. Pray for them that they may meet us in the coming kingdom.

For the Crisis.

A Request.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say through the Crisis, that the little band of believers in North Dana are very much neglected by our preaching brethren. Although few in number, they love the truth of God's blessed word. It pains my heart to see so little interest manifested in their welfare by our ministers.

Brethren, do something for Dana. God will bless your efforts, although they may be very weak. The Word says, The poor have the gospel preached to them. Here they are starving for the bread of life, and are all alone, as it were; yet the Lord is with them. Pray the Lord to direct, and if the Lord says go, go, trusting in him, that there will be a good work done.

Inquire for George N. Stetster. May the Lord direct you in all things.

☞ Kindnesses are stowed away in the heart, like rose leaves in a drawer, to sweeten every object around them.

For the Crisis.

A Handful of Gleanings.

"Forbearing one another in love."

Cultivate forbearance. It is not only a virtue itself, but the friend and guardian of all the virtues. When enemies assail you, and the angry word rises to your tongue, place the finger of forbearance across your lips and remember that a soft answer turneth away wrath.

When the temptation of dishonest gain promises you gold or land in return for one seemingly little sin, forbear, remembering that all worldly gain is trivial and transient, compared with conscience and honor. When strong appetites call for indulgence, put away the cup, turn away from the seductive smile, and make forbearance the ally of temperance and purity.

When impatience of the world's want of respect for your talents, provokes you to herald your own merits with the trumpet of boasting, still forbear, and instead of vanity cultivate that peace of mind which the world's frowns or smiles cannot disturb.

When the relish of sarcasm prompts the utterance of injurious words, words designed to turn your neighbors into ridicule, place your fingers upon your lips again, remembering that charity is sweeter than the idle praise of wit.

In short, make forbearance a habit, a constant grace to befriend and protect you in hours of perplexity, temptation and trial.

A. ROSS.

For the Crisis.

"Reasons for my Hope."

To those who wish to give the inquirer a reason for believing in Jesus and his speedy coming, but have not the ability to do it as they desire, or have not the time, I recommend Bro. Hastings' new book with the above title. It is just the thing; solemn and stirring. The section on the spread of the Scriptures is amply worth the price of the book, which may be got of the author or at the Crisis office.

DANL. T. TAYLOR.

Worcester, March, 1860.

Waiting for Christ the Fruit of the Gospel.

The gospel farther shows us what he will do hereafter, when he returns in his glory. How he will appear the second time without sin unto salvation to them that look for him—how he will raise them, and change them, and fashion them like himself, and translate them to his own heavenly home, and present them to his Father faultless, and give them a royal and everlasting kingdom with him for ever and ever. As this is more and more discovered to our minds in the holy scriptures, through the teaching of God's Holy Spirit, a thousand streams of love flow into the heart, and fill the whole soul, in its innermost recesses, with love, glad and grateful love, to Jesus. We love him because he first loved us. But if love be real and fervent, it is pained with absence from the beloved object. If love be true and glowing, it delights in the presence of him on whom it rests. So it is with the christian whose soul is filled with love to the person of the Savior. Christ is to him the chief of ten thousand; he is altogether lovely; the one on whom his whole soul's affections are supremely fixed. No one has done or can do for him what Christ has done. No one is, no one can be, so originally, so altogether, so completely pure, and perfect, and wise, and good, and mighty, and gracious, as Jesus our most precious Savior is: indeed, all other goodnesses are but drops from his fulness. No one can be so near and so dear as he who loved the church, and gave himself for it, and nourisheth and cherisheth it; for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. Hence the hearty response of welcome in his church to all the assurances which he gives of his speedy return. We see this often in that beautiful song which describes, by the most touching and affecting of all similes, marriage love, the tender and glowing love between Jesus and his people. My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among lilies. Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, turn, beloved, and be thou like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of Bether. Cause me to hear thy voice. Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices. (Song 2: 16, 17; 8: 14.)

Neglect of waiting for Christ, after we have seen the promise of his return in his Word, is a sign of coldness of love to him that we should dread. See how a beloved relative, a child, a brother, a sister, a husband, or a wife, when absent and expected back, are waited for and welcomed, and all the days or hours counted before they arrive, and by this let us learn the welcome which the Savior should and will have from his waiting people. Oh, yes! when the joyful cry is heard, Behold the bridegroom cometh, his church will exultingly reply, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him! . . . this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation. (Isa. 25: 9.)

4. The gospel raises us into fellowship with God. It lifts us up to something of the vastness and comprehensiveness of his mind. He inhabiteth eternity. From everlasting to everlasting he is God. Hence, as the christian increases in the knowledge of God, and his mind opens and expands to the largeness of God's purposes of love, he rests in God, and patiently waits his time for fulfilling his promises, (Psalm 37: 7; Heb. 6: 15.) What are the 4,000 years from the creation to the first advent, or the 2,000 years since, compared with the unsearchable eternity before us,—with the generations of the ages yet to come? The delay thus taking place before the second coming, seems as nothing when viewed in connection with the everlasting ages that are to follow. Raised by the gospel to oneness with the Divine Mind, we can well trust the infinite and unfathomable wisdom of him whose name is both Light and Love, in ordering all the delay for the increase of his church and its fuller glory and blessedness. We can easily account that his long-suffering is indeed salvation to innumerable multitudes that would never otherwise have been counted with the first-born, and never otherwise have partaken of the glories of the first resurrection.

Thus we can cheerfully obey the direction given to comfort his people in unfulfilled longings of heart, that they should rest yet for a little season, till their fellow-servants also and their brethren that should be killed should be fulfilled. Nay, still farther admitted to the heavenly vision of things, and taught especially not to be ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, the believer can see the divine truthfulness and reality in its being said, even eighteen hundred years ago, Surely, I come quickly, and, the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Though his church be yet waiting for his coming, and has heard for centuries the distant murmurs of the mocking taunt, Where is the promise of his coming? we know perfectly, he will come as a thief in the night. We judge of quickness and nearness as the Divine mind does with relation to the vastness of the eternity to come, and the all-important and all-deciding event of the Lord's return from heaven. Hence our hopes rest on this blessed event, —the second coming in glory,—and on no nearer object. Our hopes reach onward through all intervening obstacles, and are fixed on the Lord's coming; being assured that then, when Christ who is our life shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory. And as we are raised into fellowship with God in the vastness and comprehensiveness of his mind, as to the duration of time compared with eternity, so yet farther are we raised into fellowship with God as to his infinite goodness in all his thoughts and all his ways.

The gospel brings us into oneness here with God, so complete as to give us perfect and full confidence in our God. Oh, the unutterable sweetness of this entire rest of the heart on the power, the wisdom, the tender mercy, the boundless love, the unfailing sympathy and compassion of God in Christ, reconciling the world to himself and bringing us by his Spirit near to himself, with our hearts reconciled to him! Oh, the unspeakable blessedness of being able to say, with the fulness of a confiding heart, God, even our own God, shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him! Oh, the deep feelings of reverence and holy awe, and earnest longings of spirit which then lead us to cry, My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?

5. The Gospel reveals the weight of glory to be bestowed on us at the return of our Lord and in his heavenly kingdom. All who have read the Scriptures, and marked the passages which refer to our future state, must have observed, how dim is the light given on the state of the departed saints before the advent. * * * * * * * It is a brief interval; an interval really brief to all, however early in the world's history they may have died, as compared with the everlasting kingdom. But promise crowds on promise to describe their glory in the day of their Lord's return and of their resurrection. Hence true faith in these revelations of glory leads to earnest longing and waiting for Christ.

This blessed hope becomes all the salvation and all the desire of the soul, for which the believer is intently looking. Nothing nearer, nothing lower, will satisfy its thirst for full unfailing happiness. The gathering together of all the family of God from all ages and all countries, kindreds, and tongues; the resurrection of all who have died in the Lord, and the change of the living saints, and their being caught up together to meet the Lord in the air, the reward of all their works of love, the royal priesthood unto God and the Father given to them, the restitution of all things, the millennial kingdom, succeeded by the everlasting kingdom in which God is all in all; the visible glory of our Lord Jesus Christ and our being with him, and beholding his glory, and seeing God himself as he is, face to face: Oh! what a prospect of bliss and glory is here! These things form a solid hope of joy unspeakable and full of glory, that dazzles by its intense brightness; and yet, when in lively faith we view it, while we gaze on it in believing admiration and gratitude, it is a hope that attracts the soul into its own glory, and raises us up together with Christ and makes us sit together in heavenly places.

Waiting for Christ's coming and kingdom is therefore a necessary fruit of the Gospel fully received.—Bickersteth's Divine Warnings.

Correspondence.

From Sr. C. E. Glerlow.

Dear Bro. and Srs.:—It is a long time since I addressed you through the "Crisis," and thinking that, perhaps some of you would be glad to hear from me once more, I will improve the present opportunity of writing you. I might give you a history of the various scenes through which I have passed during the last eighteen months; of my removal from Knoxville, Tenn., to London; of my dissatisfaction at having to change places so often, especially to live in "Sodom," (for London was called so on account of its wickedness); of the persecutions I had to endure; how I was shunned and ridiculed, because the people had been informed that I was a believer in the speedy coming of Christ; how I happened to get into conversation with a Presbyterian minister and got him interested in our views, by reading the "Voice of the Church" and the "Crisis"; how the "probability" of Christ's soon coming was received at a camp-meeting (which he soon after attended,) from his lips,—eighty persons converted, backsliders reclaimed, etc.; of his return to L., with two other ministers, to hold a protracted meeting there; of the conversation I had with those dear servants of God; of the interest and pleasure they manifested, as I presented to them the evidences of our hope; of their faithful labors in L., warning the people to flee from the wrath to come, etc;—all these things I could relate to you in detail, but it would occupy too much space, and my poor, weak nerves would get "out of fix," and your patience become weary in reading it. I will only state that a glorious revival followed, such an one as had never been witnessed there before. I was told that not more than three adults in the village remained indifferent to their own eternal interest; and although I was there only some two months, I do not believe I had an enemy in the place when I left. All the people needed was the grace of God. I have some very dear, noble-hearted friends there, who would gladly have given me, and my daughter, a home as long as we shall ever want one, to have us remain there with them.

From London we came here, stopping one week in Memphis, where I had an opportunity of conversing with many persons on the evidences of our faith; among whom was the family of Bishop Otey, with whom we tarried a few days.

We have now been in Mississippi more than a year, and though I have talked with many persons on this subject, I find but few who take much interest in it, and this is owing to the fact that no one had ever preached it when we came here. I believe that an "Advent" minister of the right sort would be well received here.

Since the wonderful phenomena in the heavens, of Sept. 1st, people seem to think that something unusual must occur soon, but the majority are looking for the conversion of the world. Nevertheless, I have some very joyful news to communicate to you, Bro. Grant. The lady for whom I ordered books the other day, has become a believer of the truths, I have at times, for the last six months been, by various means, endeavoring to instil into her mind. She comes here, occasionally, to visit her father who lives in this neighborhood, and I have thus been permitted to form an acquaintance with her. She was baptised three weeks ago, in our church, but did not feel quite satisfied in having been truly converted.

I called on her, at her father's, last Sunday afternoon, and she, together with another lady, went to a meeting held by the servants on the place, and she got almost shouting happy while there. It would have done you good to see the shaking of hands and rejoicings among the redeemed sons of Africa, as they gathered about their young mistress. She had been laboring constantly, as fast as she became enlightened, to arouse both whites and blacks to a sense of their danger in view of the judgment. Her step-daughter, a young lady of sixteen years, was baptized two Sabbaths since, and is trying to be in readiness to meet the Lord. Both she and a young brother seem to be almost as zealous as their mother in the cause of this blessed truth. The mother and brother are about to go home, where, I fully believe, that she will be a faithful missionary to her servants, and others who may come within her influence. God bless her, and you, too, Bro. Grant, Hastings, and others, whose "works," under God, have been the means of plucking her feet, and many more, out of the miry clay and establishing them upon a rock. God grant that this may be the beginning of a great work at the South.

I find the people of this state to be remarkably kind and hospitable. I do not think I ever found warmer friends. I love them very much. May God's richest blessings rest upon them, and may they be received at last with all the redeemed into God's "everlasting kingdom." God bless you all.

Port Gibson, Miss.

P. S. I talk of spending the summer at the North, D. V. The man who preached to the servants last Sabbath, is a slave, and is also a believer in the soon coming of Christ. I gave him the evidences, and he is trying to save sinners by proclaiming the truth.

From Laura A. Wheeler.

Bro. Grant:—While reading in the Crisis a few weeks ago, an article under the head of "Christian duty," I felt strongly impressed to say a few words to those who, like myself, are so situated as not to be able to meet with those who worship God. With such I can deeply sympathize, and I would exhort them not to be discouraged; for the apostle John says, "The anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him."—1 John 2:27. I would by all means advocate meeting together to talk over our blessed hope. I think it duty, and a precious privilege. Yet God does not require us to do anything we cannot, and he will be just as faithful on his part to give us the earnest of our inheritance and his Divine presence, if we take his word in our hand, and ask aid to understand of him who has told us if we "lack wisdom to ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not."

Do not give up because of many trials peculiar to yourselves. Look at the prize ahead, and then at the road you have passed over. How will the past and present compare with the eternal weight of glory? Arouse ye! make one effort more, for very soon the last tear will be shed, the battle be fought. Then you will understand the heighth, and depth, and length, and breadth, of a Savior's love.

Oh! my dear, pilgrim sisters, who are confined at home with cares, do you realize the responsibility that rests upon you? Do you realize that you, and those children given you, are soon to be brought before the Judge of all the earth, to receive for the deeds done here in the body? What will then your frail excuses avail you? I entreat you to reflect on these things, for they certainly concern you much. That time will surely come when "two shall be in one bed, one shall be taken, the other left." Mother, will it be you and that child that will be borne away by the angel from that bedside? or will you pass on because the narrow way may look difficult, until the last servant of God is sealed in his forehead, and the angel shall say, It is done? The way is not so difficult as you imagine. Only set yourself about the service of your Master in earnest; get his yoke upon you, and, according to the word of Him who cannot lie, the yoke will be easy and the burden light.

Hawley, Mass.

From E. S. Fenn.

Bro. Grant:—I am still in sympathy with the friends of Jesus, those who have made a covenant with the Lord by sacrifice, whose end is, to be gathered into the everlasting kingdom of God, to go no more out forever. My greatest anxiety is, how I may retain the relationship to God and his Son, which I have hitherto been enabled to sustain.

I have long since settled the fact in my own mind, that it costs an effort to be Christ-like, and that those who are not nearly enough allied to Him to partake of his nature, are not heirs with him to the incorruptible inheritance. Hence I am striving to overcome; and, while foes are lurking, in error proudly wrapped, wickedness increasing, evil and perils multiplying, all arrayed against God and his truth, my timid nature would bid me retire with womanly (?) pride and childish fear, and shun the scornful gaze of a proud, pleasure-loving world; but justice to self, justice to others, justice to God, truth and error, demand true courage and heroism instead.

I have enjoyed the quietude of home for a few days; but such indulgences are not often shared by me. The days have glided swiftly by, and ere my wearied frame has had sufficient rest, the battle is urging, and I must gird my armor closely on, and grasp more firmly the shield, and in the mighty struggle for others' welfare, while for THEIR woes I weep, forget my own heart's-grief, which at times comes welling up. Great God! inspire my cold, cold heart anew, with love divine; that wisdom pure may rule my every act, and all my deeds with charity be done.

Brookfield, Conn.

From A. N. Seymour.

Bro. Grant:—Our dear Bro. and Sr. Mansfield have just closed a series of meetings in Reading, Mich. They had an excellent hearing most of the time; some few evenings were very dark and muddy, but even then, there being such an interest to hear, many turned out. The effect of preaching the unvarnished word in all its native simplicity, power and faithfulness, must be seen and realized in time to come, more than at present, although some fruit was seen during the meeting. Four publicly acknowledged their faith by putting on Christ by baptism, and several others will probably do so soon.

The brethren in the surrounding country came together in this place in gospel order. Bro. Mansfield gave the right hand of fellowship to nineteen, and there are as many more who will identify themselves with us soon. If the church is faithful and humble, I trust she will shortly see a strong body of christians raised up here to look for that blessed hope, and to assist in swelling the last note of warning to a world lying in wickedness. Although sectarianism had propped up her altars as much as possible, the overwhelming testimony drawn from the word of God made these modern Dianas shake. Oh! may the funeral knell of all these irrational, heathenish, and abominable dogmas of priestcraft, be soon tolled, and the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, as revealed in the face of our Divine Master, Jesus Christ, shed its heavenly, hallowed, and sanctifying influence upon the hearts of both saint and sinner. May the ministry and the church everywhere redouble their energies in demolishing these stupendous monstrosities of error.

Brethren and sisters, work hard; work night and day; work with tears in your eyes, and the love of God in your hearts. Never give o'er, but diligently, perseveringly and energetically press the battle to the gate and storm the city.

From Sr. A. M. S. B.

Bro. Grant—Time has sped away, and we have come to the close of another volume of the Crisis. How lonely would many of the weary pilgrims be without its weekly visits to cheer and comfort them! May it be sustained and continued. Many changes have been wrought in this interval of time, which have tried the dear children of God; and while wave after wave of adversity's dark waters have dashed over their defenceless heads, like sinking Peter, they have lifted their agonizing hearts to heaven's high King, and cried, "Lord, save, or we perish!" Many of the loved saints have passed down into the grave; but angels watch their sleeping dust till Gabriel sounds his mighty trumpet. O, bright resurrection morn! "Haste, then, and wheel away a shattered world, ye slow, revolving seasons! we would see (a sight to which our eyes are strangers yet!) a holy and a happy world!"

From L. C——.

Bro. Grant:—Situated as I am among a little company who are looking for the coming King, I feel to rejoice that it is so well with us as it is. And moreover, I thank my heavenly Father that I am surrounded by a little band who are despised and rejected of the great mass of those that wear the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. I can say that the happiest days of my life have been those that I spent in the service of God. Within the past two years we have enjoyed some blessed seasons; some that will long be remembered. I have seen within that time between twenty and thirty willing converts led down into our Jordan, and there buried with Jesus in baptism; and such prayers and exhortations I never heard before as have fallen from their lips in behalf of the poor sinner. Dearly beloved brethren and sisters, let us be faithful in the cause of our Master; for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ; and if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise.

Yarmouth, Me.

From M. Mathews.

Bro. and Srs.:—How are you all? Is your hope bright? Do you still feel determined to gain the prize? Well, go on. "Home at last" will be soon sung, and I'd really like to be with the choir to put in an alto. Who'll help the treble? Who'll volunteer to sing bass? who tenor? Your voices will be needed. We have got to sing the new song, or some one else will. Let us be the songsters, for they shall wear crowns.

I feel to-night just like taking a through ticket, and I want to pay my fare. God help me. Pray for me. The faithful alone will gain the reward. Let us be faithful. We can, just as well as not. It is our privilege to gain the kingdom. Jesus will guide us, and God will own us at last.

Canada East.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Belleville, Wis., Feb. 19th, 1860, Bro. H. W. Yager, aged fifty-eight.

He was formerly from Canada West. Before embracing the Advent doctrine, he belonged to the Scotch Presbyterian Church. He heard the Advent as taught by Wm. Miller; and since embraced the doctrine of life and immortality through Christ. He moved to Wisconsin, near Madison, in 1846. His heart was in the truth—he loved it, and wanted to do all he could to spread it. He moved to Belleville a few years since, and there he was anxious to have the truth preached. He wrote me last Dec. I went and commenced the 8th of Jan. I found him very low, still rejoicing in hope. He attended nearly every meeting. He dropped away very suddenly, but died praising God. He has left an affectionate wife and a large family of children to mourn his loss.

M. Chandler.

It becomes my painful duty to record the death of one of our dear children, Edwin E. Chandler, aged twenty-two years. The disease, typhoid lung fever, ending in quick consumption. He was taken down the last day of December, and died the 6th of March. He was a great sufferer, but was never heard to murmur during his sickness. He was a young man beloved by all that knew him. Has been a praying child, since he could lisp the name of Jesus. He made a profession by being baptised six years since, and joined the Advent church in Syracuse, N. Y. He has been a faithful christian the most of the time since. The last few years of his life his example has been worthy of imitation. He has been so much consecrated to God, he has never considered any sacrifice too great for the truth. For the last three years I have traveled and preached all of the time—been at home but very little. During that time he has given his all for the support of the family, and with his industry they have been supported, and I have been able to keep in the field. He felt with me the gospel must be preached. He wanted to live to see the Lord, but when he found he must sleep, he submitted without a murmur.

Sunday morning before his death, I think it was, I conversed with him. He said his cup of affliction was great, but he supposed it was all right. When told by the doctor who attended him that he thought he must die, he calmly said, "O well, I suppose I am as well prepared as I ever should be." The morning before he died he said to his mother, "O how thankful I am it is so well with me! What confidence I have had in God for two mornings past!" We called the family together, and I read some in the Bible and prayed with him. He enjoyed the season, and at half past twelve o'clock that day he fell asleep to have a part in the first resurrection.

This is a great affliction to us; we have reason to mourn, but not as those that have no hope. We need the prayers of the church.

Moses Chandler.

Monmouth, Ill.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

FRANCE.

The French Legislature opened on the 1st. The Emperor's speech promises every effort for the maintainance of peace; rejoices at the amicable relations of all the European powers; expresses a hope of a speedy peace with Cochin China, and just chastisement for the perfidy of the Chinese. The Emperor hopes that Italian affairs are approaching a settlement. He has advised the King of Sardinia that Tuscany must not be annexed to that kingdom; but that the wishes of the other Italian provinces may be entertained, provided the rights of the Holy See are respected. The safety of the French frontier requires the annexation of Savoy, and the Emperor hopes that frank explanations of the question will cause the great powers to recognize the justice of the claim. He professes astonishment at the agitation in the Catholic world, and points to his efforts on behalf of the Pope. The French army had been reduced by one hundred and fifty thousand men, and would be further reduced but for the Chinese war and the Italian occupation. He concludes by referring to the new free trade policy, and predicting the most favorable results.

It is reported that Prince Lucien Bonaparte will be proposed for King of Tuscany.

CENTRAL ITALY.

London, March 3. The votes of the people are to be taken upon the question of annexation to Sardinia or a separate kingdom. The Umbrian Marches demand annexation to Piedmont. The Pope threatens Victor Emmanuel with excommunication.

The annexation of Savoy by France is condemned by the English Ministry.

The Paris correspondents of two London papers assert that, in reply to repeated entreaties as to how they were to act, the Piedmontese government has received an answer from the French government something to this effect: "The son of the late Duke of Genoa (a child of six years old,) and nephew to Victor Emmanuel, is to be offered to the Tuscans as their Prince—whether by the title of Grand Duke or King does not much matter, during his minority a regent shall be appointed to act in his name; and, most delicate of all, a Grand Vicar shall administer the Romagna under the suzerainete of the Pope.

Dr. Gabriel Reisser, a Jew, has lately been chosen Chief Magistrate of the free city of Hamburg. Ten years ago a Jew in Hamburg was not even eligible to the office of night constable.

[London Advices of March 4th.]

Paris, Sunday evening. That part of the Emperor's speech concerning the annexation of Savoy and Nice, has been read in Nice with enthusiasm. The Italian party is greatly agitated.

Vienna, Sunday. To inquiries of representatives of some foreign powers, Austria replies that its interests not being directly affected by the annexation of Savoy to France, she will not protest against that annexation.

Modena, Saturday. The Papal Government has prohibited commerce by transit between Ancona and the Romagna. The merchants protest against it. Agitation continues in the Marches. The landed proprietors refuse to pay taxes. One thousand citizens are signing an address to the great powers, in favor of annexation. The soldiers enlisted in Austria continue to arrive in the States of the Church and Naples.

Rome, Wednesday. The Pope is said to be willing to grant concessions, if the legations will submit.

The students at the University had demanded the readmission of the eight students who had been expelled. Gen. Guyon had sent a detachment of troops to the University, thereby preventing a disturbance.

There is nothing important from the Morocco war.

The following letter has been received from St. Petersburgh, dated the 20th ult.:—

The situation of the Turkish empire particularly occupies the attention of our Government at present. The news from Turkey is of a most alarming character. Bosnia and Herzegovina are in a state of complete fermentation. Prince Daniel of Montenegro meditates an extension of his territory. Prince Milosch, relying on a courageous and determined army, openly refuses obedience. The Hospodar Couza governs the Danubian provinces like an independent sovereign, and he forcibly expelled the Turkish garrisons from the islands in the Danube. Nevertheless, although this description is not reassuring, nothing authorizes us to believe that the integrity of the Ottoman empire is menaced for the present.—London Times.

The chances of war early in spring are becoming daily stronger, judging from the growl of the Vienna semi-official papers, and the tenor of what falls from the rather unguarded lips of Count de Rechberg. The accumulation of troops behind the Mincio, and on the north bank of the Po, while a bona fide Austria army is in constant transmission by steam from Trieste to Ancona, betoken a desperate effort. The French army of occupation is on the alert, and further supplies of all kinds have been ordered. Marshal Vaillant was conspicuous at the various municipal festivals with which Milan has welcomed her Piedmontese Sovereign, and the most cordial feeling exists between the armies of Piedmont, France, and Central Italy.—Letter from Paris.

[Correspondence of London Times.]

The Opinione Nationale is strongly of opinion that France is drifting into another war with Austria. It says:—

"In vain do diplomatists attempt to stay Europe on this slippery descent; they find no point d'appui. Look as long as you will, there is but one solution for the Italian question, and that is the total, radical, and irrevocable explosion of Austria, and the foundation of a national power in Italy. Once Italy mistress of herself, and then neither France nor Austria would have pretext for interference, and Europe would have a right to prevent them from interfering."

We know not whether the Opinione has any authoritative grounds for using the above language, but it is certain that both in the army and the general public there is a strong impression that war will break out again in the spring.

☞ The following days of the week are set apart for public worship among the different nations:—Sunday, or the Lord's day, by the Christians; Monday, by the Grecians; Tuesday, by the Persians; Wednesday, by the Assyrians; Thursday, by the Egyptians; Friday, by the Turks; Saturday, by the Jews.

Notices, &c.

Editorial Notice.

Reports of Conferences, etc.—We wish to suggest to friends desiring insertions in our columns like the above, that we prefer to receive such reports directed to this office: for it often occurs, among our numerous exchanges, that requests to "copy" are overlooked, and therefore if you would insure early attention to such, please notice the hint above.

General Conference in Boston.

A General Religious Conference will be held in Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing at half-past 2 o'clock, on Wednesday, the 4th of April, continuing each day and evening through the week and over the Lord's day.

The object and design of this meeting is not so much for the passing of resolutions or the transaction of ecclesiastical business, as for the advancement of pure christianity among us in true revival and reformation. What we as a body want and need, is not disputation or hobbies, but earnest, direct labor for the immediate promotion of the work of God in awakening the careless and indifferent, stirring up the luke-warm, and quickening into life and activity the too sluggish energies of the whole church in the personal work of preparation to meet the Master, who is before the door. In fact, we are too dull, too barren, and want more faith, zeal, love—more religion. And not only is it to be hoped that our meeting may prove a great means of grace to the waiting saints, but our hearts' desire is to see sinners converted to God, and thus made ready for the approaching great day of doom. Let those, then, who are asleep, awake and be strong. Let the righteous gird on their armor. Let sinful men be alarmed. All signs point to the speedy coming of the Lord, and it is high time that those who look for Him be up and doing with their might their last solemn work. Let earnest and faithful prayer go up to heaven for the success of this conference. Ministers of Christ, plead with Him for the spiritual interest of the meeting, and come to it in humility and faith, that our God who is now working among our churches in various places, may also pour his Spirit upon the worshipers at Chapman Hall. We invite our dear brethren and sisters from abroad to come. Come, all who can. Provision will be made by the friends for all needful entertainment.

D. T. Taylor,
M. Grant.

Geo. T. Adams,
J. G. Hamblin, Committee.
Wm. C. Stone,

Conference.

The Lord will, there will be a conference meeting at the Union Church in Pawling, Dutchess Co., N. Y., commencing April 1st, and will continue over the next Sunday. All are invited.

Notice.

I expect to spend a short time in Northern Illinois. Any friends wishing preaching in that vicinity, will please address me at Aurora, Kane Co., Ill. Will Bro. Geo. Needham write me at that place?

L. P. Judson.

Notice.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will be in Augusta, at the brick school-house on Sand Hill, commencing March 29th, Thursday, 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. We shall expect all our ministers there to preach the word, to counsel and labor for the unity and upbuilding of the cause of Christ. Also, as many brethren and sisters as can consistently attend, to engage in the same work. Those who cannot come should pray God to bless this effort to the salvation of lost sinners. We cordially invite ministers and others from everywhere, to attend with us to work as above stated. Strangers coming to this meeting should call on Bro. Wm. A. Lovejoy, and David Moshier.

H. B. Sevey, Chairman.
I. C. Wellcome, Secretary.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Bro., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. George Champlin will preach in
Boston, (Chapman Hall)......Sunday, March 25th

Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell will preach in Exeter, N. H. the first Sunday in April.

CHARLES HALEY.

Dr. A. M. Higgins will preach in Abington, Ct ....April 1st

The Lord willing, I will preach in Westford, Ct., (Axe Factory)..Sunday, March 25th

C. W. BAKER.

My post office address is Rockville, Conn.—Eld. C. W. Baker.

Providence permitting, I will preach in
East Boston.............................April 3d
Attend the Conference...................April 4th
Portsmouth, N. H........................April 5th
South Berwick...........................April 6th
Commence a four days' meeting in East Barnstead, N. H., (Clark's meeting-house)..........April 7th
The third and fourth week in April not engaged.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Eld. Geo. Champlin will preach in
Southington, Conn........April 13th, 14th, and 15th

D. W. Miller will preach in
Goshen...................................April 1st

Eld. Geo. Champlin will preach in Portsmouth, N. H., the second and third Sundays in April.

Eld. W. S. Campbell will preach in
Lowell....................Sunday, April 1st
Kennebunkport, Me...................April 15th
East Boston, Mass...................April 22d

Eld. J. Hemenway will preach in Portsmouth, N. H., the first Sabbath in April.

Eld. C. Goodrich will preach in
Pawlings, N. Y..............Sunday, March 25th

APPOINTMENTS FOR E. KILLINGLY, CT.

Eld. H. F. Carpenter.....................March 25th

Meetings commence at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Brethren wishing to correspond with the church at East Killingly, Ct., will direct their letters to Warren Taft.

J. HEMENWAY.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

Reuben Chase.—All right.

A Richardson.—We know nothing of him.

J. S. Young.—We have no printing done in our office. If we publish the verses, will send you extra copies.

Simeon Bliss.—You can obtain the former from Geo. Storrs, Ed. Bible Examiner, New York; and the latter from J. Blain, Buffalo, N. Y.

Cash Receipts.

J M Chaffee 245, $3 44; L Abbey 234, $1.82.

E M Haggett 259, M R Chickering 247, W Stark 247, Mrs. M M Ross 247, D Morrison 237, R Rush 232, L Jones 246,—50 cts. each.

Mrs. P Green 255, N Hart 208, S Harding 260, Mrs. L Bills 260, A C Powell 251, G R Baker 260, A Messer 247, G F Fowler 278, N Lasell 260, M Sperry 260, L Moran 260, N McCulloch 260, G E Markham 260, J Allen 256, R Taylor 260, B Wheelock 256, A Richardson 260, S M Lum 260, R Noe 260, T C Smith 260, A H Bonnell 260, Mrs. P Rockwood 254, H B Sevey 260, A M Bossley 260, O G Smith 234, M L Stocking 260, S Converse 260, N Mather 260, J P Brock 260, D Budd 250, G W Whiting 260, J Young 260, Mrs. L Y Marsh 260, Mrs. R Price 260, W S Moulton 260, S McDaniel 256, J McCammon 270, W D Jones 255, J Frost 260, A Corliss 254, R Parker 260, S Fannce 260, J Vickery 260, M J Robinson 260, S B Hoyt 264, L A Hoyt 234, E Hodgson 247, Mrs. M H Austin 299, W W Taylor 260, A M S Bement 286, J P Darnes 260,—$1.00 each.

Mrs. H H Rogers 286, D W Miller 262, D Taylor 286, W H Williams 286, Ira Polley 286, M W Benham, 2 copies, 234, H Finn 286, Mrs. E T Fellows 286, S P Hubbard 286, I Davis 286, Mrs. M C Allen 286, W L Stroud 286, D C Bosse 277, L Archibald 286, Lc. Mason 261, T Pringle 286, C M Sperry 286, J Pinkie 275, A Rowe 286, Alex. Thompson p. pd. 290, W B Long 286, S Howland 261, L Hitchcock 286, G P Grant 296, A H Watson 263, Mrs. H K Wright 260,—$2.00 each.

Books and Tracts.

J Polley $3 54, W Sheldon 46 cts, J Dudley 24 cts, W E Farnold 23 cts, W Stark 40 cts, D S Clark 30 cts, J M Chaffee 56 cts, R Page 28 cts, L Archibald 6 cts, N Banning $1.00, J W Bradburn $1.00, Dr. J Davis 6 cts, Mrs. A Akers $1 21, D Dudley $1.00, P Alling 26 cts, L L Partridge 20 cts.

Books and Tracts.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

Discussion of the Doctrine of The State of the Dead and Punishment of the Wicked; between W. W. Clayton and M. Grant. Price 25 cts; postage 3 cts. Bound 40 cts; postage 9 cts. 1-4th off per dozen.

Human Destiny. A Discussion: Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all? By C. F. Hudson and Sylvanus Cobb. 478 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00 post paid.

The Nature of Faith, and the Evils of Sect. By the late W. H. Starr. With a Memoir and Notes by C. F. Hudson. 289 pp. 12mo. Price 60 cts. Postage 16 cts.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 6 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

The Soul—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 6 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

The Spirit—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruah and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 6 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 5 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

Anti-Eternal Torment. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 3 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 9 cts.

The Rights of Wrong, or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single. 5 copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $2.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 128 William St., New York; Truman and Spafford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, postpaid $2.25.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 2 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

The Saint's Inheritance, by Wm. Sheldon.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price $5.00.

Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with camp-meetings and revivals. Written by himself. This is a very entertaining work and will be read with interest by all. Price [illegible] cts—postage 10 cents.

Words of Warning. 3 cts. single; postage 1 ct.; $1.50 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have made arrangements so that we can furnish them as low or lower than they can be bought at any other place in the city.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed: or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. An excellent tract to throw light upon the Scriptures, and upon the theological errors of the day. Every one should have a copy. Price $3.00 per hundred,—3 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents, well calculated to benefit the readers. Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred; 2 cents single; postage 1 cent.

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, Genesee, N. Y. Price $1., postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 2 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils, at the judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected, and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 3 cts.—postage 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms: or, the kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $6.00 per hundred, 50 cts. per dozen, 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. B. Brooks, No. 3 Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Waite, Warwick, R. I.:—

The Harp, by Elder Himes; 200 Stories for Children; Satanic Delusion; Bible Hell; Great Controversy.

We have also on hand the following

PUBLICATIONS
of
H. L. HASTINGS,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor; edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 420 pp. [illegible]

The Great Controversy between God and Man: its Origin, Progress, and End; by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 167 pp. 60

Reasons for My Hope, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 123 pp. Paper 20 cts. Cloth 30

Forever with the Lord, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 00

Earth's Destiny, as revealed in Scripture, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing 00

Tracts on Prophecy, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 60

Tracts on Immortality, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 220 pp. 60

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith, by Robert Patterson. 12mo. 330 pp. 75

The Infidel's Fate, by a converted Infidel. Cloth gilt. 25

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, by Wm Ramsey, D D, edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 120 pp. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40

Pauline Theology: The Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment, as Taught by Paul, by H. L. Hastings. 84 pp. Paper, 15

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life, by H. L. Hastings. Paper, 67 pp. 10

Tracts of 24 Pages.—3 cts. single; $1 for 1600 pages—by mail 1200 pp for $1

The Church not in Darkness,	by H. L. H.	pages	24
The Three Worlds,	by H. L. H.	-	24
The Last Days,	by H. L. H.	-	24
Plain Truths,	by H. L. H.	-	20
Will all men be saved?	by H. L. H.	-	24
Voice of Warning	by D. T. Taylor	-	20
The New Heavens and Earth,	"	-	24
Ancient Landmarks, 6 Nos,	-	-	24
Olive Leaves, 9 Nos	by H. L. H. &c.	-	18
Important Questions, 9 Nos	by H. L. H.	-	36
State of the Dead,	by John Milton	-	14
The Intermediate State,	by H. G.	-	24
Destiny of the Wicked	by H. L. H.	-	12
Future Punishment,	by H. G.	-	12
The Key of Truth,	by W. S.	-	12
Man's Future State	"	-	12
Letter on Hell	by Adoniram Judson	-	12
The Day of Judgment,	by St. Cyril	-	12
Outline of the Coast,	by A Voyager	-	8
The Night Cometh,	by John Adey	-	8
Gems, 9 Nos., poetry,	by H. L. H.	-	12
One Thing	"	-	8
The Coming and Kingdom of Christ,	-	-	4
The Duration of the Earth	by A. Clarke	-	4
Hope and Duty of the Church,	M. Henry	-	4
The Restitution,	by St. Cyril	-	4
A Warning Voice,	by Cotton Mather	-	4
Loving Christ's Appearing,	by Baxter	-	4
Little Children, Love one another	-	-	4
The One Resting Place,	by H. Bonar	-	4
My Friend,	by H. L. H.	-	4
Abundant Grace	"	-	4
Wondrous Love	"	-	4
Go in Peace	"	-	4
Living Water	"	-	4
The Banner	Anonymous	-	4
The Blood of Christ	"	-	4
Are you a Christian?	by H. L. H.	-	4
Why not Now?	"	-	4
Are you Pardoned?	"	-	4
Are you Safe?	"	-	4
Are you Saved?	"	-	4
Do you Pray?	"	-	4
When Will He Come?	by J. C. Ryle	-	4
Statement of Account	by H. L. H.	-	1
Man in Death	By Bishop Law	-	4
Forty Questions on Immortality	-	-	4

SCRIPTURE SEARCHERS.

No. 1. The Destiny of the Wicked	1
No. 2. The State of the Dead	1
No. 3. The Coming of Jesus	1
No. 4. The Resurrection	1
No. 5. Plain Truths	1
No. 6. The Judgment	1

POETRY.

Brother, Shall we Meet?	by H. L. H.	2
Sister, Shall we Meet?	"	2
Stand up for Jesus!	"	1
The Harvest is Past	"	1
Beyond!	"	1
At Rest!	"	1
We would see Jesus	by Josephine	1
A Little While!	by J. C.	1

LEAFLETS FOR LETTERS.

Life Insurance, Envelope Size	H. L. H.	12
Home	"	[illegible]
Lost, Lost	"	8
Peace in Christ	"	4
Worth Knowing	"	4
All things are Yours	"	4
Now	"	4
Assurance	"	4
About God	"	4

The foregoing Books and Pamphlets will be sent by mail, postage paid, upon the receipt of the amount of their respective prices. Orders with the cash are solicited. Persons who send $8, with the order, shall receive $12 worth of books at the retail prices. Tracts are sent by mail, 1200 pages, at the rate of a dollar. When sent by express, or at the expense of the buyer, 1600 pages will be sold for one dollar. Terms cash. Persons who desire to do good can obtain Four hundred tracts, of four pages each, for $1. These may be widely distributed and open the way for religious conversation. Persons may thus be a blessing to those around them. The poor can have any of these tracts sent to them free, by remitting stamps to pay the postage. Ministers can have specimen copies of the tracts and pamphlets sent free. All letters, orders, and remittances should be addressed to the Publisher,

H. L. HASTINGS, 43 Weybosset St., Providence, R. I.

January, 1860.

 These publications can be obtained in Boston, of Miles Grant, 167 Hanover st.; New York, G. W. Young, 128 William st.; Philadelphia, A. R. Porter, 725 Erie st., and they can be ordered of the publisher through all Booksellers.

Bibles of the British and Foreign Bible Society, [illegible] references [illegible] 25, Nonpareil, [illegible] Bourgeois [illegible], $1.25 to $2.16. Pearl, references [illegible] to $2.75. Diamond, marginal references, 75 cts to [illegible]. [illegible] of the difference in prices.

Not Very Far.

[illegible]
The narrow crossing of a slender stream [illegible]
[illegible]
From the bright dwelling of the glorified—
The land of which I dream.

Those peaks are near r heaven than earth below;
[illegible] higher than they seem;
[illegible] the clouds they touch, nor the soft brow
[illegible] unbending snare, as we deem;
[illegible] flow of heaven that they upbear,
And [illegible] old and wildly-rugged stair,
[illegible] the land where all is fair—
[illegible] of which I dream.

Those ocean-waves, in their unmeasur'd sweep,
[illegible], bluer than they seem;
True image here of the celestial deep—
[illegible] the fullness of the unfailing stream—
[illegible]'s glassy sea of everlasting rest,
With not a breath to stir its silent breast,
That [illegible] the land where all are blest—
The land of which I dream.

And those [illegible] stars, the bridal gems of night,
[illegible], lovelier than they seem;
Fill'd from the inner fountain of deep light,
They [illegible] heaven's own beam;
[illegible] from their throne of glorious blue,
[illegible] ever ancient, ever new,
Of [illegible] above, beyond our view—
The land of which I dream.

This life of ours, these lingering years of earth,
Are brighter, swifter than they seem;
A [illegible] while, and the great second birth
Of time shall come, the prophet's ancient theme.
Then [illegible] the King, the Judge, at length shall come,
And [illegible], where we sadly roam,
Shall give the kingdom for our endless home—
The land of which I dream.

—Lo do: Quar. Jour. of Prophecy

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

The Christian's Hope.

Smith. Brother Brown, you have been a professor of religion a good many years; and are, I believe, a deacon in the church; you will not then think it out of place for me to inquire what are your views with regard to the nature and reality of the christian's hope of a future life?

Brown. Yes, Brother Smith, I am always ready to give to every one who asks me, a reason for the hope that is in me; yet this is so well known to christians, in this enlightened age, that I am rather surprised that you should ask me such a question.

Smith. Well, then, by way of beginning, I want to inquire if you do not think that the hope of the christian should be well grounded on some plain and clear promises of God's word; and that any hope not founded on these promises, is not a good hope, and will only lead those who trust in it, into error, presumption, and danger?

Brown. Certainly, we must have a promise of good things to come; the word of Him who cannot lie, the sure word of God, as the foundation of our hope; to hope or expect what God has not promised in his word, can only be productive of disappointment in the end; we are, I think, perfectly agreed on this point.

Smith. Now, then, I am prepared to hear what is your hope of a future life, and on what plain declaration of the Bible you have built that hope, to make it good and sure.

Brown. My hope of a future life is founded on the great doctrine of "the immortality of the soul," so clearly taught in the word of God, and which is the foundation of the christian's hope of immortality. I have likewise many precious promises, that when this frail body returns to the dust, the soul of the believer in Christ shall ascend up to heaven, and enjoy the blissful presence of the Savior, till he comes to judge the quick and the dead; and after the judgment of the great day, the souls and bodies of the righteous will be re-united, and taken to heaven, there to enjoy the presence of God and the Lamb forever. This is the substance of my hope, and I believe it is built on the sure foundation of God's holy word.

Smith. Supposing you should discover a friend or neighbor who professed to have a hope different from yours, that had no warrant from scripture, but was clearly contradicted by many passages of God's word, such as the transmigration of souls, or universal salvation. Should you think such a man safe in embracing such an error, and living and dying in a hope that never could be realized?

Brown. No, Brother Smith, a hope that has no foundation in the word of God, is not worth a straw. I should advise such a man to seek for something real and not imaginary. I should tell him he was building on a false foundation, that would fail him in his utmost need, and leave him at the last with a lie in his right hand.

Smith. Will you be kind enough to give me a few passages of scripture, on which you rely, as proving what you consider the fundamental doctrine of the immortality of the soul; on which your hope of a future life is based.

Brown. Why, Brother Smith, this is a doctrine so universally believed that it is almost self-evident, and surely we need no labored argument to prove what none but infidels and Atheists have disputed; and [illegible] are not going to call in question a doctrine of such universal acceptation.

Smith. I have for some time been of the opinion that it is not safe to place too much reliance on any doctrine, merely because it is a popular belief; or because it has been handed down from the "sages of antiquity." I wish you to give me positive proof, from the Bible, of the immortality of the soul; if you cannot do this, according to your own statement, it can be no sure foundation for my hope, or yours.

Brown. I have always considered this subject as a settled point, and must say I have never given myself much trouble to hunt up scriptural proof, to substantiate a fact that is so universally acknowledged as true; and it seems strange to me, that no passage of the word of God occurs to my mind to prove the doctrine in question; yet I have no doubt, in my own mind, that the Bible is full of it, from Genesis to Revelations.

Smith. Ah! Brother Brown, I think you will have to confess yourself lame on this subject. I have searched the word of God through and through again; and I can confidently affirm that "immortal soul, deathless spirit, or never dying soul," or anything equivalent to such a term, is not to be found there. The best argument you have is mere inference, but on a subject of such vital importance as this, I want, and must have, a thus saith the Lord—I may infer a thousand things true, or not true, but if man is immortal, surely God has given us some proof of it in his word; and not sent us groping amongst heathenish fables to find it out, if this is truly the christian's hope of a future life.

Brown. By denying the immortality of the soul, Bro. Smith, you appear to me to destroy all hope of a future life, and reduce man, in death, to the same condition as the beasts that perish; if there is no part of man that survives the death of the body, then we may say with the unbeliever, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

Smith. Then I understand you to confess, that if it can be proved, that the soul of man is not immortal, and survives not the death of the body, your hope of a future life, and the prospect of going to heaven at death, would be a false hope, and, as you say, "not worth a straw."

Brown. You would not surely wish to deprive me of the hope of eternal life, which every christian anticipates, and which appears to be a natural impulse and desire of the human heart; surely God would not have implanted such a desire in the mind of man, had it not been a reality and not a fiction; this hope is too great and good to be a false hope, there must be in God's word a foundation for it, and I am resolved to find it out.

Smith. It is far from my wish, dear brother, to deprive you of a good hope, full of immortality; all I wish is, to get you off a vain and false, though too popular foundation, and fix your feet on a rock, that can never be moved, the sure promise of God in his holy word,—that immortality or eternal life, is no natural attribute of man, for he lost all title to it at the fall; but it is the gift of God through Jesus Christ, and by a resurrection from the dead. If I have a good hope, I must have something to predicate it upon, or it will fail me in the day of trial. Let me contrast your hope of a future life with mine; and then you can judge for yourself, which is a scriptural hope. They cannot both be right, and I must say, I dare not trust my hope of immortality on such a sandy foundation as the one you have chosen. It makes no difference to me how many build on it, in these last days, if it is not the foundation of the apostles and prophets,—Jesus Christ being the chief cornerstone; it will not stand in the judgment of the great day.

1. Your hope of a future life is in the immortality of the soul. Not a single proof of this in the Bible.

2. Your hope is to go to heaven at death. Not a single promise to any one of going to heaven at death, or at any other time.

3. After the judgment, you hope to be raised from the dead, the body and soul re-united, and then removed to some unknown sphere, to enjoy the presence of God and Christ forever. Not one promise in God's word, that the body and soul will ever be "re-united," or that any man will ascend to heaven. It is all fable, a mixture of heathen philosophy and perverted christianity; to draw away the mind from the truth, and to substitute the lie of Satan, for the truth of God; "Ye shall not surely die." Now see the contrast:

1. The christian's hope of eternal life lies solely in the promise of God in Christ to the true believer. A free gift of God, to all those who patiently continue in well doing. For this we have scripture proof in abundance—the gift of God is eternal life, etc.

2. This hope will be realized at the resurrection of the just, and not at death—death is not our Savior, but Christ, the life-giver. For this we have scripture proof abundant: ye shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.—Luke 14:15, [illegible]

[illegible] restore all things: to come again the second time, to set up his kingdom, under the whole heavens; to raise the dead, to translate the living saints, to judge and destroy the wicked, and to cleanse his kingdom from sin, death, and pain forever. This was the hope of the prophets, apostles, and the primitive church. And although this hope has been obscured, by human tradition, and the power of Popish superstition, and man-worship, God has not left himself without witnesses to this soul-reviving christian's hope, so fully supported by His sacred word. Now, Bro. Brown, is not this a better hope, and founded on better promises, than the one you have presented, and on which so many, in these days, cast their only hope of life and salvation?

Brown. I cannot but acknowledge that you have more scripture proof for the hope you cherish; and I propose, by God's grace, to look into this subject, and if I have been in error, may God direct me in the way of truth.

J. Parry.

For the Crisis.

Journal Paragraphs.

On Jan. the 3d, I left home for Kingston, Mass., where I formerly lived, connected with the Baptist church in that place. About four years of my life were very pleasantly spent with that people. The place and people are still dear to me, though eighteen years have made great changes by death and removal. The church there has been greatly reduced in numbers since I was with them. With others, both of their deacons have died, with whom I took sweet counsel while going to the house of God together. I have often visited this place, and always have been cordially greeted, not only by the members of that church, but by all others of the place with whom I was formerly acquainted. Never, however, did it seem more sad than on this visit. Besides the great number of deaths, several of the old friends are now confined at home, or leaning on the top of their staff, from very age and other infirmities.

I stayed there over the Sabbath, and gave seven discourses in the Town House, on the gospel of our salvation. On Sabbath evening, word came that Bro. Justus Harlow, of Plymouth, was dead, and requesting me to attend the funeral, which I did in the Baptist church of that place on the Wednesday following, as noticed in another paper.

I then returned home, and through the goodness of God found all well. Remained over two Sundays. On the last, baptized six happy souls in that great and mighty ocean so graphically described by David in Ps. 1: 4. The water was cold, but with warm hearts we were blessed in the service.

On the 26th I left home for Worcester; and in the evening gave a lecture at the chapel in Thomas Street, where Bro. Ross preaches. Had a good attendance, and enjoyed it myself. Next day, in the last train, left for Springfield, and arrived just in season for the appointment I had made with Bro. Ladd. Found their small hall full to hear on the Rich man and Lazarus. Good attention; think some saw the truth; if so, hope it will make them free. Slept over night with our old friends, Bro. Lornard and family, who formerly lived in Hartford, Ct.

Next day, the 28th, went to Hartford, where I stayed until Feb. 6th, over two Sundays. Here I found the friends well, and, considering all they have had to pass through, in an interesting condition. Had a good season in visiting and speaking to them. May the great Shepherd provide for and bless them in their labors of love. It was good to be with those friends once more.

Feb. 6th, went to New York. Put up with Bro. P. Richardson, who was formerly in Hartford. Here, as in every other place, I found a good house. Had an interview with Bro. George Storrs. He was in good health and spirits, and much encouraged in the republishing of his Monthly Examiner.

Thursday, the 9th, took the boat for Providence, arriving safely Friday morning. In the evening held a meeting at the house of Bro. Hastings; enjoyed the little time I was there in seeing old friends. Saturday took stage for North Attleboro, where I stayed over Sunday, making an exchange with Bro. Cunningham. With the friends there, I have lived several years in times past. The Advent society is in a good state, comparatively, having been very much enlarged within three years. They have a large society, and are expecting to build a good place for worship this season. They now hold their meetings in a hired hall. The Lord bless them still more in every good word and work.

The last Sunday in Feb. and the first in March I was with the friends at Lowell. Found them as usual, interested in the blessed hope, and praying for an increase of faith and prosperity. It was good to see them, as in other places, who have long been looking for the promises of Jesus in the restitution of all things spoken [illegible]

[illegible] Golden Salve. This article is now being extensively introduced, and is, without doubt, one of the best articles of the kind, for all external application, ever prepared.

Some three days after returning from Lowell, I was called back to attend the funeral of our aged Bro. Fowler. Bro. F. had been in the faith of the gospel of the kingdom for many years. He died in the full expectation of soon seeing his Savior in his coming. I had a good season in speaking on the resurrection of the just. If good folks must die, I do enjoy the privilege of speaking at their burial. I do know that Jesus will raise them to eternal life; and I love to give the Lord's word for it.

Last Sunday, March 11th, I was at home, where I am happy to be. The church is in a very interesting state in connection with the labors of Bro. George Champlin. May the Lord continue his blessing, guide us all in the path of duty peace and glory. Amen.

J. S. White.

East Boston.

For the Crisis.

Above, Before, High, from Heaven.

What is the import of these terms as derived from their use in Holy Scripture? Are they analagous, and if so, what is the comprehensive truth taught by them? It seems clear that the truth conveyed is embodied in John 1: 30; 3: 27, 31.—"After me cometh a man who was preferred before me: for he was before me." "A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven. He that cometh from above is above (higher than) all; he that is of the earth (John) is earthly and speaketh of the earth: he that cometh from heaven is above (before and higher than) all,"—superior to all and having the pre-eminence. John was greater than all God's mere earth-born servants. He was in advance of all who had gone before him, as to his acquaintance with God's unfolding plan; but he that is from heaven—born of God—is above, before, or higher than he.

I. The Christ is "above (epano) all," because "He came from above."—John 3: 31. The adopted children of God by faith are "born from above"—margin; or another,—John 3: 3—7; Phil. 3: 14. The material city of the saints is "the Jerusalem above,"—Ano.—Gal. 4: 26. The word "Ano" is the substance of the other words in composition—epano—another, etc., the addition being possibly a merely dialectic verbiage; or at most giving it emphasis, as in the form, "epano."

II. The Christ in coming "from above" came "from heaven."—John 3: 31. Thus the redeemed—"born from above"—get their calling and mission, like John, "from heaven,"—1 John 3: 27: 17: 14, 16,—"not from the world." Their calling is (Ano) the high (above) calling. The inheritance "is reserved in heaven."—1 Pet. 1: 4; Heb. 10: 31. "The city—the New Jerusalem—cometh down from heaven—from my God"—Rev. 3: 12. "From heaven" applies alike to all these.

III. The Christ—who came from heaven and is "above all" is also, and in the same sense, or in the like use of language, "BEFORE ALL"! "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world. This is he of whom I said, AFTER me cometh a man which is preferred before me, for he was BEFORE ME".—John 1: 30; 8: 58; Col. 1: 17. This passage is rendered rather freely in our version, "preferred" being used doubtless to express the translators' conception of the meaning—or of what ought, in their view, to have been said by the Baptist. But the two words, "after" and "before," are simply adverbs of time: "After (opiso) me cometh a man who was (emprosthen) before me; for he was before (protos, the first, the beginning—the one who takes precedence of) me."

"BEFORE, above, from heaven," etc., are used not exclusively of the personal Messiah; but of the saints' "high calling"—of their maternal city, etc., expressing their pre-eminence. "Above" "from heaven," etc., do not express mere locality, but superiority, supremacy, and divinity.

"Before," in state, as thus used, is consistent with "after," in time! As to time, He was born after John. He entered on his ministry after John. His death was after John's. Yet He was "before" him; because He is above, superior to, and the chief of all; "That in all things He might have the pre-eminence."—Col. 1.

"Before," in time, and "after," in time, is not here asserted. This would make the word "yea and nay"—ignore the best understanding, and confound all faith, as to the most palpable facts in the world's history.

J. B. C.

For the Crisis.

Asbestos.

In the discussion between Eld. Grant and Dr. Litch, an argument was offered on the phrase "unquenchable fire," in the statement that this denotes "inconsumable fire." (See p. 125.) I was surprised by this statement, and felt that I had learned Greek to no purpose, if this translation should prove correct. "Fire inconsumable" seemed [illegible] the Greek root, sbennumi, ever means "to burn."

But an explanation of the mistake at once occurred to me. I had heard of asbestos, a porous mineral not affected by fire, and which has been sometimes spun and woven into cloth. I presumed that the gentleman who offered the above translation was acquainted with this mineral and its properties; and I thought he might have relied on the scholarship of the mineralogist who named it asbestos, and that thus he inferred that the Greek word means "inconsumable."

My conjecture seems to be confirmed. I have just met a review of Dobney, by the same gentleman, in which he remarks on Mark 9: 45. "The original reads thus: eis to pur to asbeston, 'into the fire asbestos.' Asbestos is absolutely inconsumable by the action of fire. It is a substance of such a nature that what is enclosed in it will also be preserved from consumption in fire. The idea, therefore, is not simply that it is unquenchable, but absolutely inconsumable." (Pneumatologist, p. 226.) And on page 274 he also says: "Asbestos, instead of being unquenchable is 'inconsumable.'"

The translation is thus offered three times by the same writer; and the only proof given is the "therefore" above cited. But it is no disrespect to the mineralogist who applied the name to the mineral, to suppose that he erred in Greek, and we know how easily any name is perpetuated. I have considered such to be the fact in this case; and I shall so believe, until at least one passage from a Greek writer, or the authority of some lexicographer, is offered to show that asbestos means "inconsumable."

C. F. H.

Selections.

Interesting Conversion at Ahmednuggur.

During the rebellion in India the minds of the people were everywhere much excited. In places far away from the scenes of actual outbreak, men were talking of these matters. Even where they were really favorable to the English, they seemed to be ready to welcome the coming of the rebels, and to hope for the establishment of native rule again. At Ahmednuggur, nearly a thousand miles away from the center of rebellion, some were accustomed to say that the English rule was near its end. The native christians were often taunted by their opposers with the fact that their English protectors would soon be driven from the land, that the Mogul was again seated upon his throne at Delhi, that he had given orders to destroy all the christians in the land; and then it was asked, what will you do? We shall soon have the pleasure of cutting your throats.

A young Hindoo, a coppersmith by trade, told his fellows that they need not imagine the English were to be so easily overcome. The God of the English, he said, is more powerful than the God of the Mohammedans, and he will give them the victory. This conviction was impressed on his mind by what he heard of the conduct of the native christians, who lived in the revolted provinces. Many of these had suffered martyrdom. They maintained their faith in Christ when death in hideous forms was threatened, if they remained firm, and when life was promised on condition of their denying him and returning to their former faith. The accounts of this constancy made a deep impression on this young man. He had not, up to this time, attended upon the preaching of the missionaries, and had no proper knowledge of christianity. He soon began to attend the service at one of the chapels. At first he came timidly, and sat in the doorway, that he might not attract attention. After a time he gained courage, and at length entered and took his seat with the other worshipers. He profited by what he heard. When christianity was attacked in his presence, he was ready to defend it. In his simple faith he was enabled to silence the opposition of his fellow-workmen, and others whom he met, whether Hindoos or Mohammedans. After a good deal of intercourse with the Christians, giving gratifying evidence of a real change of heart, he was received to the church, on profession of his faith, the last Sabbath of October, 1859.

For many months after he himself was convinced of the truth of christianity, he did not dare to speak to his young wife of the change in his sentiments. He feared that she would leave him when she knew that he no longer worshiped idols. With hardly an exception, the wives of converts from the higher castes have left their husbands on their conversion. They have, in some instances, with great difficulty been persuaded to rejoin them again. When they themselves have been willing to remain with their husbands, their friends have often taken them away, and have forcibly kept them. Sometimes the courts have been appealed to, and through them the wife has been enabled to rejoin her husband. So this young man, from fear of the consequences, held his peace as long as he could. When he could no longer keep the matter from her, we can readily imagine that he would make known his feelings in a way calculated to lead her to the same faith. He would show her that this new faith was adapted to her needs; that by means of it his love to her would be purer and more enduring; that it would raise her to an equality with him; that she might cherish the same hope that he had; that she would find in Christ deliverance from all her vague fears, and a sure support in all her trials—a hope of everlasting life. To his great joy, she readily fell in with these views, and declared her desire for the same knowledge of Christ, her wish to adopt the same faith which [illegible] upon himself, upon her, and all their friends, by forsaking the religion of his fathers, and embracing that of the hated and despised foreigners. She promised her daughter that if she would leave her husband, and return with her to her home, she would get for her another husband. All her entreaties were of no avail. To them all the daughter replied with an undaunted tone. She had already advanced so far in the knowledge of Christ that she said to her mother, "I am so fully convinced of the truth of christianity, that even if my husband should not go on to profess it openly, I feel that I must seek to secure the salvation of my own soul." The mother returned disappointed to her home, and the wife was permitted to profess Christ at the same time with her husband.—Independent.

"I'm tired of parties, modes and forms,
And flatteries paid to dying worms,
Their conversation cloys,
Their armors and their stuff;
But I can ne'er enjoy enough
Of thy dear company,
My God, the source of all my joys."

Golden Bits.

The soul has its mother, Love, and she says to Conscience, "Here, do such and such things;" to Veneration, "Here, do such and such things;" and to Reason, "Here, do such and such things;" and Conscience and Veneration and Reason, and all the other faculties, run to do as they are bid; but it is the mother, Love, that sends them. They all represent her, and perform her errands. Though each one walks with a separate name, Love sits behind them, and they obey her mandates.

Out of love as a mere emotion some good may grow; but only through love as a soul-filling, soul-controlling, and life-estate, shall we know the true meaning of peace, of joy, of rest, of wisdom, and, withal, of fellowship with God.

Every man should feel that the question of his piety does not depend upon whether he does more right things than wrong things. He should feel that his piety is lessened by everything he does which is adverse to christianity.

Have you ever heard a man bring a harp into tune? He takes his fork, and gets the concert-pitch in one chord. Then he goes to work to bring all the other chords to the same pitch. And such a groaning and complaining as ensues cannot be imagined by one who has never heard it. The process of chording a harp and a heart are very much alike. This groaning and complaining continues till every chord is brought to the concert pitch, and then the harp gives forth but one single harmonious impulse, and the soul of music is there.

And so the chords of a man's soul need to be brought into unison with love, for from that must all powers take their pitch. Pride and vanity, and every other instinct of the soul, must be tuned up till their vibrations are consonant with those of love. This is christian education. This is what we mean by growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

There are many men whose religion is full of worship, full of duty, in a large way, and full of thought, but who leave out of their religion the whole gospel of love. Now what the spade, and the hoe, and the plow, and the harrow, and the team, and the cart are without summer, worship, and duty, and thought are without love in the soul. They are to be used in the temperature of love in order to have their highest value.

The change of heart that brings love into every part of the soul, is being born again indeed. There is no other change so absolute and significant, there is no other change so revolutionary in human life and character, as that change which transforms the varying elements of the human soul into an unvarying disposition.

Odd Place for a Lark's Nest.—At the present time, near Barrassie, a mother lark may be observed assiduously hatching three eggs in her nest, built in the inside of the rails of the Kilmarnock mineral line, under one of the "sleepers." The engines pass and repass over it, but the determined lark will not stir. A day or two ago some cinders fell from an engine while passing, and consumed half the nest, but the mother did not forsake her charge; maternal instinct was stronger than the fear of death; and she sat bravely on.—Kilmarnock Post.

Perseverance.

He who allows his application to falter, or shirks his work on frivolous pretexts, is on the sure road to ultimate failure. Let any task be undertaken as a thing not possible to be evaded, and it will soon come to be performed with alacrity and cheerfulness. The habit of strenuous, continued labor, will become comparatively easy in time, like every other habit. Thus even men with the commonest brains and the most slender powers will accomplish much, if they will but apply themselves wholly and indefatigably to one thing at a time.

Sir Charles Napier, when in India, encountered an army of 35,000 Beloochees with 2,000 men, of whom only 400 were Europeans. He charged them in the center up a high bank, and for three hours the battle was undecided. At last they turned and fled.

It is this sort of pluck, tenacity, and determined perseverance which wins soldiers, battles, and, indeed, every battle. It is the one neck nearer, that wins the race and shows the blood; the one pull more of the oar that proves the "bottoms of the fellow," as Oxford men say; it is the one march more that wins the campaign; the five minutes' more persistent courage that wins the fight. Though your force be less than another's, you equal and outmaster your opponent if you continue it longer and concentrate it more. The reply of the Spartan father, who said to his son, when complaining that his sword was too short, "Add a step to it," is applicable to everything in life. [illegible] giant in the pursuit of every high purpose in life. We must ourselves be and do, and not rest satisfied merely with reading and meditating over what other men have written and done. Our best light must be made life, and our best thought action. The humblest and least literate must train his sense of duty, and accustom himself to an orderly and diligent life. Though talents are the gift of nature, the highest virtue may be acquired by men of the humblest abilities, through careful self-discipline. At least we ought to be able to say, as Richter did, "I have made as much out of myself as could be made of the stuff, and no man should require more."—Self-Help.

Reading for Youth.

"The Mother's Faith."

A FACT.

"I should like to know what mother thinks of the Lord now!" exclaimed a little boy of ten years, as a group of half starved brothers and sisters were preparing for school without a breakfast, one bitter cold morning.

Well knew each member of that hungry band of little ones, that through all the trying scenes of poverty, in their father's long illness, a firm and unwavering faith had upheld their praying mother. But now when the last fire had been made, and the last frugal meal of baked potatoes eaten, and her own frail form was sinking beneath its burden of work and sorrow, the climax seemed reached.

"What does mother think of the Lord now?" fell upon the ears of one of the loveliest women I ever met. It was from the lips of her first born, her darling, for whose submission to God she had ever been hoping and striving. The words fell upon her heart like lead. It was a new test of her sorely tried faith, a new drop added to their bitter cup.

A long and severe sickness of her husband had reduced them to extreme poverty, and with no resource but the needle, it had been difficult to meet the demands of a large family, and perform sick room duties at the same time. When this eventful morning dawned, there was no more food in the house, and just wood enough to build one more fire. A slice of borrowed bread was toasted for the sick man, and his pillowed chair drawn before the last fire. He knew not the destitution, the toil, the self-sacrifice that oppressed his wife, he only saw the smiles, the industry, the neatness, and the patient waiting for brighter days.

When the daring words of the hungry boy fell upon that christian mother's ear, she just lifted up her heart, in the silent eloquence and fervor of ejaculatory prayer, known only to the toil-worn and working disciple. The answer came "The Lord is good, his mercy endureth forever." Her heart responded, and as she raised her eyes to the window, two good loads of wood standing there, testified that she had not thought too much of her Heavenly Father, or trusted in his promises too long. The sun shone again upon that household, and never more did Henry say, "I wonder what mother thinks of the Lord now."—Ex.

Your Mother.

Young man, are you not ashamed and afraid to treat your mother thus? There is no surer sign of a black heart, than unkind or disrespectful treatment towards a beloved parent. A son that will disobey his mother, exhibit a spirit of unkindness toward her, treat her disrespectfully, or abusively in the least, is sure to smart for it, sooner or later. Nature herself cries out in vengeance against it; all heaven cries out in vengeance against it; all heaven gathers blackness. The most fearful, awful judgments are denounced against disobedient, recreant sons and daughters, who trample on wholesome parental discipline. Hark:—"Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother: and all the people shall say amen." Deut. 27: 16. "The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it." Prov. 30: 17.

Hear a word from a kind, obedient, loving son, in speaking of the infantile recollections of his mother:—

The mere thought
Of her great love for me has brought
Tears to my eyes. Though far away,
It seems as it were yesterday.
And just as when I looked on high
Through the blue silence of the sky,
Fresh stars shine out and more and more
Where I could see so few before;
So, the more steadily I gaze
Upon those far-off, misty days,
Fresh words, fresh tones, fresh memories start,
Before my eyes and in my heart.

—Golden Rule.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we shall consider an obligation to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all [illegible]

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All [illegible] writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 237. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 1860. | VOL. XI. NO. 4.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

FOR TERMS, SEE FOURTH PAGE.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

"At Evening Time it shall be Light."

Zech. 14: 7.

When storm clouds threaten with their shade,
O look to Him, the arm of might,
Who said, "'tis I, be not afraid,"
I will give thee "songs in night;"
Though often dreary thy pathway,
That once was pleasant, shining bright;
Listen, and hear Jehovah say,
"At evening time it shall be light."

If called to rest in our last sleep,
Are not such blest, though lost to sight?
Soon we shall wake our life to reap,
And greet the endless morn of light;
No more to sigh, no more to weep,
Basking in realms of pure delight—
Fear nought—but near the Shepherd keep,—
"At evening time it shall be light."

Of God's own church—the word is spoken,
She shall shine forth in glory bright;
Even now, we see the token,
Conquerors have begun the fight;
When all kingdoms shall be shaken,
Truth will prevail o'er error's flight;
Signs approaching, now betoken,
"At evening time it shall be light."

Glorious as the sun in shining,
Mild as the moon that cheers the night,
Shedding down a radiant beaming,
Throwing on all a welcome light:
So when shall shine the church all glorious,
And every sect in love unite,
O'er every foe 't will prove victorious,—
"At evening time it shall be light."

M. C. Allen.

For the Crisis.

Born Again.

The subject of the "new birth" is one upon which there has been much discussion already; and it is not to provoke a controversy in these columns that I write this article; but in compliance with a request that I should do so. There are some who differ from me in this as in other points, whom I revere for their piety, esteem for their noble qualities, and love for their friendship; yet I shall not fail in my duty and attachment to them because my views in this matter are at some variance with theirs.

Nicodemus, who had seen the miracles which our Lord wrought, came to him by night, as likely that their conversation might not be interrupted by the crowds which pressed to hear the word, as from any fear of the Jews, and opened the conversation acknowledging the Divine authority by which the wonderful deeds were accomplished. We may very justly infer that the purpose of the great Rabbin was to inquire concerning the kingdom of the Messiah, which was expected and eagerly looked for about that time; and there may have been a suspicion in the ruler's mind that this Jesus Christ was in some way intimately connected with the ushering in of that great event. Our Lord, knowing his heart, abruptly broached the subject by making the strange and startling declaration—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Nicodemus was puzzled, and incredulously asked, "How can a man be born when he is old?" etc. Then was repeated the solemn, unequivocal condition, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

The point of dispute is, when the new birth takes place. Some say it is at conversion, others, at the resurrection of the just. Those who defend the latter, make use of a natural phenomenon attending man's entrance into the world, as referring to the first part of the condition. This I [illegible] tend that no part of the new birth has anything to do with the natural or physical.

[illegible]

The mysterious action of the Spirit upon the heart of man, and which, in my opinion, completes the new birth, cannot be explained. Our Lord could not have employed a simile more easily understood than by using the wind as an illustration of the mystic and powerful influence of the Spirit in the soul. The gentle breeze is heard and felt as it rustles through the foliage of the forest, making music with the thousand boughs; and as it kisses with grateful breath the burning brow of the fainting invalid, it bears upon its bosom the odor of myriads of flowers, and his sense is delighted with the sweet perfume. We know, but cannot see the messenger which brings the fragrance, but we are not the less thankful for its operations, or less sensible of its influence. The laboring ship careens to the heavy squall as it sweeps howling over the tumultuous sea; the sails are rent in ribbons from the bolt ropes, in the attempt to carry on and bear her past that dangerous reef. 'Tis vain, she strikes; and in a few minutes the iron-bound coast is strown with mangled bodies and fragments of the wreck. The same fury lays waste whole tracts of country, fells the tallest pine, uproots the sturdy oak, and levels with the earth man's proudest hope. And the agent of this devastation is unseen. It comes whence no one knows, and whither no man can tell.

Not less evident is the work of the Spirit. The drunkard abandons the demoralizing cup, the swearer prays, the blasphemer glorifies God, the proud rebel bows submissive to his Lord, and the dreary charnel-house of the sinner's heart is full of light and life.

Some of those who defer the new birth till the resurrection, say that this simile of the unseen, immaterial wind, is symbolical of the power of volition of the resurrected body. Surely, we will not carry this idea fully out; for will we not know where our friends are going and where they came from, in that state of enlightenment where we shall know even as we are known? We must remember that we look to having our inheritance upon the earth, and not in regions far beyond the stars. Peter in his 1st Epistle 2: 23 and 24, says,—"Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently; being born again, not of corruptible seed but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever." Again, in the second chapter, verses 1, 2, 3,—"Wherefore, laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as new born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby: if so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious." I would here remark that the man who has laid aside all the evils enumerated above, is not likely to commit sin while they remain in abeyance. Thus the Apostle speaks to those who, being born again, require the food of infant children that they may be strengthened and grow. In 1 John 5: 1, we read, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God:" who receives him as the Messiah and looks to him for pardon and remission of sins. In verse 4—"Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." "Beloved, let us love one another: for God is love: and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love: and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God and God in him."—1 John 4: 7, 16. Can this close affinity between God and man in the bonds of love, exist where the new birth has not been? I think not.

In Matthew 11: 25, Jesus saith, "I thank thee, oh Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." The wise and prudent, were the puffed up Pharisees—the babes, those born of the Spirit.

What christian is there among us who does not recollect his mighty struggling for deliverance when once he became aware of his state of bondage to Satan; when before him arose like an insurmountable barrier, the dark obstruction of past iniquity, the prayers and tears, the alternate rising and sinking of the heart as the uncertain, opaque back ground of the picture of futurity is now broken by a ray of hope, then darkened by shadows of despair? Then comes the saving belief which casts itself without a doubt at the foot of the cross, [illegible]

[illegible]

This is all my past experience teaches me—all that I can understand of a second birth.

Jno. F. Cotton.

P. S. If nothing prevents, I expect to be ready to launch the "Light Ship" the latter part of next month or first of May. I hope she wont get stuck or "hogged" for want of the "needful." Since I wrote last I have received the following monies, viz: From A Friend, 75 cts., L. R. Gilman, $1.00, Otis Irish, $5.00, Mary Stratton, $1.00, R. S. Robinson, $1.00, S. F. Woodward from a few Brn. and Srs., $2.00, Z. Whitney, $1.00, C. Farrington, $1.00

Remember, the tract is to catch sailors, and every one assisting has a share in the seine. Come, you that have plenty, shell out, you that have more than you need yourselves, give a little, you that have only good wishes, let's have your prayers, and she will go, depend on it.

Yours faithfully. J. F. C.

For the Crisis.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 2.

Text—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

8. An additional reason for believing this to be a parable, and not a record of literal facts, is, because to interpret it literally involves the record in a contradiction, an absurdity, and a falsehood.

First, we will observe the contradiction. The text positively declares, that "the rich man also died." Now does this mean literal death? So some interpret it. Well, the text says that "in hell HE lifted up HIS eyes, being in torments," etc. Now, reader, do you believe that this is a literal rich man, that literally died? Then you are forced to the conclusion by the pronoun "HE," which of course is used instead of the noun "man," that at the same time that he was dead, he was in conscious hell torments. This is an unreconcilable contradiction.

Secondly. Let us observe the absurdity. This Scripture not only declares that "the rich man also died," but that he was "buried," and then affirms that "in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments," etc. Now was there ever a greater absurdity? "The rich man also" (literally) "died." "The rich man also" (literally) "DIED, and was" (literally) "BURIED." "The rich man also" (literally) "died and was" (literally) "buried and" (literally) "in hell HE" (literally) "lifted up HIS" (literal) "eyes, being in" (literal) "torments," etc. O absurdity of absurdities! Reader, this is no quibble, it is the honest literal interpretation of the terms employed in the text and context.

Thirdly. We will prove the falsehood according to the literal interpretation. From the 19th verse to the 23d, embracing verses 19–22, this record is declared, by those who believe man to be conscious in death, or more properly after death, to be a literal narration of literal facts, and if the least exception is made, it is simply this clause: "And was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom," and some will not even make this an exception. There is certainly no propriety in thus doing, for it must be the hungry and sore beggar Lazarus that died, and the text declares that he "was carried," etc. Observe that this beggar had no burial, but "died and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." At the very point at which the rich man was buried, viz., at death, "the beggar died and was carried" away without burying. "The beggar was carried." Was the conscious life spirit entity the beggar? If so, what become of "THE REMAINS?" It proceeds to say, that "the rich man also died, and was buried, and in hell HE lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." This statement expresses the idea of conscious life torments, and intelligent discovery by the seeing with the eyes an entity, whom he had before seen, but now in company with Abraham. Now a literal interpretation of this gives this rich man his eyes, his sensibilities, and intelligent mind to recognize, and be recognized by seeing, those with whom he had previously been acquainted. Now, reader, can you believe an account like that to be a literal fact, when considering that this same dead man claims that he possesses a tongue, and awards to Lazarus the possession of a finger? [illegible]

I repeat, that such an interpretation makes the record bear upon its very surface falsehood, and therefore unfavorably reflects upon the wisdom [illegible] such contact can receive the natural effect of the water, viz., "cool," being at the same time a conscious life spirit entity. The thought of interpreting such a record literally, ought to occasion fear, lest, by such a course, the veracity of its author would be arrayed against the integrity of his nature.

9. The record in Lk. 16: 19–31, is a parable, and not a literal relation of literal facts, for by interpreting it literally, it is arrayed against other Scripture besides itself, and occasions contradiction.

Our text says, that "in hell he lifted up his eyes." Hell is here translated from "HADES." "This term is a representative of the Heb. term Sheol. As the Septuagint translates sheol by hades sixty times out of sixty-three, it must be apparent that both of them have the same meaning: Death; state of death, the dominion of death, the grave, as a general receptacle of the dead." Bible vs. Tradition, p. 207: Said Dr. Clarke, "The original word hades from a, not, and idein, to see . . answering to sheol in Hebrew." On Matt. 11: 23, where he says, "here it means the state of the utmost wo, ruin, and desolation to which these impenitent cities should be reduced. This prediction of our Lord was literally fulfilled; for, in the wars between the Romans and Jews, these cities were totally destroyed, so that no traces are now found of Bethsaida, Chorazin or Capernaum. See Bishop Pearce." He declares that it has a similar meaning to the Anglo-Saxon word helan, to cover or hide.

Another writer affirms, that it means "unseen, the invisible, obscure, dark." According to the Englishman's Greek Concordance, this word "hades" is used in the New Testament but eleven times. Twice in reference to Capernaum, which, as we have seen, refers to their desolation by the Romans, which was destroyed in about forty years after Christ's prediction. Matt. 11: 23; Lk. 10: 15. Once in reference to the church, Matt. 16: 18. See Isa. 38: 10; where it evidently denotes the grave. Twice it is employed when speaking of Christ. Acts 2: 27, 31. On verse 31, said Dr. Clarke, the words, "he psuche autou, his soul, are omitted by the ABCD, Syriac, Coptic, ETHIOPIC," (therefore translated by Wakefield, in his testament, 'That his life was not left in the grave, and that his body did not see corruption,') and Vulgate. Griesbach has left them out of the text." Here, then, it must be evident that the term hades denotes the grave. Once in Rev. 1: 18, where Dr. Clarke acknowledges that by the term hades here, "we should understand it not as hell, nor the place of separate spirits, but merely as the GRAVE." See his reasons in this place. Hades is used once in Rev. 6: 8, where death and hell or hades is personified. Said Dr. Clarke, "And hell followed with him." "The grave, or state of the dead, received the slain," adding that this is a very elegant prosopopœia, or personification." Once in 1 Cor. 15: 55, where it is translated "grave." We have now three more instances of the use of hades translated hell, and for a correct understanding of them observe a few points. These texts are Lk. 16: 23; Rev. 20: 13, 14.

As in several instances we have quoted Dr. Clarke as authority, it is no more than right to remark, that on these texts his sentiments were, as many now hold, that "hades is the place of separate spirits." We shall give our reasons for denying this position:

1. By showing that such a decision necessarily results in a contradiction of one portion of the Scriptures with another. The parable which we are investigating does not affirm that both of the parties went to hades, but only one. It therefore does not teach, with equal clearness, that hades is the abode of the good and bad.

2. The term hades, hell in the Scriptures, applies to one of three places. Either the grave, or a place of punishment, or state of death. It is declared of all who die, righteous and wicked, that they go to "hades." It can only be true of all, that they are in the grave, or state of death.

3. In the parable, the term "hades," if urged to denote an intermediate conscious state of the righteous and wicked, of punishment or reward, it proves too much, as it [illegible]

[illegible]

penalties, it is evident that in the Scriptures, no signification of the term is to be admitted, only that which is perfectly in accordance with the economy of truth, and not destructive of, or antagonistic to, divine penalty, for the term "hades" does not express the penalty of the laws of God. This we shall clearly see, before finishing this point, to be the case, and indeed now we remark, that mankind comes from "hades" to judgment and rewards and punishments. See Rev. 20: 13.

5. We think that the Bible has corrected the heathen notion concerning "hades," by appropriating the term to an entirely different condition of things, and strictly in accordance with its etymology, from that which is specified by the heathen historians. Num. 16: 30.—"Go down quick into the pit," sheol. Eccl. 9: 10; 1 Cor. 15: 55, hades. We will now examine the three texts above referred to. Lk. 16: 23; Rev. 20: 13, 14. Certainly in the last mentioned text, if any, we should expect to find the doctrine of separate, intelligent, conscious spirits. Says Dr. Campbell on the Gospels, Diss. 6, speaking of "hades," "In my judgment it ought never to be rendered hell." Says Mr. Wakefield, on Lk. 16: 23, "And in the grave," hades, etc. His translation of Rev. 20: 13, 14, reads: "Death and the grave." In his note, Lk. 16: 23, at the close of his translation, on the expression, "en to hades," it reads: "It must be remembered that "hades" no where means hell, gehenna, in any author whatsoever, sacred or profane." He quotes Matt. 13: 34, and then affirms, that "the universal meaning of hades is, the state of death; because the term sepulchrum, or grave, is not strictly applicable to such as have been consumed by fire," etc. See verse 30. Let this suffice for authorities, and we will turn directly to the texts in question, and, if possible, determine their meaning.

For the Crisis.

Pre-Existence.

No. 3.

That our Savior was a man, the son of a man, probably, no one on earth ever called in question, hence all effort to prove this, is labor thrown away. The question is, Did the Lord from heaven have any existence as a being before he became man? Did God the Father make the world by him as he says? Did he send his Son into the world? Did Jesus come down from heaven? Did he leave the Father and come here, and did he go back to the Father where he was before he came here? Did he become flesh? was he rich before he became flesh? or must we, for the sake of dishonoring Christ, resort to the manifest absurdity, that Christ was poor and rich at the same time, as the interpretation of the passage, He who was rich became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich. Is man a being before he becomes rich? So was Christ a being before he became poor. Is the testimony of the Father, of the Son, and of the apostles, concerning the pre-existence of Christ, true or false? This is the question, in short.

Jesus said, "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me."—John 6: 38. Jesus affirms that he came down from heaven, in reply to the Jews who said, "He gave them bread from heaven to eat." Did the bread or manna have any existence before it came down? So did Christ have a being before he came down from heaven, and before the Father sent him. "This is the bread which came down from heaven." "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." He who was with the Father before the world was, came down from heaven and took on him the seed of the woman, and in this condition gave himself for the life of the world. God the Father has said to the Son, "And thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands." Has God stated the truth of his Son? Did our Lord Jesus lay the foundation of the earth, and with his hands make the heavens before he had any hands? Must we believe such absurdities, to avoid heresy or be charged with preaching another gospel, and with stumbling over the Rock of Zion?

The only thing opposed to the pre-existence of our Lord that is worth a thought, is the mysteriousness of the change from his former state to the Sonship in the flesh. "Great is the mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh." This, however, affords no ground of objection. How God could make man out of dust at the first, is as great a mystery as we can imagine. [illegible]

[illegible]

There is no need of saying that if my view of the subject is correct, Christ has died twice. He no more died in coming into the world, than Enoch died in going out of it. Christ changed his mode of existence when he came into this world, as did Enoch when he went out of it. Christ came, or he who was called the Word before the world was, became flesh, that he might die once for man. He now has gone where he was before he came into the world. His word for it. Amen.

Professor Bush could not see how Christ could go up into heaven with a body, for the reason, as he supposed, that he could not have breathed, after passing some forty-five miles above the earth; so he concluded that he did not go up with a body. Then to be consistent with his philosophy, he said Christ did not rise from the dead with a body; and that when he appeared to his disciples, after his resurrection, he did not have a body, though he talked as if he had, and made them think he had a body with flesh and bones. This commended itself to his conscience and reason.

But this is no more a departure from the truth, than is the Socinian doctrine that Christ had no existence before he became flesh, or before he was here. What is affirmed of Christ's resurrection, and ascension, is by some denied. And so, what God has testified of his Son in the beginning must be denied, because, forsooth, it does not agree with their reason. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for our sake he became poor." They knew that he was rich before he came here, by the faith they had in God's word, and they knew that he was poor while here, by their sight. They knew these things only as they were facts; and if facts, then Christ was rich and afterwards became poor. His poverty commenced when he "made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men."

The view that Christ had no being before he was here, robs him of the grace of changing his condition from riches to poverty, to save man. It robs God the Father of the honor, and of his love, in sending his Son into the world to save man, when he had no Son to send. It attributes either duplicity, or a great want of intelligence, to our Savior, for he did talk to the end and evidently intended to make the people believe in his existence before he came into the world. They so understood him, though they did not believe what he said.

As Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye do dishonor me"; so may it be said now. The Father has honored him with a revelation of the fact, that he laid the foundation of the earth, and made the heavens with his hands. That he sent his Son into the world, and Jesus has stated this fact. Now to deny his pre-existence, is to deny these statements; and to say that Jesus had no thought of coming here, and knew nothing about it whatever, until he was born,—I cannot conceive of a more effective way to dishonor Christ than this.

J. S. White.

For the Crisis.

Eternity.

Many years ago, a lady of fashion and folly in England looked over the shoulder of her servant who was reading a book. Her eye rested on the word, "Eternity." By divine favor, the tremendous import of it flashed on her mind, and induced a train of thought which issued in her hopeful conversion to God.

O that dying men would stop one moment in their pursuit of earth's vanities, and give one serious thought to this solemn subject! If the rich merchant, looking with such interest at the accumulating profits of his ledger, would pause a single instant, and put the question to his conscience, What will this profit me in Eternity? would he not be convinced of the truth of Jesus Christ, that he is a "fool" that "layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich towards God?"—Luke 12: 21.

If the political aspirant would estimate the value of the object he is so ardently seeking in the light of eternity, would he prefer the honor which cometh from "a man that shall die, and the son of man that shall be as grass," to that which cometh from the [illegible]

[illegible]

by not looking more at the things which are not seen, which are eternal. O did we estimate, as we ought, the thrilling welcome we are so soon to receive into the everlasting kingdom in the goodly land, where all things are to be created new; where righteousness and love and peace shall forever dwell; where we shall see the King in his beauty, and "the tabernacle of God shall be with men" in the new and blessed earth, [illegible] we should nobly rise above earth's influences of gains and losses, its pains and disappointments, and "reckon" with the holy apostle, "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us."

O brethren, let us be more affected with the deplorable fact, that so many around us are utterly unprepared for this glory, and, remaining impenitent, must be "cast into the lake of fire," which is "the second death." May God grant us to be more faithful in warning them of this awful doom, lest their blood be required at our hands.

H. Grew.

The Return of our Lord, to be waited for by all his People.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. Exercise faith in the Divine testimony concerning the Lord's coming, as a certain, approaching, and now near event. The personal coming of our Lord from heaven, where he now is, in glorified humanity, to this our earth, is absolutely certain. Nothing in heaven and earth can be more so. Our Lord pledges his veracity for it in the most solemn manner: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." (Matt. 24: 35; Mark 13: 31; Luke 21: 33.) It is often mentioned with a special call to attention, thus, Behold I come quickly; surely, I come quickly: as if to remove any lingering doubts that the delay might occasion. It is one of the surest of all truths that our Lord will return from heaven in like manner as he ascended. (Acts 1: 11.) The whole voice of the Church in its creeds, is here unanimous. And as it is certain, so it is ever approaching nearer and nearer. Each year, each month, each Sabbath, each day, and each hour, shortens the intervening time. Each sacrament, as it is repeated, tells us of its approach. The Lord's Supper is appointed to show forth the Lord's death till he come. Each baptism is a figure of the coming regeneration of the earth. Even in the days of the apostle he tells the Roman converts, after they had believed, but a few years, Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed: the night is far spent, the day is at hand.

It ought, then, by us now especially to be viewed as very near: yea, considering the magnitude of the event, and all its issue, and the shortness of the interval as compared with the past 1,800 years, as close at hand, even at the doors. Our chief guides here are the prophecies of Daniel and the book of Revelation, connected with the signs of the times. And let any one diligently read the opening out of these books in the writings of those faithful men who have patiently studied the subject in our own day, and in our own country—Faber, Cuninghame, Frere, Habershon, Birks, and Elliott, with others before them, and whatever differences, more or less material, there may be in their views, he must see that they agree that little yet remains to be fulfilled before the Lord's appearance.

Many who have deeply studied the subject fully believe, and I cannot but concur with them, that we are in the last period of the fourth great empire, just previous to the Lord's return as revealed to Daniel; that six out of the seven seals of Revelation have been opened, six out of the seven trumpets have sounded, six out of the seven vials have been poured out. The Lord's return is put, as many of us believe, nearly connected with the seventh seal, the seventh trumpet, and the seventh vial. We believe, also, that the chief prophetical dates that were to intervene have either run their course or are rapidly closing. In the straightness [illegible]

[illegible]

The World's Crisis.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 287. | BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 1860. | VOL. XI. NO. 4.

The World's Crisis
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING
AT
No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
HENRY V. DAVIS, | MILES GRANT,
JOHN COUCH, | GEO. T. ADAMS.

MILES GRANT, Editor.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth: especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

FOR TERMS, SEE FOURTH PAGE.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

"At Evening Time it shall be Light."

Zech. 14: 7.

When storm clouds threaten with their shade,
O look to Him, the arm of might,
Who said, "'tis I, be not afraid,"
I will give thee "songs in night;"
Though often dreary thy pathway,
That once was pleasant, shining bright;
Listen, and hear Jehovah say,
"At evening time it shall be light."

If called to rest in our last sleep,
Are not such blest, though lost to sight?
Soon we shall wake our life to reap,
And greet the endless morn of light;
No more to sigh, no more to weep,
Basking in realms of pure delight—
Fear nought—but near the Shepherd keep,—
"At evening time it shall be light."

Of God's own church—the word is spoken,
She shall shine forth in glory bright;
Even now, we see the token,
Conquerors have begun the fight;
When all kingdoms shall be shaken,
Truth will prevail o'er error's blight;
Signs approaching, now betoken,
"At evening time it shall be light."

Glorious as the sun in shining,
Mild as the moon that cheers the night,
Shedding down a radiant beaming,
Throwing on all a welcome light:
So when shall shine the church all glorious,
And every cent in love unite,
O'er every foe 't will prove victorious,—
"At evening time it shall be light."

M. C. Allen.

For the Crisis.

Born Again.

The subject of the "new birth" is one upon which there has been much discussion already; and it is not to provoke a controversy in these columns that I write this article; but in compliance with a request that I should do so. There are some who differ from me in this as in other points, whom I revere for their piety, esteem for their noble qualities, and love for their friendship; yet I shall not fail in my duty and attachment to them because my views in this matter are at some variance with theirs.

Nicodemus, who had seen the miracles which our Lord wrought, came to him by night, as likely that their conversation might not be interrupted by the crowds which pressed to hear the word, as from any fear of the Jews, and opened the conversation acknowledging the Divine authority by which the wonderful deeds were accomplished. We may very justly infer that the purpose of the great Rabbin was to inquire concerning the kingdom of the Messiah, which was expected and eagerly looked for about that time; and there may have been a suspicion in the ruler's mind that this Jesus Christ was in some way intimately connected with the ushering in of that great event. Our Lord, knowing his heart, abruptly broached the subject by making the strange and startling declaration—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Nicodemus was puzzled, and incredulously asked, "How can a man be born when he is old?" etc. Then was repeated the solemn, unequivocal condition, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

The point of dispute is, when the new birth takes place. Some say it is at conversion, others, at the resurrection of the just. Those who defend the latter, make use of a natural phenomenon attending man's entrance into the world, as referring to the first part of the conditions. This I conceive to be altogether irrelevant, inasmuch as it makes an imperative necessity an act of duty.

The Jews considered a proselyte from the Gentiles who had been baptized, as like a little child, or a child newly born. By the ordinance of baptism the recipient, abjured idolatry and promised to take Israel's God for his God. Water was used as an emblem of the Spirit, on account of its purifying qualities, as was verified when it flowed jointly with the blood from the dear Redeemer's side; the one atoned for, the other purified, the sinner. This, I apprehend, is being born of water; for I contend that no part of the new birth has anything to do with the natural or physical.

The mysterious action of the Spirit upon the heart of man, and which, in my opinion, completes the new birth, cannot be explained. Our Lord could not have employed a simile more easily understood than by using the wind as an illustration of the mystic and powerful influence of the Spirit in the soul. The gentle breeze is heard and felt as it rustles through the foliage of the forest, making music with the thousand boughs; and as it kisses with grateful breath the burning brow of the fainting invalid, it bears upon its bosom the odor of myriads of flowers, and his sense is delighted with the sweet perfume. We know, but cannot see the messenger which brings the fragrance, but we are not the less thankful for its operations, or less sensible of its influence. The laboring ship careens to the heavy squall as it sweeps howling over the tumultuous sea; the sails are rent in ribbons from the bolt ropes, in the attempt to carry on and bear her past that dangerous reef. 'Tis vain, she strikes; and in a few minutes the iron-bound coast is strown with mangled bodies and fragments of the wreck. The same fury lays waste whole tracts of country, fells the tallest pine, uproots the sturdy oak, and levels with the earth man's proudest hope. And the agent of this devastation is unseen. It comes whence no one knows, and whither no man can tell.

Not less evident is the work of the Spirit. The drunkard abandons the demoralizing cup, the swearer prays, the blasphemer glorifies God, the proud rebel bows submissive to his Lord, and the dreary charnel-house of the sinner's heart is full of light and life.

Some of those who defer the new birth till the resurrection, say that this simile of the unseen, immaterial wind, is symbolical of the power of volition of the resurrected body. Surely, we will not carry this idea fully out; for will we not know where our friends are going and where they came from, in that state of enlightenment where we shall know even as we are known? We must remember that we look to having our inheritance upon the earth, and not in regions far beyond the stars. Peter in his 1st Epistle 2: 23 and 24, says,—"Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently; being born again, not of corruptible seed but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever." Again, in the second chapter, verses 1, 2, 3,—"Wherefore, laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as new born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby: if so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious." I would here remark that the man who has laid aside all the evils enumerated above, is not likely to commit sin while they remain in abeyance. Thus the Apostle speaks to those who, being born again, require the food of infant children that they may be strengthened and grow. In 1 John 5: 1, we read, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God:" who receives him as the Messiah and looks to him for pardon and remission of sins. In verse 4—"Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." "Beloved, let us love one another: for God is love: and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love: and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God and God in him."—1 John 4: 7, 16. Can this close affinity between God and man in the bonds of love, exist where the new birth has not been? I think not.

In Matthew 11: 25, Jesus saith, "I thank thee, oh Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." The wise and prudent, were the puffed up Pharisees—the babes, those born of the Spirit.

What christian is there among us who does not recollect his mighty struggling for deliverance when once he became aware of his state of bondage to Satan; when before him arose like an insurmountable barrier, the dark obstruction of past iniquity, the prayers and tears, the alternate rising and sinking of the heart as the uncertain, opaque back ground of the picture of futurity is now broken by a ray of hope, then darkened by shadows of despair? Then comes the saving belief which casts itself without a doubt at the foot of the cross, the mysterious certainty that the load of guilt is removed. We know nothing of the mode of operation, we only feel the joy and happiness arising from our being born of God, and admitted into the family of Jesus Christ.

This is all my past experience teaches me—all that I can understand of a second birth.

Jno. F. Cotton.

P. S. If nothing prevents, I expect to be ready to launch the "Light Ship" the latter part of next month or first of May. I hope she wont get stuck or "bogged" for want of the "needful." Since I wrote last I have received the following monies, viz: From A Friend, 75 cts., L. R. Gilman, $1.00, Otis Irish, $5.00, Mary Stratton, $1.00, R. S. Robinson, $1.00, S. F. Woodward from a few Brs. and Srs., $2.00, Z. Whitney, $1.00, C. Farrington, $1.00

Remember, the tract is to catch sailors, and every one assisting has a share in the seine. Come, you that have plenty, shell out, you that have more than you need yourselves, give a little, you that have only good wishes, let's have your prayers, and she will go, depend on it.

Yours faithfully. J. F. C.

For the Crisis.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 2.

Text.—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

8. An additional reason for believing this to be a parable, and not a record of literal facts, is, because to interpret it literally involves the record in a contradiction, an absurdity, and a falsehood.

First, we will observe the contradiction. The text positively declares, that "the rich man also died." Now does this mean literal death? So some interpret it. Well, the text says that "in hell HE lifted up HIS eyes, being in torments," etc. Now, reader, do you believe that this is a literal rich man, that literally died? Then you are forced to the conclusion by the pronoun "HE," which of course is used instead of the noun "man," that at the same time that he was dead, he was in conscious hell torments. This is an unreconcilable contradiction.

Secondly. Let us observe the absurdity. This Scripture not only declares that "the rich man also died," but that he was "buried," and then affirms that "in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments," etc. Now was there ever a greater absurdity? "The rich man also" (literally) "died." "The rich man also" (literally) "DIED, and was" (literally) "BURIED." "The rich man also" (literally) "died and was" (literally) "buried and" (literally) "in hell HE" (literally) "lifted up HIS" (literal) "eyes, being in" (literal) "torments," etc. O absurdity of absurdities! Reader, this is no quibble, it is the honest literal interpretation of the terms employed in the text and context.

Thirdly. We will prove the falsehood according to the literal interpretation. From the 19th verse to the 23d, embracing verses 19–22, this record is declared, by those who believe man to be conscious in death, or more properly after death, to be a literal narration of literal facts, and if the least exception is made, it is simply this clause: "And was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom," and some will not even make this an exception. There is certainly no propriety in thus doing, for it must be the hungry and sore beggar Lazarus that died, and the text declares that he "was carried," etc. Observe that this beggar had no burial, but "died and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." At the very point at which the rich man was buried, viz., at death, "the beggar died and was carried" away without burying. "The beggar was carried." Was the conscious life spirit entity the beggar? If so, what become of "THE REMAINS?" It proceeds to say, that "the rich man also died, and was buried, and in hell HE lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." This statement expresses the idea of conscious life torments, and intelligent discovery by the seeing with the eyes an entity, whom he had before seen, but now in company with Abraham. Now a literal interpretation of this gives this rich man his eyes, his sensibilities, and intelligent mind to recognize, and be recognized by seeing, those with whom he had previously been acquainted. Now, reader, can you believe an account like that to be a literal fact, when considering that this same dead man claims that he possesses a tongue, and awards to Lazarus the possession of a finger?

I repeat, that such an interpretation makes the record bear upon its very surface a falsehood, and therefore unfavorably reflects upon the wisdom and integrity of its author. A dead man, with a tongue, eyes, sensibilities, natural affections for his five brethren, capable of being touched with the tip of another dead man's finger, therefore capable of contact with, and in need of, material substance, as "water," and by such contact can receive the natural effect of the water, viz., "cool," being at the same time a conscious life spirit entity. The thought of interpreting such a record literally, ought to occasion fear, lest, by such a course, the veracity of its author would be arrayed against the integrity of his nature.

9. The record in Lk. 16: 19–31, is a parable, and not a literal relation of literal facts, for by interpreting it literally, it is arrayed against other Scripture besides itself, and occasions contradiction.

Our text says, that "in hell he lifted up his eyes." Hell is here translated from "HADES." "This term is a representative of the Heb. term Sheol. As the Septuagint translates sheol by hades sixty times out of sixty-three, it must be apparent that both of them have the same meaning: Death; state of death, the dominion of death, the grave, as a general receptacle of the dead." Bible vs. Tradition, p. 207: Said Dr. Clarke, "The original word hades from a, not, and idein, to see . . answering to sheol in Hebrew." On Matt. 11: 23, where he says, "here it means the state of the utmost wo, ruin, and desolation to which these impenitent cities should be reduced. This prediction of our Lord was literally fulfilled; for, in the wars between the Romans and Jews, these cities were totally destroyed, so that no traces are now found of Bethsaida, Chorazin or Capernaum. See Bishop Pearce." He declares that it has a similar meaning to the Anglo-Saxon word helan, to cover or hide.

Another writer affirms, that it means "unseen, the invisible, obscure, dark." According to the Englishman's Greek Concordance, this word "hades" is used in the New Testament but eleven times. Twice in reference to Capernaum, which, as we have seen, refers to their desolation by the Romans, which was destroyed in about forty years after Christ's prediction. Matt. 11: 23; Lk. 10: 15. Once in reference to the church, Matt. 16: 18. See Isa. 38: 10; where it evidently denotes the grave. Twice it is employed when speaking of Christ. Acts 2: 27, 31. On verse 31, said Dr. Clarke, the words, "he psuche autou, his soul, are omitted by the ABCD, Syriac, Coptic, ETHIOPIC," (therefore translated by Wakefield, in his testament, 'That his life was not left in the grave, and that his body did not see corruption,') and Vulgate. Griesbach has left them out of the text." Here, then, it must be evident that the term hades denotes the grave. Once in Rev. 1: 18, where Dr. Clarke acknowledges that by the term hades here, "we should understand it not as hell, nor the place of separate spirits, but merely as THE GRAVE." See his reasons in this place. Hades is used once in Rev. 6: 8, where death and hell or hades is personified. Said Dr. Clarke, "And hell followed with him." "The grave, or state of the dead, received the slain," adding that this is a very elegant prosopopœia, or personification." Once in 1 Cor. 15: 55, where it is translated "grave." We have now three more instances of the use of hades translated hell, and for a correct understanding of them observe a few points. Those texts are Lk. 16: 23; Rev. 20: 13, 14.

As in several instances we have quoted Dr. Clarke as authority, it is no more than right to remark, that on these texts his sentiments were, as many now hold, that "hades is the place of separate spirits." We shall give our reasons for denying this position:

1. By showing that such a decision necessarily results in a contradiction of one portion of the Scriptures with another. The parable which we are investigating does not affirm that both of the parties went to hades, but only one. It therefore does not teach, with equal clearness, that hades is the abode of the good and bad.

2. The term hades, hell in the Scriptures, applies to one of three places. Either the grave, or a place of punishment, or state of death. It is declared of all who die, righteous and wicked, that they go to "hades." It can only be true of all, that they are in the grave, or state of death.

3. In the parable, the term "hades," if urged to denote an intermediate conscious state of the righteous and wicked, of punishment or reward, it proves too much, as it proves rewards and punishments immediately consequent upon death, which is a positive denial of the Bible, which declares that rewards and punishments are given when Christ comes the second time. Rev. 22: 12; Rom. 2: 6; Rev. 20: 12, and others. The Scriptures no where intimate two places and two seasons of punishment to the wicked, or reward to the righteous. It will amount to nothing to say, that they do not fully get their reward or punishment, for when they get any according to the Bible, they get all.

4. Whatever idea may be attached to the term "hades" by Greek or Pagan superstition, it is evident that in the Scriptures, no signification of the term is to be admitted, only that which is perfectly in accordance with the economy of truth, and not destructive of, or antagonistic to, divine penalty, for the term "hades" does not express the penalty of the laws of God. This we shall clearly see, before finishing this point, to be the case, and indeed now we remark, that mankind comes from "hades" to judgment and rewards and punishments. See Rev. 20: 13.

5. We think that the Bible has corrected the heathen notion concerning "hades," by appropriating the term to an entirely different condition of things, and strictly in accordance with its etymology, from that which is specified by the heathen historians. Num. 16: 30.—"Go down quick into the pit," sheol. Eccl. 9: 10; 1 Cor. 15: 55, hades. We will now examine the three texts above referred to. Lk. 16: 23; Rev. 20: 13, 14. Certainly in the last mentioned text, if any, we should expect to find the doctrine of separate, intelligent, conscious spirits. Says Dr. Campbell on the Gospels, Diss. 6, speaking of "hades," "In my judgment it ought never to be rendered hell." Says Mr. Wakefield, on Lk. 16: 23, "And in the grave," hades, etc. His translation of Rev. 20: 13, 14, reads: "Death and the grave." In his note, Lk. 16: 23, at the close of his translation, on the expression, "en to hades," it reads: "It must be remembered that "hades" no where means hell, gehenna, in any author whatsoever, sacred or profane." He quotes Matt. 18: 34, and then affirms, that "the universal meaning of hades is, the state of death; because the term sepulchrum, or grave, is not strictly applicable to such as have been consumed by fire," etc. See verse 30. Let this suffice for authorities, and we will turn directly to the texts in question, and, if possible, determine their meaning.

For the Crisis.

Pre-Existence.

No. 3.

That our Savior was a man, the son of a man, probably, no one on earth ever called in question, hence all effort to prove this, is labor thrown away. The question is, Did the Lord from heaven have any existence as a being before he became man? Did God the Father make the world by him as he says? Did he send his Son into the world? Did Jesus come down from heaven? Did he leave the Father and come here, and did he go back to the Father where he was before he came here? Did he become flesh? was he rich before he became flesh? or must we, for the sake of dishonoring Christ, resort to the manifest absurdity, that Christ was poor and rich at the same time, as the interpretation of the passage, He who was rich became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich. Is man a being before he becomes rich? So was Christ a being before he became poor. Is the testimony of the Father, of the Son, and of the apostles, concerning the pre-existence of Christ, true or false? This is the question, in short.

Jesus said, "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me."—John 6: 38. Jesus affirms that he came down from heaven, in reply to the Jews who said, "He gave them bread from heaven to eat." Did the bread or manna have any existence before it came down? So did Christ have a being before he came down from heaven, and before the Father sent him. "This is the bread which came down from heaven." "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." He who was with the Father before the world was, came down from heaven and took on him the seed of the woman, and in this condition gave himself for the life of the world. God the Father has said to the Son, "And thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands." Has God stated the truth of his Son? Did our Lord Jesus lay the foundation of the earth, and with his hands make the heavens before he had any hands? Must we believe such absurdities, to avoid heresy or be charged with preaching another gospel, and with stumbling over the Rock of Zion?

The only thing opposed to the pre-existence of our Lord that is worth a thought, is the mysteriousness of the change from his former state to the Sonship in the flesh. "Great is the mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh."

This, however, affords no ground of objection. How God could make man out of dust at the first, is as great a mystery as we can imagine. It is affirmed that he did it. We cannot tell how a child can be born, in any case. Many things are mysteries to us, but still they are done. How the dead can be raised we know not. How this mortal can put on immortality, God knows and that is enough, and it will be [illegible]

There is no need of saying that if my view of the subject is correct, Christ has died twice. He no more died in coming into the world, than Enoch died in going out of it. Christ changed his mode of existence when he came into this world, as did Enoch when he went out of it. Christ came, or he who was called the Word before the world was, became flesh, that he might die once for man. He now has gone where he was before he came into the world. His word for it. Amen.

Professor Bush could not see how Christ could go up into heaven with a body, for the reason, as he supposed, that he could not have breathed, after passing some forty-five miles above the earth; so he concluded that he did not go up with a body. Then to be consistent with his philosophy, he said Christ did not rise from the dead with a body; and that when he appeared to his disciples, after his resurrection, he did not have a body, though he talked as if he had, and made them think he had a body with flesh and bones. This commended itself to his conscience and reason.

But this is no more a departure from the truth, than is the Socinian doctrine that Christ had no existence before he became flesh, or before he was here. What is affirmed of Christ's resurrection, and ascension, is by some denied. And so, what God has testified of his Son in the beginning must be denied, because, forsooth, it does not agree with their reason. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for our sake he became poor." They knew that he was rich before he came here, by the faith they had in God's word, and they knew that he was poor while here, by their sight. They knew these things only as they were facts; and if facts, then Christ was rich and afterwards became poor. His poverty commenced when he "made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men."

The view that Christ had no being before he was here, robs him of the grace of changing his condition from riches to poverty, to save man. It robs God the Father of the honor, and of his love, in sending his Son into the world to save man, when he had no Son to send. It attributes either duplicity, or a great want of intelligence, to our Savior, for he did talk to the end and evidently intended to make the people believe in his existence before he came into the world. They so understood him, though they did not believe what he said.

As Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye do dishonor me"; so may it be said now. The Father has honored him with a revelation of the fact, that he laid the foundation of the earth, and made the heavens with his hands. That he sent his Son into the world, and Jesus has stated this fact. Now to deny his pre-existence, is to deny these statements; and to say that Jesus had no thought of coming here, and knew nothing about it whatever, until he was born,—I cannot conceive of a more effective way to dishonor Christ than this.

J. S. White.

For the Crisis.

Eternity.

Many years ago, a lady of fashion and folly in England looked over the shoulder of her servant who was reading a book. Her eye rested on the word, "Eternity." By divine favor, the tremendous import of it flashed on her mind, and induced a train of thought which issued in her hopeful conversion to God.

O that dying men would stop one moment in their pursuit of earth's vanities, and give one serious thought to this solemn subject! If the rich merchant, looking with such interest at the accumulating profits of his ledger, would pause a single instant, and put the question to his conscience, What will this profit me in Eternity? would he not be convinced of the truth of Jesus Christ, that he is a "fool" that "layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich towards God?"—Luke 12: 21.

If the political aspirant would estimate the value of the object he is so ardently seeking in the light of eternity, would he prefer the honor which cometh from "a man that shall die, and the son of man that shall be as grass," to that which cometh from the alone God? Would he consider this honor ample compensation for coming forth from his grave "to shame and everlasting contempt?"—Dan. 12: 2.

If the man of toil, who is continuously adding field to field, would give one solemn thought to that eternal life and eternal death, which his Maker and Judge has set before him, graciously urging him to "seek life" that he "may live," would he continue to sow only to his flesh to "reap corruption," and nothing to the Spirit to "reap life everlasting?"

Beloved brethren in the Lord, we [illegible] much, and fail to become as holy [illegible] by not looking more at the things which are not seen, which are eternal. O did we estimate, as we ought, the thrilling welcome we are so soon to receive into the everlasting kingdom in the goodly land, where all things are to be created new; where righteousness and love and peace shall forever dwell; where we shall see the King in his beauty, and "the tabernacle of God shall be with men" in the new and blessed earth, [illegible] surely, we should nobly rise above [illegible] earth's influences of gains and losses, pains and disappointments, and "reckon," with the holy apostle, "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us."

O brethren, let us be more affected with the deplorable fact, that so many around us are utterly unprepared for this glory, and, remaining impenitent, must be "cast into the lake of fire," which is "the second death." May God grant us to be more faithful in warning them of this awful doom, lest their blood be required at our hands.

H. Grew.

The Return of our Lord to be waited for by all his People.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. Exercise faith in the Divine testimony concerning the Lord's coming, as a certain, approaching, and now near event. The personal coming of our Lord from heaven, where he now is, in glorified humanity, to this our earth, is absolutely certain. Nothing in heaven and earth can be more so. Our Lord pledges his veracity for it in the most solemn manner: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." (Matt. 24: 35; Mark 13: 31; Luke 21: 33.) It is often mentioned with a special call to attention, thus, Behold I come quickly; surely, I come quickly: as if to remove any lingering doubts that the delay might occasion. It is one of the surest of all truths that our Lord will return from heaven in like manner as he ascended. (Acts 1: 11.) The whole voice of the Church in its creeds, is here unanimous. And as it is certain, so it is ever approaching nearer and nearer. Each year, each month, each Sabbath, each day, and each hour, shortens the intervening time. Each sacrament, as it is repeated, tells us of its approach. The Lord's Supper is appointed to show forth the Lord's death till he come. Each baptism is a figure of the coming regeneration of the earth. Even in the days of the apostle he tells the Roman converts, after they had believed, but a few years, Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed: the night is far spent, the day is at hand.

It ought, then, by us now especially to be viewed as very near: yea, considering the magnitude of the event, and all its issue, and the shortness of the interval as compared with the past 1,800 years, as close at hand, even at the doors. Our chief guides here are the prophecies of Daniel and the book of Revelation, connected with the signs of the times. And let any one diligently read the opening out of these books in the writings of those faithful men who have patiently studied the subject in our own day, and in our own country—Faber, Cuninghame, Frere, Habershon, Birks, and Elliott, with others before them, and whatever differences, more or less material, there may be in their views, he must see that they agree that little yet remains to be fulfilled before the Lord's appearance.

Many, who have deeply studied the subject fully believe, and I cannot but concur with them, that we are in the last period of the fourth great empire, just previous to the Lord's return as revealed to Daniel; that six out of the seven seals of Revelation have been opened, six out of the seven trumpets have sounded, [illegible] out of the seven vials have been poured out. The Lord's return is also, as many of us believe, nearly connected with the seventh seal, the seventh trumpet, and the seventh vial. We believe, also, that the chief prophetical dates that were to intervene have either run their course or are nearly closing. In the strength then, of all these prophecies and [illegible] and peculiar signs of the times, continually awakening general attention, [illegible] the sure lamp of prophecy, shining in our dark world, to give us true light, [illegible] you, my brethren, to [illegible] Lord's coming, not only as certain and approaching, but also as near. [illegible]

2. Regard the Lord's coming [illegible]

on this subject, without discerning [illegible] seldom death is referred to as a motive for watchfulness and preparation, in comparison of the quick and sudden coming of Christ. Death, in this view, is not wholly lost sight of. We are assured it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment. But again and again we are charged to watch, to be also ready, to take heed, to watch and pray always, under the conviction that in such an hour as we think not the Son of Man cometh. This peculiarity in the language of the Holy Spirit must have a deep meaning and infinite wisdom. Our minds ought to be conformed to these directions. They do not imply that death is not decisive of our state for ever; the end of the time of probation and of the day of grace. These truths are made clear by other scriptures. But they do manifestly teach us that it is more important [illegible] to our souls, to fix our eyes and our hopes and our aims on the Lord's coming, rather than on death. That if we would be quickened by the most powerful and stirring motives; if we would be animated by the brightest hopes; if we would have most prominently before our mind the final issues of everything in which we now engage, of every thought, word, and work; we must be looking for, and expecting, and preparing continually, for the great day of his appearing. True it is, that it has been delayed season after season, in which christians have thought that it would take place; true it is, that there have been periods in the past history of the Church when expectation of his immediate coming was general, and yet he did not come. But all this is provided for in the directions of our Lord. He tells us, Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for your Lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately. Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily, I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them. And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants. (Luke 12: 35–38.) In the time of our Lord the night was divided into four watches. In the night of his church, from his absence, he might have been expected at any watch. But special seasons when he was looked for having passed, we must not slumber, but increase our vigilance, if we would have this special blessing at his return.

3. View the Lord's coming as infinitely desirable. Let it enter into all your best wishes; let it form a part of your constant prayers. In this way it is ever presented to the children of God in the Holy Scriptures. It is the marriage-supper of the Lamb, and blessed are they which are called to it. He is set before them in the most attractive of all characters, as the coming Bridegroom. The bride longs for the beloved bridegroom. We are told, Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation. They are described as looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God. The most careful discrimination in those passages which are full of terror to the wicked, is continually made between the effect of his appearance on his enemies and on his people: Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not. Behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense, he will come and save you. (Isa. 35: 4.) He is described as mighty to save, at the very time that he is described as trampling on his enemies in his fury: when the day of vengeance is in his heart, at that very time, the year of his redeemed is come. (Isa. 63: 1–4.) The day which [illegible] as an oven, and in which the proud [illegible] scripture [illegible] and all that do wickedly shall be as stubble, is the very time in which it is said, Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings. (Mal. 4: 1–2.)

True it is, if we have the mind of God, who have no pleasure in the destruction of the wicked, we now yearn over them, we long for their salvation, we entreat them to be reconciled to God. But seeing that allowed sin and wickedness continually increase, and is the source of every kind of evil, and that in the mind of infinite wisdom and love there is no other remedy for these evils, and that this remedy will be effectual to subdue all iniquity, and to bring in universally that kingdom, which is righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, we have in this also, oneness of mind with God.

The honor of God's name and the welfare of his people being infinitely dear to us, and their sufferings at the last being, as we have reason to expect, peculiarly severe, this day becomes infinitely desirable for the putting an end to iniquity, for the hallowing of God's name, for the coming of his happy kingdom, and the doing of his will on earth as it is in heaven. It is the day of the full redemption of God's people, putting an end for ever, as it regards them, to death and sorrow and crying and pain and the curse; clothing them with [illegible] the resurrection body, and the perfected spirit; admitting them for ever to the heavenly mansions and the innumerable company of angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect, and into that city which the glory of God lightens and the Lamb is the light thereof, for ever and ever. With regard to the mind of the Church on this subject, we have it beautifully set forth in some of the last expressions recorded in Scripture of that Church; addressing Christ, it is said, The Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and addressing every hearer around us, the Church says, Let him that heareth say, Come; and in this day of grace, while it continues, the Church addresses the whole human race, Whosoever will, let him come and take the water of life freely; let him share all our hopes and all our blessings. And yet farther, when the [illegible] re-echoes again [illegible] testimony from heaven, saying, Surely I come quickly, the Church reiterate the longings of a renewed heart, Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus. Thus the daily prayer, the chief request of each child of God is, Thy kingdom come.—Bickersteth.

For the Crisis.

Existing Powers.

My attention of late has been called to re-examine with much care, many portions of the sure word, to ascertain, if possible, what further events are to be looked for in the prophetic world, prior to the coming of Christ. The result has been, a confirmed conviction that none of importance are to be expected. If, however, I am wrong in my conclusions, I hope some good brother will correct me by a "thus saith the Lord." This subject, I think, should be agitated, and the truth developed. The times, and the cause, demand it, that our faith may stand in the power of God, and the words of his grace.

Some of the reasons that have led me to the above conclusions I will briefly give.

In Daniel 2: 41—44, we have the character and condition of the feet and the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's great image, when it is smitten "by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands." The ten kingdoms, it will be noted, are all to have a distinctive existence at that time, in a debased condition; as iron mixed with miry clay,—partly strong and partly broken, all mixed up together, much as they now are, in their diplomatic relations, but not united or consolidated.

In verses 34, 35, we are informed that the iron and the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, are to be broken together." Hence, all the powers symbolized by these sub-divisions must, in some form, then exist, and do in fact now exist, in their proper order, as follows: The feet and the toes, of "iron and clay" are to be found in the eastern and western divisions of the old Roman Empire. The brass, in the Grecian, and the silver in the Persian kingdoms. As to the head of gold, am inclined to believe it is to be found in the Apocalyptical Babylon, which claims to stand at the head, "having a kingdom above or superior to all the kings of earth." This conclusion is sustained from the fact, that but one Babylon is noted as existing at the judgment, and by reference to chap. 16: 19, it will be seen, that this is the ONE and that it is the last earthly power that falls, viz: under the seventh vial, and after the fall of the "cities of nations."*

Again. By reference to the closing part of the 19th chap. of Revelations it will be seen when the battle of that great day is fought, the beast (papal), the false prophet (the two-horned beast), the kings of the earth and their armies, are all to be there; at which time the beast and the false prophet are to be taken "and cast alive into the lake of fire burning with brimstone." Hence all the powers symbolized by the metallic image, and by the terms, "the beast and false prophet," "the kings of the earth," etc. must all continue, active, LIVING under, and by virtue of, his personal presence and almighty power. [illegible]

The present aspect of [illegible] matters most clearly justifies the belief, that the papal power is so far consumed, and is so greatly hated, that Rome may at any day be burned with fire, which count, I think, stands in immediate connection with the coming of Christ and the deliverance of the saints in their resurrected state.

Papal Rome has for many centuries been, and still continues, the greatest oppressor of the people of God, much as was Egypt in the days of Moses. Hence the burning of the literal city of Rome will not destroy that power, any more than did the destroying angels in their work of slaying her first born throughout all her coasts, extirpate Pharaoh and his hosts, who soon repented of having let Israel go, and gathered themselves together and pursued them to the Red Sea; when they met their final overthrow by the interposition of Almighty power, and were buried alive in its waters. Thus will perish the beast and the false prophet, when cast alive into the lake of fire by Christ and his immortal saints, who are represented as coming down from heaven, seated upon white horses, to the battle of that great day: which gathering and battle are events most clearly subsequent to the burning of the city.

*The prophecies of Jeremiah and Isaiah are so definite, as to the utter and perpetual [illegible] and desolation of old Babylon, as preclude all expectation of her restitution.

As Israel was delivered at the [illegible] and all evidences all cluster around the times in which we are now living, for the fulfillment of God's declared purpose of judgment upon his enemies, and salvation to his people, we think we are authorized to look with much assurance to the approaching season, for the beginning of these mighty scenes. P. ALLING.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 28, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

NO. IV.

We have examined, in the most careful manner, fourteen Divisions and thirty-nine sections of "Doubting Castle," to see if there was any clear evidence that man has a spirit that exists in a conscious state between death and the resurrection; but thus far, we think the managers of the "Castle" have made an utter failure in their attempts to sustain their position; and we trust our dear Bro. B. can see it as well as we, and will hereafter be quite chary about receiving further instruction from such theological teachers. We admire their persevering zeal. Would that it were devoted to a better cause. They never acknowledge a defeat; whether this arises from blindness, or willfulness, we will not presume to say.

But let us see what they have prepared in the next Division to prop up their college of error. We observed some sly glances among the Faculty, as we were about entering this Division, indicating that they yet had some hope of success, and were anticipating a triumph in the Division about to be opened. Let Bro. B. state what they said to him. This he does as follows:

"It is written, that the Pharisees believed in the resurrection, and angel, and spirit. (40) Paul openly confessed, 'I am a Pharisee and the son of a Pharisee.' Then Paul also believed in angel and spirit. (41) Josephus tells us that those people, the Pharisees, believed in disembodied spirits; if so, then Paul must so have believed." (42.)

40. It is also written, "BEWARE of the . . . doctrine of the Pharisees." Did Jesus intend to teach his disciples to beware of the doctrine of the resurrection? Certainly not, for he taught this as one of the most important truths in the whole system of christianity. And Paul afterwards taught that if this doctrine proved a failure, then those who have "fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

Secondly, Christ certainly did not intend to tell them to beware of the doctrine concerning the existence of angels; for this is very plainly set forth in both the Old and New Testaments.

The other point of doctrine held by the Pharisees, mentioned in the Scriptures, and quoted by the Faculty of "Doubting Castle," was a belief in the conscious state of the spirit between death and the resurrection, as held by the heathen. As this doctrine is nowhere taught by the Savior or the apostles, we see at once to what Jesus referred, when he said, "Beware of the . . . doctrine of the Pharisees." The Sadducees were wrong in denying the resurrection of the dead; and the Pharisees in teaching that the soul is alive in hades between death and the resurrection, thereby superseding the necessity of raising the dead; hence the Savior warns the disciples against the doctrines of both.

41. In this forty-first section, we are told, Paul says, "I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee," and therefore he must have believed what the Pharisees did. Did Paul believe that part of the Pharisaical doctrine, of which the Savior said, "Beware"? Certainly not. Paul explains himself, and specifies the point of doctrine, relative to man, in which he is a Pharisee, when he says in the same verse, "Of the hope and resurrection of the DEAD I am called in question." We find no intimation that he believed in the conscious state of the spirit; but in the most unequivocal language, he positively declares, that our only hope of a future, conscious existence, if we die, is in the resurrection of the dead, for which he was called in question. Had he believed as did the Pharisees concerning the spirit, he would not have taught that christians, who have died, "are perished," if there be no resurrection of the dead.

42. In the forty-second section, we are informed that Josephus says, "The Pharisees believed in disembodied spirits," consequently, "Paul must so have believed." The Pharisees did not believe in Christ; does it, therefore, follow that Paul did not? Josephus and others believed the soul to be a portion of God! If this is true, some parts of God must be very wicked. If the soul is a part of God, as believed by the Pharisees, then one part of God gets mad at another part, and another portion prompts the man to get drunk, another to be licentious, etc., and finally, God puts these different portions of himself into eternal torment! Did Paul believe all this? [illegible]

Paul was educated a Pharisee. Hence he says, "As touching the law, a Pharisee. Concerning zeal, persecuting the church." But when he became a christian, he renounced the doctrine of the conscious state of the dead, and taught, in harmony with Jesus, that those who have died in the Lord, are asleep in hades, where there is no knowledge; and if there be no resurrection of the dead, they "are perished."

Let every pilgrim to Zion's land "beware of the . . . doctrine of the Pharisees," who "believed in disembodied spirits" existing in a conscious state between death and the resurrection.

We will go on to the 16th Division. Here Bro. Burnham found the following:

"When Christ appeared, after his resurrection, to his disciples, they were 'affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit.' Why did not the Lord tell them that there are no such things? (43) But he, on the contrary, qualified their belief, and confirmed them in it, by giving a description of a spirit—'a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have.'" (44.)

43. Perhaps the reason why Christ did not say there are no spirits, was because he would have contradicted the Bible if he had thus spoken.

44. Angels are called spirits, and a single angel "a spirit." From the Savior's remarks, we conclude that they are not made of the dust of the ground as men are; indeed, it appears from the account of the creation, that angels existed before the formation of the earth; but they are tangible organisms, and not disembodied beings. One came and rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre where the Savior lay, and sat upon it. Some angels visited Lot the night before Sodom's destruction, who were entertained by the good man. Lot proposed to wash their feet, "and he made them a feast, and did break unleavened bread, and they did eat."—Gen. 19: 1–3. These spirits, or angels, are not composed of "flesh and blood," as we are, but they are, nevertheless, real, organized beings, having bodies. These angels resemble men in their appearance; hence Daniel, when describing an angel, says he had "the appearance of a man." We are instructed that we should not be "forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."—Heb. 13: 2. Could we entertain "disembodied," "intangible," "immaterial," "uncompounded" spirits, with neither "exterior or interior," supposing them to be only passing strangers? Such an idea is absurd. The angels, who are frequently called spirits, are as really organized beings as ourselves; but are not composed of "flesh and bones;" or, in other words, not made of dust as we are. Yet they have "feet" that may be washed, bodies to sit down, resemble men, and have eaten food prepared by our race. Hence we find nothing in this Division to favor the doctrine that man has a disembodied spirit, that will be conscious when he is dead.

"Truth's Triumph."

A few weeks since we presented our readers with some extracts from an old book, with the above heading for a title. It was written in 1676, by Thomas Tomkins. The following are further extracts from the same work. On page 342, and onward, he says:

"The soul of man doth die, the souls of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; yea, and of Adam and Eve are dead; yea David is dead, the Apostles are dead, and in the dust of the earth. It is said of those, they died and gave up the ghost, and were gathered unto their people; it is not said that they went to heaven. It is said of David, that he slept with his fathers, and was buried in his city; it is not said that he went to heaven, but on the contrary, the apostle said, that David was not ascended into heaven." He then quotes David's language and says, "Thus we see that David was acquainted of the doctrine of the soul's mortality; yea, all the Scriptures are full of proof hereof."

In speaking of the reward of the saints, he says:

"That the souls of the saints do not go to heaven until the resurrection, it is evident, because the Scripture saith, that the reward of well-doing is not given until the great day. Now the great day is not when a man dies, but it is at the end when all shall arise from death, and this is at the end of the world. Then comes the Lord Jesus Christ, the saint's God, to give reward unto his servants. Therefore it is written, Rev. 22: 12, 'Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me,' etc. Here we see every man will have his reward given him when Christ comes; and this is according to that saying concerning the talents given, that after a long time the Lord cometh, and reckoneth with them. This long time was until the end of the world, and the reckoning day, the resurrection day. . . . This doctrine is a standing truth, however it be slighted through the whole world, for the world will not have patience, but would run to heaven, each by himself, whether Christ came and call or no. . . . Reason is in haste; it must have heaven not in the Lord's time, but in its own; at a beck, its soul would be in heaven before its bones are cold; for when its body can live no longer, then the soul takes wings and flies away, like a bird, and gets into heaven in a moment. . . . Yet, notwithstanding, could hit the way when it was dead; but knows not the way when it was alive, so that it can, as it imagines, do miracles when it is dead; no sooner dead, but it will have the crown of life, and yet it hath no life. But the faith of the elect, and the truth of the Scriptures teach otherwise. . . . Paul waited for a crown, for he said there was one laid up for him; yet did he not expect to wear this crown until the day of the Lord's appearance. So Peter saith, that when the chief Shepherd should appear, then the believers of him should receive a crown of life, but not before.

Wherefore, then, from hence we learn, that Christ and the christian man's crown, come both together; for when he comes, then doth he give reward to his servants, both small and great; then they that have lost their lives, shall find them; and they that have suffered with him shall reign with him. . . . So the saints must have patience awhile, and wait for the coming of their Lord; and when their Lord cometh, then their crown of life and glory cometh. So come, Lord Jesus, for our souls wait for thee. Amen."

This voice from the dead sounds encouraging. Let it echo. The time has come when the truth, long buried, begins to emerge from obscurity to the joy of its receiver.

A Fast.

We propose that Friday, March 30th, be observed as a day of fasting and prayer, by those who are interested in the approaching General Conference at Boston; that it may be made a great blessing, not only to those who may come to mingle their songs and prayers with ours; but to the cause of truth generally, and especially to this city. Many intelligent men and women in the different churches are becoming deeply interested, and we feel anxious to see them rejoicing in the full liberty of the gospel of the kingdom. Pray that the results of our anticipated meeting may be the most glorious of any we have ever held; and that a hallowed influence may extend from it far and wide.

A Discussion.

We have received and accepted an invitation to discuss the truthfulness of Spiritualism with Mr. Leo Miller, who has recently discussed the same subject with Prof. Grimes, at the Melodeon, in Boston. Our proposed discussion is to be at Plymouth, Mass., commencing March 28th, and continuing three evenings. Let the reader pray for the triumph of the truth.

Acceptance of a Challenge.

A few months since, the following was addressed to Gov. Tallmadge; but as no response has been heard, it is now published, hoping this may meet with better success from some of the patrons of Spiritualism

"GOV. TALLMADGE:—Sir,—We have chanced to come across an 'Address of the Society for the Diffusion of Spiritual Knowledge, to the citizens of the United States;' headed by your name. In the address, we read the following:—

'WE CHALLENGE you as men, as earnest men, as men desiring the good of your fellows, to come forth and meet us in the fight, expose our errors, draw the shroud away, and enable the world to see us as we are. We challenge you to come and do that thing. . . . We ask you to come and meet us, and discuss the question with us; to examine these facts which we allege, and to prove, if you are able, either that these facts never did occur, or that their origin is other than that which it purports to be.'"

We will accept the challenge, unless it is withdrawn. We would prefer an oral discussion, as it would not be convenient to spend the time to write. Please address us at the "World's Crisis" office, Boston, Mass., stating acceptance or refusal.

ANTI-TOBACCO JOURNAL, No. 3, has been received. This is published quarterly, by Rev. Geo. Trask, Fitchburg, Mass.

For the Crisis.

"Reasons for my Hope."

Where there are so many good things coming from the pen of Eld. Hastings, it is hard to say which is the best. But really, I am constrained to say that this last work of his, in my opinion, is the best. The language is choice and to the point, and his plan of operation excellent. He first defines what Hope is. Then, that his hope consists not in worldly wealth, honors, ease, prosperity, or even in the future, as taught by infidels, spiritualists, and modern divines. After this he tells what his hopes are founded on, and why, in words so clear and vigorous as cannot fail to enlighten and convince the careful and intelligent seeker after truth. His statistics of the spread of the gospel are deeply interesting, and in themselves worth the price of the book.

At the present time, when we have to contend for every inch of ground against a foe, numerous, fierce and subtle, this work is an invaluable auxiliary in enabling us to give to those who require it a Bible reason for the hope that is within us. Every one who can afford it should send for a copy, and read it carefully and diligently. I have done so, and can faithfully throw in my mite of testimony with that which has already been offered in favor of the book.

JNO. F. COTTON.

☞ Not that which men do worthily, but that which they do successfully, is what history makes haste to record.

For the Crisis.

In Rochester Again.

After an absence of about twelve weeks, it has been my happiness to return with improved health—finding the family well, and a warm welcome from the congregation here. Thus publicly would I render thanks to God for all his mercies. My appointments were daily filled, with few exceptions,—from one to three times a day, and from one to three hours, as the hungry congregations received the word with welcome.

Deliverance never seemed so certain as now,—nor quite so soon. Bless the Lord, oh my soul! Amen. J. B. COOK.

March 20th, 1860.

For the Crisis.

God a Spirit.

Some doubt has been expressed whether this phrase should be converted into a proposition by supplying the verb is, or has. There occur to me two or three ways of deciding the question, which I will state.

1. We may inquire how similar phrases are treated, or should be treated, in the Scriptures. In the Greek, as in other ancient languages, sentences often occur in which there is no verb. But in English a sentence without a verb suggests a meaning, yet asserts nothing. The verb is essential to the proposition. That is the reason why we call it the verb, from the Latin verbum; because it is the principal word. But in other languages, in which this part of speech is less needful, other parts of speech are sometimes called the verb, or the word.

Yet all propositions, in all languages, require some verb, either expressed or understood. And if different verbs might be understood, then there would be ambiguity, as is supposed in the present instance. But if we look at our translation of the Bible, in which all supplied words are faithfully noted by italics, we find only one verb commonly supplied, the verb to be in some of its various forms, such as is, was, are, were, etc. And the context almost invariably requires the word which is inserted. When other verbs are supplied they usually occur in the context, and are repeated to make the sentence round and full.

I have not counted the number of times that the substantive verb, to be, is supplied; but I would guess many hundreds. In some single chapters it is supplied over a dozen times. This is very strong proof that it is the word to be uniformly supplied, except in the cases just named. Besides, there are some reasons for this in the peculiar nature of the verb. And I do not recollect one instance in which the word has is supplied.

2. While the verb to be is intransitive, and allows the nominative case after it; the verb to have is transitive, and requires the objective case. And these two cases are commonly expressed in the Greek, by different terminations of the noun. The Greek for Spirit (pneuma) is indeed an exception. Yet the case is never left doubtful, and therefore if the word Spirit were in the objective case, in our passage, the verb has (echei) would have been expressed.

I have said so much without going out of the grammar. There are a good many other things I might say, which have been in my mind for a year or two past, and which I am ready to say as soon as they can get fairly heard. I do not know whether the time has come or not. I have asked the readers of the Crisis some questions about substance and force, for special reasons. And I have intimated my dissent from materialist views, and my opinion that they were not only ill founded, but detrimental to our argument. I have looked for substantially the same treatment of our heresy which the American Tract Society has bestowed in its invective against "Sadduceeism," though I did not expect such a name from such a quarter. The attack, which is a serious calumny, gives me no new views of truth or of policy. But it may be a fair occasion of stating my views, and of suggesting how the calumny is to be repelled, if the readers of the Crisis shall seem to desire it. C. F. H.

Correspondence.

From M. B. Phetteplace.

BRO. GRANT:—The work of the Lord is prospering is this place. Much good has been done. Since the organization of the church last fall, the religious interest has been increasing in the members, and the influence, we believe, has been felt deeply by many around, inducing backsliders to take again their harps from the willows where they have hung in deathly silence, when they ought to have been singing the praises of our God. The Lord has been in the work, and we have had blessed seasons of refreshing from his presence.

Although thrown in our pathway have been many obstacles and opposing influences, victory is turning on the Lord's side. Truth is triumphing and fast spreading, and the Bible, even to many who have professed to be disciples of Christ, has become a new treasure-house of truth. Sinners have been converted and the interest is still increasing; others, we hope, soon will boldly declare their resolution to obey Christ in all things. Numbers have been baptized from time to time, as the Lord has prospered his cause.

We have been having a blessed season during a protracted meeting held by Eld. A. Durfee, during week day evenings and over the Sabbath. The last meeting of the series on Sabbath evening was one of deep interest to all. After the sermon, thirty-three spoke of God's goodness, among whom were three who took up public duty for the first time, and some others who had only risen for prayers before. About twenty of the songs of Zion were sung, and all this in about an hour. The interest is not in the least abating, but rather increasing. Give God all the glory.

This I write at the request of the brethren, that others may be sharers in the joy of the glad tidings. It is truly gladdening to see sinners coming home while probation is so short, and the startling events of judgment so near. Brs. and Srs. scattered abroad, when you agonize with God for the advancement of his cause through the land, send up your warm prayers in behalf of the cause of Christ in Foster, R. I.

March 19th.

From Eld. I. Damman.

BRO. GRANT:—The cause of God in the State of Maine is prospering. The cry comes from different places—"Come over and help us!" Prejudice is dying away, which has been a preventive to the prosperity of the cause of God among us. It is high time that we were rid of all such destroying elements. If ever we are, we shall increase in strength, in numbers and in graces.

I have spent some four or five weeks in the Province of N. B. The cause is in a prosperous state in this region to what it has been for a few years past. Quite a number had within a few months come out in the faith, and believe it important to live to God daily and watch for the coming of the Just One, believing his coming to be nigh. The Lord is working in Simons, reclaiming wanderers and converting souls. Praise the Lord. I had the privilege on the third of this month of leading two into the water, and planting them in the likeness of Christ's death. We bless the Lord that he has not entirely forsaken the poor sinner, but yet offers pardon on the terms of the gospel.

There is a good opening for the truth in this region of country. May the Lord send laborers into the harvest, and give men hearts to sustain them in the work, which is equally necessary and right.

From J. H. Bartlett.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Having read of recent date in one of our city papers, an interesting account of an individual who had been healed of serious sickness and restored to perfect health through the gift and power of faith in God, and again being privileged with reading the account more particularly communicated by the pen of the individual herself published in the last No. of the "Crisis," I feel it good to express my interest in the testimony, and union in the faith which acknowledges the healing virtue of "the fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous." Although I consider it the greatest blessing to have the spirit freed from the cruel bands and corrupting influences of the carnal mind which is enmity against God, so that it can serve God without fear, in righteousness and holiness all the days of the life which is freely given unto us who believe, so that the righteousness of Christ is manifest in his living members on the earth, etc., yet I feel it is an important testimony that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick." I am a living witness to this truth, in my own experience in days that are past. Although I am now an invalid of pulmonary complaint, with frequent attacks of bleeding at the lungs for two years past, so that I am unable to be of any outward service in the use of my bodily powers, yet I am sustained and held in life by the special care and loving kindness of my heavenly Father and the dear ones of his choice. I am made the recipient of blessings innumerable, so that there is no room or cause for a murmur or complaint at my condition. Grace has wrought in my heart to that extent, that all desire seems to find a sweet resting place in—"Thy will be done." Have not known or felt anxious whether I should ever recover, or continue long in this feeble state, or soon close my earthly existence. Have felt it was all with the Lord, and that there is nothing too hard for the Lord to do. His presence makes me cheerful, happy, and contented, and the sense of his constant love and care keeps my heart soft and tender, with continual praise and thanksgiving to his precious name.

When I read the circumstance above alluded to, I said: "Perhaps the Lord will do the same for me," feeling confident that if I ever enjoy health of body it must be the direct gift of God to one, who to all human appearance was soon to pass away. Cleaving to the Lord with purpose of heart, it is my intention to live out my inward convictions as the word and Spirit of truth shall direct, and if the Father has good to impart to me relating to my restoration, it shall be acknowledged with a grateful heart and voice; if not, he can and will sustain me by his grace, as he has done in sweet submission to his "good will" which is blessed forevermore.

I write these few lines to encourage the testimony of faith in the healing gift, both in myself and others, and should rejoice to see more testimony through the "Crisis" of living witnesses on this point. Yours in the love of God, and in the patient waiting for the revelation of his Son Jesus Christ.

Hartford, Ct.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS. WHOLE NO. 237.

so this subject, without discerning [illegible] seldom death is referred to as a motive for watchfulness and preparation, in comparison of the quick and sudden coming of Christ. Death, in this view, is not wholly lost sight of. We are assured it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment. But again and again we are charged to watch, to be also ready, to take heed, to watch and pray always, under the conviction that in such an hour as we think not the Son of Man cometh. This peculiarity in the language of the Holy Spirit must have a deep meaning and infinite wisdom. Our minds ought to be conformed to these directions. They do not imply that death is not decisive of our state for ever; the end of the time of probation and of the day of grace. These truths are made clear by other scriptures. But they do manifestly teach us that it is more important [illegible] to our souls, to fix our eyes and our hopes and our aims on the Lord's coming, rather than on death. That if we would be quickened by the most powerful and stirring motives; if we would be animated by the brightest hopes; if we would have most prominently before our mind the final issues of everything in which we now engage, of every thought, word, and work; we must be looking for, and expecting, and preparing continually, for the great day of his appearing. True it is, that it has been delayed season after season, in which christians have thought that it would take place; true it is, that there have been periods in the past history of the Church when expectation of his immediate coming was general, and yet he did not come. But all this is provided for in the directions of our Lord. He tells us, Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for your Lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately. Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily, I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them. And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants. (Luke 12: 35–38.) In the time of our Lord the night was divided into four watches. In the night of his church, from his absence, he might have been expected at any watch. But special seasons when he was looked for having passed, we must not slumber, but increase our vigilance, if we would have this special blessing at his return.

3. View the Lord's coming as infinitely desirable. Let it enter into all your best wishes; let it form a part of your constant prayers. In this way it is ever presented to the children of God in the Holy Scriptures. It is the marriage-supper of the Lamb, and blessed are they which are called to it. He is set before them in the most attractive of all characters, as the coming Bridegroom. The bride longs for the beloved bridegroom. We are told, Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation. They are described as looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God. The most careful discrimination in those passages which are full of terror to the wicked, is continually made between the effect of his appearing on his enemies and on his people: Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not. Behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense, he will come and save you. (Isa. 35: 4.) He is described as mighty to save, at the very time that he is described as trampling on his enemies in his fury: when the day of vengeance is in his heart, at that very time, the year of his redeemed is come. (Isa. 63: 1–4.) The day which [illegible] and all that do wickedly shall be as stubble, is the very time in which it is said, Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings. (Mal. 4: 1–2.) [illegible] have the mind of God, [illegible] no pleasure in the destruction of the wicked, we now yearn over them, we long for their salvation, we entreat them to be reconciled to God! But seeing that, allowing sin and wickedness continually increase, and is the source of every kind of evil; and that in the mind of infinite wisdom and love there is no other remedy for these evils, and that this remedy will be effectual to subdue all iniquity, and to bring in universally that kingdom, which is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, we have in this view, oneness of mind with God [illegible] of God's name and the welfare of his people being infinitely dear to [illegible] their sufferings [illegible] peculiarly [illegible] infinitely desirable [illegible] to iniquity, for the hallowing of God's name [illegible] the coming of his happy kingdom, and the doing of his will on earth as it is in heaven. It is [illegible] of God's [illegible] and pain and the curse; clothing them with [illegible] are delivered at the [illegible] spirit [illegible] them [illegible] ever [illegible] company of angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect, and into that city which the glory of God lightens and the Lamb is the light thereof, for ever and ever. With regard to the mind of the Church on this subject, we have it beautifully set forth in some of the last expressions recorded in Scripture of that Church; addressing Christ, it is said, The Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and addressing every hearer around us, the Church says, Let him that heareth say, Come; and in this day of grace, while it continues, the Church addresses the whole human race, Whosoever will, let him come and take the water of life freely; let him share all our hopes and all our blessings. And yet farther, when the [illegible] re-echoes again [illegible] testimony from heaven, saying, Surely I come quickly, the Church reiterate the longings of a renewed heart, Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus. Thus the daily prayer, the chief request of each child of God is, Thy kingdom come.—Bickersteth.

For the Crisis.

Existing Powers.

My attention of late has been called to re-examine with much care, many portions of the sure word, to ascertain, if possible, what further events are to be looked for in the prophetic world, prior to the coming of Christ. The result has been, a confirmed conviction that none of importance are to be expected. If, however, I am wrong in my conclusions, I hope some good brother will correct me by a "thus saith the Lord." This subject, I think, should be agitated, and the truth developed. The times, and the cause, demand it, that our faith may stand in the power of God, and the words of his grace.

Some of the reasons that have led me to the above conclusions I will briefly give.

In Daniel 2: 41—44, we have the character and condition of the feet and the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's great image, when it is smitten "by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands." The ten kingdoms, it will be noted, are all to have a distinctive existence at that time, in a debased condition; as iron mixed with miry clay,—partly strong and partly broken; all mixed up together, much as they now are, in their diplomatic relations, but not united or consolidated.

In verses 34, 35, we are informed that the iron and the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, are to be broken together." Hence, all the powers symbolized by these sub-divisions must, in some form, then exist, and do in fact now exist, in their proper order, as follows: The feet and the toes, of "iron and clay" are to be found in the eastern and western divisions of the old Roman Empire. The brass, in the Grecian, and the silver in the Persian kingdoms. As to the head of gold, am inclined to believe it is to be found in the Apocalyptical Babylon, which claims to stand at the head, "having a kingdom above or superior to all the kings of earth." This conclusion is sustained from the fact, that but one Babylon is noted as existing at the judgment, and by reference to chap. 16: 19, it will be seen, that this is the ONE and that it is the last earthly power that falls, viz: under the seventh vial, and after the fall of the "cities of nations."*

Again. By reference to the closing part of the 19th chap. of Revelations it will be seen when the battle of that great day is fought, the beast (papal), the false prophet (the two-horned beast), the kings of the earth and their armies, are all to be there; at which time the beast and the false prophet are to be taken "and cast alive into the lake of fire burning with brimstone." Hence all the powers symbolized by the metallic image, and by the terms, "the beast and false prophet," "the kings of the earth," etc., must all continue, active, LIVING under, and by virtue of, his personal presence and almighty power.

The present aspect of [illegible] matters most clearly justifies the belief, that the papal power is so far consumed, and is so greatly hated, that Rome may at any day be burned with fire, which count, I think, stands in immediate connection with the coming of Christ and the deliverance of the saints in their resurrected state.

Papal Rome has for many centuries been, and still continues, the greatest oppressor of the people of God, much as was Egypt in the days of Moses. Hence the burning of the literal city of Rome will not destroy that power, any more than did the destroying angels in their work of slaying her first born throughout all her coasts, extirpate Pharaoh and his hosts, who soon repented of having let Israel go, and gathered themselves together and pursued them to the Red Sea, when they met their final overthrow by the interposition of Almighty power, and were buried alive in its waters. Thus will perish the beast and the false prophet, when cast alive into the lake of fire by Christ and his immortal saints, who are represented as coming down from heaven, seated upon white horses, to the battle of that great day: which gathering and battle are evidently most clearly subsequent to the burning of the city.

*The prophecies of Jeremiah and Isaiah are so definite as to the utter and perpetual destruction and desolation of old Babylon, as preclude all expectation of her restitution.

[illegible] we now are living [illegible] fulfilment of God's declared purpose of judgment upon his enemies, and salvation to his people, we think we are authorized to look with much assurance to the approaching season, for the beginning of these mighty scenes. P. ALLING.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 28, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

NO. IV.

We have examined, in the most careful manner, fourteen Divisions and thirty-nine sections of "Doubting Castle," to see if there was any clear evidence that man has a spirit that exists in a conscious state between death and the resurrection; but thus far, we think the managers of the "Castle" have made an utter failure in their attempts to sustain their position; and we trust our dear Bro. B. can see it as well as we, and will hereafter be quite chary about receiving further instruction from such theological teachers. We admire their persevering zeal. Would that it were devoted to a better cause. They never acknowledge a defeat; whether this arises from blindness, or willfulness, we will not presume to say.

But let us see what they have prepared in the next Division to prop up their college of error. We observed some sly glances among the Faculty, as we were about entering this Division, indicating that they yet had some hope of success, and were anticipating a triumph in the Division about to be opened. Let Bro. B. state what they said to him. This he does as follows:

"It is written, that the Pharisees believed in the resurrection, and angel, and spirit. (40) Paul openly confessed, 'I am a Pharisee and the son of a Pharisee.' Then Paul also believed in angel and spirit. (41) Josephus tells us that those people, the Pharisees, believed in disembodied spirits; if so, then Paul must so have believed." (42.)

40. It is also written, "BEWARE of the . . . doctrine of the Pharisees." Did Jesus intend to teach his disciples to beware of the doctrine of the resurrection? Certainly not, for he taught this as one of the most important truths in the whole system of christianity. And Paul afterwards taught that if this doctrine proved a failure, then those who have "fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

Secondly, Christ certainly did not intend to tell them to beware of the doctrine concerning the existence of angels; for this is very plainly set forth in both the Old and New Testaments.

The other point of doctrine held by the Pharisees, mentioned in the Scriptures, and quoted by the Faculty of "Doubting Castle," was a belief in the conscious state of the spirit between death and the resurrection, as held by the heathen. As this doctrine is nowhere taught by the Savior or the apostles, we see at once to what Jesus referred, when he said, "Beware of the . . . doctrine of the Pharisees." The Sadducees were wrong in denying the resurrection of the dead; and the Pharisees in teaching that the soul is alive in hades between death and the resurrection, thereby superseding the necessity of raising the dead; hence the Savior warns the disciples against the doctrines of both.

41. In this forty-first section, we are told, Paul says, "I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee," and therefore he must have believed what the Pharisees did. Did Paul believe that part of the Pharisaical doctrine, of which the Savior said, "Beware"? Certainly not. Paul explains himself, and specifies the point of doctrine, relative to man, in which he is a Pharisee, when he says in the same verse, "Of the hope and resurrection of the DEAD I am called in question." We find no intimation that he believed in the conscious state of the spirit; but in the most unequivocal language, he positively declares, that our only hope of a future, conscious existence, if we die, is in the resurrection of the dead, for which he was called in question. Had he believed as did the Pharisees concerning the spirit, he would not have taught that christians, who have died, "are perished," if there be no resurrection of the dead.

42. In the forty-second section, we are informed that Josephus says, "The Pharisees believed in disembodied spirits," consequently, "Paul must so have believed." The Pharisees did not believe in Christ; does it, therefore, follow that Paul did not? Josephus and others believed the soul to be a portion of God!" If this is true, some parts of God must be very wicked. If the soul is a part of God, as believed by the Pharisees, then one part of God gets mad at another part; and another portion prompts the man to get drunk; another to be licentious, etc., and finally, God puts these different portions of himself into eternal torment! Did Paul believe all this?

Paul was educated a Pharisee. Hence he says, "As touching the law, a Pharisee; Concerning zeal, persecuting the church." But when he became a christian, he renounced the doctrine of the conscious state of the dead, and taught, in harmony with Jesus, that those who have died in the Lord, are asleep in hades, where there is no knowledge; and if there be no resurrection of the dead, they "are perished."

Let every pilgrim to Zion's land "beware of the . . . doctrine of the Pharisees," who "believed in disembodied spirits" existing in a conscious state between death and the resurrection.

We will go on to the 16th Division. Here Bro. Burnham found the following:

"When Christ appeared, after his resurrection, to his disciples, they were 'affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit.' Why did not the Lord tell them that there are no such things? (43) But he, on the contrary, qualified their belief and confirmed them in it, by giving a description of a spirit—'a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have.'" (44.)

43. Perhaps the reason why Christ did not say there are no spirits, was because he would have contradicted the Bible if he had thus spoken.

44. Angels are called spirits, and a single angel "a spirit." From the Savior's remarks, we conclude that they are not made of the dust of the ground as men are; indeed, it appears from the account of the creation, that angels existed before the formation of the earth; but they are tangible organisms, and not disembodied beings. One came and rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre where the Savior lay, and sat upon it. Some angels visited Lot the night before Sodom's destruction, who were entertained by the good man. Lot proposed to wash their feet, "and he made them a feast, and did break unleavened bread, and they did eat." —Gen. 19: 1–3. These spirits, or angels, are not composed of "flesh and blood," as we are, but they are, nevertheless, real, organized beings, having bodies. These angels resemble men in their appearance; hence Daniel, when describing an angel, says he had "the appearance of a man." We are instructed that we should not be "forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."—Heb. 13: 2. Could we entertain "disembodied," "intangible," "immaterial," "uncompounded" spirits, with neither "exterior or interior," supposing them to be only passing strangers? Such an idea is absurd. The angels, who are frequently called spirits, are as really organized beings as ourselves; but are not composed of "flesh and bones;" or, in other words, not made of dust as we are. Yet they have "feet" that may be washed, bodies to sit down, resemble men, and have eaten food prepared by our race. Hence we find nothing in this Division to favor the doctrine that man has a disembodied spirit, that will be conscious when he is dead.

"Truth's Triumph."

A few weeks since we presented our readers with some extracts from an old book, with the above heading for a title. It was written in 1676, by Thomas Tomkins. The following are further extracts from the same work. On page 342, and onward, he says:

"The soul of man doth die, the souls of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; yea, and of Adam and Eve are dead; yea David is dead, the Apostles are dead, and in the dust of the earth. It is said of those, they died and gave up the ghost, and were gathered unto their people; it is not said that they went to heaven. It is said of David, that he slept with his fathers, and was buried in his city; it is not said that he went to heaven, but on the contrary, the apostle said, that David was not ascended into heaven." He then quotes David's language and says, "Thus we see that David was acquainted of the doctrine of the soul's mortality; yea, all the Scriptures are full of proof hereof."

In speaking of the reward of the saints, he says:

"That the souls of the saints do not go to heaven until the resurrection, it is evident, because the Scripture saith, that the reward of well-doing is not given until the great day. Now the great day is not when a man dies, but it is at the end when all shall arise from death, and this is at the end of the world. Then comes the Lord Jesus Christ, the saint's God, to give reward unto his servants. Therefore it is written, Rev. 22: 12, 'Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me,' etc. Here we see every man will have his reward given him when Christ comes; and this is according to that saying concerning the talents given, that after a long time the Lord cometh, and reckoneth with them. This long time was until the end of the world, and the reckoning day, the resurrection day . . .

This doctrine is a standing truth, however it be slighted through the whole world, for the world will not have patience, but would run to heaven, each by himself, whether Christ came and call or no . . . Reason is in haste; it must have heaven not in the Lord's time, but in its own; at a beck, its soul would be in heaven before its bones are cold; for when its body can live no longer, then the soul takes wings and flies away like a bird, and gets into heaven in a moment. . . . Yet, notwithstanding, could hit the way when it was dead; but knows not the way when it was alive, so that it can, as it imagines, do miracles when it is dead; no sooner dead, but it will have the crown of life, and yet it hath no life. But the faith of the elect, and the truth of the Scriptures teach otherwise. . . . Paul waited for a crown, for he said there was one laid up for him; yet did he not expect to wear this crown until the day of the Lord's appearance. So Peter saith, that when the chief Shepherd should appear, then the believers of him should receive a crown of life, but not before.

Wherefore, then, from hence we learn, that Christ and the christian man's crown, come both together; for when he comes, then doth he give reward to his servants, both small and great; then they that have lost their lives, shall find them; and they that have suffered with him shall reign with him. . . . So the saints must have patience awhile, and wait for the coming of their Lord; and when their Lord cometh, then their crown of life and glory cometh. So come, Lord Jesus, for our souls wait for thee. Amen."

This voice from the dead sounds encouraging. Let it echo. The time has come when the truth, long buried, begins to emerge from obscurity to the joy of its receiver.

A Fast.

We propose that Friday, March 30th, be observed as a day of fasting and prayer, by those who are interested in the approaching General Conference at Boston; that it may be made a great blessing, not only to those who may come to mingle their songs and prayers with ours; but to the cause of truth generally, and especially to this city. Many intelligent men and women in the different churches are becoming deeply interested, and we feel anxious to see them rejoicing in the full liberty of the gospel of the kingdom. Pray that the results of our anticipated meeting may be the most glorious of any we have ever held; and that a hallowed influence may extend from it far and wide.

A Discussion.

We have received and accepted an invitation to discuss the truthfulness of Spiritualism with Mr. Leo Miller, who has recently discussed the same subject with Prof. Grimes, at the Melodeon, in Boston. Our proposed discussion is to be at Plymouth, Mass., commencing March 28th, and continuing three evenings. Let the reader pray for the triumph of the truth.

Acceptance of a Challenge.

A few months since, the following was addressed to Gov. Tallmadge; but as no response has been heard, it is now published, hoping this may meet with better success from some of the patrons of Spiritualism.

"GOV. TALLMADGE:—Sir,—We have chanced to come across an 'Address of the Society for the Diffusion of Spiritual Knowledge, to the citizens of the United States;' headed by your name. In the address, we read the following:—

'We CHALLENGE you as men, as earnest men, as men desiring the good of your fellows, to come forth and meet us in the fight, expose our errors, draw the shroud away, and enable the world to see us as we are. We challenge you to come and do that thing. . . . We ask you to come and meet us, and discuss the question with us; to examine these facts which we allege, and to prove, if you are able, either that these facts never did occur, or that their origin is other than that which it purports to be.'"

We will accept the challenge, unless it is withdrawn. We would prefer an oral discussion, as it would not be convenient to spend the time to write. Please address us at the "World's Crisis" office, Boston, Mass., stating acceptance or refusal.

ANTI-TOBACCO JOURNAL, No. 3, has been received. This is published quarterly, by Rev. Geo. Trask, Fitchburg, Mass.

For the Crisis.

"Reasons for my Hope."

Where there are so many good things coming from the pen of Eld. Hastings, it is hard to say which is the best. But really, I am constrained to say that this last work of his, in my opinion, is the best. The language is choice and to the point, and his plan of operation excellent. He first defines what Hope is. Then, that his hope consists not in worldly wealth, honors, ease, prosperity, or even in the future, as taught by infidels, spiritualists, and modern divines. After this he tells what his hopes are founded on, and why, in words so clear and vigorous as cannot fail to enlighten and convince the careful and intelligent seeker after truth. His statistics of the spread of the gospel are deeply interesting, and in themselves worth the price of the book.

At the present time, when we have to contend for every inch of ground against a foe, numerous, fierce and subtle, this work is an invaluable auxiliary in enabling us to give to those who require it a Bible reason for the hope that is within us. Every one who can afford it should send for a copy, and read it carefully and diligently. I have done so, and can faithfully throw in my mite of testimony with that which has already been offered in favor of the book.

JNO. F. COTTON.

☞ Not that which men do worthily, but that which they do successfully, is what history makes haste to record.

For the Crisis.

In Rochester Again.

After an absence of about twelve weeks, it has been my happiness to return with improved health—finding the family well, and a warm welcome from the congregation here. Thus publicly would I render thanks to God for all his mercies. My appointments were daily filled, with few exceptions,—from one to three times a day, and from one to three hours, as the hungry congregations received the word with welcome.

Deliverance never seemed so certain as now,—nor quite so soon. Bless the Lord, oh my soul! Amen. J. B. COOK.

March 20th, 1860.

For the Crisis.

God a Spirit.

Some doubt has been expressed whether this phrase should be converted into a proposition by supplying the verb is, or has. There occur to me two or three ways of deciding the question, which I will state.

1. We may inquire how similar phrases are treated, or should be treated, in the Scriptures. In the Greek, as in other ancient languages, sentences often occur in which there is no verb. But in English a sentence without a verb suggests a meaning, yet asserts nothing. The verb is essential to the proposition. That is the reason why we call it the verb, from the Latin verbum; because it is the principal word. But in other languages, in which this part of speech is less needful, other parts of speech are sometimes called the verb, or the word.

Yet all propositions, in all languages, require some verb, either expressed or understood. And if different verbs might be understood, then there would be ambiguity, as is supposed in the present instance. But if we look at our translation of the Bible, in which all supplied words are faithfully noted by Italics, we find only one verb commonly supplied, the verb to be in some of its various forms, such as is, was, are, were, etc. And the context almost invariably requires the word which is inserted. When other verbs are supplied they usually occur in the context, and are repeated to make the sentence round and full.

I have not counted the number of times that the substantive verb, to be, is supplied; but I would guess many hundreds. In some single chapters it is supplied over a dozen times. This is very strong proof that it is the word to be uniformly supplied, except in the cases just named. Besides, there are some reasons for this in the peculiar nature of the verb. And I do not recollect one instance in which the word has is supplied.

2. While the verb to be is intransitive, and allows the nominative case after it; the verb to have is transitive, and requires the objective case. And these two cases are commonly expressed in the Greek, by different terminations of the noun. The Greek for Spirit (pneuma) is indeed an exception. Yet the case is never left doubtful, and therefore if the word Spirit were in the objective case, in our passage, the verb has (echei) would have been expressed.

I have said so much without going out of the grammar. There are a good many other things I might say, which have been in my mind for a year or two past, and which I am ready to say as soon as they can get fairly heard. I do not know whether the time has come or not. I have asked the readers of the Crisis some questions about substance and force, for special reasons. And I have intimated my dissent from materialist views, and my opinion that they were not only ill founded, but detrimental to our argument. I have looked for substantially the same treatment of our heresy which the American Tract Society has bestowed in its invective against "Sadduceeism," though I did not expect such a name from such a quarter. The attack, which is a serious calumny, gives me no new views of truth or of policy. But it may be a fair occasion of stating my views, and of suggesting how the calumny is to be repelled, if the readers of the Crisis shall seem to desire it. C. F. H.

Correspondence.

From M. R. Phetteplace.

BRO. GRANT:—The work of the Lord is prospering in this place. Much good has been done. Since the organization of the church last fall, the religious interest has been increasing in the members, and the influence, we believe, has been felt deeply by many around, inducing backsliders to take again their harps from the willows where they have hung in deathly silence, when they ought to have been singing the praises of our God. The Lord has been in the work, and we have had blessed seasons of refreshing from his presence.

Although thrown in our pathway have been many obstacles and opposing influences, victory is turning on the Lord's side. Truth is triumphing and fast spreading, and the Bible, even to many who have professed to be disciples of Christ, has become a new treasure-house of truth. Sinners have been converted and the interest is still increasing; others, we hope, soon will boldly declare their resolution to obey Christ in all things. Numbers have been baptized from time to time, as the Lord has prospered his cause.

We have been having a blessed season during a protracted meeting held by Eld. A. Durfee, during week day evenings and over the Sabbath. The last meeting of the series on Sabbath evening was one of deep interest to all. After the sermon, thirty-three spoke of God's goodness, among whom were three who took up public duty for the first time, and some others who had only risen for prayers before. About twenty of the songs of Zion were sung, and all this in about an hour. The interest is not in the least abating, but rather, increasing. Give God all the glory.

This I write at the request of the brethren, that others may be sharers in the joy of the glad tidings. It is truly gladdening to see sinners coming home while probation is so short, and the startling events of judgment so near. Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad, when you agonize with God for the advancement of his cause through the land, send up your warm prayers in behalf of the cause of Christ in Foster, R. I.

March 19th.

From Eld. I. Damman.

BRO. GRANT:—The cause of God in the State of Maine is prospering. The cry comes from different places—"Come over and help us!" Prejudice is dying away, which has been a preventive to the prosperity of the cause of God among us. It is high time that we were rid of all such destroying elements. If ever we are, we shall increase in strength, in numbers and in graces.

I have spent some four or five weeks in the Province of N. B. The cause is in a prosperous state in this region to what it has been for a few years past. Quite a number had within a few months come out in the faith, and believe it important to live to God daily and watch for the coming of the Just One, believing his coming to be nigh. The Lord is working in Simons, reclaiming wanderers and converting souls. Praise the Lord. I had the privilege on the third of this month of leading two into the water, and planting them in the likeness of Christ's death. We bless the Lord that he has not entirely forsaken the poor sinner, but yet offers pardon on the terms of the gospel.

There is a good opening for the truth in this region of country. May the Lord send laborers into the harvest, and give men hearts to sustain them in the work, which is equally necessary and right.

From J. H. Bartlott.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Having read of recent date in one of our city papers, an interesting account of an individual who had been healed of serious sickness and restored to perfect health through the gift and power of faith in God, and again being privileged with reading the account more particularly communicated by the pen of the individual herself published in the last No. of the "Crisis," I feel it good to express my interest in the testimony, and union in the faith which acknowledges the healing virtue of "the fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous." Although I consider it the greatest blessing to have the spirit freed from the cruel bands and corrupting influences of the carnal mind which is enmity against God, so that it can serve God without fear, in righteousness and holiness all the days of the life which is freely given unto us who believe, so that the righteousness of Christ is manifest in his living members on the earth, etc., yet I feel it is an important testimony that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick." I am a living witness to this truth, in my own experience in days that are past. Although I am now an invalid of pulmonary complaint, with frequent attacks of bleeding at the lungs for two years past, so that I am unable to be of any outward service in the use of my bodily powers, yet I am sustained and held in life by the special care and loving kindness of my heavenly Father and the dear ones of his choice. I am made the recipient of blessings innumerable, so that there is no room or cause for a murmur or complaint at my condition. Grace has wrought in my heart to that extent, that all desire seems to find a sweet resting place in—"Thy will be done." Have not known or felt anxious whether I should ever recover, or continue long in this feeble state, or soon close my earthly existence. Have felt it was all with the Lord, and that there is nothing too hard for the Lord to do. His presence makes me cheerful, happy, and contented, and the sense of his constant love and care keeps my heart soft and tender, with continual praise and thanksgiving to his precious name.

When I read the circumstance above alluded to, I said: "Perhaps the Lord will do the same for me," feeling confident that if I ever enjoy health of body it must be the direct gift of God to one, who to all human appearance was soon to pass away. Cleaving to the Lord with purpose of heart, it is my intention to live out my inward convictions as the word and Spirit of truth shall direct, and if the Father has good to impart to me relating to my restoration, it shall be acknowledged with a grateful heart and voice; if not, he can and will sustain me by his grace, as he has done in sweet submission to his "good will" which is blessed forevermore.

I write these few lines to encourage the testimony of faith in the healing gift, both in myself and others, and should rejoice to see more testimony through the "Crisis" of living witnesses on this point. Yours in the love of God, and in the patient waiting for the revelation of his Son Jesus Christ.

Hartford, Ct.

For the Crisis.

The Need of Reformation in the Churches.

CONVERSATION.—No. 3.

Brown. Bro. Smith, since our last conversation on the christian's hope, I am persuaded there is great need of a reformation in all our churches, both in doctrine and practice. Pride, bigotry and prejudice have secularized the church of Christ in these last days, and it is difficult to distinguish the professor from the non-professor, without an examination of the church record. I wish some plan could be devised to bring about a reformation, and a more liberal state of feeling amongst those who profess to serve the same Master.

Smith. I am truly glad that you have so far divested yourself of prejudice, as not to be totally blind to the absolute necessity of a reformation in the churches at the present day, in preparation for the coming judgment and revelation of the Son of man. I think we have reason to fear that when Christ comes the second time to judge the world in righteousness, he will find the Gentile church as unprepared for his advent, as was formerly the Jewish church. "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

Brown. The difficulty is to know how to begin this reformation. You know, Bro. Smith, that your people are accused of an effort to break up and divide our churches, by forming a separate organization. This, I think, greatly prejudices the people against you, and is a serious impediment in the way of the desired reformation. Is there no way by which the churches can be induced by degrees to reform themselves? It seems to me a desperate remedy to pull down the house to destroy the rats.

Smith. I fear, Bro. Brown, that your plan of degrees would prove so slow, that the judgment would come before you had fairly made a beginning, and the rats would be so rife as to undermine the house, and it would utterly perish in its own corruption. We may judge a little by analogy. Did a corrupt government or a corrupt church ever reform itself? Does not reformation uniformly come from outside pressure?

I need not multiply instances; history is full of them. Did the antediluvians reform themselves? Did the Sodomites reform themselves? Did the Jewish church at the time of Christ reform itself? Did the Popish church at the time of Luther reform itself? Did the Protestant church at the time of Whitefield and Wesley reform itself? Surely the church in our day is as corrupt, as proud, as popular, as self-righteous as it was when John Wesley tried to reform the Episcopal church of England, and was at last obliged to come out and organize a new society, that bears his name to the present day, but not his spirit. If the good old man was to rise from the dead, and visit some of his churches, I fear he would be tempted to write "Ichabod" over the door. The glory is departed.

Brown. Would it not be well, before going to extremities, to try what can be done by moral suasion, and compromising a little to the prejudices of the people, and see if we may not have our views and principles tolerated, so that, like leaven, it will in time renovate the whole lump, and thus produce the desired effect? I must say I am averse to all ultra measures to effect a purpose that can be accomplished any other way.

Smith. Well, brother, let us try the experiment; John the Baptist tried it to his satisfaction. He began preaching, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand!" How did he succeed? They cut off his head. Luther had no intention to leave the Roman church; he merely wanted to reform it of some of its abuses; but they would not be reformed, and he was reduced to this extremity, either to go back, and wallow again in the mire, or come out and espouse the cause of truth; and, thank God, he chose the latter. Now I have learned in the same school, and have come to the same conclusion.

For years I have striven to obtain toleration in the churches, but all to no purpose; the only way to remain there was, to pay well for the promotion of error and, to be perfectly silent in the cause, which, I was persuaded, was that of truth. This was not even a compromise; and, though some of my former associates have chosen the backward track, as more congenial to the flesh, I have made up my mind, cost what it will, to come out and advocate God's everlasting truth,—the sleep of the dead till the resurrection; the destruction of the wicked at the day of judgment; and the speedy advent of Christ, to set up his kingdom on this earth renewed and restored to to its Eden glory.

I have no further compromise with the unfruitful works of darkness; and consider these truths as the latter day tests of discipleship, and the rallying point around which God will prepare a people, zealous of good wor[illegible] waiting, hoping, and praying for [illegible] revelation of the Lord from heaven[illegible]

Is i[illegible]nt to blame us for organizing ch[illegible]urches, when we are denied all c[illegible]llowship and communion with [illegible]rches, and denounced as in[illegible]fidels [illegible]and emissaries of the devil? Wh[illegible]e have no wish to bre[illegible]; we only wish to receive those whose eyes are opened to perceive the truth, and are willing to suffer reproach for the name of Christ; it is such only that we want; and I am sure there is no church that wants to retain such in her communion, if they really believe they are what they represent them to be.

Brown. I am aware that your people are called hard names, and denounced by the ministers in the popular churches; but I do not think they mean all they say, or they would not retain in their communion those they know are firm believers in these very doctrines, though they do not consider them essential to salvation. There are some such in all our churches, and the fact that they are not excluded, is sufficient evidence that the bark of some dogs is worse than their bite; it is intended merely for effect, to prevent the sheep from running out of the fold after some better pasture.

Smith. I am grieved that there is so much Jesuitism in our so-called Protestant churches, and this is another proof of the absolute necessity of a thorough reformation, to cleanse out this popish rubbish,—this doing evil that good may come. If ministers of religion are wilfully guilty of bearing false witness against their brethren, as you seem to insinuate, then indeed are we fallen into evil times, and such guides as these can only lead those who follow them into perdition. I had rather be a wolf without sheep's clothing, than with it, in the day when the secrets of all hearts will be tried. Those who are in the habit of bearing false witness against us, by calling us infidels, etc., injure themselves much more than they do us, because those who know our real sentiments feel that they have been imposed upon; and others, who become acquainted with our views, and see how much Scripture we have to sustain them, cannot but be convinced, if they are honest men, that we are not half such monsters as we are represented to be.

But what surprises and grieves me most of all is, that those who know and feel that these accusations so repeatedly made against us, are not true, yet are so under the influence of the fear of man they dare not utter a word to rebuke these calumnies, but let them pass as current coin. It seems to me that if I had a friend or brother that was openly accused of a crime that I knew he was not guilty of, I should feel self condemnation if I did not seek to vindicate his reputation as publicly as it had been traduced.

After all, it matters little what men say or think of us. Thank God, we are not to be judged by man's judgment; and though our earthly friends may forsake us, and unite with our enemies, we have a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother, and he will vindicate our cause before an assembled world: the people of God can well afford to wait till that day.

Brown. Well, Bro. Smith, I do not know but you are right in the steps you have taken in the cause of truth. A reformation is greatly needed, let it come from within or from without; I will, for my part, say amen. J. PARRY.

For the Crisis.

Curious Etymologies.

I have just met a derivation of the Greek term for "hell" (gehenna) which is well worthy of notice, for several reasons.

1. Because it is offered as an argument to prove the eternity of hell.

2. Because it is made by a Greek commentator, the most noted for several generations, Theophylact (A. D. 1078).

3. As showing what ignorance of Hebrew and lack of critical care have contributed to the prevalent notions of endless woe.

On Matt. 10. 28, Theophylact remarks: that our Savior, "when he says in gehenna, signifies the perpetuity of the punishment; for geenna is from ever existing (gennasthai)." I do not know how long or how far this deviation was thought good and held for a sound argument; or when it first gave way to what almost everybody now knows,—that gehenna is a Hebrew name for the valley of the son of Hinnom. Perhaps it lived until the time of Luther. A friend to whom I showed it returned me the following derivation of Diabolus, recorded in a document belonging to a Jubilee of the Reformation. It is ascribed to one Thesmar, and seems to have been in vogue with the Romanists. "Diabolus, from dia, which again they rendered duo (two), and bolus (mouthful); because the devil would fain devour a man at two mouthfuls—body and soul."

We deem these puerilities worthy of the dark ages whence they sprung. But I have met an argument for the eternity of hell in a Protestant religious paper, which is about equal to the first. It was from the phrase bottomless pit, by which our version renders the Greek for abyss. It was gravely argued that since the pit has no bottom, they who are condemned to it will find no end to their punishment! What would this writer have thought if told that the same word occurs in Rom. 10: 7: "Who shall descend into the deep (abussos, the bottomless pit?) that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead?" or, if told that good writers have used the Greek word in speaking of the depths of God's love[illegible]

C. F. H.

For the Crisis.

The Great Chart.

The great work, by Bro. Stevenson, exhibited out West, has happily disappointed the most advanced and understanding brethren. It was shown in ten places; and I am sure it gives me ability to instruct and convince two-fold beyond any other illustration. As an argument and illustration combined, it transcends all others, in constraining the mind to the scriptural conclusion, that the advent of Jesus; first resurrection; binding of Satan and kingdom of God are impending events.

Such calls as are made will be answered as the Lord shall permit, with this chart.

J. B. COOK.

For the Crisis.

Waiting for the Lord.

What are we to understand by the frequent admonition, "Wait for the Lord," and how are we to wait? In the common acceptation of that word, it could not strictly be said that one had waited for another, where there was an "appointed time," unless that set time had passed, and the one had tarried beyond the hour for the other. Now has the Father set the time for his Son? Paul says, Acts 17: 31, "He hath appointed a day." I need not ask has the hour arrived; for Jesus has not come. Then we are not tarrying beyond the hour. So it is not, waiting, in that sense. When the fulness of time has arrived, then Jesus will come; and we shall wait no longer.

With Israel, the case is different. With them, the time was fulfilled. Mark 1: 14, 15, "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, saying, The time is fulfilled," etc.; that is, the time for his first appearing.—2 Tim. 1: 10:—"But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior," etc. But Israel is still looking, waiting for, expecting that first advent, while we are looking for and expecting the second appearing of our Savior, Jesus Christ, unto salvation.

This waiting of the church for the Lord, implies, if it does not express, a state of expectancy. When? Now! always! every day, night, hour, week, month, or year. That this is the sense as to what is meant is clear from numerous passages. On Rom. 8: 19, Dr. Clarke reads from the Greek—"With a neck stretched out doth now wait (look) for."—Titus 2: 13,—"Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing," etc. 1 Thess. 1: 10,—"And to wait (look) for his Son," etc. So Isa. 30: 18; Hab. 2: 3; 1 Cor. 1: 7; Rom 8: 23; 2 Thess. 3: 5. "Into the patient waiting (looking) for Christ," and Heb. 9: 28—"To them that look for him." This constitutes a trial (proving) of our faith, 1 Pet. 1: 7; and this perfecting of our faith results in the necessary state of preparation.

This, then, is how we are to wait, look for, etc., namely,—Luke 12: 35, 36,—"loins girded," "lights burning," "like men that wait for their Lord,"—"that we may open immediately."—1 Pet. 1: 13.—"Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. "See also vers. 14, 15, 16, 17. Yes, that is how we are to wait. Get ready, everything ready, then, keep ready, by a patient continuance in well doing, looking for glory, and honor, and immortality; then you will be ready, "and accounted worthy" (Luke 20: 35) to receive the gift of God, eternal life, through Jesus Christ, Rom. 6: 23, "at his appearing and kingdom."—2 Tim. 4: 1; Rev. 19: 7. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready! OLENA.

Obituary Notice.

Died, in Seneca Falls, on the 17th inst., Carrie A., eldest daughter of Bro. Jerome H. and our late Sister Maria E. Sisler, aged three years, one month and twenty days.

Our brother is called to mourn the loss of his dear Carrie. This affliction is the more severe on account of the circumstances clustering around it. Only three months ago we laid Sister Maria among the "clods of the valley," cold and silent; and now little Carrie is laid by the side of her mama—but she knows it not. Silently they are waiting till the trumpet shall sound, and awake them, "to die no more,"—till the opening heavens shall reveal the "Lord of life and glory."

Bro. S., it is through "much tribulation" that we shall gain the kingdom. Press on, and meet the loved ones.

The funeral services were attended by the writer, who endeavored to instruct and comfort the mourning, weeping pilgrims from the words of Paul, Rom. 8: 37,—"In all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us." The Lord was with us. We verified the promise, "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." May the Lord ever guide us for his glory. Amen.

THOS. G. NEWMAN.

Summary of News.

[From Southampton the 7th.]

The Constitutionnel publishes an article explaining the French policy in Italy. In mentioning the solution proposed in the message of M. Thouvenel, the Constitutionnel says if it is not a Sardinian solution it is an Italian one. Sardinia will possess in Tuscany an ally who will aid her to overcome the opposition of Naples and Rome in order to constitute an Italian nation, with the concurrence of all its nationalities and not an Italian kingdom absorbing everything, without considering the essential differences, opposing interests, and distrust of Europe.

The Times correspondent says, there is a rumor that all military men and soldiers not on leave, are to rejoin their regiments as soon as possible. It is said the Imperial guard are not to be exempted.

The Cardinals and Prelates, who are members of the Senate, have presented petitions demanding the maintenance of the temporal power of the Pope.

FRANCE.

The Times' Paris correspondent writes: "Since the speech from the throne I have met with hardly six people who do not declare it as their deliberate opinion, that before three months are over, hostilities will begin somewhere. And only a day or two ago, a general officer of long standing, and in a situation which enables him to know something of what is passing out of view of the public, mentioned his belief that war this spring was inevitable."

ITALY.

NAPLES, March 3. A great display of military took place here on the 1st inst. Some persons of high distinction have been arrested. The Prince Torella had been conducted to the Prefecture of Police, but was set at liberty again. His brother, the Marquis de Bella, has been detained. It is stated that several noblemen are about to be exiled. Activity prevails in the arsenals day and night.

Letters from Sicily announce that the Attorney General at Messina had been murdered, and that a fulminating bomb had been thrown at the Director of the Police, at which two persons were wounded.

ROME, March 3. Great agitation prevails in the Marches.

Tri-colored flags have been hoisted nightly at Viterbo.

It is asserted that the Papal Government is preparing a note accusing Piedmontese agents of exciting the inhabitants. Revolutionary agents have induced the inhabitants to give up smoking and taking part in the lottery.

A communication from Turin, dated March 5, says: The Marquis d'Azeglio, our Minister at London, arrived here yesterday, in obedience to a summons from Count Cavour. He is to attend a Council of Ministers this day, presided over by the King, and will probably not return to his post till the result of the plebiscitum is known. General Fanti, our Minister of War, is expected here to-night from Modena. There is no example in the military annals of Piedmont of any such activity as we have seen displayed by this Minister during the last 40 days. Piedmont, which two months ago had only 45,000 men under arms, will have 150,000 on the 1st of April, with a corresponding number of horses, complete stores, ten batteries of rifled cannon, and several thousands of rifles. These are results not to be disdained, as they place Piedmont in a position to meet all eventualities, in accordance with the energetically expressed will of the King during the last few days of his stay in Milan. Garibaldi has been summoned to Turin, but he has not been able to come yet, on account of indisposition. His arrival is impatiently expected, for his popularity may prove very serviceable in case of need.

BOLOGNA, March 6. The report that an attack will shortly be made by the Pontifical troops on the forces of the Romagna is doubtful, but great irritation prevails here.

The priests are threatened by the people, and the fortification of the place is being actively continued.

AUSTRIA.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says:

"I think it is no secret in England that Austria is arming upon an extensive scale, and that the preparations for war are unmistakable. Still the semi-official papers are somewhat out of humor. Hearing that Sardinia increases her army, they actually attribute it to the madness or malice of Count Cavour: for if France should back Sardinia there will be no war, and if France does not, Sardinia will be crushed whether she has 100,000 or 200,000 men under arms, whilst her armament ruins not only the Italians but forces Austria likewise to spend more money. All the court and military party reason in this way, and come to the conclusion that Cavour is the wickedest man on earth, who seeing before him the complete downfall of his own country, maliciously puts Austria to great expense. Such are the men who rule this Empire."

War is extremely probable between Austria and Piedmont. Piedmont is buying cavalry horses in France.

It is stated that Count Arese has been entrusted by the Emperor Napoleon with the mission to bring about a definite settlement between France and Piedmont, on the question on Savoy.—Cork paper.

PLOT TO ASSASSINATE VICTOR EMMANUEL.—The New York Eco d'Italia of the 17th has the following remarkable statement:

"From private letters coming to us from Milan, dated February 16, we learn that the police of Milan have just discovered an atrocious scheme, the object of which was to assassinate Victor Emmanuel on the occasion of his entry into the capital of Lombardy. One of the conspirators, a certain Count Brambilla, the same who, in 1849, abstracted the golden medals from the Gregorian Museum, was arrested, and on his person were found suspicious documents and large sums of money destined for the Pontifical court. Other conspirators, all Austrians or priests, are in the hands of the police.

Notices, &c.

General Conference in Boston.

A General Religious Conference will be held in Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing at half-past 2 o'clock, on Wednesday, the 4th of April, continuing each day and evening through the week and over the Lord's day.

The object and design of this meeting is not so much for the passing of resolutions or the transaction of ecclesiastical business, as for the advancement of pure christianity among us in true revival and reformation. What we as a body want and need, is not disputation or hobbies, but earnest, direct labor for the immediate promotion of the work of God in awakening the careless and indifferent, stirring up the luke-warm, and quickening into life and activity the too sluggish energies of the whole church in the personal work of preparation to meet the Master, who is before the door. In fact, we are too dull, too barren, and want more faith, zeal, love—more religion. And not only is it to be hoped that our meeting may prove a great means of grace to the waiting saints, but our hearts' desire is to see sinners converted to God, and thus made ready for the approaching great day of doom. Let those, then, who are asleep, awake and be strong. Let the righteous gird on their armor. Let sinful men be alarmed. All signs point to the speedy coming of the Lord, and it is high time that those who look for Him be up and doing with their might their last solemn work. Let earnest and faithful prayer go up to heaven for the success of this conference. Ministers of Christ, plead with Him for the spiritual interest of the meeting, and come to it in humility and faith, that our God who is now working among our churches in various places, may also pour his Spirit upon the worshipers at Chapman Hall. We invite our dear brethren and sisters from abroad to come. Come, all who can. Provision will be made by the friends for all needful entertainment. D. T. TAYLOR, M. GRANT, [illegible], J. G. [illegible], WM. C. [illegible], Committee.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

New Edition of the Lyre.

A new edition of this work, revised and improved by the insertion of an Index of Subjects, and the tune, the "Beautiful World,"—omitted by mistake in the first edition,—is now ready.

"Let him that is merry sing psalms."

Every christian should have a copy of THE CHRISTIAN LYRE. This work is of rare value, containing, as it does,

I. A large collection of the excellent old tunes that "never wear out."

II. Many new popular airs of merit.

III. Between five and six hundred hymns and spiritual songs.

It may be safely said that there is no book of the kind extant that approaches this in excellence. It will take its place as a standard work, and will be considered indispensable by those who wish to possess the best selection of old fashioned and "pennyroyal" psalmody.

Its form is such as to be very convenient in singing, and yet it is so small as to be carried in the pocket. But though small, it contains more hymns and music than most of the larger works, and is as costly to the publisher, but cheaper to the purchaser. The typography, printing and binding, have been neatly done, and will not fail to give satisfaction.

Those who have not as yet procured the Lyre, may learn the appreciation in which it is held by competent judges, from the following TESTIMONIALS:—

The stereotypist has affirmed that it is the best collection of sacred music which has passed through his hands for years.—World's Crisis.

BRO. HIMES:—The new tune book, "The Lyre," is a gem. I admire it more and more as an auxiliary to the worship of God. I hope it may be very generally introduced into our congregations, and am sure it cannot be too highly appreciated. I shall use my influence in its favor in preference to any collection I have ever seen. Yours in hope,

RANDL. E. LADD.

Springfield, Feb. 9th.

DEAR BRO. HIMES:—I have received the Lyre, and looked it over, with Bro. Howland, our chorister, and others. We think it a very good work, and that it will be highly prized as containing a large collection of our very best hymns and tunes.

I. H. SHIPMAN.

THE NEW LYRE.—I prize this new work very highly. It is a choice collection of rare old and popular new music, such as we have long needed for all our churches. The sweetest and best hymns and tunes ever sung are here found, and the entire music which our fathers sang rings out from its pages, mingled with the richest tunes of our time. Let no one fail to get the book. It ought to have a wide circulation among all denominations, for it is adapted to all, though full of the Advent element so peculiar to us. Nothing equal to it has appeared since we had an ecclesiastical history. Brethren from Maine to Minnesota, from Canada to the South, let us seize this Lyre, and, tuning our hearts anew with praise, sing fresh strains of melody in the ear of our coming King.

D. T. TAYLOR.

Worcester, Mass., Jan. 1st, 1860.

For sale at this office. Price, single, 60 cts. Gilt, $1.00. Six copies, $3.00. Per dozen, 1-4th off. Postage, 9 cts.

A supply will be on hand during the Conference next week—a good opportunity for ministers and others to furnish themselves with the book.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Eld. MILES GRANT will preach in Boston, (Chapman Hall)........Sunday, April 1st

☞ Bro. George Champlin wishes to withdraw his appointment at Southington, Ct., for April 13th, 14th and 15th.

Providence permitting, I will preach at Pontiac, Saturday evening, April 7th, and will be on the Plains over the Sabbath.

M. B. PHETTEPLACE.

Eld. S. W. Bishop will preach in Warwick Plain, R. I.........April 1st

Eld. J. G. Smith will preach in
Meredith Village.........April 1st
Exeter, N. H.........April 8th
Lawrence, Mass.........April 15th
Auburn, N. H.........April 22d

The Lord willing, Eld. George Champlin will be in Worcester, and preach in Warren Hall, on Pearl Street, Sunday, April 1st.

Eld. S. S. Brewer will preach in the same place three Sundays, commencing the third Sunday in April.

Bro. J. K. Bellows will meet with the brethren as follows:—
South Farms, Ct.........Sunday, April 1st
Plymouth Hollow, Ct.........April 2d
(Bro. Austin arrange.)
Harwinton, Ct.........April 4th
Litchfield Station, Ct.........April 5th—6th
Newfield, Ct.........April 8th
Winsted, Ct.........April 15th
Canton Street, Ct.........April 17th—18th
Lovely Street.........April 19th—20th
New Britain.........April 22d
Prospect (Bro. Mix).........April 24th—25th
West Haven, Ct.........April 26th—27th
Bridgeport, Ct.........April 29th

If the above conflict, write me at Torrington, Ct., care of Daniel A. Grant.

Eld. W. S. Campbell will preach in
Lowell.........Sunday, April 1st
Peace Dale, R. I.....Wednesday evening, April 4th and over the Sabbath.
Natick.........Monday evening, April 9th
Providence.........April 10th
Head of the River.........April 11th
New Bedford.........April 12th
Fairhaven.........April 13th
Kennebunkport, Me.........April 15th
Exeter, N. H.........April 16th—18th
East Boston, Mass.........April 22d

Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell will preach in Exeter, N. H. the first Sunday in April.

CHARLES HALEY.

Dr. A. M. Higgins will preach in Abington, Ct.........April 1st

Eld. J. Hemenway will preach in Portsmouth, N. H., the first Sabbath in April.

Providence permitting, I will preach in
East Boston.........April 2d
Attend the Conference.........April 4th
Portsmouth, N. H.........April 5th
South Berwick.........April 6th
Commence a four days' meeting in East Barnstead, N. H., (Clarks meeting-house).........April 7th
The third and fourth week in April not engaged.

HIRAM MUNGER.

D. W. Miller will preach in Goshen.........April 1st

Eld. Geo. Champlin will preach in Portsmouth, N. H., the second and third Sundays in April.

Business Matters.

To Correspondents.

C. C. Webb.—The "Diaglott" is published in Geneva, Ill., by Benjamin Wilson. It is published monthly, 20 cts. a number. The last issue was No. 8.

The True Israelite is published in New York, but cannot give the publisher's address.

P. S. W. Deyo.—All paid.

M. E. West.—Cannot name an appointment at present.

Cash Receipts.

Mrs. E Buckland 227, 12 cts; W F Higgins for Worcester brethren, $4.00; A G Hudson 264, 60 cts.; Jos. Hall 263, 70 cts.

J R Hyde 243, B Herrick 247, H Wythe 247,—50 cts. each.

B H Strait 260, I Young 260, S N Langley 260, A D Smith 260, Al. Smith 234, E A Esterbrook 260, Ol. Raymond 250, F Schellinger 260, M E Bickford 260, M G Dunham 260, L Mills 260, J Douglas 274, J B Barker 234, Abm. Bussel 260, Mrs. L Moore 260, Jos. Curtis 260, A Wadsworth 260, G P Persons 264, L Shurtleff 260, A P Barringer 239, S Hale 239, E E Knight 260, R E Cole 230, T Oliver 260, R Robbins 260, N Grant 260, R C Jackman 260, T H C Dow 254, J H Piper 244, S J Boswell 264, O P Redington 261, J S Brooks 260, F Granborn 260, P Johnson 260, Or. Clark 260, M Fogg 247, S Boardman 260, T Chase 260,—$1.00 each.

J Pulsiver 234, C F Kittridge 206, C Cady 260, Dr. J Fondy 265, A S Dole 286, Al. Tomlinson 291, S Hovey 286.

Books and Tracts.

J McKee 25 cts, W H Hill 6 cts, J Boyd $1.00, I Damon $2.00, Eld. C S Page $3.00, G A Otis $20.00, M G Dunham 23 cts, G P Persons $1.00, T Friday 25 cts, R E Cole $1.00, A G Hudson $5.40, A D Hearn $1.00, J H Piper $3.00, S Robinson $1.00, Jos. Hall 30 cts, L K Gaines $1.50, W C Peck 6 cts.

☞ It is not true that "an honest man is the noblest work of God"; but it is true that a dishonest man is the basest being that can be found among the works of God.

Books and Tracts.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for ANY of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the CRISIS, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

The Christian Lyre. Price, single, 60 cts. Gilt $1.00. Six copies, $3.00. 1-4th off per dozen. Postage, 9 cts.

Discussion of the Doctrine of The State of the Dead and Punishment of the Wicked; between W. W. Clayton and M. Grant. Price 25 cts; postage 3 cts. Bound 40 cts; postage 9 cts. 1-4th off per dozen.

Human Destiny. A Discussion: Do Reason and the Scriptures teach the utter extinction of an unregenerate portion of human beings, instead of the final salvation of all? By C. F. Hudson and Sylvanus Cobb. 478 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00 post paid.

The Nature of Faith, and the Evils of Sect. By the late W. H. Starr. With a Memoir and Notes by C. F. Hudson. 259 pp. 12mo. Price 50 cts. Postage 16 cts.

The Rich Man and Lazarus; Thief on the Cross, and the Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matt. 10: 28, Gen. 2: 17; with other interesting matter. By Miles Grant. Price, single, 5 cents; $3.00 per hundred; 1-4 off per dozen. Postage 1 cent.

THE SOUL—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuke as employed in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant, Boston. 32 pp.; 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. They weigh about one ounce each. A valuable tract for the times. Get one.

THE SPIRIT—what is it? or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruahh and pneuma as found in the Old and New Testaments. By Miles Grant. 32 pp.; price 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.00 per hundred; postage 1 cent, or 1-2 cent per oz. when over 8 oz. are taken. A valuable aid in the study of the Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus; does it imply eternal future suffering? By C. F. Hudson. 24 pp. Price, 3 cts. single. $2.00 per hundred.

The Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment: a discussion of the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Between Dr. J. Litch and Eld. Miles Grant. Price, single, 25 cts. Postage 3 cts. 1-4 off per dozen.

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation. The meaning of soul, spirit, death and hell, by Miles Grant. Price, single copy 5 cts; $3.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

"The Speechless Guest at the Marriage Feast," by John F. Cotton, being a short review of the parable, with statistical remarks of its illustration in the destruction of Jerusalem; and its positive negation of the doctrine of election and reprobation. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct. $3.00 per hundred.

ANTI-ETERNAL TORMENT. By Edwin Burnham. Price 1 cent, single; 75 cts. per hundred. Postage 1 ct.

Death not Life: or the Destruction of the Wicked scripturally Established. By J. Blain, Baptist minister. Price, unbound, $14.00 per hundred; 25 cents single; postage 5 cents. Bound, 40 cents; postage 8 cents.

Church Debts. By W. Ramsey, D. D. A rebuke of the pride and worldliness of the present day. Price 50 cts—postage 8 cts.

The Rights of Wrong; or, Is Evil Eternal? By C. F. Hudson. Price 5 cts. single, 6 copies for 25 cts. Mailed post paid. $3.00 per hundred. Sold by G. W. Young, 128 William St., New York; Truman and Spofford, Cincinnati; and S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance. Every Bible student should have a copy. Price, post paid, $1.25.

Son of God, by H. Grew, 10 cts. single; postage 1 cent.

Bible meaning of the word Hell. Price 3 cts. single, postage 1 ct.; $1 per hundred.

The Saints' Inheritance, by Wm. Sheppard.—A good tract to give your neighbor. Price 5.00.

[illegible] by J. Litch [illegible] postage 10 cents.

Words of [illegible] postage 1 ct.; $1.00 per hundred.

English Bibles.—We have [illegible] than they can be bought at any other store in the city.

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed; or Christ the personal Messiah. By Henry Grew. [illegible] Sermons [illegible] the Scriptures [illegible] day. [illegible] per hundred [illegible]

200 Stories for Children, compiled by T. M. Preble. An excellent collection of interesting incidents [illegible] Price 40 cents; postage 7 cents.

Foster's Letter and Tract on Hell, $1.00 per hundred. [illegible]

The Saint's Inheritance; or the World to Come. By Henry F. Hill, [illegible] Price $1, postage paid.

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. Price 2 cts., postage 1 ct.

The Wicked [illegible] dred texts quoted to prove the destruction of the wicked. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 1 cent single; $1.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

The Great Error Exposed; or, Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. In this tract all texts relied on to prove endless misery are explained, and two hundred for destruction quoted. By Eld. Jacob Blain. Price 3 cents single; $2.00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.

Glad Tidings: or Bible proof that woe and sin are to end in the universe by the final destruction of wicked men and devils at the Judgment. All texts on Future Punishment collected and arranged. By J. Blain. Price 5 cts.—postage 1 cent.

The Three Kingdoms: or, the kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. Price $6.00 per hundred, 10 cts. per dozen, 10 cts. single. Postage 1 cent.

☞ The above tracts and books can be obtained of our agent in Portland, Me., J. B. BROOKS, No. 8 Summer street.

☞ The following books and tracts can be had of J. B. Waite, Warwick, R. I.:—

The Harp, by Elder Himes; 200 Stories for Children; Satanic Delusion; Bible Hell; Great Controversy.

We have also on hand, the following

PUBLICATIONS

OF

H. L. HASTINGS,

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Voice of the Church on the reign of Christ on Earth, by D. T. Taylor; edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 420 pp.

The Great Controversy between God and Man: its Origin, Progress, and End; by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 167 pp.

Reasons for My Hope, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 178 pp. Paper, 30 cts. Cloth.

Forever with the Lord, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing.

Earth's Destiny, as revealed in Scripture, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. Preparing.

Tracts on Prophecy, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 720 pp.

Tracts on Immortality, by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 720 pp.

Fables of Infidelity, and Facts of Faith, by Robert Patterson. 12mo. 320 pp.

The Infidel's Fate, by a converted Infidel. Cloth gilt.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, by Wm Ramsey, D.D., edited with a preface by H. L. Hastings. 12mo. 130 pp. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth.

Pauline Theology; The Christian Doctrine of Future Punishment, as Taught by Paul, by H. L. Hastings. 84 pp. Paper.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life, by H. L. Hastings. Paper. 87 pp.

Tracts of 24 Pages,—3 cts. single; $1 for 1600 pages—by mail 1200 pp for $1.

The Church not in Darkness, by H. L. H. ... 24
The Three Worlds, ... by H. L. H. ... 24
The Last Days, ... by H. L. H. ... 24
Plain Truths, ... by H. L. H. ... 24
Will all men be saved? ... by H. L. H. ... 24
Voice of Warning ... by D. T. Taylor ... 24
The New Heavens and Earth, ... 24
Ancient Landmarks, 6 Nos. ... 24
Olive Leaves, 9 Nos. by H. L. H. ... 24
Important Questions, 9 Nos. by H. L. H. ... 24
State of the Dead, ... by John Milton ... 24
The Intermediate State, ... by H. G. ... 24
Destiny of the Wicked ... by H. G. ... 24
Future Punishment, ... by H. G. ... 24
The Key of Truth, ... by W. S. ... 24
Man's Future State ... 24
Letter on Dress ... by Adoniram Judson ... 24
The Day of Judgment, ... by St. Cyril ... 24
Outline of the Coming, ... by A Voyager ... 24
The Night Cometh, ... by John Amy ... 24
Gems, 9 Nos., poetry, ... by H. L. H. ... 24
One Thing ... 24
The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, ... 24
The Duration of the Earth by A. Clarke ... 24
Hope and Duty of the Church, M. Henry ... 24
The Restitution ... 24
A Warning Voice, ... by [illegible] ... 24
Loving Christ's Appearing, ... by Baxter ... 24
Little Children, Love one another, ... by [illegible] ... 24
The One Resting Place, ... by H. Bonar ... 24
My Friend, ... by H. L. H. ... 24
Abundant Grace ... by H. L. H. ... 24
Wondrous Love ... 24
Go in Peace ... 24
Living Water ... 24
The Banner ... 24
The Blood of Christ ... by H. L. H. ... 24
Are you a Christian? ... by H. L. H. ... 24
Why not Now? ... 24
Are you Pardoned? ... 24
Are you Safe? ... 24
Are you Saved? ... 24
Do you Pray? ... 24
When Will He Come? ... by J. G. Ryle ... 24
Statement of Account ... by H. L. H. ... 24
Man in Death ... by Bishop Law ... 24
Forty Questions on Immortality ... 24
No. 1. The Destiny of the Wicked ... 24
No. 2. The State of the Dead ... 24
No. 3. The Coming of Jesus ... 24
No. 4. The Resurrection ... 24
No. 5. Plain Truths ... 24
No. 6. The Judgment ... 24

POETRY.

Brother, Shall we Meet? ... by H. L. H. ... 24
Sister, Shall we Meet? ... 24
Stand up for Jesus! ... 24
The Harvest is Past ... 24
Beyond! ... 24
At Rest! ... 24
We would see Jesus ... by Josephine ... 24
A Little While ... 24

[illegible]

Life Insurance, Envelope Size H. L. H. ... 24
Home ... 24
Lost, Lost ... 24
Peace in Christ ... 24
Worth Knowing ... 24
All things are Yours ... 24
Now ... 24
Assurance ... 24
About God ... 24

The foregoing Books and Pamphlets will be sent by mail, postage paid, upon the receipt of the price of their respective prices. Orders with the money solicited. Persons who send $1 will [illegible] shall receive $12 worth of books at the [illegible] TRACTS are sold by mail 1200 pages [illegible] of a dollar. When sent by express [illegible] dollar. Terms cash. Persons [illegible] can obtain four hundred pages of tracts for $1. The cheapest way [illegible]

H. L. HASTINGS, [illegible]

For the Crisis.

The Need of Reformation in the Churches.

CONVERSATION.—No. 3.

Brown. Bro. Smith, since our last conversation on the christian's hope, I am persuaded there is great need of a reformation in all our churches, both in doctrine and practice. Pride, bigotry and prejudice have secularized the church of Christ in these last days, and it is difficult to distinguish the professor from the non-professor, without an examination of the church record. I wish some plan could be devised to bring about a reformation, and a more liberal state of feeling amongst those who profess to serve the same Master.

Smith. I am truly glad that you have so far divested yourself of prejudice, as not to be totally blind to the absolute necessity of a reformation in the churches at the present day, in preparation for the coming judgment and revelation of the Son of man. I think we have reason to fear that when Christ comes the second time to judge the world in righteousness, he will find the Gentile church as unprepared for his advent, as was formerly the Jewish church. "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

Brown. The difficulty is to know how to begin this reformation. You know, Bro. Smith, that your people are accused of an effort to break up and divide our churches, by forming a separate organization. This, I think, greatly prejudices the people against you, and is a serious impediment in the way of the desired reformation. Is there no way by which the churches can be induced by degrees to reform themselves? It seems to me a desperate remedy to pull down the house to destroy the rats.

Smith. I fear, Bro. Brown, that your plan of degrees would prove so slow, that the judgment would come before you had fairly made a beginning, and the rats would be so rife as to undermine the house, and it would utterly perish in its own corruption. We may judge a little by analogy. Did a corrupt government or a corrupt church ever reform itself? Does not reformation uniformly come from outside pressure?

I need not multiply instances; history is full of them. Did the antediluvians reform themselves? Did the Sodomites reform themselves? Did the Jewish church at the time of Christ reform itself? Did the Popish church at the time of Luther reform itself? Did the Protestant church at the time of Whitefield and Wesley reform itself? Surely the church in our day is as corrupt, as proud, as popular, as self-righteous as it was when John Wesley tried to reform the Episcopal church of England, and was at last obliged to come out and organize a new society, that bears his name to the present day, but not his spirit. If the good old man was to rise from the dead, and visit some of his churches, I fear he would be tempted to write "Ichabod" over the door. The glory is departed.

Brown. Would it not be well, before going to extremities, to try what can be done by moral suasion, and compromising a little to the prejudices of the people, and see if we may not have our views and principles tolerated, so that, like leaven, it will in time renovate the whole lump, and thus produce the desired effect? I must say I am averse to all ultra measures to effect a purpose that can be accomplished any other way.

Smith. Well, brother, let us try the experiment; John the Baptist tried it to his satisfaction. He began preaching, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand!" How did he succeed? They cut of his head. Luther had no intention to leave the Roman church; he merely wanted to reform it of some of its abuses; but they would not be reformed, and he was reduced to this extremity, either to go back, and wallow again in the mire, or come out and espouse the cause of truth; and, thank God, he chose the latter. Now I have learned in the same school, and have come to the same conclusion.

For years I have striven to obtain toleration in the churches, but all to no purpose; the only way to remain there was, to pay well for the promotion of error and, to be perfectly silent in the cause, which, I was persuaded, was that of truth. This was not even a compromise; and, though some of my former associates have chosen the backward track, as more congenial to the flesh, I have made up my mind, cost what it will, to come out and advocate God's everlasting truth,—the sleep of the dead till the resurrection; the destruction of the wicked at the day of judgment; and the speedy advent of Christ, to set up his kingdom on this earth renewed and restored to its Eden glory.

I have no further compromise with the unfruitful works of darkness; and consider these truths as the latter day tests of discipleship, and the rallying point around which God will prepare a people, zealous of good works, [illegible] waiting, hoping, and praying for [illegible] revelation of the Lord from heaven[illegible]

Is i[illegible] to blame us for organizing ch[illegible]urches, when we are denied all c[illegible] fellowship and communion with [illegible]rches, and denounced as infidels [illegible] and emissaries of the devil?

W[illegible] we have no wish to break [illegible] we only wish to receive those whose eyes are opened to perceive the truth, and are willing to suffer reproach for the name of Christ; it is such only that we want; and I am sure there is no church that wants to retain such in her communion, if they really believe they are what they represent them to be.

Brown. I am aware that your people are called hard names, and denounced by the ministers in the popular churches; but I do not think they mean all they say, or they would not retain in their communion those they know are firm believers in these very doctrines, though they do not consider them essential to salvation. There are some such in all our churches, and the fact that they are not excluded, is sufficient evidence that the bark of some dogs is worse than their bite; it is intended merely for effect, to prevent the sheep from running out of the fold after some better pasture.

Smith. I am grieved that there is so much Jesuitism in our so-called Protestant churches, and this is another proof of the absolute necessity of a thorough reformation, to cleanse out this popish rubbish,—this doing evil that good may come. If ministers of religion are wilfully guilty of bearing false witness against their brethren, as you seem to insinuate, then indeed are we fallen into evil times, and such guides as these can only lead those who follow them into perdition. I had rather be a wolf without sheep's clothing, than with it, in the day when the secrets of all hearts will be tried. Those who are in the habit of bearing false witness against us, by calling us infidels, etc., injure themselves much more than they do us, because those who know our real sentiments feel that they have been imposed upon, and others, who become acquainted with our views, and see how much Scripture we have to sustain them, cannot but be convinced, if they are honest men, that we are not half such monsters as we are represented to be.

But what surprises and grieves me most of all is, that those who know and feel that these accusations so repeatedly made against us, are not true, yet are so under the influence of the fear of man they dare not utter a word to rebuke these calumnies, but let them pass as current coin. It seems to me that if I had a friend or brother that was openly accused of a crime that I knew he was not guilty of, I should feel self condemnation if I did not seek to vindicate his reputation as publicly as it had been traduced.

After all, it matters little what men say or think of us. Thank God, we are not to be judged by man's judgment; and though our earthly friends may forsake us, and unite with our enemies, we have a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother, and he will vindicate our cause before an assembled world. the people of God can well afford to wait till that day.

Brown. Well, Bro. Smith, I do not know but you are right in the steps you have taken in the cause of truth. A reformation is greatly needed, let it come from within or from without; I will, for my part, say amen. J. PARRY.

For the Crisis.

Curious Etymologies.

I have just met a derivation of the Greek term for "hell" (gehenna) which is well worthy of notice, for several reasons.

1. Because it is offered as an argument to prove the eternity of hell.

2. Because it is made by a Greek commentator, the most noted for several generations, Theophylact (A. D. 1078).

3. As showing what ignorance of Hebrew and lack of critical care have contributed to the prevalent notions of endless woe.

On Matt. 10. 28, Theophylact remarks: that our Savior, "when he says in gehenna, signifies the perpetuity of the punishment; for geenna is from ever existing (gennasthai)." I do not know how long or how far this deviation was thought good and held for a sound argument; or when it first gave way to what almost everybody now knows,—that gehenna is a Hebrew name for the valley of the son of Hinnom. Perhaps it lived until the time of Luther. A friend to whom I showed it returned me the following derivation of Diabolus, recorded in a document belonging to a Jubilee of the Reformation. It is ascribed to one Thesmar, and seems to have been in vogue with the Romanists. "Diabolus, from dia, which again they rendered duo (two), and bolus (mouthful); because the devil would fain devour a man at two mouthsful—body and soul."

We deem these puerilities worthy of the dark ages whence they sprung. But I have met an argument for the eternity of hell in a Protestant religious paper, which is about equal to the first. It was from the phrase bottomless pit, by which our version renders the Greek for abyss. It was gravely argued that since the pit has no bottom, they who are condemned to it will find no end to their punishment! What would this writer have thought if told that the same word occurs in Rom. 10: 7: "Who shall descend into the deep (abussos, bottomless pit!") that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead?" or, if told that good writers have used the same Greek word in speaking of the depths of God's love? C. F. H.

For the Crisis.

The Great Chart.

The great work, by Bro. Stevenson, exhibited out West, has happily disappointed the most advanced and understanding brethren. It was shown in ten places; and I am sure it gives me ability to instruct and convince two-fold beyond any other illustration. As an argument and illustration combined, it transcends all others, in constraining the mind to the scriptural conclusion, that the advent of Jesus; first resurrection; binding of Satan and kingdom of God are impending events.

Such calls as are made will be answered as the Lord shall permit, with this chart. J. B. COOK.

For the Crisis.

Waiting for the Lord.

What are we to understand by the frequent admonition, "Wait for the Lord," and how are we to wait? In the common acceptation of that word, it could not strictly be said that one had waited for another, where there was an "appointed time," unless that set time had passed, and the one had tarried beyond the hour for the other. Now has the Father set the time for his Son? Paul says, Acts 17: 31, "He hath appointed a day." I need not ask has the hour arrived; for Jesus has not come. Then we are not tarrying beyond the hour. So it is not, waiting, in that sense. When the fulness of time has arrived, then Jesus will come; and we shall wait no longer.

With Israel, the case is different. With them, the time was fulfilled. Mark 1: 14, 15, "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, saying, The time is fulfilled," etc.; that is, the time for his first appearing.—2 Tim. 1: 10:—"But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior," etc. But Israel is still looking, waiting for, expecting that first advent, while we are looking for and expecting the second appearing of our Savior, Jesus Christ, unto salvation.

This waiting of the church for the Lord, implies, if it does not express, a state of expectancy. When? Now! always! every day, night, hour, week, month, or year. That this is the sense as to what is meant is clear from numerous passages. On Rom. 8: 19, Dr. Clarke reads from the Greek—"With a neck stretched out doth now wait (look) for."—Titus 2: 13,—"Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing," etc. 1 Thess. 1: 10,—"And to wait (look) for his Son," etc. So Isa. 30: 18; Hab. 2: 3, 1 Cor. 1: 7; Rom 8. 23, 2 Thess. 3. 5. "Into the patient waiting (looking) for Christ," and Heb. 9: 28—"To them that look for him." This constitutes a trial (proving) of our faith, 1 Pet. 1: 7, and this perfecting of our faith results in the necessary state of preparation.

Thus, then, is how we are to wait, look for, etc., namely,—Luke 12: 35, 36,—"loins girded," "lights burning," "like men that wait for their Lord,"—"that we may open immediately."—1 Pet. 1: 13.—"Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. "See also vers. 14, 15, 16, 17. Yes, that is how we are to wait. Get ready, everything ready, then, keep ready, by a patient continuance in well doing, looking for glory, and honor, and immortality, then you will be ready, "and accounted worthy" (Luke 20: 35) to receive the gift of God, eternal life, through Jesus Christ, Rom. 6: 23, "at his appearing and kingdom."—2 Tim. 4: 1; Rev. 19: 7. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready! OLENA.

Obituary Notice.

Died, in Seneca Falls, on the 17th inst., Carrie A., eldest daughter of Bro. Jerome H. and our late Sister Maria E. Sisler, aged three years, one month and twenty days.

Our brother is called to mourn the loss of his dear Carrie. This affliction is the more severe on account of the circumstances clustering around it. Only three months ago we laid Sister Maria among the "clods of the valley," cold and silent; and now little Carrie is laid by the side of her mama—but she knows it not. Silently they are waiting till the trumpet shall sound, and awake them, "to die no more,"—till the opening heavens shall reveal the "Lord of life and glory."

